raised out of the rents of his lands under a term of sixty years,* the same should be settled to the use for life of the person who happened then to be entitled in possession under the limitations in his will, with remainder (in effect) to his issue in strict settlement.† When the time arrived for laying out the money, it happened that the person entitled in possession under the limitation in question was not in esse at the testator's death, and therefore could not be made tenant for life with remainder to his issue, so that the trust for laying out the money had failed in event; but the grounds on which Lord Eldon rested the decision of the House shew, that if the person entitled in possession had happened to be a person in esse at the testator's death, the trust for laying out the money would in his Lordship's opinion have been legal." [Notes by Mr. Jarman.]

* "This was prior to the stat. 40 Geo. 3, c. 98, stated post [Chap. XI]."

† "This was the effect, though not the precise language."

CHAPTER X.

Devise to a person who might not answer a certain qualification within allowed period, held void, irrespectively of event.

survivor of his (the testator's) wife and son, in trust for such person as should from time to time be Lord Vere, it being his will that the goods, &c., after the decease of his wife, should from time to time go and be held and enjoyed with the title of the family, as far as the rules of law and equity would permit. At the death of the testator, the title of Lord Vere descended upon his son, the legatee for life, upon whose decease it descended to his son (the testator's grandson, who was also living at the death of the testator), and, upon the death of the grandson, it descended to the testator's great grandson, who was born after the death of the testator. The chief struggle was between the personal representatives of the grandson and those of the great grandson. As the former was born in the testator's lifetime, it was clear, that he might have been made legatee for life, with remainder absolutely to the person next in succession, and the question, therefore, was, whether the will authorised such a construction. Sir J. Leach, V.-C., before whom the case was originally brought, decided in the affirmative." His Honour said that by the rules of law and equity every person living at the death of the testator, who should become Lord Vere, might be limited to the use and enjoyment only. The son and grandson of the testator were living at his death, and both, therefore, were limited to the use and enjoyment only, but the child who succeeded the grandson as Lord Vere and Duke of St. Albans, was not living at the death of the testator, and could not, therefore, by the rules of law and equity, be limited to the use and enjoyment only; he took, therefore, an absolute interest, which was vested in his personal representative.

This judgment was affirmed by Lord Lyndhurst, but was reversed in D. P. on the advice of Lord Brougham, C. He admitted that the testator might lawfully have limited the chattels to go according to the decree of the V.-C. if he had used the proper words; but first he said there was no authority for putting that construction on the words used; and secondly he took a new objection, founded on the bequest being an attempted annexation of chattels to an honour; which he described as an attempt to create a new species of limitation in succession, unknown to the law, to spring up with the person, that is, to the Lords Vere whoever they might be; and he mentioned certain contingencies, especially a possible abeyance of the honour, which, in his opinion, shewed that there might be no one to answer that description within the allowed period; and although none of those contingencies had happened, the soundness of the limitations could not depend on the event.

Lord St. Leonards has criticised this judgment (u), and has adduced authorities to shew that chattels may be limited to go along with an honour; and with regard to the question of construction (which is of the greatest interest here), he distinguishes between a compendious limitation to several persons successively, where the legal limit can clearly be marked, as in Lord Vere's will, and a limitation like that in Lord Dungannon v. Smith, where only one person was to take, and it depended on the event whether the person who lived to answer the description would or would not come in esse within the legal period. He thought Tregonwell v. Sydenham a grave authority for giving effect to such a limitation as that in Lord Vere's will as far as the events would allow, keeping within the legal boundary.

There has been much discussion as to the ultimate decision in Tollemache v. Coventry. According to some of the common law judges in Lord Dungannon v. Smith (v), although all that was decided in Tollemache v. Coventry was that the great grandson did not take, yet the reasoning on which this decision proceeded was equally unfavourable to the claim of the grandson, and undoubtedly this would have been the logical result of Lord Brougham's reasoning. But he did not go so far, and it seems clear from the concluding words of his judgment, and from the headnote, that the decision was in favour of the grandson. This is now generally accepted as the result of the case (w).

Point decided in Tollemache v. Coventry.

The principle to be deduced from these authorities is, that where there is a gift to a series of persons answering a certain description, it is good so far as concerns the first member of that series, if he must take on the death of a living person, although the gift may be bad as regards the second and all the later members of the series, because otherwise they might possibly take beyond the limits fixed by the Rule against Perpetuities (x).

Result of the authorities.

It will, of course, be remembered that according to the doctrine settled by recent decisions (y), a child en ventre sa mère is considered a living person, and consequently if there is a devise upon trust for each son of A. successively for life, with remainder to his sons in Children ventre.

(u) Law of Prop. 336; Gray on Perp. § 401 seq. See the observations of Hall, V.-C., in Re Roberts, 19 Ch. D. 525. See also Re Viscount Exmouth, 23 Ch. D. 158.

(v) 12 Cl. & F. 546.

(w) Re Viscount Exmouth, 23 Ch. D.

158; Re Johnston, 26 Ch. D. 538; Re Hill, [1902] 1 Ch. 807.

(x) Gray, Perp. § 406 seq. As to the nature of the interest taken by the first member of the series, see Chap. XXXIII.

(y) See post, Chap. XLII.

CHAPTER X.

tail, and a son of A. is en ventre sa mère at the testator's death, then if this son becomes tenant for life by the failure of the prior limitations, the limitations after his life estate are valid, although it may be to his interest to contend that they are void under the Rule against Perpetuities (z).

Shifting clause or gift over on breach of condition.

It is hardly necessary to say that a shifting clause, or a gift over on breach of a condition (e.g., a name and arms clause) is void unless it must necessarily take effect within the period allowed by the Rule against Perpetuities (a), or unless it is annexed to an estate tail (b).

In Bacon v. Proctor (c), land was devised in trust to pay the rents to such person of the testator's own name as for the time being should succeed to his title of a baronet, to the end that his said estate might be continued in his name, blood, and family, and be enjoyed and go along with his title, so long as the rules of law and equity should permit: it was held that the testator's eldest son took a life interest in the estate.

The case of Mackworth v. Hinxman (d) has been already referred to. The decision is questioned by Lord St. Leonards (e) and by Mr. Gray (f).

Gift to survivor of class.

It is clear that a gift to the survivor of a class of persons is bad if he will not necessarily be ascertained within the period allowed by the Rule, although a gift to the whole class might be good. Thus, if property is given upon trust for A. for life, and after his death upon trust for his children during their lives, and after the death of all the children, except one, upon trust for that one absolutely, this ultimate gift is bad for remoteness (g). Cases of this kind must be distinguished from those in which successive life interests are given to a class of unborn persons. These are discussed in the next section.

A gift of property to persons answering a certain description at the testator's death, is free from objection on the score of (z) Re Wilmer's Trusts, [1903] 2 Ch. 411.

(a) Bennett v. Bennett, 2 Dr. & Sm. at p. 276. The introduction of these executory limitations, of a kind unknown to the common law, was the reason which led to the establishment of the Rule against Perpetuities in its present form: ante, p. 296.

(b) Ante, p. 321. See further as to shifting clauses, post, Chap. XXXVIII.

(c) T. & R. 31.

(d) 2 Keen, 658.

(e) Law of Property, 341.

(f) Perp. § 399, n.

(g) Garland v. Brown, 10 L. T. 292; Courtier v. Oram, 21 Bea. 91. See the remarks on Re Ashforth, [1905] 1 Ch. 535, post, p. 372.

remoteness, and sometimes a gift which suggests an intention on the part of the testator to give property to persons in succession has been held to be a gift to individuals living at his death (h).

In Re Roberts (i), the testatrix bequeathed a fund upon trust for her brother J. R. G., for life, and after his death for his son, A. R. G., for life, and after the decease of both of them, upon trust to pay the income "for life unto any immediate or direct descendants of my said brother and nephew who shall bear the name of R. G. only, and from and after his or her decease, or in case of failure of any such immediate or direct descendant of my said brother or nephew who shall bear the name of R. G. only," then upon trust for certain charities. Hall, V.-C., thought that the trust was intended to include a series of persons answering the description of descendants, and was, therefore, void for remoteness. The Court of Appeal, however, held that the gift after the death of the brother and nephew was to a class consisting of their descendants then living and bearing the name of R. G. for their lives, and was, consequently, a valid gift.

The cases of Brett v. Sawbridge (j), and Pelham v. Gregory (k), are referred to in a subsequent part of this work.

Where freehold lands are limited in strict settlement, and leasehold or other personal property is vested in trustees, upon corresponding trusts, but so as not to vest absolutely in any tenant in tail till he shall attain the age of twenty-one years, but on his death under age to devolve as the freeholds, this trust, so far as it is limited in favour of tenants in tail, is void, since by the death of successive tenants in tail under age and leaving issue, the vesting of the leaseholds might be deferred beyond the period allowed by law. Care should therefore be taken that the vesting is only deferred till some tenant in tail by purchase attains the age of twenty-one years (l).

Vesting of personal property given in strict settlement must not be deferred till any tenant in tail attains twenty-one.

(h) Comm. of Donations v. De Clifford, 1 Dr. & War. 245; Lidley v. Hey, 1 Ha. 580; ante, p. 219.

(i) 19 Ch. D. 520.

(j) 3 Bro. P. C. 141.

(k) 3 Bro. P. C. 204. See post, Chap. XXXIII.

(l) This is the common form, 3 Davidson's Prec. 602, 627. If the clause stops short with the proviso against absolute vesting, and omits the concluding gift over, remoteness is avoided without help of the words "by purchase." For then there is no gift of the personalty except in the primary trust, and under this trust it vests absolutely in the first tenant in tail by purchase: and the proviso, being but an accessory to that, must be construed also to relate only to tenants in tail by purchase: Christie v. Gosling, L. R., 1 H. L. 279; Martelli v. Holloway, L. R., 5 H. L. 532. (It should be mentioned that this somewhat forced construction was not approved by Lord St. Leonards, L. R., 1 H. L. at p. 293, or, apparently, by Lord Cairns, L. R., 5 H. L. at p. 103). According to this construction, however, the intention to keep the two species of property together as long as possible fails. The concluding gift over is required to

CHAPTER X.

The authorities on this subject are discussed in a subsequent chapter (m).

Gift to unborn person
for life valid.

(G) GIFTS TO UNBORN PERSONS FOR LIFE, AND SUBSEQUENT LIMITATIONS (n).—As Mr. Jarman points out (o), “If the objects of a future gift are within the line prescribed by the Rule against Perpetuities, of course it is immaterial what is the nature of the interest which such gift confers (p). It would be very absurd that persons should be competent to take an estate in fee in land, or an absolute interest in personalty, and nevertheless be incapable of taking a temporary or terminable interest (for the larger includes the less), and yet it would not be difficult to cite dicta (q), nay, even to adduce a decision (r), propounding the doctrine that a life interest cannot be given to an unborn person.” The fallacy probably arose, as Mr. Jarman suggests, from the terms in which the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell (s) has been often laid down, namely, that you cannot give an estate for life in land to an unborn person, with remainder to his issue, which has been read as two distinct propositions, the one affirming the invalidity of a limitation for life to an unborn person, and the other the invalidity of a limitation to the issue; though in fact, all that is meant to be averred is, that a limitation of land by way of remainder to the children or issue of an unborn person, following a gift for life to such unborn person, is bad, which it clearly is, under the rule which has been already considered (t).

effectuate this intention, and as this gift contains trusts for tenants in tail taking by descent, the rule of construction established in Christie v. Gosling is inapplicable, and the words “by purchase” are needed to obviate remoteness; see Gosling v. Gosling, 1 De G. J. & S. 16. In Harrington v. Harrington, L. R., 5 H. L. 87, where chattels were directed to go with settled land “so far as the rules of law or equity would permit,” the person next in succession became entitled to the chattels, whether the trust was effectual or whether it was void for remoteness, and the question as to the effect of those words was not decided: see Chap. XXXIII.

(m) Chap. XXXIII. sect. 42 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which empowers trustees of land to which an infant is entitled in possession to accumulate the surplus rents, applies to tenants in tail by descent.

(n) As to children en ventre, see ante, p. 298.

(o) First edition, p. 239.

(p) Cotton v. Heath, 1 Roll. Ab. 612, pl. 3; Marlborough v. Godolphin, 1 Ed. 415; Doe d. Tooley v. Gunniss, 4 Taunt. 313; Doe d. Liversage v. Vaughan, 1 D. & Ry. 52, 5 B. & Ald. 464; Ashley v. Ashley, 6 Sim. 358 (cross remainders between unborn persons for life); Denn v. Page, 3 T. R. 87, n., 11 East, 603; Hay v. Earl of Coventry, 3 T. R. 83; Foster v. Romney, 11 East, 594; Bennett v. Lowe, 5 M. & Pay. 485, 7 Bing. 535; Routledge v. Dorrit, 2 Ves. jun. 366; Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 290; Hampton v. Holman, 5 Ch. D. 183; and see Fearne, C. R. 503. See, however, the criticism of Malins, V.-C., in Stuart v. Cockerall, L. R., 7 Eq. at p. 370, on the decision of Shadwell, V.-C., in Ashley v. Ashley, sup. as to cross remainders for life to unborn persons.

(q) Deerhurst v. St. Albans, 5 Madd. at p. 278.

(r) Hayes v. Hayes, 4 Russ. 311; see as to this case, 6 Hare, 250, 1 Coll. 37, 5 Ch. D. 188.

(s) See above, p. 284.

(t) See above, p. 285.

CHAPTER X.

As to gifts in remainder expectant on estate for life to unborn person, generally.

“As a gift for life to an unborn person is valid, so it is clear is a remainder expectant on such gift, provided it be made to take effect in favour of persons who are competent objects of gift (u); though here also a fallacy prevails; for it is not uncommon to find it stated in unqualified terms, that, though you may give a life interest to an unborn person, every ulterior gift is necessarily and absolutely void; and some countenance to this doctrine is to be found in the judgment, as reported, of an able judge (v), though the adjudication itself, rightly considered, lends no support to any such doctrine, as the ulterior gift, which was there pronounced to be void, was nothing more than a declaration that the property should go according to the Statute of Distribution; so that the claim of the next of kin, who was held to be entitled, was perfectly consistent with the will, unless, indeed, it applied to the next of kin at the death of the unborn legatee for life, which would have been clearly void, as embracing persons who would not have been ascertainable until more than twenty-one years after a life in being; but for this construction there seems to have been no ground” (w).

And as a gift to an unborn person for life is good, so the gift of a life interest to an unborn person, determinable on a certain event happening during his lifetime, is good, although the event may not happen within the period of a life in being and twenty-one years afterwards (x).

It is clear that successive life interests may be given to a number of unborn persons, provided they vest within the period allowed by the Rule: as in the case of a gift to A. for life and then to his children successively for their lives; here all the children living at A.'s death take vested interests, although the time of their enjoyment is uncertain (y). For the same reason, cross-remainders for life can be given to unborn persons (z).

Successive or cross life interests to unborn persons.

A trust for the testator's brothers for their lives, and then for the benefit of their children, from year to year, “as the law admits,”

(u) Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. jun. 366; Evans v. Walker, 3 Ch. D. 211; Wainwright v. Miller, [1897] 2 Ch. 255; Re Roberts, 19 Ch. D. 520.

(v) See Cooke v. Bowler, 2 Kee. 54.

(w) Mr. Jarman, in the first edition of this work, p. 241.

(x) Wainwright v. Miller, [1897] 2 Ch. 255, following the dicta of Knight Bruce, V.-C., in Boughton v. James, 1 Coll. C. C. 26, and distinguishing Hodgson v. Halford, 11 Ch. D. 959.

(y) Gooch v. Gooch, 3 D. M. & G. 366; Garland v. Brown, 10 L. T. 292; Re Hargreaves, 43 Ch. D. 401; Re

Ashforth, [1905] 1 Ch. 535. The decision in Whitby v. Von Luedecke, [1906] 1 Ch. 783, seems erroneous, being inconsistent with the doctrine laid down by Lord Cranworth, C., in Gooch v. Gooch (3 D. M. & G. p. 383), that a gift to unborn children for life, with benefit of survivorship among them, is “a perfectly good trust.” The question whether the gift to the survivor was good, being a contingent remainder, was not argued.

(z) Ashley v. Ashley, 6 Sim. 358; ante, note (p); as to this case, see Gray, § 207.

CHAPTER X. was held to cease twenty-one years after the decease of the surviving brother (x).

But if the ultimate gift is to a person, or class of persons, who cannot be ascertained within the period allowed by the Rule, it is void for remoteness (y).

It was at one time supposed that a gift of this kind would be good, if the intervening interests could be destroyed by alienation or release. Thus, in Avern v. Lloyd (z), where personalty was bequeathed to the issue of A., a living person, share and share alike for their lives, and for the survivors and survivor, and after the decease of the survivor, to the executors, administrators, and assigns of the survivor, Stuart, V.-C., held the ultimate limitation valid, on the ground that "each of the tenants for life had as much right to alien his contingent right to the absolute interest as to alien his life estate." But the notion that the power of alienation is of itself sufficient to exclude the Rule is now exploded (a), and Avern v. Lloyd is overruled (b).

Limitations dependent on a remote gift, void.

(H) EFFECT OF THE RULE ON ULTERIOR LIMITATIONS.—Where a gift is void for remoteness, all limitations ulterior to and dependent on such remote gift are also void, though the object of the prior gift should never come into existence. Thus, in the often-cited case of Proctor v. Bishop of Bath and Wells (c), there was a devise to the first or other son of T. P. that should be bred a clergyman and be in holy orders, and to his heirs and assigns, but if the said T. P. should have no such son, then to T. M. his heirs and assigns. T. P. died without ever having had any son. As by the canons of the Church no person can be admitted into deacon's orders before the age of twenty-three, or be ordained priest before twenty-four, it was clear that this qualification postponed the devisee's interest until he attained the age of twenty-three at the least. The Court of C. P., therefore, held that the first devise was void for remoteness, and that the devise over, as it depended on the same contingency, was also void; observing, that there was no instance of a limitation after a prior devise, which was void for the contingency's being too remote, being let in to take effect (d).

(x) Pownall v. Graham, 33 Bea. 242.

(y) Re Gage, [1898] 1 Ch. 498.

(z) L. R., 5 Eq. 383.

(a) Supra, p. 305. See Curtis v. Lukin, 5 Bea. 147.

(b) Re Hargreaves, 43 Ch. D. 401. See Re Brown and Sibly, 3 Ch. D. 156.

(c) 2 H. Bl. 358; also referred to post, p. 356. The principle of course applies to appointments under powers: Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. jun. 357; ante, p. 319.

(d) In Robinson v. Hardcastle, 2 Br. C. C. 22, 2 T. R. 241, 380, 781, it is not clear on what ground the decision proceeded.

On the same principle, if there is a gift of personal property upon trust for all the children of A., a living person, who are living at the expiration of twenty-eight years from the testator's death, and in default of such children to X., the gift over is void (e). So if there is a gift of personal property to A. for life, and after his death to his children who attain twenty-five, and in default of such children to B., the gift over is void (f). In Re Abbott (g), Stirling, J., said: "It is settled that any limitation depending or expectant upon a prior limitation which is void for remoteness is invalid. The reason appears to be that the persons entitled under the subsequent limitation are not intended to take unless and until the prior limitation is exhausted: and as the prior limitation which is void for remoteness can never come into operation, much less be exhausted, it is impossible to give effect to the intentions of the settlor in favour of the beneficiaries under the subsequent limitation." It is submitted, however, that the true reason is that in applying the Rule against Perpetuities the Courts do not regard the intention of the testator, and that they regard possible, and not actual, events; under such a gift as that in Palmer v. Holford, A. might have a child under seven years of age at the testator's death, and in that case B.'s interest would not vest within the period allowed by the Rule; the gift over is, therefore, bad ab initio (i). If the intention of the testator were regarded, then in the event of A. never having a child, the gift over would be given effect to. But this is not the rule (j).

But a limitation following one which is too remote may be good, if it can take effect independently of the void limitation. For example, a gift over in default of appointment may be good, although the preceding power of appointment is bad for remoteness (k). So, where a testator devised property to trustees upon trust to sell it after the expiration of forty-nine years from his death, and to divide the proceeds of sale among persons ascertainable within the limits of the Rule, it was held that although the trust for sale was void, the legatees were entitled to the property (l). More difficult limitations.

Independent

(e) Palmer v. Holford, 4 Russ. 403, ante, p. 299. It does not appear whether the persons to take under the gift over were living at the testator's death: see Gray, § 252, n. See Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 290, post, p. 352, n. (o).

(f) Per Jessel, M. R., in Miles v. Harford, 12 Ch. D. at p. 703, quoted post, p. 357.

(g) [1893] 1 Ch. at p. 57.

(i) See per Leach, M. R., in Palmer v. Holford, supra.

(j) See Miles v. Harford, and other cases cited post.

(k) Webb v. Sadler, L. R., 8 Ch. 419; Williamson v. Farwell, 35 Ch. D. 128; Re Abbott, [1893] 1 Ch. 54.

(l) Re Davenport, [1893] 3 Ch. 421.

CHAPTER X.

questions arise when the gift over is to take effect on an alternative contingency : these are considered in the next section.

Where life interest follows interests void for remoteness.

Mr. Gray remarks (m) : " As all life interests to persons now in being must take effect, if at all, within lives in being, all such interests would seem to be good, although preceded by interests that are too remote." Mr. Gray's reasoning is unanswerable, so far as the general principle is concerned, but whether it would succeed if the question came before our Courts seems doubtful. No such exception to the general rule above stated (n) seems to be recognised, and in Re Thatcher's Trusts (o), where trusts which were void for remoteness were followed by a trust for A., a living person, for her life, it was held by Romilly, M. R., that the trust for A. was void, although the previous trusts failed during her lifetime. He relied on the decision in Beard v. Westcott (p), as explained by Lord St. Leonards in Monypenny v. Dering (q). As the decision in Beard v. Westcott relates to an entirely different rule, it may be well shortly to explain the true principle on which it rests.

Vested remainder following contingent remainders which fail.

It will be remembered that legal contingent remainders are subject to two special rules, one requiring that every remainder shall vest on or before the determination of the preceding estate of freehold, and the other forbidding the limitation of remainders to two or more unborn generations in succession (r).

As regards the former rule, it is clear that if land is devised to A. for life, with remainder to unborn persons for particular estates (such as estates for life or in tail), with remainder to B., a person in esse, B. takes a vested remainder, and if the intermediate contingent remainders fail, B.'s remainder takes effect (s).

And the same rule, it seems, generally applies where the particular estates are void ab initio. Thus, in Avelyn v. Ward (t), Lord Hardwicke remarked : " I know no case of a remainder or conditional limitation over of a real estate, whether by way of particular estate so as to leave a proper remainder, or to defeat an absolute

(m) Perp. § 252.

(n) By Jessel, M. R., and Stirling, J., ante, p. 351.

(o) 26 Bea. 365. Mr. Gray treats Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 290, as being to the same effect, but in that case A. died before the first tenant for life.

(p) 5 B. & Ald. 801.

(q) 2 D. M. & G. 145.

(r) Williams, Real P. (12th edition, pp. 269, 274); approved in Whitby v. Mitchell, 44 Ch. D. 85.

(s) Fearn, C. R. 222; Lewis v. Waters, 6 East, 336.

(t) 1 Ves. sen. 420. See also the examples of vested remainders taking effect after devises to monks, given arguendo in Robinson v. Hardcastle, 2 T. R. 241.

fee before by a conditional limitation, but if the precedent limitation, by what means soever, is out of the case, the subsequent limitation takes place."

If, however, there is a vested remainder following a series of limitations which are void because they tend to create a "perpetuity" (or unbarrable entail) within the meaning of the old Rule against Perpetuities (u), then the vested remainder shares the fate of the contingent remainders which precede it. Thus, in Re Mortimer (v), land was devised to the use of A. for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons successively for life, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of each such son of A. successively in tail male, with remainder to the daughters of each such son of A. in tail, with remainder to the use of A.'s daughters in tail, with remainder to the use of A. in fee simple. A. survived the testator, and died a bachelor. It was held by Farwell, J., and the Court of Appeal, that the doctrine of cy-près was inapplicable, and that being so, it was conceded by the persons claiming under A. that the ultimate limitation to him failed, and that there was an intestacy (w).

Effect of old Rule against Perpetuities.

The same principle applies where the testator attempts to create a "perpetuity," in the nature of an unbarrable entail, by limiting successive terms of years. Thus, in Somerville v. Lethbridge (x), the testator devised lands upon trust for A. for 99 years if he should so long live, with successive limitations of like terms for the lives of A.'s sons and their respective male issue, and in default of such issue to B., a living person, with similar limitations to his issue; at the death of the testator A. was unmarried, and the limitations following the term for the life of his first unborn son were, therefore, void under the old Rule against Perpetuities (y), and consequently the limitation to B. was also void. Beard v. Westcott (z) was a similar case. And Burley v. Evelyn (a) seems to have been decided on the same principle, though whether it was right to apply the technical doctrine of the old Rule against Perpetuities to a settlement of money may perhaps be doubted.

Attempt to create perpetuity by terms of years, &c.

(u) Ante, p. 283. This, of course, assumes that the limitations are not saved from failure by the doctrine of cy-près: ante, p. 288.

(v) [1905] 2 Ch. 502.

(w) The headnote states that the limitations after A.'s life estate were void "for remoteness," but this is inaccurate: they were void under the old Rule against Perpetuities; but for this Rule, the ultimate limitation to A. in fee, being a vested remainder, would have been good.

(x) 6 T. R. 213. That the limitations were as stated in the text appears from Beard v. Westcott, infra, and Sugden's note to Gilbert on Uses, 269.

(y) Ante, p. 283.

(z) 5 Taunt. 393, 5 B. & Ald. 801. The doctrine of cy-près was inapplicable in these cases, because an entail cannot be limited by terms of years: ante, p. 283.

(a) 16 Sim. 290, ante, p. 352, n. (o).

CHAPTER X.

Sir E. Sugden (Lord St. Leonards) explained the decision in Beard v. Westcott as having been made in accordance with the ground urged by him in argument, namely, that the testator intended B. to take only in case the previous limitations were capable of taking effect (b). But, as Mr. Gray justly points out (c), "the imputation of such an intent to a testator seems unwarranted." The real reason, it is submitted, why the limitations to B. and his issue were not allowed to take effect, is that they were part of a scheme for tying up the land by means of limitations in the nature of an unbarrable entail, and that the whole scheme was void (d).

It is, therefore, submitted that the ratio decidendi in Beard v. Westcott does not apply to such cases as Re Thatcher's Trusts (e), and that the decision in that case was erroneous.

Distinction where the gift over is to arise on a double contingency.

(I) ALTERNATIVE LIMITATIONS.—Care should be taken to distinguish between cases such as those referred to in the preceding section, and those in which the gift over is to arise on an alternative event, one branch of which is within, and the other beyond, the prescribed limits; so that the gift over will be valid, or not, according to the event (f). Thus, in Longhead v. Phelps (g), where trusts were declared of a term, in case of the death of A. without leaving issue male, or in case such issue male should die without issue, the Court held it clear that, the first contingency having happened, the trusts of the term were valid without reference to the other contingency.

Other instances of alternative limitations good or not in the event.

In Leake v. Robinson (h), too, certain stock and moneys were bequeathed to W. R. R. for life, and, after his decease, to the child

(b) Monypenny v. Dering, 2 D. M. & G. 182.

(c) Perp. § 254.

(d) It must be conceded that Lord St. Leonards never really grasped the distinction, clearly taken in Mr. Fearne's treatise, between "perpetuity" and "remoteness"; that this is so appears from the note in his edition of Gilbert on Uses, p. 260, where he treats the Chief Baron's definition of a perpetuity (which is perfectly accurate) as inaccurate, or at least obsolete. This accounts for the confused statement of the rules governing contingent remainders given by Lord St. Leonards in Cole v. Sewell, on which Mr. Jarman and Mr. Gray have commented.

(e) Ante, p. 352.

(f) See same principle applied to a different species of case, Tregonwell v.

Sydenham, 3 Dow, 194; ante, p. 309, n. (r).

(g) 2 W. Bl. 704. Crompe v. Barrow, 4 Ves. 681, is commonly cited to the same point. But in that case there was no question of remoteness, the appointor's son C. B. being the child of a former marriage, i.e., born before the creation of the power. If otherwise, the alternative gift over, if C. B. should die and leave no child surviving him (which was held good), would in fact have been too remote; for the vesting would have been suspended until the death of an unborn person. It is probable that a similar explanation may be given of Re Lord Sondes' Will, 2 Sm. & Gif. 416, sc. that Charlotte Palmer was living at the creation of the powers.

(h) 2 Mer. 363.

or children of the said W. R. R. who, being a son or sons, should attain the age of twenty-five, or being a daughter or daughters, should attain that age or be married with consent; and in case the said W. R. R. should happen to die without leaving issue living at the time of his decease, or, leaving such, they should all die before any of them should attain twenty-five if sons, and if daughters, before they should attain such age or be married as aforesaid, then to the brothers and sisters of W. R. R. on their attaining twenty-five if a brother or brothers, and if a sister or sisters, on such age or marriage as aforesaid. W. R. R. died without leaving issue, and it was not contended that, in the circumstances which had happened, the bequest over to the brothers and sisters was void, in reference to the event on which it was limited; though it was held that, as the bequest to the brothers and sisters included all who were living at the death of W. R. R. (i), it was clearly void from the remoteness of the bequest itself. Had W. R. R. left any issue, the event also would have been too remote.

In Goring v. Howard (j), there was a bequest of personal property upon trust for the testator's grandson G. G., and his brothers and sisters equally for their lives, and after the decease of any of the grandchildren to pay his or her share to his or her issue, if any, till they attained the age of twenty-five, and then to transfer to them their parent's share equally; and in case any of the grandchildren should die without leaving issue at his or her decease and without having obtained a vested interest, then the share of the grandchild so dying to go to the survivor or survivors, and to be payable and transferable as before mentioned; G. G. died a bachelor, and his brothers and sisters were held entitled to his share of income for their lives, in the alternative that had happened of no child of G. G. being alive at his decease, though the gift to such a child, had there been one, would have been too remote.

So in Monypenny v. Dering (k), where there was a devise in trust for P. M. for life, and after his decease in trust for his first son for life, and after the decease of such first son, "upon trust for the first son of the body of such first son and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue upon trust for all and every other the son and sons of the body of the said P. M., severally and successively according to seniority of age, for the like interests and limitations as I have before directed respecting the first son and his issue, and

(i) Vide ante, p. 331.

(k) 2 D. M. & G. 145. See also

(j) 16 Sim. 395; and see Minter v. Hodgson v. Halford, 11 Ch. D. 959.

Wraith, 13 ib. 52.

CHAPTER X.

in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, upon trust for T. M. for life," with remainders over : Lord St. Leonards held that the limitation to the unborn son of an unborn son of P. M., being itself void, invalidated the remainders depending upon it ; but that the remainder to T. M., and the subsequent remainders, were good in the alternative event, which had happened, of P. M. not leaving any issue at his decease.

In Cambridge v. Rous (l), the testatrix bequeathed property upon trust for her sister A. for life, and after her death upon trust for A.'s children at twenty-seven, with a gift over in the event of A. not having any child or of all her children dying under twenty-seven : A. never had any children, and it was held that the gift over took effect.

The principle laid down in the authorities above cited was followed in Re Bowles (m), where certain powers, which, if they had been exercised, might (as it was assumed) have made the ultimate gift invalid, were, in fact, not exercised.

In Miles v. Harford (n), a testator devised freeholds to A. and his issue male in strict settlement, with a shifting clause in the event of A. or any of his issue male coming into possession of another estate, and bequeathed leaseholds upon corresponding trusts. A. came into possession of the other estate, and it was held by Jessel, M. R., that the shifting clause, being divisible, took effect as to the leaseholds.

Dividing or "splitting",
a gift over.

In all these cases the testator had himself expressed the alternative contingency, but it often happens that a testator frames a gift over to take effect on an event which really includes two contingencies, one within, the other beyond, the limits allowed by law, and that the former happens. In such a case, the Courts refuse to divide or split the event, and the gift over consequently fails.

A well-known example of this construction is Proctor v. Bishop of Bath and Wells (o), stated above. In that case, if the testator had directed the gift over to take effect in the event of T. P. having no son, or of his having no son who should take holy orders, the gift over would have taken effect, because he died without having had a son, but although the latter contingency included the former, the Court refused to separate them.

(l) 8 Ves. 12, 25 Bea. 409.

(m) [1905] 1 Ch. 371. See Addenda.

(n) 12 Ch. D. 691. The M. R. also decided in the plaintiff's favour on the ground that the trust of the leaseholds was an executory one. Compare Har- ding v. Nott, 7 E. & B. 650, where the person named in the shifting clause died without coming into possession of the other estate, and the gift over failed : supra, p. 306.

(o) 2 H. Bl. 358.

Again, in Lord Dungannon v. Smith (p), where a testator devised leaseholds in trust for his grandson A. for life, and after his death "to permit such person who for the time being would take by descent as heir male of the body of his said grandson to take the profits thereof until some such person should attain the age of twenty-one years, and then to convey the same unto such person so attaining the age of twenty-one years" absolutely, with a gift over "if no such person should live to attain" that age. The eldest son of A. attained twenty-one in his father's lifetime, and claimed the property as having, in event, vested within legal limits. He contended that the devise might be read as containing separate gifts, to the eldest son, if he attained twenty-one, if not, to the first other heir male who should attain that age; but it was held otherwise, for there was no gift to the eldest son, except as one of a set or series of persons, any one of whom might come within the description, whether he was within the limit or not, and there was no authority for moulding or splitting the bequest in the manner proposed. The case was considered to be analogous to Leake v. Robinson.

The principle on which the Courts proceed in these cases was laid down by Jessel, M. R., in Miles v. Harford (q), with his usual clearness and accuracy: "On a gift to A. for life, with a gift over in case he shall have no son who shall attain the age of twenty-five years, the gift over is void for remoteness. On a gift to A. for life, with a gift over if he shall have no son who shall take priest's orders in the Church of England, the gift over is void for remoteness; but a gift superadded, 'or if he shall have no son,' is valid, and takes effect if he has no son; yet both these events are included in the other event, because a man who has no son, certainly never has a son who attains twenty-five, or takes priest's orders in the Church of England; still, the alternative event will take effect, because that is the expression. The testator, in addition to his expression of a gift over, has also expressed another gift over on another event, although included in the first event, but the same judges who have held that the second gift over will take effect where it is expressed, have held that it will not take effect if it is not expressed. . . . That is what they mean by splitting: they will not split the expression by dividing the two events."

A recent illustration of the principle in question is Re Bence (r).

(p) 12 Cl. & F. 546. See also the judgment of Sir E. Sugden in Ker v. Dungannon, 1 Dr. & War. 509.

(q) 12 Ch. D. 691.

(r) [1891] 3 Ch. 242. It should be noted that the limitations of the will on which the case of Evers v. Challis was decided are not accurately stated in the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Re Bence.

CHAPTER X.

There the testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust as to one-fifth share for the testator's daughter B. for life, and after her death for such child or children of B. as should attain twenty-one, and also such child or children of any son or daughter of B. dying under the age of twenty-one as should attain twenty-one or marry, and the testator declared that if B. should die without leaving any lawful issue who should live to attain a vested interest, her share should go over. B. died without ever having had a child, but it was held that the gift over could not be split so as to make it take effect in that event, because the gift over was single in point of expression, although it included two events, and although that one of the two events which happened was within the limits of the Rule against Perpetuities (s).

Doctrine of Pelham v.
Gregory.

If personal property is given to A. for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, and, in default of such issue, to B. for life, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, and A. and B. both die, A. having no son, the first son of B. will take (ss). Mr. Jarman does not treat this as an exception to the ordinary mode applying the Rule against Perpetuities (t). Mr. Gray thinks that it is an instance of the law splitting a gift which has not been split by the testator (u).

Exception.

The principle that the Court will not divide the events on which a gift over is to take effect, does not apply where, in the event which has happened, the gift over can take effect as a contingent remainder, although if the other event had happened it would have been void as an executory devise.

Evers v.
Challis.

This exception was established by the decision in Evers v. Challis (v). In that case the testator devised four houses in trust for his daughter Elizabeth for life, and after her decease to such of her children as being sons should attain the age of twenty-three years, or being daughters should attain the age of twenty-one years, equally as tenants in common in fee; and in case all the children of Elizabeth should die, if a son or sons, under the age of twenty-three years, or, if a daughter or daughters, under the age of twenty-one, or if she should have none, then he devised the property in trust for his son John and his daughters Sarah and Ann equally for their respective lives, and at their respective deaths he devised the share

(s) Re Harvey, 39 Ch. D. 289, and Re Hancock, [1901] 1 Ch. 482 s. c., s. n. Hancock v. Watson, [1902] A. C. 14, are to the same effect.

(ss) Pelham v. Gregory, 3, Br. P. C.

204, and other cases cited post, Chap. XXXIII.

(t) Post, Chap. XXXIII.

(u) Gray on Perp. § 356.

(v) 7 H. L. C. 531.

of the one dying to his or her children who being sons should attain twenty-three, or being daughters should attain twenty-one, as tenants in common in fee; and in case of the death of his son or either of his said two daughters without leaving a child who being a son should attain twenty-three, or being a daughter should attain twenty-one, he devised the third share of the one so dying to the children of the others in the same manner as before. Elizabeth died in 1838 without ever having had a child, and in 1847 Ann died without ever having had a child. The son John had two daughters, one of whom, M. A. E., attained twenty-one during the life of Ann. Two questions were raised: first, whether the gift over on the death of Elizabeth was good; and, secondly, whether the gift over on the death of Ann was good. The Court of Q. B. decided both questions in the affirmative (w). As to the first, they held (in accordance with the authorities before stated) that if Elizabeth had had a child, although he did not attain the prescribed age, the gift over would have been void for remoteness, but that in the event which happened of her never having had a child, the gift took effect as an alternative contingent remainder. As to the second, the Court decided that here also the gift over took effect, although the event of her never having had any children was not actually expressed, being of opinion, upon the authority of Jones v. Westcomb (x) and similar cases, that wherever there was a gift over on a class dying within a particular age, it took effect if that class never came into existence. In the Exchequer Chamber the decision on the second point was reversed, the Court, without denying the authority of Jones v. Westcomb, applying the same principle to the splitting of one set of words into two contingencies, that Sir W. Grant, in Leake v. Robinson, applied to the splitting of a class. Alderson, B., who delivered the judgment of the Court, said (y): "The true meaning of the devise is, in every event which can happen in which Ann dies leaving no children if male who attain twenty-three, or if female who attain twenty-one, I give the estate over. That is what he says, and that is what he means. He includes all those events in one clause. Some are legal, some are illegal. How is the Court to sever these events, which the testator has expressly joined together, without making a new will? The principle seems, therefore, to be against splitting such a devise when we are considering the question whether it is a legal one. Now this question, it is conceded, must be determined as on reading the will at the (w) 18 Q. B. 224.(x) 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 245. See Chap.

LVIII.

(y) 18 Q. B. p. 248.

CHAPTER X.

instant of the testator's death. Do the cases cited affect this principle? On looking over them we find in all of them that the devise in any event was legal, and that it was competent for the testator to make it."

Apart from the question of remoteness, it was admitted by the Exchequer Chamber that Jones v. Westcomb was full and sufficient authority for construing the will as was done in the Court of Q. B.; what prevented the Court from applying the doctrine laid down in Jones v. Westcomb to the case before them, was that, assuming the gift over to be an executory devise and nothing more, there was a possibility of the gift over taking effect on a remote contingency, and this vitiated the whole limitation, on the principle that in applying the Rule against Perpetuities, possibilities, and not actual events, must be considered (z).

On appeal to the House of Lords (a), the decision of the Exchequer Chamber was reversed, and it was held that M. A. E. took a share of the property under the gift over on the death of Ann, although the contingency of Ann's never having had any children was not expressed. Wightman, J., in giving the opinion of himself and several of his brother judges, who were summoned to advise the House of Lords, said: "No case or authority has been cited to shew that where a devise over includes two contingencies, which are in their nature divisible, and one of which can operate as a remainder, they may not be divided, although included in one expression; and our opinion does not at all conflict with the authority of Jee v. Audley and Proctor v. Bishop of Bath and Wells, in neither of which cases was it possible for the limitation over to operate as a remainder." In other words, the gift over took effect as if the limitation had been to Ann for life, with remainder to her children who attained the specified ages, with remainder to the children of John who attained the specified ages. "Whether the result should be to give the estate to her [Ann's] own child, or to the children of her brother and sister, in either case the gift must take effect as a remainder, for no prior estate is divested or displaced" (b).

In Watson v. Young (c), the testator devised land in trust for A. for life, and after his death in trust for his children who should reach twenty-one, and the issue of any child dying under twenty-one who should reach twenty-one, with a gift over in case there should be no child nor the issue of any child of A. who should live to (z) Supra, p. 299.

(a) 7 H. L. C. 531.

(b) Per Lord Cranworth, 7 H. L. C.

at p. 551.

(c) 28 Ch. D. 436.

reach twenty-one. A. had no children, and Pearson, J., held that the gift over was divisible into two alternative gifts, one in the event of A. having no child, and the other in the event of no child or issue of a child of A. attaining twenty-one, and he held that the former event having happened, the gift over was good. The learned judge decided the case on the authority of Evers v. Challis, but as the gift over in the case of Watson v. Young did not take effect as a contingent remainder, it seems clear that the decision of Pearson, J., was wrong (d).

When personal property is bequeathed to a series of persons not in esse, by words which would create successive estates tail if the subject of the gift were real estate, and the first person does not come in esse, the next will take, under the doctrine laid down in Pelham v. Gregory (e), which is considered in a later chapter. Mr. Gray thinks that the doctrine is an exception to the rule that a gift not split by the testator cannot be split by the Court (f), and this view seems to be accurate, but the doctrine is not generally so treated.

Quasi-entail
of personality.

(K) MODIFYING AND QUALIFYING CLAUSES—SUBSTITUTION—CONDITIONS, &c.—The cases in which clauses of accruer, shifting clauses, and gifts over have been held void under the Rule, have been already referred to (g).

Mr. Jarman remarks (h) that “though the Courts will not violate the established rules of construction for the sake of bringing a gift within legal limits, yet an anxiety to prevent a testator’s dispositive scheme from proving abortive, on account of its remoteness, is plainly discoverable throughout the cases. To this anxiety we may ascribe the rule, which recent cases seem to establish, that where a testator has by his will made an absolute bequest in favour of unborn persons, and has afterwards by a codicil revoked such bequest, and in lieu thereof given to the same legatees life interests only, with remainder to their children (which substituted bequest, of course, would be void as to the children), the codicil may be rejected, and the legatees take the interests originally given them by the will (i).

Clauses illegally modifying previous absolute gifts rejected.

“And this rejection of qualifying clauses ineffectually attempted to be engrafted on a previous absolute gift, equally obtains where the whole is contained in the same testamentary paper, and in spite,

(d) See Re Bence, [1891] 3 Ch. at p. 251.

(e) 3 Bro. P. C. 204. Post, Chap. XXXIII.

(f) Perp. § 357.

(g) Supra, pp. 306, 346.

(h) First edition, p. 256.

(i) Arnold v. Congreve, 1 R. & Myl. 209. The actual decision in this case was wrong, and it may be treated as overruled, but the principle for which Mr. Jarman cites it is correctly laid down in it.

CHAPTER X.

too, of the principle hereafter discussed, which prefers the posterior of two inconsistent clauses; it being considered (for this is the ground upon which alone the construction can be defended) that the testator intends the prior absolute gift to prevail, except so far only as it is effectually superseded by the subsequent qualified one (j). As in Carver v. Bowles (k), where a testatrix, having under her marriage settlement a power of selection in favour of her children, appointed the settled fund to her five children, two sons and three daughters, absolutely in equal shares; and then proceeded to declare that the one-fifth so appointed to each of her daughters, she did thereby, so far as she lawfully might or could, order and appoint should be held upon trusts for the daughter for her separate and inalienable use for life; and after her decease for her children, and in default of children, subject to her general power of appointment, and in default of appointment, for her next of kin. Sir John Leach, M. R., held that the words of the appointment were sufficient to vest the shares absolutely in the daughters; that the attempt to restrict their interest by limitations to their issue, being inoperative, did not cut down the absolute appointment; but that it was competent to the donee of the power to limit the interests which he appointed to his daughters to their separate use, and to restrain them from anticipation or alienation" (l).

The same principle was acted on in Kampf v. Jones (m), Ring v. Hardwick (n), Lassence v. Tierney (o) (a leading case on the doctrine), and other cases (p), the latest being Hancock v. Watson (q).

This principle, however, is only applicable where the restriction or modification can be separated from the original gift (r).

Void gift by way of substitution.

On the same principle, if there is a gift to a class of persons ascertainable within due limits, followed by a substitutional gift to

(j) On the question whether the prior gift is absolute or not, see Whitell v. Dudin, 2 J. & W. 279, and other cases cited post, Chap. XXXVIII. And see and consider Doe d. Blomfield v. Eyre, 5 C. B. 713, cited in that chapter.

(k) 2 R. & M. 306. See also Church v. Kemble, 5 Sim. 525.

(l) The M. R. therefore thought that this restriction took effect; but it is now settled that it is void for remoteness and will be rejected, Fry v. Capper, Kay, 163; Armitage v. Coates, 35 Bea. 1; Re Teague's Settlement, L. R., 10 Eq. 564; Re Cunynghame's Settlement, L. R., 11 Eq. 324; Re Ridley, 11 Ch. D. 645; Shute v. Hogge, 58 L. T. 546; Whitby v. Mitchell, 44 Ch. D. 85, except in those cases where the gifts are separable: post, p. 363.

(m) 2 Kee. 756.

(n) 2 Bea. 352.

(o) 1 Mac. & G. 551.

(p) Hodson v. Micklethwaite, 2 Dr. 294; Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Dr. 73; Stephens v. Gadsden, 20 Bea. 463; Courtier v. Oram, 21 Bea. 91; Salmon v. Salmon, 29 Bea. 27; Cooke v. Cooke, 38 Ch. D. 202; Re Boyd, 63 L. T. 92; Douglass v. Waddell, 17 L. R. Ir. 384.

(q) [1902] A. C. 14, in which the House of Lords affirmed the decision of the C. A. (Re Hancock), [1901] 1 Ch. 482. See Chaps. XXXIII., XXXVIII.

(r) Whitehead v. Bennett, 22 L. J. Ch. 1020; Re Crawshaw, 43 Ch. D. 615.

take effect within a period exceeding that allowed by the Rule, the substitutional gift is void, and the original gift remains (rr).

CHAPTER X.

So in the case of a divesting clause, or gift over, which is void for remoteness, the result may be that the original gift becomes absolute (s).

Void divesting clause, or gift over.

Where there is an absolute gift to A., followed by a direction, made for A.'s supposed benefit, postponing possession until the attainment by A. of some age exceeding twenty-one, this direction is void, not because it transgresses the Rule, but because any direction postponing the enjoyment of a vested and indefeasible interest beyond the age of twenty-one is repugnant to the nature of an absolute interest (ss).

Possession of vested gift postponed beyond age of twenty-five.

It has been held in several modern cases, that where an interest in property is given to an unborn daughter of a living person, with a clause against anticipation, the restraint on anticipation is void, and that consequently, on the principle above stated, the gift of the interest is good, the restraint alone being rejected (t).

Restraint on anticipation.

When gifts are made to several persons by one description, but the gift to one is not affected by the existence or non-existence of the others, the gifts are separable, and if modifying clauses are not too remote when applied to the gifts to some of these persons, but are too remote when applied to the gifts to the others, they will be operative in the former cases, and disregarded in the latter (u). Thus, where there is a gift to such of the children of A. as shall be living at the death of B., followed by a direction that the share of each daughter shall be settled upon her for life, with remainder to her children, here the limitation in favour of the children of daughters is good in the case of those daughters who are born Separable gifts.

(rr) Baldwin v. Rogers, 3 D. M. & G. 649; Packer v. Scott, 33 Bea. 511; Goodier v. Johnson, 18 Ch. D. 441, stated ante, p. 333.

(s) Harding v. Nott and other cases cited ante, p. 306.

(ss) See Chap. XVII., ante, pp. 303-4; Gray, §§ 120-21. As to the effect on a gift to a class, see Kevern v. Williams, 5 Sim. 171; Blease v. Burgh, 2 Bea. 221, and other cases cited post, Chap. XLII.

(t) Fry v. Capper, Kay, 163; Armistage v. Coates, 35 Bea. 1; Re Teague's Settlement, L. R., 10 Eq. 564; Re Cunyngame's Settlement, L. R., 11 Eq. 324. The principle of these cases (holding the restraint to be bad) was disapproved by Jessel, M. R., in Re Ridley, 11 Ch. D. 645, and he followed them reluctantly. It seems clear that they involve a confusion between gifts which are void for remoteness, and restraints which are void because they hinder alienation. A gift to a married woman may be subject to a restraint on anticipation, and the fact that the restraint may last beyond the period allowed by the Rule against Perpetuities cannot make any difference. "The true doctrine is believed to be that a future estate, not in itself too remote, can be subjected to the same restraints to which a present estate can be subjected" (Gray, Perp. § 437). The doctrine stated in the text must, however, be considered as adopted by the Court of Appeal; see Whitby v. Mitchell, 44 Ch. D. 85, although the point was not argued.

(u) Gray, Perp. § 441.

CHAPTER X.

Restraint on anticipation good during prior life interests.

Entailed personalty.

Construction of will not affected by Rule.

during the testator's lifetime, and bad as to those born subsequently (v). So where there is a gift to the daughters of the testator's children with a restraint on anticipation, the restraint is good as to those daughters who are born in the testator's lifetime, and void as to those born afterwards (w).

In Re Millward (x), a testator gave his residuary estate to his wife, two daughters, and a son for life (the interests of the wife and daughters to be without power of anticipation), and after the death of the survivor he gave his estate to the born and future children of his son in equal proportions. By a codicil he imposed a restraint on anticipation on all females taking any interest under his will. The survivor of the wife, daughters, and son died in January 1902. The son left five children living at his death, of whom two were married women: it was held by Joyce, J., that the restraint on anticipation was valid as to income and corpus during the existence of the prior life interests, and that it determined when the property fell into possession in January 1902.

Where personal property is settled upon trust to follow entailed realty, with a proviso that it shall not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail who dies under twenty-one, this proviso will, it seems, as a general rule, be construed as part of the primary trust, so that the whole trust is void, unless it is confined to tenants in tail by purchase (y).

(L) CONSTRUCTION.—The principle that the Court will not depart from the established rules of construction in order to render a disposition valid under the Rule, has been already referred to in connection with gifts to classes (z). The principle is recognised in numerous cases (a). “It is against the settled rules of construction to strike out any words from a will because they offend against the perpetuity rule. For all purposes of construction, the will must be read as if no such rule existed. Any dispositions which, so reading and construing it, are found to be the testator's wishes, must be taken to be his wishes, and if those wishes offend against the rule, the gifts would fail, and must fail accordingly; but they are not the

(v) Wilson v. Wilson, 28 L. J. Ch. 95; Re Russell, [1895] 2 Ch. 698; ante, p. 339.

(w) Herbert v. Webster, 15 Ch. D. 610; Re Ferneley's Trusts, [1902] 1 Ch. 543; Re Game, [1907] 1 Ch. 276. The point seems to have been overlooked in Re Michael's Trusts, 46 L. J. Ch. 651, and Re Ridley, 11 Ch. D. 645. The doctrine stated in the text is, of course, open to the criticism expressed in n. (t).

(x) 87 L. T. 476.

(y) Christie v. Gosling, and other cases referred to ante, p. 347, and post, Chap. XX.

(z) Supra, p. 341.

(a) Dungannon v. Smith, 12 Cl. & F. 546.

less part of his will, and to be resorted to as part of the context for all purposes of construction, as if no such rule had been established" (b). "You do not import the law of remoteness into the construction of the instrument by which you investigate the expressed intention of the testator. You take his words and endeavour to arrive at their meaning, exactly in the same manner as if there had been no such law, and as if the whole intention expressed by the words could lawfully take effect. I do not mean that, in dealing with words which are obscure and ambiguous, weight, even in a question of remoteness, may not sometimes be given to the consideration that it is better to effectuate than to destroy the intention; but I do say that if the construction of the words is one about which a Court would have no doubt, though there was no law of remoteness, that construction cannot be altered or wrested to something different, for the purpose of escaping from the consequences of that law" (c).

Accordingly, the Court refuses to strain the rules of construction in order to make a gift to a class valid (d), or to split a gift over if the testator has not done so (e).

But, as Mr. Jarman points out (f), the Court has, especially in the older cases, often been consciously or unconsciously influenced by a desire to give effect to the intention of testators. Instances will be found in the doctrine which rejects modifying and qualifying clauses when too remote (g), and in the rule that in carrying out executory trusts the Court will, if possible, so modify them as to bring them within the limits of the Rule (h).

And if a particular clause in a will is capable of two constructions, one of which will make it void under the Rule against Perpetuities, while the other will carry out the obvious intention of the testator, the latter construction is preferred (i). There are numerous cases in which a gift which would have been void for remoteness if it had

Construction
of ambiguous clause.

(b) Heasman v. Pearse, L. R., 7 Ch. at p. 283.

(c) Per Selborne, L. C., in Pearks v. Moseley, 5 A. C. at p. 719. See also per Wood, V.-C., in Catlin v. Brown, 11 Ha. 375.

(d) Supra, p. 331.

(e) Supra, p. 356.

(f) Supra, p. 361.

(g) Supra, p. 361.

(h) Supra, p. 309. Mr. Gray thinks that this unconscious tendency influenced the decision in Forth v. Chapman (1 P. Wms. 663) and other cases of that class (post, Chap. LII.). The cases of Mogg v. Mogg (1 Mer. 654), Leach v. Leach (2 Y. & C. C. C. 495), Kevern v. Williams (5 Sim. 171), and Elliott v. Elliott (12 Sim. 276), in which rules of construction appear to have been strained in order to avoid remoteness, are commented on by Mr. Gray (Perp. §§ 634 seq.).

(i) Re Turney, [1899] 2 Ch., p. 747. The same rule was stated by Lord Chelmsford in Martelli v. Holloway (L. R., 5 H. L. at p. 548), but it is submitted that the principle followed in that case (post, Chap. XX.) does not depend on the rule suggested by Lord Chelmsford (see Christie v. Gosling, L. R., 1 H. L. 279).

CHAPTER X.

been construed to be contingent, has been held to be vested subject to be divested, and therefore good (j).

"So far as the law permits."

A testator sometimes declares that the dispositions of his will shall take effect "as far as the rules of law and equity permit," or that he makes them "so far as he lawfully or equitably can or may"; words of this kind are most frequently used in connection with gifts of personalty to go according to limitations of real estate. It was formerly supposed that such trusts were executory (k), but this doctrine has been long overruled (l), and it seems now settled that the presence of words of this kind does not justify the Court in putting a forced construction on the will in order to save the testator's provisions from the penalty of remoteness (m), unless the trust is really executory (n).

As to implying estates which would be too remote.

According to Mr. Jarman (o), a further illustration of the leaning of the Courts against a construction which will defeat the testator's intention, is to be found in the "disinclination in the Courts to apply those liberal rules of construction which, in favour of the apparent intention, as collected from the context, operate to raise devices by implication, in the absence of words of positive gift, where the effect of such implication would be to impute to the testator a scheme of disposition at variance with the principle of law which regulates and restricts the period of vesting" (p).

Doctrine of cy-près.

But it is the doctrine of cy-près which, in Mr. Jarman's view, affords "the most striking illustration of the anxiety of the Courts to prevent the total disappointment of the testator's intention by the operation of the Rule against Perpetuities" (q). This, however, is not quite accurate, for historically there seems no doubt that the doctrine of cy-près is derived from the old rule forbidding the creation of unbarrable entails (r), and that it has nothing to do with the modern Rule against Perpetuities. Unless the doctrine can be explained on this theory, it is the solitary instance in which the Courts have disregarded an otherwise inflexible rule in order to give effect to the intention of testators, and it is difficult to understand why this particular instance should have been selected.

Charitable gifts.

(M) EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULE.—(1) Charitable Gifts.—It is some-

(j) See the cases cited in the last note, and post, Chap. XXXVII.

(k) Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Madd. 337; Trafford v. Trafford, 3 Atk. 347.

(l) See Rowland v. Morgan, 2 Ph. 764. The cases are cited in Chap. XX., post.

(m) Tollemache v. Coventry, 2 Cl. & F. 611; Christie v. Gosling, L. R., 1 H. L.

279; Harrington v. Harrington, L. R., 5 H. L. 87.

(n) See Miles v. Harford, 12 Ch. D. 691.

(o) First edition, p. 260.

(p) Chapman v. Brown, 3 Burr. 1626.

(q) First edition, p. 260.

(r) Supra, p. 281.

times said that charitable gifts are an exception to the Rule (s), but this is inaccurate. A charitable trust creates a perpetuity in the primary sense of the word, and it follows that charitable gifts are an exception to the general principle of law which forbids the creation of inalienable and indestructible interests in property (t). It has even been held that property may be given to one charity, subject to a gift over, in an event which may never happen, to another charity (u). But these cases have nothing to do with the modern Rule against Perpetuities (v), which clearly applies to charitable gifts. Thus, a gift to a charity, conditional upon a future and uncertain event which may not happen within the period allowed by the Rule, is void (w). So, if property is given to a private individual, with a limitation in a remote contingency to a charity, this limitation is void (x). Conversely, if property is given to a charity, with a gift over in a remote contingency in favour of private persons, the gift over is void (y). But a gift of a fund for a charity may be made defeasible or determinable on an event which must or may happen after the expiration of the period allowed by the Rule, so that when that event happens, the fund reverts to the testator's estate; and an express direction by the testator that on the happening of the event the fund shall fall into his residue, does not offend against the Rule, because it is mere surplusage (z).

Resulting trust after gift to charity.

(2) Trusts for Accumulation.—The Rule against Perpetuities does not apply to a trust for accumulation whereby a fund is to be created for payment of the testator's debts, or for the discharge of existing incumbrances on an estate, because such a provision only prescribes a particular mode of paying the debts, and it may Accumulation for payment of debts,

(s) Lewis, 663, 687 seq. This is one of the many instances of the mental confusion caused by the ambiguity of the word "perpetuity" which are to be found in Mr. Lewis's work: see ante, p. 288, n. (i).

(t) Ante, p. 278; Thomson v. Shakespear, 1 D. F. & J. at p. 407.

(u) Christ's Hospital v. Grainger, 1 Mac. & G. 460, ante, p. 280. Lord Cottenham's decision was expressly based on the doctrine of perpetuity in the primary sense of an inalienable interest. See Mr. Gray's remarks on the decision (§ 599 seq.), and ante, p. 280, as to the decision in Re Tyler.

(v) Mr. Gray says, with great truth, that much confusion would have been avoided if the modern "Rule against Perpetuities" had been called the "Rule against Remoteness": Gray on Perp. §§ 2, 140, 589 seq.

(w) Chamberlayne v. Brockett, L. R., 8 Ch. 206; Re Lord Stratheden and Campbell, [1894] 3 Ch. 265; Kingham v. Kingham, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 170.

(x) Company of Pewterers v. Christ's Hospital, 1 Vern. 161; Att.-Gen. v. Gill, 2 P. W. 369; Re Johnson's Trusts, L. R., 2 Eq. 716; Commissioners, &c. v. De Clifford, 1 Dr. & War. 245.

(y) Re Bowen, [1893] 2 Ch. 491; Re Barnett, 24 T. L. R. 788.

(z) Re Randell, 38 Ch. D. 213; Re Blunt's Trusts, [1904] 2 Ch. 767.

CHAPTER X. or legacies.

at any time be put an end to, either by the owner of the property paying them off, or by the creditors enforcing their claims (a). A trust to accumulate rents to pay a legacy to an existing person is also good (b).

Trusts for accumulation for benefit of legatee.

An apparent exception to the Rule against Perpetuities occurs in the case of certain other trusts for accumulation. A trust to accumulate income for the benefit of a person who may not be ascertained within the period allowed by the Rule is, of course, void, but a trust to accumulate income for the benefit of some one to be ascertained within due limits, who can put an end to it at any time after his interest has vested, is not within the Rule (c).

Charity.

The same doctrine applies to a trust to accumulate for the benefit of a charity (d).

Thellusson
Act.

The statutory law with regard to the accumulation of income is considered in the next chapter.

Equitable
contingent
remainders.

(3) Contingent Remainders.—There can be no doubt that the Rule applies to equitable contingent remainders (e).

Apparent
exception in the case of legal remainders.

With regard to legal contingent remainders, there are cases in which they are clearly not within the modern Rule. Thus, if land is devised to A., a bachelor, for life, and on his death to the first son of his who attains twenty-five, this is a contingent remainder which will fail, unless at A.'s death there is a son who has attained twenty-five: if it vests at all, it must vest at A.'s death, and can, therefore, never be too remote. This case is, therefore, an apparent, and not a true, exception to the Rule.

Can a legal contingent remainder be void for remoteness?

Apart from this undisputed rule of law, the question whether a legal contingent remainder can be void for remoteness has been much discussed. It has been answered in the affirmative in two recent cases, by Kay, J., in Re Frost (f), and by

(a) Tewart v. Lawson, L. R., 18 Eq. 490; Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 V. & B. 54; Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Sw. 432; Bateman v. Hotchkin, 10 Bea. 426; Bacon v. Proctor, T. & R. 31; Briggs v. Earl of Oxford, 1 D. M. & G. 363. Gilbertson v. Richards, 5 H. & N. 453, is sometimes cited as an illustration of the principle above stated: see per Jessel, M. R., in London & South-Western Ry. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. p. 577.

(b) Williams v. Lewis, 6 H. L. C. 1013.

(c) Saunders v. Vautier, Cr. & Ph. 240; Gosling v. Gosling, Johns. 265; Oddie v. Brown, 4 De G. & J. 179.

(d) Wharton v. Masterman, [1895] A. C. 186, overruling dictum of Wickens, V.-C., in Harbin v. Masterman, L. R., 12 Eq. 559.

(e) Abbiss v. Burney, 17 Ch. D. 211. The curious result follows that equitable contingent remainders are subject to both the old and the new Rules against Perpetuities.

(f) 43 Ch. D. 246.

Farwell, J., in Re Ashforth (g), but as both these cases ignore the older authorities, and the result of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Whitby v. Mitchell (h), they cannot be considered satisfactory.

Before the decision in Whitby v. Mitchell, real property lawyers were divided into two schools on this question. The older school, headed by Mr. Fearne, held that contingent remainders are not subject to the modern Rule against Perpetuities, but are governed by the old Rule, which forbids the limitation of land to the unborn issue of a person in succession beyond the first generation (i). According to this school, the modern Rule was invented to restrict the creation of executory interests, and does not apply to contingent remainders, for these are governed by their own special rules, definitely fixed before the introduction of executory interests. In addition to Mr. Fearne (j), this school included Mr. Peter B. Brodie (k), Mr. Lewis Duval (l), Mr. Preston (m), Mr. Charles Butler (n), Lord laid down by Mr. Fearne

Doctrine
and others.

(g) [1905] 1 Ch. 535. In Whitby v. Von Luedecke, [1906] 1 Ch. 783, the question was not argued.

(h) 44 Ch. D. 85.

(i) Ante, p. 281.

(j) After explaining (Cont. Rem. 429) that the invention of the modern Rule against Perpetuities was made necessary by the fact that executory devises are free from the restrictions imposed by the common law on contingent remainders, Mr. Fearne goes on to remark that "future and shifting uses, and other springing and executory interests which are not remainders, are to be considered as subject to the same limits and restrictions as executory devises." (Cont. Rem. 441, 10th edition; the italics are mine.) Mr. Fearne's statement of the old Rule against Perpetuities will be found in the passage quoted above, p. 285. Mr. Lewis entirely misunderstood Mr. Fearne's views on the subject, owing to his inability to see the difference between "perpetuity" and "remoteness." So far as I am aware, Mr. Fearne never uses "perpetuity" in its modern sense, as equivalent to "remoteness" [C. S.].

(k) The draftsman of the Fines and Recoveries Act, and probably the ablest real property lawyer who has ever lived.

(l) Mr. Lewis Duval was one of the most eminent conveyancers of his day. He and Mr. Brodie were two of the Real Property Commissioners, the others being Lord Campbell and Messrs. W. H. Tinney, John Hodgson, Samuel Duckworth, and John Tyrrell, all men of eminence in their profession. The Real Property Commissioners unanimously stated in their third report, as a familiar and unquestioned doctrine, that the Rule against Perpetuities does not apply to contingent remainders: "All future interests, not being remainders, are restrained in their limits by the rules of law relating to perpetuities" (p. 29). The Commissioners recommended (p. 30) that the rule with regard to the failure of contingent remainders should be amended by enacting that every contingent remainder should take effect if the particular estate determined before the remainder vested, "becoming in that event liable to the rules prescribed for restraining perpetuities." This recommendation has been carried into effect by the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877, which thus confirms the correctness of the view held by the Commissioners.

(m) "No remainder can, in point of expression, be too remote, since the necessity that the remainder should vest during the particular estate, or eo instante that the particular estate determines, and the liability of a contingent remainder to be defeated by the merger, &c., of the particular estate, are a protection against the inconvenience of perpetuities" (Abst. ii. 114).

(n) "The remoteness of a remainder, however great, was no objection to it on its creation" (note to Fearne, Cont. Rem., p. 565, 10th edition).

CHAPTER X.

St. Leonards (o), Lord Brougham (p), Mr. S. M. Leake (q), Mr. Coventry (r), Mr. Burton (s), Mr. Joshua Williams (t), and Mr. H. W. Challis (u).

Mr. Lewis's theory.

The contrary view—that contingent remainders are subject to the modern Rule against Perpetuities—seems to have originated with Mr. Lewis: he denied the existence of the rule forbidding the limitation of land to two or more unborn generations in succession (now established by the decision in Whitby v. Mitchell), and contended that it is merely an example or instance of the modern Rule against Perpetuities (v). But this, as Mr. Joshua Williams pointed out, involves an entire misapprehension of the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell, which “is more stringent than that which confines executory interests” (w), for it absolutely forbids the limitation of land by way of remainder to the unborn issue of a person for two or more generations in succession; even if such a limitation is restricted to issue born within a life in being, it is void (x).

(o) “It is now perfectly settled that where a limitation is to take effect as a remainder, remoteness is out of the question”: Cole v. Sewell, 4 Dr. & W. at p. 28.

(p) “I was a good deal surprised to find that there was a question raised about the remoteness of the limitation. . . . It [the suggestion in question] opened to my mind a new and strange view of the law, applying that to contingent remainders which I had always understood must be, from the very nature of the thing, confined to springing uses and executory devises”: Cole v. Sewell, 2 H. L. C. 230.

(q) Prop. in Land, 334, 335, n. (1st ed.).

(r) “The Rule against Perpetuities does not apply to remainders”: Watkins, Convey. (6th edition, by Coventry), 176, n.

(s) Comp. § 782.

(t) Mr. Joshua Williams's statement of the law, which was adopted as accurate by Kay, J., and the Court of Appeal in Whitby v. Mitchell (44 Ch. D. 85), will be found in the 12th edition of his treatise on Real Property, pp. 269 seq., 318 seq. It is to the effect that there are only two rules governing the creation of contingent remainders, namely, the rule requiring that the seisin shall never be without an owner, and the rule that if an estate is given to an unborn person for life, followed by any estate to any child of such unborn person, the latter limitation is void; Mr. Williams goes on to point out that it is “in analogy to the restrictions thus imposed on contingent remainders that the law has fixed the following limit to the creation of executory interests,” namely, the modern Rule against Perpetuities. The matter is stated in the same way by Lord Kenyon in Long v. Blackall, 7 T. R. 100.

(u) “Whether the Rule against Perpetuities applies (apart from express statutory enactment) to legal limitations by way of remainder, is one of those questions which ought never to have arisen. It implies an anachronism which may be said to trench upon absurdity” (Real P. 183).

(v) Lewis on Perp. 420; Supp. 97 seq.

(w) Real Prop. 275, and Appendix F (12th edition).

(x) As to the dictum of Wood, V.-C., in Catlin v. Brown, see ante, p. 287, Mr. Lewis's error arose partly from the unfortunate and inaccurate theory that the rule forbidding the limitation of land to two unborn generations in succession is derived from the doctrine of double possibilities, and partly from Mr. Lewis's having overlooked the change in the meaning of the word “perpetuity” during the first half of the nineteenth century. In the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries the usual meaning of “perpetuity” was a limitation of land to unborn generations in succession, by way of unbarred entail (supra, p. 283). Mr. Lewis's ignorance of this fact led him to cite the well-known passage in Mr. Fearn's book (to the

Mr. Jarman was unable to make up his mind which view was correct. He was misled by the ambiguity of Lord St. Leonards' remarks in Cole v. Sewell, with reference to the old rule forbidding the limitation of remainders "on too remote a possibility," into supposing that Lord St. Leonards considered the old rule to be "exploded"; with the result, as Mr. Jarman thought, that in Lord St. Leonards's opinion, "all contingent remainders are withdrawn from every species of perpetuity-restraint" (y). But this was not Lord St. Leonards's opinion, for in Monypenny v. Dering, he explained that in Cole v. Sewell he never meant to deny the existence of the rule forbidding successive limitations to unborn generations (z). It was under the influence of this error (a) that Mr. Jarman stated his own conclusion thus (b): "It is submitted, therefore, that both principle and authority justify the questioning the proposition that remainders owe obedience to no other law than that which requires that they should take effect at the instant of the determination of the particular estate. They are, it is conceived, either subject to the old doctrine, directed against remote possibilities, or the modern Rule against Perpetuities, unless these are identical, as may be contended with much plausibility, although it is not necessary to go to this extent in support of the denial of the exemption of remainders from all perpetuity-restraint."

CHAPTER X.

Mr. Jarman's views.

As it is now settled by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Whitby v. Mitchell, that contingent remainders are "subject to the old doctrine directed against remote possibilities," it follows, according to Mr. Jarman, that they are not subject to "the modern Rule against Perpetuities." It is equally clear, from the judgments in that case, that the two rules are not identical, as suggested by Mr. Jarman.

Decision in Whitby v. Mitchell.

effect that a limitation by way of contingent remainder to two unborn generations in succession tends to a perpetuity, and that the second remainder is, therefore, "absolutely void," supra, p. 285) as meaning that in Mr. Fearne's opinion a contingent remainder can be void for remoteness, although it is obvious to anyone familiar with the history of the subject that in this passage Mr. Fearne was not referring to the modern Rule against Perpetuities, but was stating the rule now established by the decision in Whitby v. Mitchell. Mr. Lewis's remarks on the subject, and on the cognate subject of the doctrine of cy-près (Perp. Supp., p. 136 seq.), shew an ignorance of the devices invented by landowners in their efforts to re-establish unbarable entails during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, which is surprising in a man of his industry and learning. These devices are referred to in detail by the Real Property Commissioners (Third Report, pp. 30-31).

(y) First edition of this work, Vol. II. p. 730.

(z) 2 D. M. & G. at p. 168; and see Sugden, Powers, 393.

(a) It must be admitted that the error was quite excusable, owing to the vagueness of the Chancellor's language in Cole v. Sewell. See ante, p. 354, note (d).

(b) First edition, Vol. II. p. 733. Mr. Jarman's remarks on Cole v. Sewell are printed at length in an appendix to the fourth edition of this work.

CHAPTER X.

Result.

In short, the effect of the decision in Whitby v. Mitchell is to affirm the correctness of the view held by Mr. Fearne and his followers (including Mr. Joshua Williams), and to demonstrate the error of Mr. Lewis and his followers (including Mr. Gray) in denying the existence of the old Rule against Perpetuities.

Re Frost.

The question came before Kay, J., in Re Frost (c), and he held that contingent remainders are subject to the modern Rule against Perpetuities. Two remarks may be made upon the decision. In the first place, the learned judge entirely disregarded the opinion of Mr. Joshua Williams on the point, although in deciding Whitby v. Mitchell (d), five months previously, he said: "I do not want any higher authority than that of the late Mr. Joshua Williams, who was certainly one of the best real property lawyers that have existed in my lifetime." In the second place, Mr. Justice Kay fell into the error of supposing that when Mr. Fearne (in the passage already quoted (e)) referred to the old Rule against Perpetuities, he had in mind the modern Rule against Remoteness. This error deprives the decision of all value.

Re Ashforth.

The decision of Farwell, J., in Re Ashforth (f) is also unsatisfactory. In the first place, the learned judge seems not to have been aware that the rules governing legal contingent remainders are different from those governing equitable contingent remainders, for he remarked that the case before him was "really undistinguishable from Garland v. Brown" (g). But in Garland v. Brown the limitations were equitable, and no one denies that equitable remainders are subject to the modern Rule. However, in a later part of his judgment, the learned judge treated the limitations in the case before him as legal, which they clearly were, being, in effect, to trustees and their heirs during the lives of A., B., and C. and their children; after the death of all the children except one, the testatrix devised the land to such surviving child in tail. Now it is by no means clear that land can at common law be limited for an estate pur autre vie during the life of an unborn person (h), and if it cannot, then the limitation in Re Ashforth to the surviving child was not a contingent remainder, but an executory devise. Whether this is so or not, the judgment, if one may say so with respect, fails to notice the essential difference between the "perpetuities" referred to in the

(c) 43 Ch. D. 246.

(d) 42 Ch. D. 494.

(e) Ante, p. 285.

(f) [1905] 1 Ch. 535.

(g) 10 L. T. 292.

(h) The question is discussed in an article by me in Sol. Journ. xlix. 793. In the addenda to the second edition of his work on Perpetuities, Mr. Gray refers to this article without dissent. [C. S.] old books, and those remote limitations by way of shifting use and executory devise, against which the modern Rule against Perpetuities is directed; and this is the more strange, because the difference is pointed out in Lord Nottingham's judgment in the Duke of Norfolk's Case, referred to by Farwell, J. Nor does the attention of the learned judge seem to have been called to the fact that, down to the middle of the nineteenth century, the most eminent real property lawyers were practically unanimous in thinking that the modern Rule does not apply to legal contingent remainders. On a question of this kind the opinion of Mr. Fearne, Mr. Butler, and the Real Property Commissioners, is entitled to some consideration. Again, the statement of the learned judge (i), that the opinion of Mr. Joshua Williams on the question has been displaced by Mr. Gray, must have been made per incuriam, for the opinion of Mr. Gray, that contingent remainders are subject to the modern Rule, is based on the assumption that there never was a rule forbidding the limitation of estates to two or more unborn generations in succession (j); this assumption was held to be erroneous by the Court of Appeal in Whitby v. Mitchell, in which case the Court adopted Mr. Joshua Williams's views on the subject. Mr. Joshua Williams's views, however, do not rest on his own personal opinion: they are identical with those of Mr. Fearne, Mr. Brodie, Mr. Duval, Mr. Preston, Mr. Butler, Lord St. Leonards, and the other distinguished real property lawyers above referred to, while the views of Mr. Gray (which are identical with those of Mr. Lewis) make the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell and the doctrine of cy-près hopelessly unintelligible (jj).

(4) Other Common Law Interests.—Questions seldom arise under wills as to common law interests in land other than contingent remainders, but it may be useful to state shortly how the law at present stands. In 1832 the Real Property Commissioners remarked, "The ancient common law did not restrain the creation

Common law conditions, &c.

(i) [1905] 1 Ch. at p. 546.

(j) Ante, p. 286, n. (g). Mr. Gray remarks (§ 284) that "as the Rule [meaning the modern Rule against Perpetuities] governs all contingent equitable limitations of real estate and all contingent limitations, legal and equitable, of personal estate, whether in the form of remainders or not, it is very desirable that legal contingent remainders of real estate should be subjected to the Rule also." On this it may be noted, first, that subjecting legal contingent remainders to the Rule would not make the law symmetrical, because they are already subject to their own special rules, which do not apply to other contingent interests; and secondly, that the desire of text writers to make the law symmetrical does not justify the Courts in applying the modern Rule to common law interests which were recognised as valid long before the Rule was invented.

(jj) See the argument in Williams v. Teale, 6 Ha. at p. 245.

CHAPTER X.

of future interests to a given period. The time allowed for re-entries under conditions broken, and for grants of rentcharges, or other incorporeal hereditaments, commencing in futuro, and for creating the interesse termini, was indefinite, however Courts of Justice may at present be disposed to consider them within that policy of the law which restrains perpetuities. Sir Edward Coke expressly says, 'If I enfeoff another of an acre of ground, upon condition that if mine heir shall pay the feoffee, &c., twenty shillings, he and his heirs shall enter, this condition is good.' We know of no bounds originally fixed by the common law within which interests of this kind were restrained; and it is a mistake to suppose that at the common law, properly so called, there was any rule against perpetuities" (k). The Commissioners accordingly recommended that the operation of the Rule against Perpetuities should be extended so as to apply to future interests of the kind above referred to, with certain exceptions in the case of landlord and tenant. No statute has been passed to carry out this recommendation. Mr. Charles Butler also treats common law conditions as being free from restriction on the score of perpetuity (l). The opinion of modern text-book writers is divided. Mr. Lewis (m) and Mr. Gray (n) think that the opinion of the Real Property Commissioners is erroneous, and that conditions of re-entry are within the Rule against Perpetuities. Mr. Gray quotes a dictum of Jessel, M. R., in Re Macleay (o), and another of North, J., in Dunn v. Flood (p), as supporting his view. Mr. Challis, on the other hand, was unable to understand why a rule invented by the judges in the seventeenth century to restrict the creation of future interests unknown to the common law, should be applied to future interests which the common law always allowed to be created without any restriction (q). The point first arose for decision in Re The Trustees of Hollis's Hospital and Hague's Contract (r).

(k) Third Report, 29. The names of the distinguished lawyers who formed the Commission are given above, p. 369, n. (l). The erroneous opinion that the modern Rule against Perpetuities formed part of the common law is, however, widely held; it was held by Jessel, M. R., in L. & S. W. Railway v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562, and by the Privy Council in Cooper v. Stuart, 14 A. C. 286.

(l) Co. Litt. 327a, n. (2), II. 3.

(m) Perp. 616.

(n) Perp. § 300a seq.

(o) L. R., 20 Eq. 186.

(p) 25 Ch. D. 629. See also the dictum of Baggeally, L. J., on appeal:

28 Ch. D. 592.

(q) Challis, R. P. 174.

(r) [1899] 2 Ch. 540. See Att.-Gen. v. Cummins, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 406, referred to post, p. 375, n. (t). An undoubted exception to the modern Rule against Perpetuities occurs in the case of covenants for the perpetual renewal of leases (London & South-Western Ry. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562), and it seems somewhat curious that common law conditions, which are of much greater antiquity, should not be allowed a similar immunity: see Williams, Vendor and P. 600, n. (k).

In that case the question was as to the title to some property which had been conveyed by Thomas Hollis in 1726 to trustees upon trust for a hospital. The conveyance contained a proviso that if at any time thereafter the property should be used for any purposes other than those therein mentioned, it should revert to the heirs of Thomas Hollis. Byrne, J., said: "I am of opinion that the condition in question is obnoxious to the Rule against Perpetuities." The point, however, was raised on a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, and as the heir-at-law of Thomas Hollis declined to be bound by the decision, Byrne, J., refused to force the title on the purchaser. It will be noticed that the learned judge relied to a considerable extent on the opinion of Mr. W. D. Lewis, and that the opinion of the Real Property Commissioners (most of whom were far superior to Mr. Lewis in learning and authority) was not cited.

Although the decisions in Re Frost and Re Ashforth (if and so far as they decide that a legal contingent remainder can be void for remoteness (s)), and the decision in Re Hollis's Hospital, are contrary to the views held by the most eminent real property lawyers of the last two generations, it would not be safe to predict how the points involved in them will be decided when they come before the Court of Appeal. The question requires patient investigation of a somewhat obscure subject, and it is, perhaps, hardly fair to expect modern judges, whose time is fully occupied with more interesting matters, to explore, without assistance, the musty and dimly lighted recesses of the law of real property (t). It is much easier to adopt the general principle that the modern Rule against Perpetuities applies to all future interests in property, including those which were recognised as valid at common law long before the modern Rule was even thought of. The difficulty is that the Court of Appeal cannot follow this course, unless it takes upon itself to alter the doctrines of the common law: the Court has not hitherto claimed to have jurisdiction to do this. It is to be hoped that the legislature will summon up courage to amend the law by abolishing contingent remainders, and by allowing all of the Rule against Perpetuities.

The future

(s) It will be remembered that the decision in Re Frost was an alternative one, and that in Re Ashforth the question whether the ultimate devise was a contingent remainder or an executory limitation was not argued or considered.

(t) The excellent judgment of Pallas, C. B., in Att.-Gen. v. Cummins (1895, reported [1906] 1 Ir. R. 406), stands out as a valuable contribution to the learning on this branch of law, future interests in property, both real and personal, to take effect if, in the event, they vest within the period allowed by the Rule. The question involved in Re Hollis's Hospital is more complicated, but ought not to present any insuperable difficulty (u).

CHAPTER X.

(u) The anomalies and injustice caused by the present state of the law are shortly referred to in an article in the Juridical Review for July 1906. Mr. Gray does not approve of the suggestion that the modern Rule against Perpetuities should be altered by statute: he thinks it dangerous to attempt to amend the Rule, and points to the statute in force in the State of New York as a warning. I venture to think that the law might easily be improved. The Thellusson Act is a partial amendment of the Rule against Perpetuities, and it has worked fairly well. [C. S.]

CHAPTER XI.

ACCUMULATION OF INCOME.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. The Accumulations Act, 1800	377	IV. Accumulation for Portions	383
II. Accumulation during Minority	382	V. Accumulation for Purchase of Land	387
III. Accumulation for Payment of Debts	382	VI. Destination of Released Income	388
		VII. Life Assurance	391

I. —The Accumulations Act, 1800.—Mr. Jarman says (a) : “ Formerly the rule that fixed the period for which the vesting of property might be suspended, regulated also the power of deferring its enjoyment ; it being then permitted to a settlor or testator to create an accumulating trust absorbing the entire income during the full period for which the vesting might be protracted, and whether it was or was not so protracted (b). And no inconvenience appears to have been felt in allowing so wide a range of accumulation, few persons having availed themselves of the permission to a mischievous extent, until Mr. Thellusson made the extraordinary and well-known disposition of his immense property (c), by the operation of which, every child and more remote descendant born or rather procreated in his lifetime were excluded from enjoyment, for the purpose of swelling to a princely magnitude, the fortune of some remote and unascertained scions of the stock. The necessity then became apparent, of preventing, by legislative enactment, the repetition of a scheme of disposition fraught with so much mischief and hardship. This led to the stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98 (d), which, after Old rule fixing extent of prospective accumulation of income.

Stat. 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98.

(a) First edition, p. 264.

(b) As to the invalidity of trusts for accumulation on the ground of remoteness, see ante, p. 308. And as to the cases where a trust for accumulation is nugatory, because the beneficiary can put a stop to it, see Saunders v.

Vautier, 4 Bea. 115, and other cases cited in Chap. XXIV.

(c) 4 Ves. 227.

(d) Known as the Thellusson Act, until the Short Titles Act, 1896, gave it an official title, CHAPTER XI. reciting that it was expedient that all dispositions of real or personal estate, whereby the profits and produce thereof were directed to be accumulated, and the beneficial enjoyment thereof was postponed, should be made subject to the restrictions hereinafter contained, proceeded to enact 'that no person or persons shall, after the passing of this act, by any deed or deeds, surrender or surrenders, will, codicil or otherwise soever, settle or dispose of any real or personal property, so and in such manner, that the rents, issues, profits or produce thereof shall be wholly or partially accumulated, for any longer term than the life or lives of any such grantor or grantors, settlor or settlors, or the term of twenty-one years from the death of any such grantor, settlor, deviser or testator, or during the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who shall be living or en ventre sa mère at the time of the death of such grantor, deviser, or testator, or during the minority or respective minorities only of any person or persons who, under the uses or trusts of the deed, surrender, will, or other assurances directing such accumulations would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled unto the rents, issues and profits, or the interest, dividends, or annual produce so directed to be accumulated; and in every case, where any accumulation shall be directed otherwise than as aforesaid, such direction shall be null and void, and the rents, issues, profits and produce of such property so directed to be accumulated, shall, so long as the same shall be directed to be accumulated, contrary to the provisions of this act, go to and be received by such person or persons as would have been entitled thereto, if such accumulation had not been directed.' Sect. [2] provides, 'That nothing in this act contained shall extend to any provision for payment of debts of any grantor, settlor, or deviser, or other person or persons, or to any provision for raising portions for any child or children of any grantor, settlor, or deviser, or any child or children of any person taking any interest under any such conveyance, settlement, or devise, or to any direction touching the produce of timber or wood, upon any lands or tenements, but that all such provisions and directions shall and may be made and given as if this act had not passed.' By sect. [3] (e) the act is not to extend to heritable property in Scotland (f), nor [by sect. 4] to wills made before the act, unless the testator should be living and of sound mind for twelve calendar months from its passing."

Accumulation restrained, unless for life of settlor, or for twenty-one years, or during minority, &c.

Act not to extend to provisions for debts, or portions for children;

—nor to Scotland; nor to prior wills, unless, &c.

(e) Since repealed by stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 36, s. 41.

(f) But a direction to invest accumulations in lands in Scotland did not bring the case within s. 3. Macpherson v. Stewart, 28 L. J. Ch. 177.

This statute, having been passed just before the Irish Act of Union came into operation, does not extend to Ireland (g).

CHAPTER XI.

—nor to Ireland.

To bring a case within the act, it is not necessary that the word “accumulate” should be used, or that there should be an express direction to accumulate (h); a direction to “invest” or “capitalise” income (i), or to form a reserve or guarantee fund, or the like, may be sufficient (j). Indeed, the act applies in cases where an obligation to accumulate arises from the nature of the gift, for in applying the statutory provision against accumulation, as Mr. Jarman remarks (k), “regard is had to the substance and effect, and not to the form and mere language of an instrument; for, if property be disposed of in such manner as to produce an accumulation of income, for a period exceeding what the statute authorises, it will not avail that there is an absence of any trust expressly and in terms directed to this object.” Thus if a testator charges the income of his property with the raising of a gross sum which cannot be raised within the period allowed by the act, this is tantamount to a trust for accumulation, and is void so far as it exceeds the period (l).

What constitutes a direction to accumulate.

Trusts whose effect is to produce accumulation held to be within the statute.

An obvious case of this nature is that of a bequest of a general residue to a class of persons (some of them unborn at the testator's decease), whose shares are not to vest until the age of twenty-one years; for it is to be observed, that as a residuary bequest, to take effect in future, carries not only the bulk or corpus of the property, but also the intermediate income (m), it follows that the statute is infringed whenever the vesting, or even the distribution, is postponed until a period or event which occurs more than twenty-one years after the testator's decease, without any express application of the income accruing in the interval. In such a case the income is accumulated for the statutory period, and after that goes as under an intestacy (n). Sir L. Shadwell was indeed of opinion that the statute did not affect accumulation which arose from the nature of the gift, but operated merely to strike out of the will so much of

As to accumulation under a residuary bequest in favour of unborn persons at majority.

(g) Ellis v. Maxwell, 12 Beav. 104; Heywood v. Heywood, 29 Beav. 9. English leaseholds, though personal estate, are governed by the lex loci, and though belonging to a domiciled Irishman are subject to the act, Freke v. Lord Carbery, L. R., 16 Eq. 461; vide ante, p. 2.

(h) Morgan v. Morgan, 4 De G. & S. 164.

(i) Mathews v. Keble, L. R., 3 Ch. 691; Re Danson, 13 R. 633; Re Mason, [1891] 3 Ch. 467.

(j) Re Cox, [1900] W. N. 89.

(k) First edition, p. 274.

(l) Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 My. & Cr. 135, s. c., sub nom. Evans v. Hellier, 5 Cl. & F. 114.

(m) As to this, see infra, Chap. XXIX.

(n) Re Taylor, [1901] 2 Ch. 134. For another example of accumulation required by law, see Re Hiscoe, 48 L. T. 510.

CHAPTER XI.

a direction to accumulate as exceeded the prescribed limits (o) ; his opinion, however, is clearly opposed to the other authorities upon this question, including one of the highest court of appeal (p). There is a plain distinction between such a case and the cases where, the property being vested in an infant, the accumulation is to be assumed to be the act of the Court (q).

Where trust is postponed.

The act also does not apply where property is directed to be dealt with in a manner which cannot immediately be carried into effect, and it consequently becomes necessary to accumulate the income (r). Thus, in Wentworth v. Wentworth (s), a testator devised his residue upon trust for conversion, with power to postpone conversion for twenty-one years, and a direction that during that period the surplus income and all accumulations thereof should go in augmentation of capital ; the residue was settled on trusts for tenants for life and remainderman, and included minerals which were not let or worked until after the testator's death : it was held that during the twenty-one years the trustees were bound to accumulate the rents and royalties, and that after that period the tenants for life were entitled to receive out of the rents and royalties a fair equivalent for the annual income which would have been received by them if the property had been sold at the expiration of the twenty-one years, the residue being added to capital.

Trusts for improving or maintaining a property.

Nor is a trust for the application of money in keeping buildings in repair within the act. But a trust for the erection of new buildings is within the act. The test seems to be whether the expenditure ought properly to be debited to capital or income (t).

Trusts embracing too wide an accumulation
good pro
tanto.

"It is well settled," says Mr. Jarman (u), "that a trust for accumulation exceeding the statutory limit, is good pro tanto. Thus, where a testator directed that the profits of certain canal shares should be invested, the interest arising to be applied to the education of the children of A. and B., (who had no child at the death of the testator,) and on their attaining twenty-one to be

(o) Elborne v. Goode, 14 Sim. 165 ; Corporation of Bridgnorth v. Collins, 15 ib. 538.

(p) Evans v. Hellier, 5 Cl. & Fin. 114 ; s. c. nom. Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 My. & Cr. 135 ; McDonald v. Bryce, 2 Kee. 276 ; Morgan v. Morgan, 20 L. J. Ch. 111, 15 Jur. 319 ; Tench v. Cheese, 6 D. M. & G. 453 ; Macpherson v. Stewart, 28 L. J. Ch. 177 ; and see Bective v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. Ca. 664, 668 ; Wade Gery v. Handley, 3 Ch. D. 374.

(q) See per Wood, L. J., Mathews v. Keble, L. R., 3 Ch. 696 ; per Lord Cranworth, V.-C., Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Sim. N. S. 297.

(r) Lombe v. Stoughton, 12 Sim. 304. (s) [1900] A. C. 163. See this and other cases cited in Chap. XXXIV.

(t) See Vine v. Raleigh, [1891] 2 Ch. 13 ; Drake v. Trefusis, L. R., 10 Ch. 364 ; Re Mason, [1891] 3 Ch. 467, cited post, p. 395.

(u) First edition, p. 269, divided among them; Sir W. Grant, M.R., held that the accumulation was good for twenty-one years from the death of the testator, though void for the subsequent period" (v). So a trust to accumulate the income of property in order to raise a specified sum for the benefit of persons in esse, is stopped by the statute at the expiration of twenty-one years from the testator's death (w). If, however, the persons to benefit by any trust for accumulation are not necessarily ascertainable within the period allowed by the Rule against Perpetuities, the trust is void ab initio (x).

The results which follow from a trust for accumulation being invalidated, wholly or partially, by the statute, are referred to in a later part of this chapter (y).

The period of twenty-one years from the testator's death is to be calculated exclusively of the day of his death (z), and must be a period immediately following his death. Thus, if the accumulation be fixed to commence at a time subsequent to the testator's death, it will necessarily cease when twenty-one years from his death have elapsed, though it may have been in operation only one or two years (a).

How the period of twenty-one years is to be calculated.

It should be borne in mind that a trust for accumulation may be void ab initio, or become inoperative before the expiration of the period prescribed by the testator, for reasons irrespective of the act. Thus a trust for accumulation which transgresses the limits allowed by the Rule against Perpetuities is void ab initio (b), and a trust to accumulate the income of property to which a person is absolutely entitled may be stopped by him at any time (c).

Trusts void or inoperative irrespective of act.

A testator or settlor is not at liberty to take more than one of the several periods of accumulation mentioned in the statute (for instance, he cannot direct an accumulation for a term of twenty-one

(v) Longdon v. Simson, 12 Ves. 295; see also Griffiths v. Vere, 9 Ves. 127; Palmer v. Holford, 4 Russ. 403; Re Rosslyn's Trust, 16 Sim. 391, and cases in this section, passim; Talbot v. Jevers, L. R., 20 Eq. 255, where the accumulation was limited to such period "as the rules of law will permit."

(w) Oddie v. Brown, 4 De G. & J. 179; Williams v. Lewis, 6 H. L. C. 1013; supra, p. 368.

(x) Curtis v. Lukin, 5 Bea. 147; Scarisbrick v. Skelmersdale, 17 Sim. 187; supra, p. 308.

(y) Post, p. 388.

(z) Gorst v. Lowndes, 11 Sim. 434; Lester v. Garland, 15 Ves. 248.

(a) Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 My. & Cr. 154; Webb v. Webb, 2 Bea. 493; Att.-Gen. v. Poulden, 3 Hare, 555; Nettleton v. Stephenson, 3 De G. & S. 366.

(b) Supra, pp. 308, 367. Curtis v. Lukin, 5 Bea. 147; Scarisbrick v. Skelmersdale, 17 Sim. 187.

(c) Ante, p. 368; Wharton v. Masterman, [1895] A. C. 186, and see Phipps v. Kelynge, 2 V. & B. 57, n., as explained in Southampton v. Hertford, ib. 54.

CHAPTER XI.

years, and also during the minority of a person entitled under the limitations): the language of the statute being disjunctive (d).

Unborn child.

II.—Accumulation during Minority.—It was at one time thought that the provision of the statute which authorises the accumulation of income during the minority of any person who would, if of full age, be entitled to it, did not permit accumulation during the minority of a person not born at the time of the testator's death. This was the view hastily expressed by Leach, V.-C., in Haley v. Bannister (e), where, however, the only point open for decision was whether accumulation can lawfully be directed from a period commencing before the birth of the child during whose minority the income is to be accumulated. It is clear that it cannot (f).

Accumulation cannot commence before the birth of the minor, but may be directed during minority of unborn person.

The dictum of Leach, V.-C., above referred to, is inaccurate. The point arose in Re Cattell (g), and Neville, J., had no difficulty in holding that a trust for accumulation during the minority of a child born after the testator's death, is valid.

The act does not impliedly make valid trusts for accumulation previously bad.

Accumulation for payment of testator's debts valid, though to endure longer than a life and twenty-one years; but if for payment of the debts of another, good only if within that limit;—rule not affected by the act.

III.—Accumulation for Payment of Debts.—A trust for accumulation which not only exceeds the statutory limits, but also the period allowed by the Rule against Perpetuities, is, like any other such limitation, void in toto, even though it be for a purpose excepted from the operation of the act; for the act does not by the exceptions contained in it impliedly make valid what was previously invalid (gg). As before noticed (h), accumulation for payment of the debts of the testator does not contravene the Rule against Perpetuities, and is therefore good, though its duration be unlimited (i). But an accumulation for the payment of debts of a stranger does not come within the reason of the rule which protects a similar provision for payment of the testator's own debts, and is therefore valid by the common law only for the period of (d) Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Sim. N. S. 288; Rosslyn's Trust, 16 Sim. 391; Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Bea. 595; Jagger v. Jagger, 25 Ch. D. 729; Re Errington, 76 L. T. 616.

(e) 4 Madd. 275, and adopted by Romilly, M. R., in Bryan v. Collins, 16 Bea. 14.

(f) Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Bea. 587; Longdon v. Simson, 12 Ves. 295.

(g) [1907] 1 Ch. 567.

(gg) Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 V. & B. 54; Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Sw. 432; Browne v. Stough- ton, 14 Sim. 369 (as to which cases see ante, p. 313); Scarisbrick v. Skelmersdale, 17 Sim. 187; Boughton v. James, 1 Coll. 26, 1 H. L. Ca. 406; Turvin v. Newcome, 3 K. & J. 16.

(h) Ante, p. 367.

(i) Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 V. & B. 54, see at p. 65; Bacon v. Proctor, T. & R. 40; Bateman v. Hotchkiss, 10 Beav. 426. As to what are "incumbrances" within a trust for accumulation for their discharge, see Re Llanover, [1907] 1 Ch. 635.

a life in being and twenty-one years after. The act leaves this rule untouched, sect. 2 excepting from the operation of the first section "all provisions for payment of debts of any grantor, settlor, or deviser, or other person or persons" (j). And this has been held to include not only debts due at the testator's death, but future debts accruing within the period last mentioned (k). But the accumulation must be designed and intended bonâ fide as a provision for payment of debts. Where a testator directed the income of residue or a sufficient part of it to be applied for the benefit of his son, and the surplus to be accumulated and added to capital, and after the son's death the whole to be divided among the son's children; but if the son should die without issue, the testator bequeathed a moiety of the fund to B.; B. afterwards became indebted to the testator, who then by codicil declared that B. should not be obliged to pay the debt unless and until he became possessed of the moiety, which, in that case, was to be set off against the debt. B. eventually became entitled to the moiety, but it was held that the testator was not thinking of the debt when he directed the accumulation, and that it was not protected by sect. 1 (l). And if creditors avail themselves of their legal rights, and get their debts paid in a different way, as by resorting to the corpus, the accumulation cannot, even if the will so direct, be continued beyond the period allowed by sect. 1 of the act, in order to recoup the persons to whom, subject to the trust for accumulation, the estate is devised (m). Even if the statutory period has not expired, the remainderman has no equity (unless the will contains a direction to that effect) to have the accumulation continued during the statutory period in order to recoup the capital (n). But an annuitant may have the right of subrogation or marshalling as against creditors (o).

IV.—Accumulation for Portions (p).—The exception in the act respecting accumulations for the purpose "of raising portions for any child or children (q) of any grantor, settlor or deviser, or any child or children of any person taking any interest under such Construction of the exception as to accumulation for children's portions.

(j) Barrington v. Liddell, 2 D. M. & G. 498.

(k) Varlo v. Faden, 27 Beav. 255, 1 D. F. & J. 211. See Re Mason, [1891] 3 Ch. 467.

(l) Mathews v. Keble, L. R., 3 Ch. 691.

(m) Tewart v. Lawson, L. R., 18 Eq. 490; Re Heathcote, [1904] 1 Ch. 826.

(n) Ibid.; Norton v. Johnstone, 30

Ch. D. 649; Re Green, 40 Ch. D. 610.

(o) Biggar v. Eastwood, 19 L. R. Ir. 49.

(p) This section, with the exception of the passages in brackets, which have been added by the present editor, is taken verbatim from the fourth edition of this work, by Mr. Vincent.

(q) This means legitimate children, Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 M. & Cr. 159.

CHAPTER XI.

conveyance, settlement or devise," has created great difficulty. And first, what is a portion within this exception ?

In Beech v. Lord St. Vincent (r), lands were devised to A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over, and 2000*l.* per annum was directed to be accumulated for twenty-one years during the life of A., and so much longer as A. had any younger children ; the accumulations to be held on certain trusts for such younger children. It was twice held that this was an accumulation for raising portions within the exception in the statute. And in Barrington v. Liddell (s), where lands had been settled on the marriage of A. in the usual way, with a term of years for securing (in the events that happened) the sum of 40,000*l.* for younger children's portions ; and afterwards a testator bequeathed a sum of 15,000*l.* in trust to be accumulated during the life of A., until it reached the sum of 40,000*l.*, and then to be applied in satisfaction of the portions ; and he gave another sum for building a mansion house on the settled estate ; Lord St. Leonards held, that this was clearly within the exception, and that the accumulation might continue after the expiration of twenty-one years, computed from the testator's death. A provision for raising or satisfying portions charged or created by a previous instrument is, therefore, within the exception in the statute (t).

Barrington v. Liddell.

Not necessary to exclude eldest son.

[In Re Stephens (tt), the testator directed income to be accumulated for the benefit of all the children of his daughter who attained twenty-one or married ; and it was held by Buckley, J., that the fact of the eldest son not being excluded (as in Beech v. Lord St. Vincent) did not prevent the fund from being a " portion."]

Gift of general estate augmented by accumulation is not a portion.

On the other hand, it has been decided that an accumulation of the whole of a testator's estate (u), or of the residue, comprising the bulk, of it (v), and a gift of the augmented fund, comprising both capital and accumulations, is not protected by the exception. " A direction to accumulate all a person's property," said Lord Cranworth (w), " to be handed over to some child or children when

(r) 3 De G. & S. 678.

(s) 2 D. M. & G. 480.

(t) But (as appears by Beech v. Lord St. Vincent and other cases, and notwithstanding Halford v. Stains, 16 Sim. 496) not exclusively so.

(tt) [1904] 1 Ch. 323.

(u) Wildes v. Davies, 1 Sm. & Gif. 475.

(v) Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Kee. 573 ; Bourne v. Buckton, 2 Sim. N. S. 91 ; Edwards v. Tuck, 3 D. M. & G. 40 ;

Mathews v. Keble, L. R., 3 Ch. 691. [Re Walker, 54 L. T. 792, where the residuary personalty and the accumulations of the income thereof, and the accumulated rents of certain real and leasehold properties, were given as one fund, and it was held that the accumulations of the rents could not be separated so as to constitute a portion.]

(w) Edwards v. Tuck, 3 D. M. & G. 58.

they attain twenty-one can never be said to be a direction for raising portions for the child or children ; it is not raising a portion at all ; it is giving everything. ' Portion ' ordinarily means a part or share, and though I do not know that a gift of the whole might not in some circumstances come under the term of a gift of a portion, yet I do not think it comes within the meaning of a portion in this clause of the act, which points to the raising of something out of something else for the benefit of some children or class of children. . . . If every direction for accumulation for a child was a portion, the intention of the legislature, which was to prevent accumulations, such accumulations being most frequently directed for the benefit of children, would be entirely defeated."

Again, in Burt v. Sturt (x), where legacies were given to all the testator's children, and the residue was directed to be accumulated during the lives of the children and of the survivor of them, and after the decease of the survivor the whole was to be divided between the grandchildren of the testator then living, Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., said it was simply a scheme of the testator for the purpose of accumulating his property into one mass, and handing it over in that mass at the remote period of the death of the survivor of a number of persons whom he had mentioned, not to any given child or children, but to two or three or possibly one favoured individual ; it did not seem to him that in any sense or upon any rational construction he could call that the raising of a portion for children : in truth it was only the Thellusson scheme arranged in a somewhat less complicated and less extensive shape.

In Jones v. Maggs (y), where a legacy of 200*l.* was directed to be accumulated until the child of A. (who then had one child) should attain twenty-one, and on that event to be divided, with its accumulations, among the children of A. who should be then living, and the residue of the personal estate was given to the parent, Sir G. Turner, V.-C., held that the legacy was not a portion, though in a certain sense it was raisable out of the property of the parent ; otherwise every legacy given to a child of a residuary legatee must be so construed and the act would be wholly defeated. This decision was much influenced by the V.-C.'s opinion, now exploded, that to bring the case within the exception, the parent must take an interest in the very fund directed to be accumulated ; and no distinction was noticed between the accumulation of the entirety or bulk of Whether same rule applies to pecuniary legacy so augmented.

Jones v. Maggs.

(x) 10 Hare, 415. See also Drewett v. Pollard, 27 Beav. 196. (y) 9 Hare, 605.

CHAPTER XI.

an estate and of a mere pecuniary legacy. The effect upon the act of a contrary decision was certainly overstated.

Middleton v. Losh.

On the other hand, Sir J. Stuart, V.-C., distinguished between a gift of the whole of a testator's estate, augmented by accumulation, and a gift of a pecuniary legacy so augmented (z). And in Middleton v. Losh (a), where a testatrix bequeathed 50,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to invest, and apply a competent part of the income towards the maintenance and support of her son W., and to accumulate the remainder, and after his decease upon trust to divide the capital and accumulations between the children of W., and in case of the death of W. without issue the capital and accumulations to sink into the residue of her personal estate; he decided that the accumulation was valid as a provision for portions, relying mainly on "the just principles of construction" adopted by Lord St. Leonards in Barrington v. Liddell.

The question chiefly discussed in that case was not what is a portion, but what interest must be given to the parent (b). And although the subject of gift was, as in Middleton v. Losh, a pecuniary legacy augmented by accumulation, and although it must be admitted that whether the testator has or has not directed the legacy to be taken in satisfaction of portions already charged on the estate of another person, the result quoad the testator's own estate is the same, yet the presence of such a direction brings the case literally within the words of the act, and distinguishes it too widely from Middleton v. Losh to permit its being regarded as an authority for the decision in the latter case. A similar direction would equally bring within the letter of the act a case where (as in Edwards v. Tuck) the subject of gift was not a pecuniary legacy only but the bulk of the testator's estate. But there is no actual decision to that effect.

Legacy to accumulate in trust for one for life, and afterwards for his children, not a portion.

A trust to accumulate a legacy during a stated period, and at the expiration of it to pay the income to A. for life, and afterwards to divide the capital among the children of A., is plainly not a provision for raising portions for children, but only a legacy in trust for a parent for life, and after his death for his children (c). And it cannot be material to the construction of the statute that the testator has or has not called the children's shares of an accumulated fund their "portions" (d).

(z) Wildes v. Davies, 1 Sm. & Gif. 475.

(a) 1 Sm. & Gif. 61. See also St. Paul v. Heath, 13 L. T. N. S. 270; and the observations on Middleton v. Losh, in 10 Hare, 426.

(b) See this insisted on, 2 Dr. & Sm. 61.

(c) Watt v. Wood, 2 Dr. & Sm. 56.

(d) See per Kindersley, V.-C., Bourne v. Buckton, 2 Sim. N. S. 96.

It will have been seen that, in Middleton v. Losh, the aggregate fund was not necessarily to go to the children of W., but if all his issue died in his lifetime it was to fall into the residue, so that it was not in all events a fund for portions. But the validity of the accumulation may well depend on the event: as in Re Chulow's Trusts (e), where a fund was directed to be accumulated, and was given to the children of the testator's son (who took an interest under the devise); but if there should be no children, to such persons as the parent should by will appoint: Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., said that, if there had been children, this might have been upheld as a provision for their portions; but as there were and could be none, and the testamentary power of appointment was clearly no "portion" for the parent, the V.-C. held that the direction to accumulate was within sect. 1 of the act, and invalid after the lapse of twenty-one years from the testator's death.

Accumulation valid or not according to the purpose whereto in event it is applicable.

The next question is, what is the interest which a parent, not being the grantor, settlor, or deviser, must take under the conveyance, settlement, or devise in order to render valid an accumulation for portions for his children? (f). May it be an interest of any kind, or must it be an interest in the identical property from which the income directed to be accumulated arises? and must it be a substantial interest, or will a merely nominal interest suffice? In Barrington v. Liddell (g), Lord St. Leonards read the word "devise" in the act as meaning "will," and held, that the interest need not be one in the very fund to be accumulated, and that the legacy for building a mansion house on the estate of which the parent was tenant for life, gave him a sufficient interest within the act. And as to quantum, the L. C. cited, with apparent approbation, the opinion expressed by Lords Lyndhurst and Brougham (h), and approved by Lord Cranworth (i), that any interest, however minute, was sufficient. But according to Lord Langdale (j), it would seem that, where accumulation is directed for the benefit of children of several parents, if any one parent takes no interest, the whole direction fails.

What interest the parent must take under the devise.

V.—Accumulation for Purchase of Land.—By the Accumulations Act, 1892, it is enacted that after the 28th June 1892, no Accumulations Act, 1892.

(e) 1 J. & H. 639.

[(f) See Re Stephens, [1904] 1 Ch. 322.]

(g) 2 D. M. & G. 480, stated above. Morgan v. Morgan, 15 Jur. 319, 20 L. J. Ch. 109, appears to decide that a specific legacy to the parent will not render valid an accumulation of a general legacy to the child. But the case is obscure.

(h) Evans v. Hellier, 5 Cl. & Fin. 126.

(i) Edwards v. Tuck, 3 D. M. & G. 40. Wood, V.-C., appears to have been of the same opinion: Burt v. Sturt, 10 Hare, 423.

(j) Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Kee. 573.

CHAPTER XI.

person shall settle or dispose of any property in such manner that the rents, issues, profits, or income thereof shall be wholly or partially accumulated for the purchase of land only, for any longer period than during the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who, under the uses or trusts of the instrument directing such accumulation, would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to receive the rents, issues, profits, or income so directed to be accumulated.

The act applies to the will of a testator who dies after the passing of the act, although the will was executed before that date (k).

“Land” in this act has the meaning given to it by the Interpretation Act, 1889, and therefore includes incorporeal hereditaments (l).

Limited application
of act.

It seems that the act does not apply if the trust for accumulation authorises the application of the money in two or more ways, although one of them is the purchase of land: otherwise no effect would be given to the word “only.” Thus in Re Danson (m), a testator devised freehold lands in strict settlement, and directed that accumulations made during the minority of any infant taking by purchase should be deemed capital moneys arising under the Settled Land Acts, and should be primarily liable to be laid out in the purchase of land; he also directed that during twenty-one years after his death the net profits of his leaseholds should be capitalised and become capital moneys of the settlement, and subject to the powers of the Settled Land Acts, and desired that any lands purchased therewith should be adjacent to or fitting to be held with the settled freeholds. It was held that the act did not apply either to the accumulations of the rents of the freeholds, or to the capitalised income of the leaseholds.

Effect of
act.

Where the will directs the accumulations to be applied for two or more alternative purposes, one of which is the purchase of land, the effect of the act is to make the will read as if the trust for the purchase of land were struck out (n). Whether the act affects a provision for the permanent improvement of land and houses out of income has not yet been decided (o).

Destination
of the income released from accumulation.

VI.—Destination of Released Income.—The destination of the income which the Thellusson Act releases from accumulation has (k) Re Llanover, [1903] 2 Ch. 330.

(l) Re Clutterbuck, [1901] 2 Ch. 285, correcting an error in the report of Re Danson, 13 R. 633.

(m) 13 R. 633.

(n) Re Llanover, [1903] 2 Ch. 330; Re Llanover, [1907] 1 Ch. 635.

(o) See above, p. 380.

occasioned much debate. The law on this point, however, may now it is conceived be stated as follows :—

1. Where there is a present gift in possession, and the direction to accumulate is engrafted upon that gift, the statute, by discharging the property from the superadded trust, has the effect of entitling the donee or successive donees to the immediate income, as if the prior gift had stood alone (oo).

2. Where the vesting of a contingent interest (p), or the possession of a vested interest (pp), is postponed till the expiration of the period of accumulation, the statute, by stopping the accumulation, does not accelerate the vesting in the one case, or the possession in the other (q), and the released income devolves as if the testator had made no disposition of it. Consequently :

(i) If the property is a legacy or a specific bequest or devise, the released income goes, in the case of personal property, to the residuary legatee (r) ; and in the case of real property, to the residuary devisee, or heir, according as the will does or does not come within the Wills Act (s). If it is in the nature of a charge on real estate, it sinks for the benefit of the estate (t). Where the residue is not given absolutely, but only for life or some other limited interest, the released income forms part of the capital of the residue, so that the person having such limited interest is only entitled to the income of the investments representing the released income (u).

(oo) Trickey v. Trickey, 3 My. & K. 560 ; Coombe v. Hughes, 34 Beav. 127, 2 D. J. & S. 657. The cases in which a person is entitled to stop the accumulation of income on the ground that he is the only person interested in the property have nothing to do with the Thellusson Act (see Wharton v. Masterman, [1895] A. C. 186) : they are referred to in Chap. XXIV.

(p) Jones v. Maggs, 9 Hare, 605.

(pp) M'Donald v. Bryce, 2 Kee. 276 ; Eyre v. Marsden, ib. 574 ; Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Beav. 597 ; Nettleton v. Stephenson, 3 De G. & S. 366 ; Lord Barrington v. Liddell, 10 Hare, 429 ; 2 D. M. & G. 480 ; Weatherall v. Thornburgh, 8 Ch. D. 261 ; Talbot v. Jevors, L. R., 20 Eq. 255.

(q) Green v. Gascoyne, 4 D. J. & S. 565.

(r) Ellis v. Maxwell, 3 Beav. 587 ; Att.-Gen. v. Poulden, 3 Hare, 555 ; Jones v. Maggs, 9 ib. 605 ; Re Parry, 60 L. T. 489, and the cases cited post, note (u).

(s) Nettleton v. Stephenson, 3 De G. & S. 366 ; Smith v. Lomas, 33 L. J. Ch. 578 ; Green v. Gascoyne, 4 D. J. & S. 565. In Simmons v. Pitt, L. R., 8 Ch. 978, a charge on real estate was directed by the owner of it to form part of his personal estate, the income of which was to be accumulated, and it was held that the released income went to his next of kin.

(t) Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 My. & C. 135 ; s. c. Evans v. Hellier, 5 Cl. & F. 114 ; Re Chulow's Trusts, 1 J. & H. 639.

(u) Crawley v. Crawley, 7 Sim. 427 ; O'Neill v. Lucas, 2 Keen, 313 ; Morgan v. Morgan, 4 De G. & S. 175, 176 (stated post, p. 390) ; Re Pope, [1901] 1 Ch. 64, disapproving Re Phillips, 49 L. J. Ch. 198. The decision in Re Phillips seems on principle to be correct (see Gray, Perp. § 708) ; but the rule laid down in Crawley v. Crawley may now be considered as established beyond question.

CHAPTER XI.

(ii) Where it is residue that is directed to be accumulated, the income of such residue, when the accumulation is stopped, will, in obedience to a well-settled principle (v), devolve in the case of personal property to the next of kin (w), in the case of real property to the heir (x), and in the case of a mixed fund to the next of kin and heir respectively (y).

3. The income of the accumulations follows the same rule; therefore if the accumulations arise from personal property, not being a residue, the income falls into the capital of the residue (z), so that a tenant for life would only be entitled to the income of such income; and where residuary personalty is directed to be accumulated, the income of the accumulations, of course, goes to the next of kin. Where the accumulations arise from residuary real estate, the accumulations of rents and profits seem to preserve their character of realty, so that the heir is entitled to the income of such accumulations (a); and it would, of course, follow that, where the accumulations arose from real estate other than residuary, the residuary devisee would, under the present law, be entitled. In Ellis v. Maxwell (b), where the rents of the testator's real estate were directed to form part of his personal estate, and the personal estate was directed to be accumulated, it was held that the income of the accumulations went to the residuary legatees. The case turned on the special words of the will.

*Morgan v.
Morgan.*

In Morgan v. Morgan (c), the testatrix bequeathed a legacy of 5000*l.* to A. upon her marriage with all the accumulations of interest thereon from the time of the testatrix's death, and gave her residuary estate to C. for life, with remainder to various persons. C. died in 1838. Twenty-one years from the testatrix's death expired in 1846. A. was still living, and a spinster. It was held that in the event of A.

(v) Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Sw. 566.

(w) M'Donald v. Bryce, 2 Kee. 276; Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 437; Elborne v. Goode, 14 Sim. 165; Wilson v. Wilson, 1 Sim. N. S. 288; Bourne v. Buckton, 2 ib. 91; Oddie v. Brown, 4 De G. & J. 179; Weatherall v. Thornburgh, 8 Ch. D. 261 (crown entitled in default of next of kin).

(x) Halford v. Stains, 16 Sim. 488; Wildes v. Davies, 1 Sm. & Gif. 475; Weatherall v. Thornburgh, sup. (crown in default of heir).

(y) Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Kee. 564, 4 My. & Cr. 431; Edwards v. Tuck, 3 D. M. & G. 40; Burt v. Sturt, 10 Hare, 415; Ralph v. Carrick, 5 Ch. D. 984; Re Travis, [1900] 2 Ch. 541.

(z) See cases cited supra, note (u).
(a) Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Kee. 577; but see Gray, Perp. § 706.

(b) 12 Beav. 104.

(c) 4 De G. & S. 164; 20 L. J. Ch. 109, 441; 15 Jur. 319. The reports of this case differ from one another, but the result stated in the text seems consistent with all of them. In order to simplify the statement no notice has been taken of the fact that two legacies were given in similar terms, and that part of the judgment related to one and part to the other.

marrying she would be entitled to the legacy and accumulations made down to 1846 ; that the income of the legacy and accumulations from 1846 until the marriage or death of A. belonged to the residuary legatees ; that in the event of her dying without having been married the personal representative of C. would be entitled to so much of the accumulations as represented that part of the income of A.'s legacy which accrued during C.'s lifetime ; that so much of the interest on the accumulations made between 1825 (the death of the testatrix) and 1838 as accrued between 1846 and the death or marriage of A., belonged in any event to C.'s personal representative ; and that so much of the interest on the accumulations made between 1838 and 1846 as accrued between 1846 and the death or marriage of A., belonged in any event to the residuary legatees.

Another case of a contingent legacy arose in Bryan v. Collins (d). There the testatrix bequeathed a fund upon trust to accumulate the income and to pay the whole fund to the eldest daughter of A., and if there should be no such daughter, then in trust for the eldest daughter of B. The testatrix died in 1819 : A. died in 1851 without having had any issue. B. had a daughter C., who was born in 1821 and died in 1827. It was held by Romilly, M. R., that the personal representative of C. was entitled to the fund and the accumulations made between 1819 and 1827, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum on the amount so ascertained up to the time of payment, and that the rest of the accumulations went to the residuary legatee.

Bryan v. Collins.

The interest which, by the operation of the act, results to the heir is generally either an estate pur autre vie or a chattel interest, and consequently if he dies while the income is in suspense, his interest passes to his executor or administrator, and not to his heir (e).

Nature of interest which devolves to the heir.

The Thellusson Act, by invalidating or stopping a disposition of the income of land, may affect the operation of other acts of parliament, such as the Settled Land Acts (f), or the Fines and Recoveries Act (g).

Effect of Thellusson Act on other statutes.

VII.—Life Insurance.—In Bassil v. Lister (h), Turner, V.-C., decided that a direction in a will to apply a sufficient part of the Whether insurances on lives form a mode of accumulation within the act.

(d) 16 Bea. 14.

(e) Sewell v. Denny, 10 Bea. 315 ; Gray, Perp. § 702, note, where Halford v. Stains, 16 Sim. 488, is referred to.

(f) Vine v. Raleigh, [1896] 1 Ch. 37.

(g) Re Hughes, [1906] 2 Ch. 642.

(h) 9 Hare, 177. And see Meller v. Stanley, 2 D. J. & S. 183. The decision in Bassil v. Lister was followed by Chitty, J., in Re Vaughan, [1883] W. N. 89. See also Re Errington, 76 L. T. 616 (settlement by deed).

CHAPTER XI.

income of the testator's property in keeping up certain policies which he had effected on the lives of his children in their names, and which in case of their marriage he directed to be settled on their wives and children, was not a trust for accumulation within the statute, and was therefore valid beyond the period of twenty-one years from his death. He observes: "It was said in argument that the payment of the income to the Insurance Company was itself an accumulation; that the Company were recipients of the income for the purpose of accumulation; that what was done was the same thing as if the rents were paid to an individual, to accumulate in his hands, and to be paid over at the death of the life insured; and the case was presented to the Court in many similar points of view; but I do not see how the payment of the premiums to the Insurance Company out of the income is an accumulation of the income. The premiums, when paid to the Insurance Company, become part of their general funds, subject to all their expenses; and although it is true that the funds in the hands of the companies do generally produce accumulations, it is impossible to say what accumulations arise from any particular premium. It was said that it was an accumulation as to the estate, because the estate receives back a certain sum upon the death of the party whose life was insured; but what the estate receives back is not the accumulation of the income, but a sum payable by the office by contract with the testator; and is this an accumulation within the meaning of the statute? The history of the statute goes far to shew that it is not, and I think the language of the enactment confirms that view. The enactment is, that no person shall settle or dispose of real or personal estate, so and in such manner that the rents, profits, income, or produce shall be accumulated beyond the prescribed periods; and these are words which admit of a clear, plain, common-sense interpretation, as referring to the accumulation of rents, profits, and income, quâ rents, profits, and income. Why is the Court to put a strained construction upon them, and cut down the undoubted right which existed before the statute, beyond what the language of the statute, in its ordinary interpretation, imports? It is said that the Court ought to do so, because the spirit and intent of the statute was to prevent accumulation and the suspension of the beneficial enjoyment; but this argument appears to me to beg the question; for it assumes that what the petitioner here calls an accumulation suspending the beneficial enjoyment, was an accumulation intended to be prevented by the statute. Much reliance was placed in the argument upon the mischief which might ensue from policies of insurance being resorted to for the purpose of evading the statute, if the disposition of this will were upheld, but I entertain no apprehension of any such mischief; I think that settlors and testators, who contemplate accumulations, are far too keen-sighted to incur the risks to which such a course of proceeding would be exposed. On the other hand, I see enormous mischiefs which would arise from the construction for which the petitioner contends. The case before us is but one instance of the difficulties to which such a construction would lead. If it be supported, what is to become of partnership agreements for long terms of years, where certain sums are to be drawn out annually, and the remaining profits are to accumulate and be divided at the end of the terms? What is to be done with policies of insurance on the lives of debtors (h)? And how is the case of a settlement of policies of insurance, with stock transferred in trust to pay premiums out of the dividends, to be dealt with?"

The V.-C. seems here to argue that because of the mode of accumulation adopted the statute did not apply; but the terms of the statute are general, that no person shall "by deed or deeds, &c., or otherwise howsoever, settle or dispose of his property so and in such manner" that the income thereof shall be accumulated; it can scarcely therefore be said that the act does not apply because a particular mode of accumulation is resorted to (hh). To exclude the act, it must be denied that there is any accumulation of income whatever; but it could not be denied, nor did the learned Judge attempt to deny, that effecting an insurance was one mode of accumulation. This answers the objection, that, "though the funds of the company might be accumulated, it would be impossible to say what part of such funds arose from any particular premiums"; an objection which affects only the mode of accumulation. The testator's estate, instead of getting back the total amount of premiums with compound interest, a sum varying in amount according to the period during which the premiums have been paid, gets back a sum certain, whatever that period may be. This sum is not less the result of an accumulation because it is of certain amount.

The decision was also rested on the ground that the sum paid back was in pursuance of a contract, and therefore not within the statute; this seems to beg the question, since, if there be an accumulation, the statute must reach it, whether it arise under a

Observations
on Bassil v.
Lister.

(h) The statute expressly excepts provisions for the payment of debts of any person, see 2 D. M. & G. 498.

(hh) And see the observations of Lord Cranworth, 6 D. M. & G. 462.

CHAPTER XI.

contract or by will : for its terms are general ; and a person can no more contract that his income shall be accumulated beyond the prescribed limits, than he could direct by will that it should be so accumulated ; indeed, if the statute does not extend to contracts, it does not touch any accumulation made by marriage settlement, for every such settlement is a contract. The question what would become of partnership agreements for long terms of years, by which a certain sum is to be drawn out and accumulated annually, may, perhaps, be answered by another question, namely, supposing such agreements not to be effected by the act in question, what would become of them when considered with respect to the Rule against Perpetuities ? an ordinary trust for accumulation, extending over a long term of years (that is, as the V.-C. must have meant, more than twenty-one years), would be void altogether as transgressing the Rule against Perpetuities ⁽ⁱ⁾ ; one of two things, therefore, is clear, either such agreements are not valid, or, if they are valid, they are governed by rules which do not hold good with regard to ordinary trusts, and, in either case, no argument can be drawn from this source in support of the decision in Bassil v. Lister. Probably, the partnership agreements in question would be held good on the principle of the decision in Bateman v. Hotchkin ^(j), before noticed, that an accumulation which is capable at any moment of being put an end to ^(k) can infringe neither the statutory rule against accumulation, nor the common law rule against perpetuities. Lastly, as to the question what would become of settlements of policies of assurance with trusts for keeping them on foot by payment of the premiums, the answer seems to be, that they are either cases where security is given for a debt, or cases of settlement on a marriage, in which one of the settlors is the person during whose life the accumulation is to be made, both of which classes are within the exceptions of the statute under which a direct trust for accumulation would be good ; and it is conceived that there is no authority for saying that any other settlement of policies of assurance are good, where a direct trust for accumulation would not also be good.

It will be observed that the remarks of the learned Judge are irrespective of the fact, that the policies were effected in the testator's lifetime ; his decision was, that insurance is not a mode of accumulation affected by the statute, and it would, therefore, have been the same, if the policies had been effected after the testator's death. By giving small conditional legacies, a testator could easily procure persons, after his death, to allow policies to be effected on their lives, in their names, and to assign them to the testator's trustees, than which an easier and cheaper mode of accumulation could not be devised (l).

⁽ⁱ⁾ Palmer v. Holford, ante, p. 381.

^(k) See Downs v. Collins, 6 Hare, 418.

^(j) Ante, pp. 367-8.

The principle laid down in Bassil v. Lister has been followed in some recent cases. Thus a direction to expend surplus income in the improvement of a landed estate and in maintaining in good habitable repair houses and tenements on the property, is not affected by the Thellusson Act, but it does not authorise expenditure in building new houses, or for any purpose the expense of which ought to be defrayed out of capital (m). So a direction to apply income in keeping buildings insured and repaired, and in reinstating any building destroyed by fire, is good pro tanto and void as to the surplus (n). And in a will declaring trusts of leasehold property, a direction to keep up a policy of insurance to replace at the end of the term the capital which would be lost by the falling in of the lease is good (o). In all these cases the direction to apply and the application of the income must be made in good faith and not for the purpose of evading the act.

(l) The foregoing remarks on Bassil v. Lister are printed as they stand in the fourth edition of this work, by Mr. Vincent. They were cited in Re Vaughan, [1883] W. N. 89, but not adopted by Chitty, J., who held that a policy of life insurance is not within the Thellusson Act. But in Vine v. Raleigh, [1891] 2 Ch. at p. 21, Chitty, J., expressed his entire agreement with the concluding observations of Turner, L.J., in Bassil v. Lister. With regard to partnership agreements, it seems clear that they are not subject to the Rule against Perpetuities, which only applies to such contracts as are specifically enforceable, and therefore create an interest in property: London & S. W. Ry. v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562; Gray, Perp. § 273a, 329. [C. S.]

(m) Vine v. Raleigh, [1891] 2 Ch. 13. See Drake v. Trefusis, L. R., 10 Ch. 364.

(n) Re Mason, [1891] 3 Ch. 467.

(o) Re Gardiner, [1901] 1 Ch. 697.

CHAPTER XII.

FROM WHAT PERIOD A WILL SPEAKS.

I. Object of Gift	PAGE 396	B. As to Wills since 1837	PAGE 406
II. Subject of Gift —		III. As to Testamentary Capacity, &c.	420
A. As to Wills before 1837	404

From what period a will speaks.

“FOR some purposes a will is considered to speak from its date or execution, and for others from the death of the testator: the former being the period of the inception, and the latter that of the consummation of the instrument” (a).

In Randfield v. Randfield (b), a testator prepared a will in 1837, in which certain provisions were contingent on his son attaining twenty-one; he did not execute it until 1844, before which time the son attained that age: it was held that the will must be construed without reference to the contingency.

Construction of words referring to an existing individual.

I.—Object of Gift.—As a general rule, words indicating an existing individual are considered to refer to the date of the will, and not to the testator’s death. “Thus, if a testator give an estate or a sum of money to his son John, the gift will take effect in favour of his son of this name (if any) at the date of the will, and of him only. If, therefore, such son should die in the testator’s lifetime, and he should afterwards have another son of the same

Date and execution relatively considered.

(a) Thus Mr. Jarman, in the 1st edition of this work, p. 277. He adds the following note: “In this chapter, and indeed throughout the present work, the date and the period of execution are assumed to be identical; which, it is obvious, may not be the case, and then the question would arise—which is to predominate? It is conceived that, for some purposes, the date, and for others the time of execution, would do so. In regard to the will’s capacity of operation on real estate (supposing, of course, the will to be subject to the old law), the period of the actual execution would be the material fact; but in regard to points of construction, the effect would sometimes, perhaps generally, depend on the date, or the time of apparent execution: for instance, if a testator dated his will on the 1st January 1830, and executed it on the 1st June in the same year, a bequest in such will of ‘all the Three per cent. Consols now standing in my name,’ possibly might be held to pass the Consols only of which he was possessed on the 1st January, and not what he had acquired between the date and execution, and which he held on the 1st June.”

(b) 8 H. L. C. 225.

name who should survive him, such after-born son would not be an object of the gift. And the same rule would seem to obtain if the devisee or legatee were described with reference to his filial character only, without any other designation (c), as in the case of a gift to 'my son' simply, which would apply, it is conceived, to the son (if any) living at the date of the will, to the exclusion of any after-born son, though such after-born son should, by reason of the decease of the then existing son, happen to be the only person answering the description at the death of the testator" (d). Similarly, a gift to the child with which the testator's wife was pregnant, which child was still-born, was held not to take effect in favour of another child of which the testator's wife was pregnant at the time of his death, though the result was that all the testator's property was devised away, and the last-mentioned child left unprovided for (e). And a gift to "the eldest son" of A. is a gift to the person who answers the description at the date of the will, as persona designata, so that if he dies before the testator the gift lapses (f).

On the same principle, where a testator bequeathed a silver cup to Lord S. and his heirs as an heirloom, and the person who was Lord S. at the date of the will died before the testator, leaving a successor to the title, it was held that the bequest lapsed (g).

A question of this nature may arise on wills made before 1838, containing a gift to the wife of the testator (h), and on all wills containing a gift to the wife of another person, under which, on the principle just stated, the individual standing in the conjugal relation at the date of the will, would take, exclusively of any other person who might happen to answer the description at the death of the testator (i). Accordingly, by early writers it is laid down (j), that if one devise land to the wife of J. S., and J. S. die, and she take to husband J. D., and then the devisor die, she shall take the land; and yet she is not the wife of J. S. when the devisor dies, nor shall she take it as his wife: but the intent is, that she who was the wife how construed.

Gifts to wife,

(c) "This position, however, is advanced with some diffidence, seeing the strong anxiety of the Courts to extend, as much as possible, gifts to children." (Note by Mr. Jarman.) See Perkins v. Micklethwaite, ante, p. 203; and Thompson v. Thompson, and King v. Bennett, post, Chap. XLII.

(d) This statement of the law by Mr. Jarman is taken from the first edition, p. 283.

(e) Foster v. Cook, 3 Br. C. C. 346.

(f) See Chap. XLII.

(g) Re Whorwood, 34 Ch. D. 446.

(h) Since 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 18, the will would be revoked by a second marriage, and the question could not arise. See Pratt v. Mathew, 22 Beav. 334.

(i) Garratt v. Niblock, 1 R. & My. 629; Bryan's Trust, 2 Sim. N. S. 103; Franks v. Brooker, 27 Bea. 635. As to the meaning of the word "unmarried," see post, Chap. XXXV.

(j) See Woodright v. Wright, 10 Mod. 371; 8 Viner Abr. 309, tit. Devise, T. b. pl. 2; Plow. 344a.

CHAPTER XII.

General propositions.

Whether gifts in remainder are distinguishable.

of J. S. at the time of the making the will should have it, and the person is clear by the description. But as Mr. Jarman points out (k), if J. S. had had no wife at the date of the will, it is very doubtful whether a person subsequently becoming such could have claimed under the devise, unless the description were applicable to her at the testator's death; she ought, it is conceived, to answer the description at one of these periods. Mr. Jarman says (l): "The distinctions upon the subject deducible from general principles, and the authorities just referred to, appear to be the following:—First, that a devise or bequest to the wife of A., who has a wife at the date of the will, relates to that person, notwithstanding any change of circumstances which may render the description inapplicable at a subsequent period, and, by parity of reasoning, is under all circumstances confined to her (m); but that, secondly, if A. have no wife at the date of the will, the gift embraces the individual sustaining that character at the death of the testator (n); and, thirdly, if there be no such person either at the date of the will, or at the death of the testator, it applies to the woman who shall first answer the description of wife, at any subsequent period.

"There seems to be no ground, upon principle, for varying the construction, where the gift to the wife is by way of remainder after the death of the husband; the rule being, that the devise of an estate in remainder, to a person in a certain character, and by reference simply and exclusively to that character, vests in the person sustaining it at the death of the testator. The consequence would be, that in case the person who was wife at the death of the testator, or who subsequently became such, die in the lifetime of her husband the tenant for life, no after-taken wife, surviving him, would be entitled under the devise; since it would be impossible, consistently with the principle in question, to hold that it remained contingent until the death of the husband, or that it shifted from time to time to the several persons upon whom the character of wife successively devolved (o).

(k) First edition, p. 284.

(l) First edition, p. 285.

(m) See the case of Re Coley, [1903] 2 Ch. 102, cited below note (o), which treats the general principle as unquestionable, unless there is something in the context of the will to prevent its application; as to this, see Re Drew, post, p. 400.

(n) See Lloyd v. Davies, 14 C. B. 76; and analogous cases, Ch. XLII. ad fin.

(o) See Driver d. Frank v. Frank, 3 M. & Sel. 25, 8 Taunt. 468; Long- worth v. Bellamy, 40 L. J. Ch. 513; Radford v. Willis, L. R., 7 Ch. 7, and see Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare, 131, where however the words were special. The point may now be considered settled; see Re Burrow's Trusts, 10 L. T. N. S. 184; Firth v. Fielden, 22 W. R. 622; Re Griffiths' Policy, [1903] 1 Ch. 739; Re Coley, [1903] 2 Ch. 102. The decision of Malins, V.-C., in Re Lyne's Trust, L. R., 8 Eq. 65, is overruled, so far as it professes to lay down any general rule.

“ The doctrine here contended for, however, may appear to be encountered by the case of Peppin v. Bickford (p), where a testator gave to his nephew A. 6000*l.* to be raised out of his estate, and which he directed should not be paid or payable until the day of his marriage, when it was to be laid out in the purchase of land, to be settled and conveyed to the said A. and his assigns for life, and after his decease, to and upon the wife of A. for life, and after her decease, then unto and upon the first son of A. on the body of such wife to be begotten, in tail male, remainder to the other sons successively in tail male, remainder to the daughters as tenants in common in tail, remainder to the testator’s brother-in-law B. in fee. A. was unmarried at the date of the will and the death of the testator. He subsequently married a lady, who died in his lifetime without issue. He afterwards married again, and the second wife claimed to be included in the trusts, contending that the estates were to be settled on any after-taken wife of A. and his issue by such wife, in case his first wife should die without issue ; and the Court so decided : Lord Loughborough said, ‘ If the wife had died within a month after the marriage, there could have been no issue to take the provision : and the legacy of 6000*l.*, except as to the life interest of the nephew, would have lapsed (qu. failed ?). It is impossible to ascribe such an intention to the testator ’ (q).

“ In this case, the construction must, it is conceived, be referred to the special circumstances of the trust being executory, which authorised the Court to give it a liberal construction, and that, by restricting the trust in favour of the wife to the first person standing in that relation, the limitation to the issue would have been restricted to her children, which could hardly be the intention of the testator, who was the husband’s relation.”

Executory trusts.

In all cases of executory trusts, it is purely a question of intention. Thus, in Re Parrott (r), a testator bequeathed a fund to be settled upon his daughter A., “ the wife of M. W.,” for her life, part of the fund to be paid at her death “ to her husband if living, if deceased then the whole amount is to be divided amongst her children ” ; it was held by the Court of Appeal that a settlement be directed, so framed as to apply to M. W. and not to any future husband, and so as to confine the trusts to the daughter’s children by him. On the other hand, in Nash v. Allen (s), a trust to settle

(p) 3 Ves. 570.

(q) See also Allanson v. Clitherow,

1 Ves. sen. 24 : Belt’s Supp. 24.

(r) 33 Ch. D. 274.

(s) 42 Ch. D. 54. The subject is discussed more in detail in Chap. XXIV. (Executory Trusts).

CHAPTER XII. property upon the testator's daughter or daughters "and her or their intended husband or husbands" and "the children of such marriage or respective marriages," was held to authorise a settlement in favour of a second husband.

Contrary intention.

Apart from the question of executory trusts, the presumption that a gift to the wife of a married person is confined to the wife living at the date of the will, may in any case be rebutted by the context. Thus, in Re Drew (t), a testator gave property upon trust to pay the income to his son B. for life and after his death "to his wife" for life, and after her decease upon trust for B.'s children living at his decease; the will contained a provision for the cesser of B.'s interest on alienation or bankruptcy, and a discretionary trust in that event for the maintenance and support of B., his wife and children. B. was married at the date of the will. It was held by Stirling, J., that B.'s second wife, whom he married after the date of the will, was entitled, on the ground that the will shewed a general intention to provide for B.'s family.

The decision in Re Lory (u) may be supported on the same ground. There a testator bequeathed property upon trust to pay the income during the life of his son to his son's wife and children in equal shares, and after his son's death to his son's widow and children in equal shares. The son was married at the date of the will, but shortly after the testator's death the son's wife died and he married again: it was held by Chitty, J., that the second wife was entitled to a share of the income.

Reputed wife.

Difficult questions sometimes arise where the person who claims a legacy left to the "wife" of the testator or another person is not really married to him. As a general rule, it seems sufficient that the legatee had at the date of the will acquired the reputation of a wife. Thus, where the testator had separated from his wife A. (by whom he had no children), and went through the ceremony of marriage with another woman B. by whom he had two children, and made a will by which he made bequests in favour of "my wife" and the two children: it was held that B. took under those words (v). On principle it would seem that the same rule applies to a gift to "the wife" of another person; that is to say, a woman not really his wife would be entitled, if the testator believed her to be, or treated her as, his wife. But the evidence would no doubt require to be strong, and in the absence of such evidence the testator would be presumed to refer to a person properly answering the description (w). In Re Lowe (x) the testator made a bequest to "the present wife" of A. B., "if she shall become his widow," and also made bequests to various persons by name, describing them as the children of A. B.; they were, in fact, the illegitimate children of A. B. by a woman who lived with him as his wife: it was held that she was entitled to the bequest made to "the present wife" of A. B.

(t) [1899] 1 Ch. 336.

(u) 7 T. L. R. 419.

(v) In bonis Howe, 33 W. R. 48.

In considering gifts to a person as "wife" or "widow," it is necessary to distinguish three classes of cases: where the gift is to "my wife" or "the wife" or "widow" of A. B.; where the gift is to "my wife A." or "A. the wife of B."; and where the gift is to a woman on condition of her being or remaining the widow of A. B. The subject is considered in Chapter XXXV.

In Bullmore v. Wynter (y), a testator devised property to his daughter for life, and after her death in trust for any husband with whom she might intermarry, if he should survive her, for his life; she married a man from whom she was afterwards divorced on his petition, and he married again and survived her: it was held by Fry, J., that he was entitled to a life interest. But in Re Morrieson (z), under a bequest to the testator's son for life and after his decease to "any wife" of the son, it was held by Kay, J., that a woman whom the son married and afterwards divorced was not entitled. It is difficult to support the decision in Bullmore v. Wynter.

Divorced wife of third person.

In Schloss v. Stiebel (a) the testator in his will referred to his intended marriage with Miss A., and among other dispositions bequeathed 3000*l.* "to my wife"; he died before the marriage, while still engaged to Miss A.: Shadwell, V.-C., held that she was entitled to the legacy.

Intended wife.

The general rule above referred to (b) does not necessarily apply where the gift is to a person holding an official position, or to a class or fluctuating body of persons. Thus a gift to the superioresses of two convents means the persons who answer that description at the testator's death (c). And a simple gift to the children of A., comprises all such as are living at the testator's death (d), unless it is to children "now living."

Gifts to classes and officials.

(w) Re Davenport's Trust, 1 Sm. & G. 126. If the gift had been to "A., the wife of B.," A. would have taken, though not really married to B., under the rule stated in Chap. XXXV, infra; Anderson v. Berkley, [1902] 1 Ch. 936.

(x) 61 L. J. Ch. 415.

(y) 22 Ch. D. 619.

(z) 40 Ch. D. 30.

(a) 6 Sim. 1.

(b) Supra, p. 396.

(c) Re Laffan and Downes' Contract, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 469. As to gifts to persons holding charitable offices, see ante, p. 223.

(d) As to the construction of gifts to classes, see Chap. XLII., and post, p. 433.

CHAPTER XII.

It is hardly necessary to say that if the gift is expressly confined to members of the class "now living," that will exclude any born after the date of the will (e). And the words "now living" have a similar restrictive effect, even where combined with a term which could not have full effect, according to its technical import, unless used prospectively; as in the case of a devise to the heir male of the body of A. "now living," under which the heir apparent of A. living at the date of the will has been held to be entitled; so that the word "heir" was made to surrender its primary and proper signification, in order to give effect to the word "now," with which it stood associated (f).

Verbs in present tense.

On the same principle, verbs in the present tense have a similar effect in restricting a devise or bequest to the objects existing at the date of the will, though in some of the cases considerable reluctance appears to have been manifested to carry out this principle, where its effect would be inconveniently to narrow the scope of the will, by excluding any who might be presumed to be intended objects of the testator's bounty. Thus in Ringrose v. Bramham (g), Sir L. Kenyon, M. R., held that a bequest of 50*l.* "to A.'s children, to every child he hath by his wife B.," to be paid to them as they should come of age, spoke at the time the will took effect, so as to let in all the children then living. "The circumstances of the case, however," as Mr. Jarman points out (h), "though not expressly adverted to by his Honour, perhaps aided the construction. The testator had directed a sum of money to be placed in the hands of a person until the children came of age, which exceeded the sum which would have been necessary for the purpose if the legacy were confined to the children then in existence. In regard to gifts to children, indeed, an anxiety to include as wide a range of objects as possible has so powerfully influenced the construction, that such cases are to be regarded as sui generis. To this anxiety is also to be ascribed the rule, which constitutes another exception to the doctrine under consideration, that a gift to children 'begotten' extends to children born after the date of the will; and a gift to children 'to be begotten' includes those antecedently in existence" (i).

Gifts to children.

(e) Crossly v. Clare, Amb. 397.

(f) James v. Richardson, T. Jon. 99, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 214, pl. 11, 1 Vent. 334, 2 Lev. 232, Raym. 330, 3 Keb. 832, Poll. 457; Burchett v. Durdant (Durdant v. Burchett) on same will, Skin. 205, 2

Vent. 311, Carth. 154.

(g) 2 Cox, 384.

(h) First edition, p. 279.

(i) Co. Litt. 20 b. See also post, Chap. XLII.

If the testator refers to a number of children in such a way as to shew that he has certain individuals in his mind, they take as personæ designatæ, and not as a class; as where he gives a sum "to be divided between the six children of A" (j).

CHAPTER XII.

Where children take as personæ designatæ.

Legacies to clerks, servants, &c.

Legacies to clerks, servants, and the like, are also, as a rule, gifts to a class, and therefore those, and only those, who are in the testator's service at the time of his death, can take under such a bequest. Thus, in Re Marcus (k), the testator made the following bequest: "My office and warehouse employés, such as clerks and workmen, shall have to receive six months' full salary." It was held by North, J., that employés in the testator's service at the date of the will, but subsequently dismissed, were not entitled, and that employés who had been engaged by the testator after the date of the will, and were in his service at the time of his death, were entitled. His Lordship said: "The ordinary natural meaning of the words is 'those who were his employés at the time of his death.' If he had meant to describe the persons who were his employés at the time the will was made, nothing would have been easier than to say who they were and who were meant. But instead of adopting the obvious course in case that was intended, he does something else. He seems to consider that the employés are a class to be ascertained, and he gives the mode by which the trustees are to ascertain, when the time comes, who are the persons to take." Jones v. Henley (l), which decided that under a bequest of 100*l.* a-piece to all his servants, the testator meant only those who were continuously in his service from the date of the will to the testator's death, is quite contrary to principle. Of course, a testator may, by the context, shew that under a bequest to servants he has in mind persons in his service at the date of the will. Thus in Parker v. Marchant (m), the testator by codicil bequeathed "to the following persons, who have lived many years in my family, viz. to A. 1000*l.*, to B. 1000*l.*, to C. 1000*l.*; to the other servants, 500*l.* each." A servant not named was, at the date of the codicil, in the testator's service, but quitted it before his death: it was held that she was entitled. A similar construction was adopted in Re Sharland (n).

In Sleach v. Thorington (o), a testatrix bequeathed to the two servants who should be living with her at her death a sum of stock

(j) Sherer v. Bishop, 4 Bro. C. C. 55;

(m) 1 Y. & C. C. C. 290.

Orford v. Orford, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 121.

(n) [1896] 1 Ch. 517.

See post, Chap. XIII.

(o) 2 Ves. sen. 561; see Roper Leg.

(k) 56 L. J. Ch. 830.

182.

(l) 2 Ch. Rep. 162.

CHAPTER XII.

in equal shares; she had two servants in her employ when she made her will, and afterwards took another, who was in her service at the time of her death: it was held that all three were entitled, on the principle laid down in Tomkins v. Tomkins (p).

Other points connected with legacies to servants (including the question of compliance with an express condition of being in the testator's service at the time of his death) are considered in another chapter (q).

Wills Act,
sect. 24.

Section 24 of the Wills Act, which makes a will speak from the death of the testator so far as regards his property, does not in any manner affect its construction with regard to the objects of gift (r).

II.—Subject of Gift.—In considering this question, it is necessary to distinguish between wills which are subject to the old law, and those regulated by the Wills Act.

Old law.

A. Old Law.—Under the old law, the general principle was that verbs in the present tense restricted a bequest (s) to the subjects existing at the date of the will, though in some of the cases considerable reluctance to carry out this principle appears to have been manifested. Thus in Wilde v. Holtzmeyer (t) Arden, M. R., expressed the opinion that a bequest of “all the property I am possessed of” would, if unrestrained by the context, extend to all the testator's personal estate at his death.

Doctrine as to specific bequests.

The general rule, however, as stated by Mr. Jarman (u), is that “where a testator, in a will which is regulated by the old law, refers to a specific subject of gift, he is considered as pointing at the state of facts while he is penning the instrument, and not at the time of his decease, even though he may not have used the word ‘now’ or any other adverb emphatically denoting present time (v). The doctrine relating to the ademption of specific bequests stands upon this principle. Thus if a testator before the year 1838, having a leasehold messuage, or a sum of 1000*l*. Three per cent. Consols, bequeathed ‘all that my messuage in A.’ or ‘all that sum of 1000*l*.”

(p) Cited 3 Atk. 257; post, Chap. XLII.

(q) Chap. XXX.

(r) Bullock v. Bennett, 7 D. M. & G. 283; Violet v. Brookman, 26 L. J. Ch. 308. The decision in Re Harris's Trust (2 W. R. 689), so far as it conflicts with the rule above stated, is overruled. See the cases on gifts to eldest sons, &c., post, Chap. XLII.

(s) Devises of land were subject to a special rule, as to which see Chap. XXV.

(t) 5 Ves. 816; see also Bridgman v. Dove, 3 Atk. 201.

(u) First edition, p. 280.

(v) Cockran v. Cockran, 14 Sim. 248; Pattison v. Pattison, 1 My. & K. 12. See also per Wood, V.-C., Goodlad v. Burnett, 1 K. & J. 347.

Three per cent. Consols standing in my name,' he is considered as referring to the house or the stock belonging to him when he made his will; and, therefore, if he subsequently disposes of such house or stock, the bequest fails, though he may at his decease happen to be possessed of a messuage or a sum of stock answering to the description in the will (w).

"And a new estate in leasehold property, acquired by a subsequent renewal of the lease or otherwise, is no less out of the reach of a specific disposition of such property, as ordinarily expressed, than an interest in any other property answering to the same locality; it being considered that the testator, when referring to the property in question, had in his contemplation exclusively the specific interest in it of which he was possessed when he made his will, though he had not in terms referred to such interest, but had used expressions descriptive of the corpus of the property: as in the case of a bequest of 'all my tithes and ecclesiastical dues at W.' (x), or 'the perpetual advowson and disposal of the living or rectory of W. for ever, together with the tithes of all sorts thereof' (y), or 'all my leasehold estates in the parish of C.' (z). In all such cases the renewal of the lease under the old law revoked the bequest, or rather, to speak more accurately, withdrew from its operation the property which was the subject of disposition; in short, effected what is technically called an ademption" (a).

Effect of renewal upon bequest of leaseholds.

But though the general principle was settled, yet questions often arose in consequence of the context of the will affording ground to contend, that the testator intended any after-acquired interest of which he might become possessed by renewal, to pass under the bequest (b).

Exceptions to doctrine.

So in the case of a specific bequest of stock, debts, or other choses in action, many of the old cases went on the principle that if the nature of the property was changed without any animus adimendi on the part of the testator, the bequest was not adeemed (c). But (w) See Smallman v. Goolden, 1 Cox, 329.

(x) Rudstone v. Anderson, 2 Ves. sen. 418.

(y) Hone v. Medcraft, 1 Bro. C. C. 261.

(z) Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 Bro. C. C. 291.

(a) As to the effect of the testator purchasing the reversion in fee of leaseholds bequeathed by his will, see Capel v. Girdler, 9 Ves. 509.

(b) The question is discussed in the fourth and earlier editions of this work. See Carte v. Carte, 3 Atk. 174; Abney

v. Miller, 2 Atk. 593; James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 383, and 15 Ves. 236; Slatter v. Noton, 16 Ves. 197; Poole v. Coates, 2 D. & War. 493, and 1 Con. & L. 531; Churchman v. Ireland, 1 R. & My. 250; Hance v. Truwhitt, 2 J. & H. 216; Colegrave v. Manby, 2 Russ. 238; Woodhouse v. Okill, 8 Sim. 115; Clough v. Clough, 3 My. & K. 296. As to renewed leases for lives, see Marwood v. Turner, 3 P. W. 163.

(c) See cases cited in Barker v. Rayner, 5 Madd. 208; post, Chap. XXX.

CHAPTER XII. this doctrine may now be looked upon as exploded, even in cases where the money has been set aside or re-invested so that it can be traced (d).

As to general devises and bequests.

Mr. Jarman continues (e): "Under the old law, where a testator made a general gift of his real and personal estate, he was considered as meaning to dispose of these respective portions of property to the full extent of his capacity; and, accordingly, such a gift, in regard to the real estate, was read as a gift of the property belonging to the testator at the time of the execution of his will (he being incapable of devising any other), and as to the personalty, as a disposition of what he might happen to possess at the period of his decease. And the reluctance of the Courts to confine a general bequest of personalty to what the testator possessed at the date of the will sometimes, we have seen (f), prevailed against the force of words which might seem so to restrict it. The same principle also was applicable to a general bequest of any particular species of personal property, as of 'my furniture and effects,' which accordingly was held to embrace property of this description belonging to the testator at his death" (g).

Stat. 1 Vict.
c. 26, s. 24.

B. Modern Law.—Wills made or republished since the year 1837 are regulated, with respect to the period from which they speak, by the act 1 Vict. c. 26, which provides (s. 24), "That every will shall be construed, with reference to the real estate and personal estate comprised in it, to speak and take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will."

"This enactment must," as Mr. Jarman remarks (h), "be viewed in connection with sect. 3, which enables testators to dispose of all the real and personal estate to which they may be entitled at the time of their death, which, if not so disposed of, would devolve to their general real and personal representatives. Had the latter clause stood alone, it might have been a question whether the legislature, by merely enabling testators to dispose of after-acquired real estate, had so far varied and enlarged the construction of a general devise, as to make it extend beyond the real estate belonging to the testator when he made his will, to which the established

General
devise of real estate now extends to property at death.

(d) Pattison v. Pattison, 1 My. & K. 12; Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox 184; Ashburner v. Macquire, 2 Bro. C. C. 108; Re Bridle, 4 C. P. D. 336.

(e) First edition, p. 287.

(f) See cases cited ante, p. 404.

(g) 3 P. W. 325, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 200, pl. 12. See also Banks v. Thornton, 11 Hare, 176, where a bequest of "all the residue of my property which consists of stock" was held to include all stock in the testator's possession at his death.

(h) First edition, p. 288.

rules of construction, no less than the principle which forbade the devise of after-acquired real estate, previously restricted it. Any such question is, of course, now precluded; for by the combined effect of the 3rd and 24th sections of the statute, it is evident that a general devise of real estate (i) will operate on all the property of that description, to which the testator may happen to be entitled at his decease; and though it seems to have become usual in practice, to extend the devise in express terms to the real estate belonging to the testator at his death, yet this must be considered as a measure of excessive caution, and not as springing from, or sanctioning, any serious doubt as to the construction. Indeed, to hold that a general devise is still confined to real estate belonging to the testator at the date of his will, would most inconveniently narrow, and go far towards rendering nugatory, the enactment which declares the will to speak, in regard to the estate (real as well as personal) comprised in it, from the death of the testator."

General
devise of lands in particular place.

So a devise of the testator's real estate in a given county or parish, will primâ facie include all the real estate in that place to which the testator is entitled at his decease (j). But a general devise of lands in a particular place will, of course, not include lands subsequently purchased, where the will expressly disposes of the latter; the contrary intention spoken of in the act is then clearly shown (k).

Mr. Jarman continues (l): "The application of the new principle of construction to specific bequests, however, is attended with more difficulty, and will, in all probability, give rise to much controversy and litigation, before its precise limits and effect are fully established. The case immediately in the contemplation of the legislature, probably, was that of a specific bequest of a renewed leasehold property, which, we have seen, under the old law, did not apply to the new estate acquired by a renewal of the lease subsequently to the will; and, also, the case of a bequest of a specific sum of stock in the funds, which, upon the same principle, did not extend to substituted stock subsequently acquired by the testator, though of precisely similar amount. The applicability of the new enactment to such cases, of course, cannot be questioned (m), and there is as little doubt respecting its beneficial operation."

Application of sect. 24 to specific gifts.

Renewed
lease.

(i) O'Toole v. Browne, 3 Ell. & Bl. 572; Jepson v. Key, 2 H. & C. 873.

(j) Doe d. York v. Walker, 12 M. & Wels. 591. Compare Mason v. Ogden, [1903] A. C. 1. As to the effect of the words "which I am seised of or entitled to," occurring in Doe v. Walker, see post, p. 418.

(k) Re Farrer's Estate, 8 Ir. C. L. 370.

(l) First edition, p. 289.

(m) But as to the second case put by Mr. Jarman, see post, p. 411.

CHAPTER XII.

Purchase of reversion of lease.

The section applies not only to the case of a testator renewing the lease of leasehold property bequeathed by him, but also to cases where, after making his will disposing of the demised property, the lessee has bought the reversion in fee; the newly acquired interest passes by the will, notwithstanding a reference (commonly found in such cases) to the term for which the property is at the time held; this being considered only a mode of describing the property, and not as equivalent to saying, "I give my present interest and nothing else" (n). The latter meaning would equally exclude a renewed term (o). But, of course, the language used by the testator may shew that he does not intend to give anything except his present interest (p).

Bequest of stock.

With regard to bequests of stock, it is clear that if there is nothing to shew a contrary intention, a bequest of the testator's stock of a given description will, under the present law, include any additional stock of the same description, purchased by the testator after the date of his will. Thus in Goodlad v. Burnett (q), where the testatrix gave "my New Three and a quarter per cent. Annuities" to trustees, upon the trusts therein mentioned; and, after making her will, purchased a considerable quantity of that stock in addition to what she possessed at the time of making her will, it was held by Wood, V.-C., that the whole was included in the bequest. He thought the Wills Act must have some sense given to it as regarded personal estate; before that act, there was no doubt that, as regarded the general personal estate, the will in most cases spoke from the death, but not in all; and the present was one in which the bequest would have been confined to the stock in the testatrix's possession at the time of making her will (r). It was precisely such a case to which the act would seem to have application; the only question was, did a contrary intention appear by the will? There was nothing to indicate such an intention, except the mere (n) Struthers v. Struthers, 5 W. R. 809; Miles v. Miles, L. R., 1 Eq. 462; Cox v. Bennett, L. R., 6 Eq. 422; Saxton v. Saxton, 13 Ch. D. 359. Sect. 23 of the act was also relied on, as to which vide ante, p. 164, n. (t). See also Leckey v. Watson, Ir. R., 7 C. L. 157.

(o) See Wedgwood v. Denton, L. R., 12 Eq. 290, 295, 296.

(p) See Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S. 722, post, p. 410. In Re Knight, 34 Ch. D. 518, a testator gave all the plate, &c., which should be in and about the dwelling-house in which he should reside at the time of his decease, "together with the lease of such house" to his wife; at the date of his will he was residing in a house which he held for a short term at a rack rent; several years afterwards he parted with the lease of that house and purchased a freehold house in which he resided at his death: it was held by North, J., that the wife was not entitled to the freehold house. See also the cases cited post, Chap. XXII.

(q) 1 K. & J. 341. See also Drake v. Martin, 23 Beav. 89; Trinder v. Trinder, L. R., 1 Eq. 695; and per Jessel, M. R., L. R., 20 Eq. 312.

(r) Compare Banks v. Thornton, 11 Hare, 176.

circumstance of the testatrix having described the stock as "my Three-and-a-quarter per Cents."; and where, as here, the bequest was generic (s)—of that which might be increased or diminished—that circumstance was insufficient (t). It follows that if a testator bequeaths his stock of a particular description, and after the execution of his will disposes of part of it, the balance will pass by the bequest (u). CHAPTER XII.

The same principle has been applied to a devise of land. Thus in Strevens v. Bayley (v), the testatrix devised to the plaintiff "the lands of Curramore," and devised all the residue of her real estate to the defendant; the townland of Curramore had originally been held in undivided moieties, and there had been a partition under which the testatrix was, at the date of her will, entitled to one portion in severalty; and after the date of her will, she purchased the other portion: it was held that the whole townland passed to the plaintiff. Monahan, C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, considered that the description comprised the whole townland, and, consequently, included all lands in the townland of which the testatrix was seised at her death. Devise of "lands of C."

So in Castle v. Fox (w), where a testator, being entitled to the mansion-house of Cleeve Court and lands adjoining, devised "his mansion and estate called Cleeve Court" to certain persons, and the residue of his property to certain other persons; and afterwards, at different times, bought other pieces of land, which he added to Cleeve Court, and treated and spoke of them as part thereof; Malins, V.-C., said he was required by sect. 24 to ask the question what it was the testator called the Cleeve Court estate at the time of his death; and finding upon the evidence that these additions were then regarded and treated by the testator as part (s) Although the description of the stock was generic, the legacy was specific; see Bothamley v. Sherson, L. R., 20 Eq. 304, and other cases cited in Chap. XXX.

(t) Trinder v. Trinder, L. R., 1 Eq. 695, is to the same effect.

(u) Re Slater, [1906] 2 Ch. 480; [1907] 1 Ch. 665. Compare Re Gillins, [1909] 1 Ch. 345.

(v) 8 Ir. C. L. R. 410.

(w) L. R., 11 Eq. 542. See Webb v. Byng, 1 K. & J. 580, a very similar case, where the after-acquired property was held not to pass through insufficiency of evidence to prove that it was regarded by the testatrix as part of the estate devised. Citing this case, R. P. S. p. 372, Lord St. Leonards says, "consider this case." As to the admissibility of such evidence, see s. c. and other cases post [Ch. XV.]. (Note by Mr. Vincent in the 4th ed. of this work.) But it is not clear that this was the ground of the decision in Webb v. Byng, or that the operation of a specific devise in general terms depends on intention, any more than does the operation of a residuary devise or bequest; for in most cases a testator does not contemplate the possibility of a specific gift failing through lapse, remoteness, &c., and yet if it does, the property passes under the residuary gift. In Castle v. Fox, the V.-C. seems to have attributed too great potency to sect. 24; see post, p. 413.

CHAPTER XII. of the estate, he held that they passed as such under the specific devise.

Another example of the effect of a general description is to be found in Everett v. Everett (x), where a testator by will released his son from certain specified debts and "all other moneys due from him to me": it was held that these words released the son from moneys lent to him by the testator after the date of the will.

So where (xx) a testator bequeathed all his share and interest in a partnership business and in the real and personal estate employed or invested therein to trustees upon trust to continue the business at the discretion of his wife, and to pay to her a sum equal to a share in the profits of the business; the testator afterwards acquired the whole of the business: it was held by Bacon, V.-C., that the whole business passed and that the widow was entitled to the whole of the income.

But, as already mentioned (y), the testator may use language shewing that he had specific property in his mind. Thus in Emuss v. Smith (z), it was held that a devise of "all my freehold estate at Brickhouse Lane which I purchased of B." by a testator who had before making his will purchased of B. an estate in that lane, partly freehold and partly leasehold, did not pass the reversion in fee, afterwards purchased from C., of the part theretofore leasehold (a).

The cases in which it has been held that property may pass under a generic description (e.g., "the property to which I am entitled under the will of X."), even if its state of investment is changed by the testator, are considered elsewhere (b).

Gifts of specific sums of stock, or of a particular number of shares in a certain company, give rise to more difficulty. As a general rule, a bequest of a sum of stock without more (e.g., "I bequeath to A. 1000*l.* 2½ per cent. Consols") is a general bequest. So a bequest of "20 shares in the A. company" is primâ facie a general legacy. If, therefore, the testator has 20 shares of 50*l.* each at the date of his will, and they are afterwards converted into 100 shares of 10*l.* each, the legatee only gets 20 10*l.* shares (c). On the other hand, a bequest of "my 1000*l.* Consols" or "my 20 shares in the A.

(x) 7 Ch. D. 428.

(xx) Re Russell, 19 Ch. D. 432.

(y) Ante, p. 408.

(z) 2 De G. & S. 722.

(a) Cave v. Harris, 57 L. J. Ch. 62, is to the same effect. The principle involved in these decisions was disregarded by Romilly, M. R., in Drake

v. Martin, 23 Bea. 89 ("foreign securities as invested by Mr. W. L., broker"). The decision in Cooch v. Walden, 46 L. J. Ch. 639, is too shortly reported to be of any value.

(b) Chap. XXX.

(c) Re Gillins, [1909] 1 Ch. 345.

Gift of property derived from a specified source.

Bequest of specified sum of stock, or number of shares, may be general, or specific.

company," is specific (d). Mr. Jarman, as already mentioned (e), thought that if a testator made a bequest of a specific sum of stock (by which he obviously meant a specific bequest of a certain sum of stock (f)), and then sold the stock, and afterwards acquired a precisely similar amount, the latter stock would pass by the bequest. The point does not seem to have been decided, but it is submitted that Mr. Jarman's contention is not well founded. For if a testator bequeaths "my 1000*l.* Consols," or "the 1000*l.* Consols standing in my name," he obviously has in mind a particular investment, and does not mean to dispose of an investment which he may make at some future time. In Re Gibson (g), Wood, V.-C., laid down the general principle thus: "When you find a mere specific thing, incapable of increase or diminution, in existence at the date of the will, but not in existence at the time of the testator's death, there is a sufficient indication upon the will of the 'contrary intention' to which sect. 24 refers, to prevent the operation of the rule which makes the will speak from the death of the testator." In that case a testator, having 1000*l.* N. B. Railway stock, bequeathed "my one thousand N. B. Railway shares," and afterwards sold his 1000*l.* stock, and at various times bought stock and shares of the N. B. Railway exceeding the amount bequeathed, and was possessed of them at his death; Wood, V.-C., said the testator had distinctly referred to one thing in his will which was no longer in existence at the time of his death: that thing and that only could be considered as the subject of the bequest. The bequest was therefore adeemed. This in principle covers a case where the substituted stock is exactly equal to the original subject of bequest.

The act not applicable to specific bequest of stock of a definite amount;

Again in Sidney v. Sidney (h), the testator recited, as the fact was, that his son owed him 1440*l.* or thereabouts, secured by bills notes or otherwise (the precise amount was 1400*l.*), and released him from the payment of interest up to the time of the testator's death; this debt was afterwards paid off, but another of 1290*l.*

nor to release of a specific existing debt.

(d) See Chap. XXX.

(e) Supra, p. 407, where Mr. Jarman's views on the application of sect. 24 to specific bequests are quoted.

(f) See the instance put by him of the effect of a bequest under the old law of a "sum of 1000*l.* consols standing in my name," ante, p. 404.

(g) L. R., 2 Eq. 669. A similar decision was come to by the V.-C. in Goodlad v. Burnett, 1 K. & J. 341. A bequest of railway "shares" generally includes railway stock, Morrice v. Aylmer, L. R., 7 H. L. 717. In Re

Gibson, Wood, V.-C., referred to Lord Hardwicke's doctrine in Avelyn v. Ward, 1 Ves. 423, that the substitution of one entire fund (not purchased bit by bit) for another of equal amount was a revival of the bequest. But since 1 Vict. c. 26, a bequest of personality once adeemed cannot be revived by parol.

(h) L. R., 17 Eq. 65. It should be noticed that the case of Smallman v. Goolden (1 Cox, 329), on which the M. R. partly relied, was before the Wills Act. See Everett v. Everett, 7 Ch. D. 428.

CHAPTER XII.

was incurred, which was partly secured by notes and partly unsecured, and which remained due at the testator's death. Jessel, M. R., held that the will meant to describe a specific sum then existing, and that consequently it could not, under sect. 24, be read as speaking at the time of the testator's death, so as to include a new subject, viz. the interest on the new debt. The legacy was therefore adeemed (i).

In Re Lane (j), the testator bequeathed "all my debentures in the S. Company"; at the date of the will he held certain debentures of that company which were afterwards converted into debenture stock: it was held by Hall, V.-C., that the stock did not pass by the bequest, on the ground that the two things were substantially different. But in Re Herring (k), Joyce, J., expressed the opinion that the case fell within sect. 24 of the Wills Act.

Mr. Jarman's view of sect. 24 as applied to specific gifts.

Mr. Jarman seems to have anticipated that sect. 24 of the Wills Act would have a wider operation than it in fact has. He remarks (l): "The new rule of construction, however, will, according to the general terms in which the enactment is framed, apply to many cases in which its effect will be less decidedly salutary, nay, where it will, in all probability, defeat the intention; for example, suppose that a testator, having a house in Grosvenor Square, bequeaths it by the description of his messuage in such square, and afterwards sells the property, and purchases another house in the same square, of which he is possessed at his decease, the bequest will, it should seem, comprise the new acquisition by force of the enactment which makes the will speak from the death. So (to put a stronger case), suppose that a testator, having a small farm in the parish of A., devises all that his estate in the parish of A., and that, subsequently to the will, he disposes of the farm in question, and purchases another in the same parish, but of ten times the value, which he continues to hold until his decease, or such larger farm may have devolved on the testator by descent or otherwise without any spontaneous act on his part, or even without his knowledge, or

(i) See also Maxwell v. Maxwell, L. R., 4 H. L. 506, as to expressions showing an intention to refer only to the state of circumstances existing at the date of the will. A bequest, if specific under the old law, is specific also under the new. The Wills Act, s. 24, gives it an enlarged operation; but the nature of the bequest is not altered. See Bothamley v. Sherson, L. R., 20 Eq. 313; Re Gray, 36 Ch.

D. 205, where Kay, J., considered what would have been the result if the bequest had been specific. These and other cases are discussed in the chapter on Legacies.

(j) 14 Ch. D. 856.

(k) [1908] 2 Ch. at p. 499.

(l) First edition, p. 289. It will, of course, be remembered that the first edition of this work was published seven years after the passing of the Wills Act.

when incapable of altering his will; in either case the newly-acquired estate must, it is conceived, be held to pass by the devise" (m).

As regards the former of the two illustrations given by Mr. Jarman, the exact case does not seem to have come before the Courts, and the dicta on the point are not consistent. Thus in Castle v. Fox, Malins, V.-C., expressed a decided opinion that Mr. Jarman's view was correct, and that the subsequently acquired house in Grosvenor Square would pass by the devise: "I have not a doubt about it" (n). But other judges have striven to find a reasonable meaning in the act. "Suppose," said Knight Bruce, V.-C. (o), "a man to have a brown horse and bequeath it, and then to sell it and buy another brown horse, and die, does the horse of which he was possessed at the time of his death pass?" Or suppose a man to have a picture, say, of the Holy Family, by some inferior artist, and to bequeath it as "my Holy Family," then to sell it, and afterwards to acquire a far better one on the same subject painted by an eminent artist: Wood, V.-C., thought it would be a monstrous construction to hold that the latter picture would pass; and he observed that where there was a distinct reference to a distinct and specific thing incapable of increase or diminution, and not to a genus, there was an indication of a contrary intention sufficient to exclude the rule which makes the will speak from the testator's death (p). If the question should ever arise, it may be expected that the desire to avoid a "monstrous" result will exercise a preponderating influence on its determination. It is submitted that the true principle is that laid down by Jessel, M. R., in Sidney v. Sidney (q), namely, that the first question to be considered is, what does the will mean: and by Lindley, L. J., in Re Portal and Lamb (r): "It [sect. 24] does not say that we are to construe whatever a man says in his will as if it were made on the day of his death."

Where a contrary intention is shewn by nature of specific gift.

Contrary intention indicated by nature of a specific gift.

It seems clear that if the description of the thing devised or bequeathed does not exactly cover the thing owned by the testator

(m) The terms of gift here supposed are more particular than those in Doe d. York v. Walker, 12 M. & W. 591.

(n) L. R., 11 Eq. at p. 551.

(o) Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S. 722. But if a breeder of horses should bequeath "his yearlings," and survive into the next year, the yearlings of the latter year and not those of the former (now two-year-olds) would probably be held to pass. [Note by Mr. Vincent, in the 4th edition of this work.]

(p) Re Gibson, L. R., 2 Eq. 669. The V.-C. had previously expressed the same opinion in Goodlad v. Burnett (1 K. & J. 341). See Macdonald v. Irvine, 8 Ch. D. 101.

(q) L. R., 17 Eq. at p. 68.

(r) 30 Ch. D. at p. 55. Followed by Joyce, J. in Re Evans, post, p. 414. On this principle, the decision in Denholm's Trustees v. Denholm, [1908] Sess. Ca. 43, seems difficult to justify.

CHAPTER XII. at the time of his death, the latter will not pass by the mere effect of sect. 24. The case of Sidney v. Sidney (s) is an example of this principle.

Mis-description.

But if the description was inaccurate at the date of the will, no question arises as to the operation of sect. 24. Thus in Goodlad v. Burnett (t), a testatrix bequeathed "my four Danish bonds" for four specified amounts; she had not, at the date of her will or at her death, any Danish bonds of those amounts, but she had, at the date of her will and at her death, Danish bonds which she had taken in exchange for bonds bought by her late husband at prices corresponding to the four specified amounts: it was held by Wood, V.-C., that this was a case of misdescription, and that the exchanged bonds passed by the bequest.

Where after-acquired property does not answer description in will.

A case somewhat similar to the second illustration given by Mr. Jarman is Re Portal and Lamb (u). There the testator devised to his son his cottage and land at S.; at the date of the will he had a small cottage with land held with it, and he subsequently contracted to purchase a house of considerable size with land adjoining the land held with the cottage: it was held by the Court of Appeal (overruling Kay, J.,) that the after-acquired property did not pass by the devise. In this case there were words referring to the land held with the cottage which shewed beyond all question that the testator only intended to devise that property to his son. "It is said that we are precluded by the section [24] from giving effect to this plain intention. I am always unwilling to strain this act or any other act in such a way as to defeat a man's plain intention. The object of this section was not to defeat, but to give effect to, the testator's intention" (v).

Where description of property is altered after date of will.

Conversely, in Re Evans (vv), it was held that the effect of a specific devise of property, by a clear and unambiguous description, was not cut down by an alteration in the property made after the date of the will.

Result of modern decisions.

These two decisions have, it is to be hoped, disposed of the notion that sect. 24 requires a will to be construed as if it were made on the day of the testator's death, and shew that Mr. Jarman's apprehensions as to the effect of the section were not

(s) L. R., 17 Eq. 65, stated ante, p. 411.

(t) 1 K. & J. 341. This decision was relied on by Joyce, J., in Re Slater, [1906] 2 Ch. 480; [1907] 1 Ch. 665, but in that case the exchange took place after the date of the will.

(u) 27 Ch. D. 600; 30 Ch. D. 50.

(v) Per Lindley, L. J., 30 Ch. D. at p. 55. Other passages in the judgment are cited and commented on in Re Gillins, [1909] 1 Ch. 345.

(vv) [1909] 1 Ch. 784. Compare Re Edwards, infra.

well founded, in cases where the description of the property is specific (w). CHAPTER XII.

The decision in Re Champion (x) is referred to later (y), with reference to the effect of the word "now," and also in another chapter (z), because it turned on the effect of republication by codicil.

In Re Potter (a) effect was given to sect. 24. There the testator, who owned two houses X. and Y., each with land attached, by his will devised them to different persons; after the date of his will he leased X., without the adjoining land, to a tenant for twenty-one years, and retained in his own occupation Y. and the piece of land adjoining X.: it was held by Cozens-Hardy, J., that the piece of land adjoining X. did not pass by the devise of X., but formed part of Y. The case seems near the line, for the description was specific rather than general.

Examples of operation of sect. 24.

So in Re Butlin's Estate (b), there was a specific devise of land which at the date of the will was subject to a charge for 950*l.*; after the date of the will the testator acquired this charge under such circumstances as to shew that he intended it to merge: it was held that the devise passed the land free from the charge.

In Re Slater (c), sect. 24 of the Wills Act was treated as forming the basis of the doctrine of ademption. In that case the testator bequeathed the interest arising from "money invested in the Lambeth Waterworks Company"; after the date of the will the testator's Lambeth Waterworks Company stock was converted into stock of the Metropolitan Water Board: it was held that the bequest did not operate on the new stock, and sect. 24 was treated by Joyce, J., and the Court of Appeal as governing the case. But would not the result have been the same if sect. 24 had never been enacted (d)? The case did not fall within Oakes v. Oakes or Morrice v. Aylmer (e).

Operation of sect. 24 on doctrine of ademption.

The decision in Re Portal and Lamb also seems to answer another difficulty felt by Mr. Jarman as to the effect of sect. 24. "It may even happen," he thought (f), "that by a strict application to specific gifts, of the principle which makes the will speak from the death, Effect, where there is more than one subject of gift at the death of testator.

(w) Cave v. Harris, 57 L. J. Ch. 62.

(x) [1893] 1 Ch. 101.

(y) Post, p. 416.

(z) Ante, p. 202.

(a) 83 L. T. 405. If the testator had described the property with reference to its condition or occupancy at the date of the will, the result would have been different; see Re Edwards, 63 L. T. 481, and other cases cited post, p. 416.

(b) [1907] 1 Ir. R. 159.

(c) [1906] 2 Ch. 480; [1907] 1 Ch. 665.

(d) See Roper, Leg. 329, where the true principle is stated.

(e) See Chap. XXX.

(f) First edition, p. 290.

CHAPTER XII.

a gift of this nature might be invalidated for uncertainty. For instance, if a testator, having a house in the Strand, devises it by the description of his house in the Strand, and afterwards acquires another in the same place, and holds both houses at the time of his decease, it is evident that the statutory provision would, in such a case, by bringing both the houses within the terms of the description, render the devise void for uncertainty; unless it could be ascertained by extrinsic evidence which of them was intended (g). To avoid such a consequence, probably it would be held that the fact of the testator's ownership of one house only at the date of the will was a sufficient indication of his meaning that house; and yet this is, pro tanto, a departure from the principle of the enactment under consideration; for had the devise been in terms of the house in the Strand which should belong to the testator at his decease, there would have been no ground for distinguishing between the house that belonged to him when he made his will, and that which he subsequently acquired: so that, if the extrinsic evidence failed to shew which of the two houses was intended (if, indeed, evidence is admissible in such a case (g), the plurality would be fatal to the devise."

Whether
sect. 24
makes words of present time point to testator's
death.

"Another question," Mr. Jarman remarks (h), "will be whether the enactment which makes the will speak from the death will have the effect of carrying forward to that period words pointing at present time. For instance, supposing a testator to bequeath 'all that messuage in which I now reside,' and that subsequently to the making of his will he changes his residence to another house belonging to him, which he continues to occupy until his death; does the act make the word 'now' apply to the house occupied by the testator at his death? It is conceived that the principle will not be carried such a length, and that this would be considered as a case in which 'a contrary intention appears by the will.'"

Effect was given to the word "now" in Re Edwards (i), where a testator bequeathed to A. "my leasehold house and premises . . . where I now reside." After the date of the will part of the building was cut off from the rest and let to a tenant: but it was held that the whole passed under the bequest. This case was the converse of those which usually arise under sect. 24.

On the other hand, in Re Champion (j), where a testator devised land which he described as being "now in my own occupation,"

(g) See Chap. XV.

(h) First edition, p. 291.

(i) 63 L. T. 481.

(j) [1893] 1 Ch. 101.

North, J., held that the words were not a vital part of the description, and that the devise passed some land purchased and occupied by the testator after the date of the will; but the Court of Appeal, without expressly dissenting from this view, decided the case on the ground that the testator had republished his will by a codicil made after the purchase of the additional land.

Even where the words describing the subject of gift are general, yet if they expressly point to the present time, and are manifestly used with reference to the period when the will is made (k), the operation of the act is excluded. Thus, in Cole v. Scott (l), where by will, dated the 29th of April, 1843, the testator, after devising, “the house in which I now reside,” and also making another devise of the “residue and remainder of my messuages, &c., whereof I am now seised or possessed,” also devised and bequeathed “all such manors, &c., as well freehold as copyhold and leasehold, as are now vested in me, or as to the said leasehold premises shall be vested in me at the time of my death, as trustee or mortgagee,” the question was whether after-purchased property passed under the residuary devise; and it was held by Shadwell, V.-C., and, on appeal, by Lord Cottenham, C., that the after-purchased property did not pass. Both judges, especially the former, relied on the contrasted use of words importing a distinction between the estates then vested in the testator and those he might thereafter acquire, and concluded that the word “now” must be referred to the date of the will. If the will had been undated, the L. C. thought (for reasons not expressed) that “now” must under the act be referred to the time of the death.

But whether the will is dated or not, Cole v. Scott is not an authority for giving to the word “now” the effect of excluding after-acquired property in every case in which the testator gives that of which he is “now seised” or “now possessed.” Thus in Wagstaff v. Wagstaff (m), a gift of “all my ready money, shares, freehold property, plate, pictures and any other property that I may now possess, except the house at P.,” was held by Romilly, M.R., to include all the personal property of the testator at his death. He appears to have thought there was no difference between the words “I possess” and “I now possess.” As a matter of grammar, both, it is true, express the present time; but upon the (k) See Sugd. R. P. S. p. 372.

(l) 16 Sim. 259, 1 M. & Gord. 518. See also Douglas v. Douglas, Kay, 400. Cole v. Scott was disapproved by Malins, V.-C., in Castle v. Fox (supra, p. 409), but treated by the Court of Appeal as a binding authority in Re Ord, 12 Ch. D. 22.

(m) L. R., 8 Eq. 229.

CHAPTER XII. question of indicating a contrary intention within the act, the introduction of the word "now" seems to go much further towards indicating an intention to give only what the testator has at the time (n). Something more than this single word, however, will generally be wanted for that purpose: some more pointed distinction must be drawn (at least in the case of a general gift) between what belongs to the testator at one time and what belongs to him at the other. And "now" has never been so construed since the act as to produce intestacy (o).

Again, in Re Midland Railway Company (p), where a testator gave "all that my messuage situate in Bordgate in Otley, wherein my son D. now resides, with the stables and appurtenances thereto belonging and therewith occupied," and afterwards bought a piece of land adjoining the house, which he attached to it as a garden; it was held by Romilly, M.R., that the garden passed with the house. In his opinion it was as if the testator had said, "I give my farm Whiteacre, now in the occupation of J. S.": but he added that if the devise had been of "the messuage as it now stands, and the lands now held therewith by D.," it would not have included the after-acquired garden.

Is reference to occupation an essential part of description?

In the case first put by the M.R., the reference to occupation is not an essential part of the description (q): in the second it is; the subject of gift cannot be identified without it, and the word "now" would confine the gift to land so occupied at the date of the will (r).

Verbs in present tense.

But it is clear that words which merely import but do not emphatically refer to time present, as a general devise or bequest of property, or of property of a particular genus, of which I "am seised" or "am possessed," will generally include all or all of that genus to which the testator is entitled at the time of his death, though acquired after the date of the will (s). And the effect of the statute ought not to be frittered away by catching at doubtful expressions for the purpose of taking a case out of its operation (t). Thus in Lilford v. Powys Keck (u), where a testator devised all the freeholds (n) See per Turner, L.J., 8 D. M. & G. 437.

(o) See especially Hepburn v. Skirving, 4 Jur. N. S. 651, a strong decision, especially as to the bank shares.

(p) 34 Beav. 525. That a devise of a house will generally carry the garden, see post, Chap. XXXV.

(q) See Chamberlain v. Turner, Cro. Car. 129.

(r) Hutchinson v. Barrow, 6 H. & N. 583; Williams v. Owen, 2 N. R. 585; Re Edwards, 63 L. T. 481.

(s) Doe d. York v. Walker, 12 M. & Wel. 591; Lady Langdale v. Briggs, 3 Sm. & Gif. 246, 8 D. M. & G. 391.

(t) Per Cotton, L.J., Everett v. Everett, 7 Ch. D. 428.

(u) 30 Beav. 300.

“of which I am seised,” and then devised to corresponding uses all the copyhold and leasehold property “of which I am or at the time of my death shall be possessed”; it was held by Romilly, M.R., that after-purchased freeholds passed by the former devise. So in Re Ord (v), where a testator, possessed of leaseholds at C., part of which was charged with a mortgage and the rest with an annuity, devised all his leasehold lands at C., charged with the mortgage debts charged thereon, “and also with the annuity now charged thereon,” to his son; and afterwards bought other leasehold lands at C.; it was argued that the devise was confined to such leaseholds as were charged with the mortgage and annuity, a construction which of course excluded the after-bought lands; but it was held by the Court of Appeal, affirming the decision of Hall, V.-C., that the reference to the charges (which was not quite accurate) was insufficient to deprive the words of gift of their proper interpretation under the act.

“In order to avoid all such questions,” as Mr. Jarman remarks (vv), “a testator should introduce into his description of property specifically disposed of, expressions incapable of being applied, or not likely to apply, to any other. He should give the ‘house No. 23 in Grosvenor Square,’ or ‘his farm in the parish of A. called B., now in the occupation of C.’ (all which particulars could hardly coincide in two instances), or all his lands in the county of C. to which he is entitled at the date of his will. The latter restriction seems in general the best, as it precludes the possibility of after-acquired property being let in.”

Practical suggestion.

It has hitherto been assumed, and the assumption pervades all the cases, that the words of the act: “every will shall be construed, with reference to the real and personal estate comprised therein, to speak and take effect as if,” &c., are not to be taken in their literal sense as meaning “real and personal estate then actually comprised therein,” (i.e., devised thereby). It is plain that this sense was not intended, for the context shews that the enactment has reference to property not then actually comprised in the will (w). The true meaning appears to be “with reference to

Is sect. 24 applicable to property excepted from devise?

(v) 12 Ch. D. 22.

(vv) First ed. p. 291.

(w) See per Turner, L.J., 8 D. M. & G. 436 (where the word “is” is misplaced, see 26 L. J. Ch. 49). The words of the act appear to have been hastily adopted from the “propositions” of the 4th R. P. Report, p. 80. They require to be read with the report, which says (p. 24): “We propose that a will shall pass property of any description comprised in its terms which a testator may be entitled to at the time of his death, unless a contrary intention shall the question what estates are comprised in any disposition in the will." If this is so, it disposes of a point raised and left unsettled in Hughes v. Jones (x), namely, whether the enactment is applicable to exceptions from a devise? To hold that it is, would (it was argued) be to make the will speak from the death with reference to property excluded from it, whereas the act makes it so speak only with reference to property comprised in it. This argument proceeds upon a mistake. The whole question is, what is comprised in the terms? This cannot be answered without taking into consideration and construing all the terms of the description, as well those which exclude as those which include. And if a man devises all his real estate except his copyholds or except his estates in the county of B., or bequeaths all his stock except consols, good sense requires that both parts of the description, being equally general or generic, should be construed to speak as from the same time. If the exception, or exclusive portion, refers to an actually existing state of things, it must, of course, be construed to speak as from the date of the will, just as inclusive terms having a similar bearing must be construed. If the will goes on to make a distinct disposition of the excepted property, with the result that what is excluded from one devise is included in the other, the question (if question it is) can hardly be said to arise (y).

CHAPTER XII.

Powers of appointment.

The effect of sect. 24 on appointments under powers is considered in another chapter (z).

Sect. 24 does not supply testamentary capacity.

III.—As to Testamentary Capacity, &c.—The 24th section of the Wills Act does not in any manner affect the question of testamentary capacity. Thus although the will of a woman, under coverture at the time of making it, may operate by force of sect. 24 to dispose of separate property afterwards acquired by her (a), or as the execution of a general power afterwards conferred upon her (b), the will of a married woman, dying before 5th December 1893, appear by the will. If this recommendation be adopted the law respecting the time from which a devise of freehold or copyhold estate is to be considered to take effect will be precisely similar to that which is at present in force as to personal estate." And this recommendation is referred to as follows (p. 29):—"If as we have proposed wills be made to speak with reference to the property comprised in them as at the time of the testator's death," &c.

(x) 1 H. & M. 765.

(y) See Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. 521, 522; Re Scarth, 10 Ch. D. 499, better reported 40 L. T. 184. (The above paragraph, as to property excepted from a devise, with the notes, is taken verbatim from the 4th ed. of this work, by Mr. Vincent.)

(z) Chap. XXIII.

(a) Willock v. Noble, L. R., 7 H. L., p. 599.

(b) Thomas v. Jones, 2 J. & H. 475, 1 D. J. & S. 63.

acquires no validity under this section by the mere fact of her having survived her husband and being discoverd at the time of her death (c). The statute does not make an instrument valid which through the personal disability of the testator was invalid in its inception. Hence if a married woman, dying before 5th December 1893, made a will during coverture and survived her husband, the will was inoperative to dispose of property acquired by her after her husband's death, unless she re-executed or republished it (c). And the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, did not alter the law in this respect (d). But as regards women dying after 5th December 1893, the law has been altered by the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, which dispenses with the necessity of re-execution or republication in the cases above referred to (e).

If, after the execution of a will, a statute is passed which produces an alteration in the effect of the will, and the testator leaves the will unaltered, the question arises whether he intends that it shall take effect according to the altered law. It is clear that if the alteration of the law is one which merely affects the administration of the testator's estate (as in the case of the Apportionment Act, 1870), it applies to the estate of a testator whose will was made before the law was altered (f). But a statute does not, as a general rule, alter the construction of words contained in a will made before the act was passed: thus a bequest to A. of the dividends on a specific sum of stock, contained in a will made before 1870, gives the accrued and accruing dividends to A. (g).

But in Re Bridger (i), a testator, by will made in June 1891, gave "such part of my residuary trust estate which may by law be given to charitable purposes unto the Brompton Hospital" and as to the remainder to A. The Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891, was passed on the 5th August 1891, and the testator died in 1892: it was held that the act applied, and that the hospital was entitled to the whole of the residue. The Court considered that sect. 24 of the Wills Act took effect, and that the principle laid down in Jones v. Ogle and Re March does not apply to a general

Where there is a change in the law between will and death.

Does not affect construction.

Distinction where testamentary capacity is increased.

(c) Willock v. Noble, supra; In bonis Wollaston, 32 L. J. Prob. 171.

(d) Re Price, 28 Ch. D. 709.

(e) See above, p. 58.

(f) Lawrence v. Lawrence, 26 Ch. D. 795. See Hasluck v. Pedley, L. R., 19 Eq. 271, and Constable v. Constable, 11 Ch. D. 681; in each of those cases the testator made a codicil after the act came into operation.

(g) Jones v. Ogle, L. R., 8 Ch. 192. The same principle was acted on in Re March, 27 Ch. D. 166, although it appears from subsequent decisions that the statute in question in that case has not, in fact, altered the law. See Re Supp, 39 Ch. D. 148, cited post, Chap. XLI.

(i) [1894] 1 Ch. 297; Re Hume, [1895] 1 Ch. 422.

CHAPTER XII. devise or bequest where the testator's testamentary power is increased between the date of his will and that of his death.

Change in death duties.

In Re Rayer (j), a testator, by his will made in 1882, bequeathed certain annuities charged on land, and directed that they should be paid without any deduction except for legacy duty and income tax. By the Customs, &c., Act, 1888, legacy duty was abolished in respect of annuities charged on the real estate of any person dying after 1st July 1888, and succession duty was substituted. The testator afterwards made a codicil by which he confirmed his will, and died in 1892. It was held by Farwell, J., that the testator by republishing his will intended it to take effect subject to the alteration in the law, and that the annuitants were liable to succession duty.

(j) [1903] 1 Ch. 685.

CHAPTER XIII.

DOCTRINE OF LAPSE.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. General Principles	423	IV. Gifts by way of Charge or Condition	439
II. Gift to a Class	431	V. Charges on Personal Property	445
III. Derives of Legal (or Beneficial) Ownership only	438	VI. Provisions of Wills Act...	445
		VII. Effect of Lapse	451

I.—General Principles.—"The liability of a testamentary gift to failure, by reason of the decease of its object in the testator's lifetime, is," says Mr. Jarman (a), "a necessary consequence of the ambulatory nature of wills; which not taking effect until the death of the testator, can communicate no benefit to persons who previously die: in like manner as a deed cannot operate in favour of those who are dead at the time of its execution."

General principle respecting lapse.

There is, indeed, an anomalous class of cases constituting an exception to the general rule of lapse: they are said to depend on the mixed principle of bounty and obligation (b), namely, that where the intention of a testator in giving a legacy is not merely bounty to the legatee, but the discharge of an obligation recognized by the testator, although not legally enforceable, the legacy does not lapse by the death of the legatee in the testator's lifetime. Thus, if the testator makes a bequest for the payment of a debt

No lapse where gift is made in discharge of moral obligation.

(a) First ed. p. 293. The term "lapse" is generally applied to failure by the death of the devisee or legatee in the testator's lifetime, but it is sometimes used in a wider sense, as for instance in the case of the failure of a contingent gift by reason of the event not taking place: Smell v. Dee, 2 Salk. 415; Re Parker, [1901] 1 Ch. 408. So where there was a gift of consumable articles to A. for life, or so long as she should remain unmarried (equivalent to an absolute gift), it was held that the marriage of A. in the testator's lifetime caused a result similar to that of her death in his lifetime: Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. 690. "Lapse" is not used to signify the failure of a testamentary gift by reason of its illegality: see Champney v. Davy, 11 Ch. D. 949. But it is sometimes used by testators in the sense of being revoked: thus in Re Wand, [1907] 1 Ch. 391, the testator directed that if a certain event happened in his lifetime the share given to a legatee should lapse and form part of the residue.

(b) Philips v. Philips, 3 Ha. at p. 300.

CHAPTER XIII.

which is barred by the Statute of Limitations (c), or by the bankruptcy law (d), the bequest takes effect, notwithstanding the death of the creditor in the testator's lifetime. So if a married woman makes a bequest or appointment for the purpose of discharging a moral obligation, there is no lapse by the death of the legatee in her lifetime (e). It is different where the debt has been released (f).

Provisions of Wills Act.

The exceptions to the doctrine of lapse introduced by the Wills Act are considered in a later part of this chapter.

Effect of lapse.

The effect of lapse, beyond the mere failure of the gift itself, is considered in connection with residuary devises and bequests (g).

Lapse not prevented by words of limitation :
—real estate

Mr. Jarman continues (h) : "The doctrine applies indiscriminately to gifts with and gifts without words of limitation. Thus, if a devise be made to A. and his heirs, or (unless the will be regulated by the new law) to A. and the heirs of his body, and A. die in the lifetime of the testator, the devise absolutely lapses, and the heir, special or general (as the case may be), of A. takes no interest in the property, he being included merely in the words of limitation, i.e., in the terms which are used to denote the quantity or duration of the estate to be taken by the devisee, through whom alone any interest can flow to such heir (i).

—personalty.

"Bequests of personal property, of course, are subject to the same rule (j) ; and it is observable that, in applying it to such bequests, a legacy to one and his executors or administrators is construed as a mere absolute gift (k) ; for the circumstance that,

(c) Williamson v. Naylor, 3 Y. & C. 208. Compare the rule that an executor may pay or retain a statute-barred debt, referred to in Chaps. LIII. and LIV.

(d) Philips v. Philips, 3 Ha. 281 ; Re Sowerby's Trust, 2 K. & J. 630. The bequest is liable to legacy duty : Turner v. Martin, 7 D. M. & G. 429.

(e) Stevens v. King, [1904] 2 Ch. 30.

(f) Coppin v. Coppin, 2 P. W. 295.

As to the effect of a bequest to a creditor of a statute-barred debt, see Chap. XXX. As to the effect of a covenant not to sue, see Golds v. Greenfield, 2 Sm. & G. 476.

(g) Post, Chaps. XXV. and XXIX.

(h) First ed. p. 293.

(i) Brett v. Rigden, Flow. 345 ; Fuller v. Fuller, Cro. El. 422 ; Wynn v. Wynn, 3 Br. P. C. Toml. 95 ; Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 722 ; see also Goodright v. Wright, 1 P. W. 397 ; Ambrose v. Hodgson, 3 Br. P. C. Toml. 416. The reader will remember that at the time when Mr. Jarman wrote, most wills were regulated by the old law, under which words of limitation (or equivalent expressions) were required to pass an estate of inheritance in real property.

(j) A gift of a sum of money for purchase of an annuity may be the subject of lapse, Re Draper's Trust, 58 L. T. 942.

*(k) Stone v. Evans, 2 Atk. 86 ; Elliot v. Davenport, 1 P. W. 83, 2 Vern. 521, "where the legacy was of a debt, which," as Mr. Jarman remarks, "is liable to lapse equally with gifts in any other form (Tophis v. Baker, 2 Cox, 118). It is true that in Sibthorpe v. Moxton (or Moxom), 1 Ves. 49, 3 Atk. 580, Lord Hardwicke held that the forgiving of a debt, coupled with a general direction to the executor to deliver up the security (without saying to whom), operated as a release, though the legatee died in the testator's lifetime ; his lordship thinking that the latter words imported that the security should be delivered up, whether the debtor were living or not, and which he considered would, beyond all question, be the effect of the words of direction standing alone ; though he admitted death of debtor upon clause forgiving

*Effect of
debts.

in regard to personalty, words of limitation are not requisite to carry the absolute interest, has been considered as insufficient to denote an intention to make the executors or administrators substituted and independent objects of gift. And where the devisee or legatee happens to be dead when the will is made, the words of limitation are equally inoperative to let in the representatives of the deceased person (l).

“And even a declaration that the devise or bequest shall not lapse, does not per se prevent it from failing by the death of the object in the testator’s lifetime, since negative words do not amount to a gift; and the only mode of excluding the title of whomsoever the law, in the absence of disposition, constitutes the successor to the property, is to give it to some one else (m). A declaration to this effect, however, following a bequest to a person and his executors or administrators, would be considered as indicating an intention to substitute the executors or administrators, in the event of the gift to the original legatee failing by lapse (n).”

Effect of declaration that legacy shall not lapse.

Where the bequest is to A., and, “in case of his death, to his executors or administrators,” or “to his legal personal representatives,” there can, of course, be no doubt that the gift does not fail (o); the

Cases of substitution.

that, in regard to the administration of assets, it was to be considered as a legacy. In Maitland v. Adair, 3 Ves. 231, the words were, ‘I return A. his bond.’ A. died in the testator’s lifetime, and it was held that the legacy lapsed. This case is overlooked by Mr. Roper (Treat. Leg. 411), who lays more stress on the merely verbal distinction between the giving and forgiving of a debt than seems warranted by the principles of the cases” (note in 1st ed. p. 294). In Izon v. Butler, 2 Price, 34, the words were, “I remit and forgive, &c., and I direct the bond to be delivered up,” and it was held that the legacy lapsed by the death of the debtor in the testator’s lifetime. Thomson, C.B., said he had always been at a loss to understand the distinction between giving and forgiving. In South v. Williams, 12 Sim. 566, where the testator directed a balance of debts due from A., and property bequeathed to A.’s wife to be struck, and the surplus to be paid to or secured by the legatee, Sir L. Shadwell thought A. was released from the debts, though his wife died in the lifetime of the testator; compare Davis v. Elmes, 1 Beav. 131.

(l) Maybank v. Brooks, 1 Br. C. C. 84, (where the question arose whether evidence of the testator’s knowledge of the death of the legatee was admissible, post, Chap. XV.); and a confirmation of a will by codicil will not prevent lapse where the legatee has died between the dates of the will and codicil, although the legacy was given to the legatee, her executors, &c., Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Br. C. C. 127.

(m) Post, Chap. XXI. So a direction that the heir at law shall not take the proceeds of sale of land in case of lapse, is ineffectual: Fitch v. Weber, 6 Ha. 145; post, Chap. XXII.

(n) Sibley v. Cook, 3 Atk. 572. In Re Wilder’s Trusts, 27 Bea. 418, there were express words of substitution. But a declaration that a legacy shall vest in the legatee immediately upon execution of the will, following a gift to one, his executors, administrators and assigns, will not prevent lapse, Browne v. Hope, L. R., 14 Eq. 343.

(o) Long v. Wilkinson, 17 Beav. 471; Hinchliffe v. Westwood, 2 De G. & S. 216; Hewitson v. Todhunter, 22 L. J. Ch. 76, Re Seymour’s Trusts, John. 472; Re Clay, 54 L. J. Ch. 648, cited post, Chap. XLI. See Maxwell v. Maxwell, Ir. R., 2 Eq. 478, where the question arose whether substitution took place in the case of a person who was dead at the date of the will; infra.

CHAPTER XIII. only question then is, who are the persons to take beneficially, a point which will be treated of hereafter. But where there was a direction to pay legacies within six months, and a gift to the children of the legatee, in case of the legatee's death "not having received his legacy," it was held, nevertheless, that the legacy lapsed by his death in the testator's lifetime (p). And if property is given to A. for life and then to B., or in the event of his death to his executors or administrators, this is taken to mean death during A.'s life interest, so that if B. predeceases the testator the gift lapses (q).

In Re Valdez's Trusts (r), a share of residue was given to A., and in case of her death, to her executors or administrators; A. died in the testator's lifetime, having bequeathed the residue of her property to the testator himself; it was held that the interest given by the testator's will to the legatee, and in case of her death to her representatives, was not disposed of by his will.

In Maxwell v. Maxwell (s) a testator made a bequest to "my younger sons or their executors"; at the date of the will A., one of his younger sons, was dead: it was held that A.'s share did not lapse, but went to his administratrix. This construction, however, turned on the fact that the testator had many years before by deed appointed a fund in favour of his younger sons, including A., who was then living, and that by his will he directed the fund to be paid "to my younger sons or their executors," "according to my appointment."

If property is bequeathed to A. for life and after his death to B. or his executors, administrators, or assigns, this merely means that the gift is to vest in B. at the testator's death, so that if B. predeceases the testator the bequest lapses (t).

The question whether a gift to "A. or his heirs," or to "A. or his issue," or the like, is a substitutional gift, or whether the word "or" should be construed "and," is discussed in another chapter (u).

Beneficial gift by way of substitution.

If the gift is to A. for life and then to B. or in case of his death to his children, or next of kin, or the like, then the gift to the children, &c., takes effect, although B. dies in the lifetime of the testator (v).

(p) Smith v. Oliver, 11 Beav. 494 (as to this case see Re Green's Estate, 1 Dr. & Sm. 73); Tidwell v. Ariel, 3 Madd. 403; Re Porter's Trust, 4 K. & J., 195.

(q) Corbyn v. French, 4 Ves. 418; Bone v. Cook, M'Cl. 168; see Chaps. XXXVI. and LVII.

(r) 40 Ch. D. 159.

(s) Ir. R., 2 Eq. 478.

(t) Leach v. Leach, 35 Bea. 185; Re Hopkins' Trusts, 2 H. & M. 411; Re Masterson, [1902] Week. N. 192 ("heirs or assigns").

(u) Chap. XXXVI.

(v) Re Porter's Trust, 4 K. & J. 188, discussed more in detail in Chap. XXXVI.

When a share of residue is settled upon a person for life with remainder to other persons, and the original legatee dies in the lifetime of the testator, the question often arises whether the bequest lapses, or whether it takes effect for the benefit of the remaindermen. In Stewart v. Jones (w), the testator gave his residuary estate upon trust for such of his children as should attain twenty-one or being daughters should attain that age or marry, and went on to direct that "the share to which each of my daughters on attaining twenty-one or marrying shall become entitled under the trusts aforesaid" should be held upon trust for her for life with remainder to her children; it was held that the children of a daughter who predeceased the testator took nothing.

This decision was disapproved by Malins, V.-C., in Re Speakman (x), but its principle was carried even further by the Court of Appeal in Re Roberts (y). There the testator bequeathed his residuary estate upon trust for a nephew and three nieces by name in equal shares, with a clause of accruer to take effect on the death of any of them under twenty-one, and a proviso that the share of each niece should be held upon trust for her for life, and after her death upon such trusts as she should appoint, and in default of appointment upon trust for her children, and failing children for her statutory next of kin. One of the nieces predeceased the testator, leaving a child who survived him. It was held that her share lapsed. But in Re Pinhorne (z), the testator gave his residuary estate upon trust for his four sisters by name in equal shares, subject to a proviso that the share of each should be held upon trust for her for life, with power to appoint a life interest to a husband, and after her death for her children at twenty-one or marriage. One of the sisters predeceased the testator, leaving infant children, and it was held by Chitty, J., that her share had not lapsed, and that the children were entitled to it contingently on attaining twenty-one or marrying. Chitty, J., pointed out that in Stewart v. Jones, the gift being to a class, there was no question of lapse (a), and that no one could take a share as a member of the class unless he or she survived the testator, while in Re Roberts the clause of accruer made it impossible to say that any niece took a fixed share of the residue. In Re Powell (b), Cozens-Hardy, J., followed Re Pinhorne.

(w) 3 De G. & J. 532. See Wordsworth v. Wood, 4 My. & C. 641. The cases of Rheeder v. Ower, 3 Br. C. C. 240, and Varley v. Winn, 2 K & J. 700, are stated in Chap. LVII.

(x) 4 Ch. D. 620.

(y) 27 Ch. D. 346, 30 Ch. D. 234.

(z) [1894] 2 Ch. 276.

(a) Section ii., infra.

(b) [1900] 2 Ch. 525. Both these decisions were referred to in the Court of Appeal in Re Whitmore, [1902] 2 Ch. 66, without disapproval: the last case is cited in Chap. LVII.

CHAPTER XIII.

Contingent gifts.

If a legacy is given to A. with a gift over to B., on the death of A. in certain circumstances, and A. dies in those circumstances during the testator's lifetime, the legacy does not lapse : as where the legacy is to go over to B., on the death of A. under twenty-one, and A. dies under that age during the testator's lifetime (c). Nor does the fact that the legatee is a married woman, and that the gift over is to her next-of-kin, exclusive of her husband, afford any presumption that it was only intended to take effect in the event of her surviving the testator (d). But if it becomes impossible for the gift over to take effect, and then A. dies during the lifetime of the testator, the legacy lapses : as where a legacy is given to A. and if he dies before completing his apprenticeship, then to B., and A. dies during the lifetime of the testator after completing his apprenticeship, the legacy lapses (e).

Acceleration by lapse of prior limitations.

Culsha v. Cheese.

The effect of lapse in accelerating subsequent limitations is considered elsewhere (f).

In Culsha v. Cheese (g), A. devised Blackacre to uses and upon trusts under which B. had a certain share and interest, and C., D., and E. took the residue. B. by will devised Whiteacre "to and upon the uses, trusts, &c., in and by A.'s will expressed, declared, and contained of and concerning the same." C., D., and E. all died in the lifetime of B. : it was held by Wigram, V.-C., on the authority of Youde v. Jones (h), that as the will of A. declared no uses of Whiteacre, the devise contained in B.'s will failed ; this being the real ground of the decision, the Vice-Chancellor remarked : "It was therefore gratuitously, though not extrajudicially, that in the course of the argument I said that the wife's will must speak from her own death, and that no person who did not survive her could take under her will, even if the trusts of her will could be found in that of her husband." The case is, however, commonly cited as an authority on the question of lapse.

Lapse of power.

A power created by will lapses by the death of the donee before the donor (i).

The question whether, if a power of appointment among a

(c) Darrel v. Molesworth, 2 Vern. 378 ; Willing v. Baine, 3 P. W. 115 ; Humphreys v. Howes, 1 R. & M. 639 ; Re Green's Estate, 1 Dr. & Sm. 68 ; Rackham v. De la Mare, 2 D. J. & S. 74, and other cases cited in Chap. LVII.

(d) Hardwick v. Thurston, 4 Russ. 380 ; Nichols v. Haviland, 1 K. & J., 504, and other cases cited in Chap.

LVII.

(e) Humberstone v. Stanton, 1 V. & B. 385 ; Doo v. Brabant, 3 Br. C. C. 393 ; 4 T. R. 706 ; Williams v. Jones, 1 Russ. 517.

(f) Post, p. 452.

(g) 7 Ha. 236.

(h) 14 Sim. 131.

(i) Jones v. Southall, 32 Bea. 31.

number of named persons is created by will, and one of them predeceases the testator, the power is defeated pro tanto, is discussed elsewhere (j).

A gift over in default of appointment does not lapse by the death of the donee of the power in the testator's lifetime (k).

Gift over in default of appointment.
Lapse of appointment.

The doctrine of lapse applies to testamentary appointments under powers, and consequently if the appointee is not living at the decease of the donee of the power, the appointment will not take effect (l). And if no appointment is made, and there is no gift over in default of appointment, only the objects who survive the donee will be capable of taking by implication (m). A testamentary appointment in pursuance of a covenant to settle contained in marriage articles is not exempt from the operation of the doctrine (n). Where the fund is insufficient for all the particular gifts, and one of them lapses, the lapsed gift goes to augment the gifts to the other appointees and to prevent abatement (o).

Where there is a devise or bequest to a plurality of persons who take as joint tenants (p) no lapse can occur unless all the objects die in the testator's lifetime; because as joint tenants take per my et per tout, or, as it has been expressed, "each is a taker of the whole but not wholly and solely" (q), any one of them existing when the will takes effect will be entitled to the entire property. Thus, if real estate be devised to A. and B., or personal property be bequeathed to A. and B., and A. die in the testator's lifetime, B., in the event of his surviving the testator, will take the whole (r). And the same consequence would ensue if the gift failed from any other cause (s).

Lapse prevented by survivorship among joint tenants.

(j) Chap. XLIV., in connection with the case of Reade v. Reade, 5 Ves. 744.

(k) Nichols v. Haviland, 1 K. & J. 504, following Edwards v. Saloway, 2 Ph. 625. See Hardwick v. Thurston, 4 Russ. 380; Kellett v. Kellett, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 298.

(l) Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 J. & W. 431; Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469; Freeland v. Pearson, L. R., 3 Eq. 658. It is hardly necessary to say that a power to appoint to A. does not authorise an appointment to his executors, &c., in the event of his predeceasing the donee: Re Susanni's Trusts, 47 L. J. Ch. 65.

(m) Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 R. & My. 78; see post, Chap. XIX.

(n) Re Brookman's Trust, L. R., 5 Ch. 182; see Jervis v. Wolferstan, L. R., 18 Eq. 18.

(o) Eales v. Drake, 1 Ch. D. 217. The doctrine of lapse in connection with powers is referred to also in Chap. XXIII.

(p) As to the words which will create a joint tenancy, see Chap. XLIV.

(q) Cart. 4; Litt. s. 288.

(r) Davies v. Kemp, Cart. 4, 5, Eq. Ca. Ab. 216, pl. 7; Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 220; Morley v. Bird, 3 Ves. 629.

(s) Humphrey v. Tayleur, Amb. 136; Larkins v. Larkins, 3 B. & P. 16; Short d. Gastrell v. Smith, 4 East, 419; Cresswell v. Cheslyn, 2 Ed. 123; Ramsay v. Shelmardine, L. R., 1 Eq. 129; all cases of revocation: and Young v. Davies, 2 Dr. & Sm. 167, where one joint-tenant was an attesting witness. But in Re Kerr's Trust, 4 Ch. D. 600, on an appointment to A., an object of the power, and B. a stranger, Jessel, M.R., refused to apply "the rule of tenure applicable to real estate," and held that A. took one-half only.

CHAPTER XIII.

Not in the case of tenants in common.

Gift to persons as tenants in common, with benefit of survivorship—or as a class.

Implied condition of surviving testator.

Evidence of death.

It is equally clear that if the devisees or legatees in any of these cases had been made tenants in common, the failure of the gift as to one object would not have entitled the other to the whole by the mere effect of survivorship (t).

But property may be given to several persons as tenants in common with benefit of survivorship, and then if the gift to one of them is revoked or otherwise fails, the whole goes to the others (u). Again, property can be given to a number of persons, nominatim, as tenants in common, subject to a condition that they shall be living at a given time, and if any of them are not living at that time, the others take the whole. In Sanders v. Ashford (v), the time was the testator's death: in Re Hornby (w), the time was the date of the will (x). A gift of this description is really a gift to a class (y).

In Re Featherstone's Trusts (z), the testator gave the residue of his property unto and equally amongst all the children of J. D. and R. A. (who was not a child of J. D.) and directed that the same should be vested legacies at the time of his decease. R. A. died before the testator. It was held by Kay, J., that the gift was not a gift to R. A. and the children of J. D. as a class, but that the words as to their interests being vested legacies at the time of the testator's decease, meant that the residue should be divided among such of the residuary legatees as should survive the testator, and that consequently the whole residue belonged to the children of J. D. who survived the testator.

To enable a person to take under a will it must be proved affirmatively that he survived the testator. Consequently if a testator and legatee perish by the same calamity, and there is no evidence that the legatee survived the testator, the bequest lapses (a). And if a legatee has not been heard of since the testator's death, so that it cannot be proved that he survived the testator, his representatives cannot claim the legacy (b).

(t) Page v. Page, 2 P. W. 489; Peat v. Chapman, 1 Ves. sen. 542; Sykes v. Sykes, L. R., 4 Eq. 200; Re Wood's Will, 29 Beav. 236. In the last case the testatrix, by codicil made after the death of one of the residuary legatees, confirmed her will "except as to any legacies lapsed."

(u) Re Radcliffe, 51 W. R. 409.

(v) 28 Bea. 609. Compare Re Chaplin's Trust, 33 L. J. Ch. 183, cited ante, p. 336, note, and post, p. 434.

(w) 7 W. R. 729.

(x) In Clarke v. Clemmans, 36 L. J. Ch. 171, where a testator bequeathed residue to A. and others nominatim as tenants in common, but A. was already dead (as the testator shewed he knew), Malins, V.-C., held that the others were entitled to the whole fund: sed qu. See also Re Spiller, 18 Ch. D. 614. In Re Sharp, [1908] 1 Ch. 372, Joyce, J., referred to Clarke v. Clemmans as a binding authority, but it does not seem to have any bearing on that case. See [1908] 2 Ch. 190.

(y) See Re Dunster, [1909] 1 Ch. 103, post, p. 432.

(z) 22 Ch. D. 111.

(a) Barnett v. Tugwell, 31 Bea. 232.

(b) Re Walker, L. R., 7 Ch. 120; Re Benjamin, [1902] 1 Ch. 723.

If a testator gives a legacy to a charitable institution which has ceased to exist before his death, the legacy lapses, unless the testator expresses an intention to give it to charitable purposes independently of the existence of the particular institution (c).

CHAPTER XIII.

Gifts to charity.

II.—Gifts to a Class.—Where the devise or bequest embraces a fluctuating class of persons, who, by the rules of construction, are to be ascertained at the death of the testator, or at a subsequent period, the decease of any of such persons during the testator's life will occasion no lapse or hiatus in the disposition, even though the devisees or legatees are made tenants in common, since members of the class antecedently dying are not actual objects of gift. Thus, if property be given simply to the children, or to the brothers or sisters of A., equally to be divided between them, the entire subject of gift will vest in any one child, brother or sister, or any larger number of these objects surviving the testator, without regard to previous deaths (d); and the rule is the same where the gift is to the children of a person actually dead at the date of the will, or to the present born children of a person, in either of which cases, it is to be observed, there is this peculiarity, that the class is susceptible of fluctuation only by diminution, and not by increase; the possibility of any addition by future births being in the former case precluded by the death of the parent, and in the latter by the express words (e). So if the gift is to such of the testator's children as shall be living at the death of A., and A. dies in the testator's lifetime, this is a gift to a class; consequently the share of a child who survives A. and dies in the testator's lifetime does not lapse, and the children who survive the testator take the whole (f). Again, if one who would otherwise be a member of the class is incapable of taking by reason of his being an attesting witness (g), or by reason of the gift to him being revoked (h), the whole property goes to those members who are capable of taking (i).

Doctrine in reference to gifts to classes.

If, after a gift to children as a class, the testator directs that in Mistaken use of word "lapse" by testator.

(c) Clark v. Taylor, 1 Drew. 642; Fisk v. Att.-Gen., L. R., 4 Eq. 521; Re Ovey, 29 Ch. D. 560; Re Rymer, [1895] 1 Ch. 19; Re Davis, [1902] 1 Ch. 876. Supra, p. 238.

(d) Doe d. Stewart v. Sheffield, 13 East, 526; Shuttleworth v. Greaves, 4 My. & Cr. 35; and compare Cort v. Winder, 1 Coll. 320; M'Kay v. M'Kay, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 213.

(e) Viner v. Francis, 2 Br. C. C. 658, 2 Cox, 190; Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 254; Leigh v. Leigh, 17 Beav. 605; Dimond

v. Bostock, L. R., 10 Ch. 358. This point is referred to below, p. 436.

(f) Cruse v. Howell, 4 Dr. 215. This point is further discussed infra, p. 436.

(g) Fell v. Biddolph, L. R., 10 C. P. 709; Young v. Davies, 2 Dr. & Sm. 167.

(h) Shaw v. M'Mahon, 4 D. & War. 431; Clarke v. Phillips, 17 Jur. 886; M'Kay v. M'Kay, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 213; Re Dunster, [1909] 1 Ch. 103.

(i) The rule is thus stated by Jessel, M.R., in Re Coleman and Jarrom, 4 Ch. D. 165, infra.

CHAPTER XIII. case any child dies before him leaving issue, the share of that child shall not "lapse," but go to his executors, this does not cause the share of a child who dies before the testator, without issue, to lapse (j).

Gift to persons designated by name or number ;

A gift to several named persons is not a gift to a class unless words of contingency are added ; as where the gift is to A., B., C., and D., "if living" (k). And a gift to several named persons, without more, is not a gift to a class, even if they stand in a common relationship to the testator, as where the gift is "to my sons A. and B., and my daughter C." (l). And if a testator after a gift to "children," proceeds to name them (m), or if he specifies their number, as by giving "to the five children of A." (n), this is a designatio personarum, and is a bequest to those who are named, or to the five in existence at the date of the will, and the shares of any who die before the testator lapse. So, where the bequest was to the testator's brothers and sister and his wife's brothers and sister, the testator and his wife each having one sister at the date of the will (o), and in another case even where the bequest was to E., the eldest son of J. S. and the other children of J. S., he having three other children at the date of the will, it was held that the terms "children," "brothers," &c., were to be understood to mean those living at the date of the will as personæ designatæ (p). In Ramsay v. Shelmerdine (q), where a testator directed his residue to be divided into as many shares as should be equal in number to the number of his children living at his decease, or such of them as should die in his lifetime leaving issue, and (in effect) gave one share to or in trust for each child : it was held that this was not a gift to a class. The decision appears to be erroneous : it was not followed in Re Dunster (r), where the terms of the will were practically identical with those in Ramsay v. Shelmerdine.

or in separate shares.

Where some members of class are included by name,

But the fact that some of the children are mentioned by name does not prevent the gift from being a gift to a class. Thus a gift to "all my children, including B. and W." (s), or a gift "to (j) Aspinall v. Duckworth, 35 Bea. 307. For another example of the erroneous use of the word "lapse" see Re Wand, [1907] 1 Ch. 391.

(k) Re Hornby, 7 W. R. 729 ; Sanders v. Ashford, 28 Bea. 609 ; Re Spiller, 18 Ch. D. 614.

(l) Cresswell v. Cheslyn, 2 Ed. 123.

(m) Bain v. Lescher, 11 Sim. 397 ; Burrell v. Baskerfield, 11 Bea. 525 ; Re Hull's Estate, 21 Bea. 314 ; Spencer v. Wilson, L. R., 16 Eq. 501.

(n) Re Smith's Trusts, 9 Ch. D. 117 ; Jacob v. Catling, [1881] W. N. 105.

(o) Havergal v. Harrison, 7 Bea. 49 ; and see Hall v. Robertson, 4 D. M. & G. 781 ; Re Gibson's Trusts, 2 J. & H. 656, and other cases cited post, p. 437.

(p) Leach v. Leach, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 495.

(q) L. R., 1 Eq. 129.

(r) [1909] 1 Ch. 103.

(s) Shaw v. M'Mahon, 4 Dr. & W. 431.

my son George, my daughter Lydia, &c., and such of my children hereafter to be born as shall attain twenty-one" (t), is a gift to a class (tt).

So a gift to "all my children born and to be born, except my son Thomas," is a gift to a class (u).

The question whether a gift "to A. and all the children of B." (assuming that A. is not a child of B.) is a class gift, is referred to in the judgment of Lord Davey in Kingsbury v. Walter, to be presently quoted (v).

If a testator gives property to all his children living at his decease and any children who may die in his lifetime leaving issue living at his death, this operates under the 33rd section of the Wills Act, so that the share of a child dying before the testator and leaving issue, forms part of that child's estate (w). But as the 33rd section only applies to gifts to the testator's own issue, a gift to the children of another person who die in the testator's lifetime leaving issue is nugatory; those children who survive the testator take as a class under the gift, and the issue of a deceased child take nothing by implication (x).

The question what constitutes a class has been already considered in connection with the Rule against Perpetuities (y). The question also arises in connection with the doctrine of lapse, and was much discussed in the case of Kingsbury v. Walter (z). There the testator appointed his wife and his "niece A." executrixes, and gave certain property upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death "upon trust for the said A. and the child or children of my sister B. who shall attain the age of twenty-one years" in equal shares. A. was at the date of the will nearly twenty-one: she attained twenty-one and died before the testator. At the death of the wife all B.'s children had attained twenty-one. It was held by the Court of Appeal and by the House of Lords, that the testator intended to make one class of nephews and nieces, and that consequently there was no lapse by reason of A.'s death, the other nephews and nieces taking the whole. Lord Davey in his speech referred to some of the

CHAPTER XIII.

or excepted
by name.

Gift to a class and to an individual not a member of the class.

Whether deceased child can be included in class gift.

What is a class.

(t) Re Jackson, 25 Ch. D. 162, following Re Stanhope's Trusts, 27 Bea. 201.

(tt) Shaw v. M'Mahon, 4 Dr. & W. 431.

(u) Re Jackson, supra, where the testator specified all his living children, other than Thomas, by name, and this was held equivalent to an express exception of Thomas.

(v) Post, p. 434.

(w) See 2 Key & Elph. Conv. (9th ed.) 828, note.

(x) Re Coleman and Jarrom, 4 Ch. D. 165. But by apt words issue (if any) may of course be substituted to take the share of a deceased parent without destroying the nature of the class-gift. See an instance, Aspinall v. Duckworth, 35 Beav. 307.

(y) Ante, p. 327 seq.

(z) [1901] A. C. 187. S. c. sub nom. Re Moss, [1899] 2 Ch. 314.

CHAPTER XIII.

Lord Davey's
description of a class gift.

Composite
class.

Gift to A. and the children of B. not a class gift,

unless shewn to be so by context or circumstances.

earlier decisions (a), and said: "Primâ facie a class gift is a gift to a class consisting of persons who are included and comprehended under some general description, and bear a certain relation to the testator (b). . . . But it may be none the less a class because some of the individuals of the class are named. . . . Stanhope's Case (c) is an example: there the gift was to four named daughters and all his after-born daughters, and that was rightly, as I think, held to be a class gift. To the same effect is a case before Chitty, J., In re Jackson (d), where the gift was to five named individuals and all his other sons and daughters who should be born afterwards and attain the age of twenty-one years. Chitty, J., held that that was a class gift, although the condition of attaining the age of twenty-one years was imposed upon the other children and not upon those who were named. He came to this conclusion upon the ground that it appeared from the evidence that those who were named had already attained the age of twenty-one years. . . . There may also be a composite class, such as, for instance, children of A. and children of B.: that would be a good class (e). On the other hand, a gift to A. and all the children of B. is, in my opinion, primâ facie not a class gift, and I think that has been so decided, and rightly decided, in the case of In re Chaplin's Trusts (ee), which I have already referred to, and also in a case before Sir George Jessel of In re Allen, Wilson v. Atter (f). . . . But it is perfectly plain that a gift in the form which I have mentioned may be a class gift, if there is to be found in the will a context which will show that the testator intended it to be a class gift. I think the same result may be arrived at if the Court, putting itself in the same position as the testator occupied, with the same knowledge as the

(a) Pearks v. Moseley, 5 App. Ca. 714; Re Chaplin's Trust, 33 L. J. Ch. 183; Re Allen, 44 L. T. 240.

(b) Or to some other person (Re Featherstone's Trusts, 22 Ch. D. at p. 121). A class is a number of persons "comprised under one general description, indefinite in number, and individually undistinguished by name or particular designation": per Lord Langdale, M.R., in Burrell v. Baskfield, 11 Bea. p. 534. To a certain extent, therefore, the question whether a gift is a class gift is a question of form. Thus if a testator gives property to a number of persons by some general description, he is presumed to mean such of them as survive him, even if the description can only include persons living, and therefore capable of being designated, at the date of the will. Thus in Viner v. Francis, 2 Br. C. C. 658, a testator gave property to "the children of my late sister, M. C., to be equally divided among them": it was held that this meant the children of M. C. living at the testator's death; in other words, it was a gift to a class; Shuttleworth v. Greaves, 4 My. & Cr. 35; Dimond v. Bostock, L. R., 10 Ch. 358, and other cases cited post.

(c) 27 Bea. 201.

(d) 25 Ch. D. 162. Followed in Re Mervin, [1891] 3 Ch. 197.

(e) For another example of a composite class, see Best v. Stonehewer, 2 D. J. & S. 537.

(ee) 33 L. J. Ch. 183.

(f) 29 W. R. 480. See also Re Woods' Will, 31 Bea. 323; Re Venn, [1904] 2 Ch. 52.

testator had when he was writing his will, comes to the conclusion that the gift, although expressed in the form of a gift to an individual and the children of A., was intended to operate as a class gift. There is abundant authority for that proposition. . . . The case of Aspinall v. Duckworth (g) appears to me to be exactly this case. It was a gift unto and equally amongst the testator's nephew A. and the children of his sister B., as tenants in common. Lord Romilly held that that was a gift to a class. It differs from this case only in one particular, namely that the gift here is confined to those children who attain twenty-one. Another principle, which is, I think, established in this branch of the law is, that all the interests of members of the class must vest in interest at the same time. For instance, if there is a gift to A. for life, and afterwards to B. and the children of C., the class must vest in interest at the death of the testator, although it is capable of enlargement by the birth of subsequent children of C. during the lifetime of the tenant for life." As Lord Davey pointed out, if there is a gift of property to A. for life, and at his death to be equally divided between his surviving children and B., only those children of A. who survive the tenant for life can take, while the interest of B. becomes vested at the testator's death; consequently this is not a class gift so far as B. is concerned, and if he dies in the lifetime of the testator his share lapses (h). In the case at bar Lord Davey came to the conclusion that the testator treated A. as if she had attained twenty-one, and made a special class of nephews and nieces consisting of A. and the children of his sister B. (i).

If shares vest at different times, legatees do not take as a class.

The principle thus laid down was followed in Re Venn (j), where there was a gift to the brothers and sisters of X. living at her decease, and A., B., and C. in equal shares; A. and B. were in the same degree of relationship to the testatrix, but C. was a stranger in blood: it was held by Joyce, J., that the gift was not to a class, and that A. having died in the lifetime of the testatrix, his share lapsed.

In addition to the kind of composite class referred to above (k), there may be a class compounded of persons answering different descriptions, or belonging to different generations. Thus, a class

Class compounded of persons answering different descriptions.

(g) 35 Bea. 307.

(h) Drakeford v. Drakeford, 33 Bea. 43.

(i) The decision in M'Kay v. M'Kay, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 213 (where the gift was to the testator's wife and his children "then living"), can apparently be supported on the theory that the testator intended the contingency of being alive at the period of distribution to apply to the wife as well as the children.

(j) [1904] 2 Ch. 52.

(k) Ante, p. 434.

CHAPTER XIII. may consist of the children of A., who attain twenty-one, and the issue of such of them as die under that age. Where a gift of this kind is unskilfully framed, the question may arise: "Are there two classes, or is there one class compounded of persons answering one or other of two alternative descriptions?" (l). The question has been already discussed with reference to the Rule against Perpetuities, and the distinction has been pointed out between original and substitutional gifts (m).

Exclusion of members.

Another way in which a testator can create a special class is by excluding certain named individuals who would otherwise belong to it. Thus in Dimond v. Bostock (n), a testatrix gave property in trust for all the nephews and nieces of her late husband who were living at the time of his decease, except A. and B. It was held that this was a gift to a class.

Class ascertained in testator's lifetime.

If the gift is to a class of persons who are ascertained during the testator's lifetime or even at the date of the will, this is in a sense equivalent to a gift to them as personæ designatæ, but it is not the less a class gift. Accordingly, in Lee v. Pain (o), where the gift was to M. for life, and after his decease, to his children living at his decease, equally between them, and M. died in the lifetime of the testatrix, leaving three children surviving, one of whom also died in the lifetime of the testatrix, Sir J. Wigram, V.-C., decided that the children living at the death of M. who survived the testatrix took as a class, and that there was no lapse. And in Leigh v. Leigh (p), a bequest to "all the present born children of B. equally," was held to be a class gift. The same construction was followed in Viner v. Francis (q), and in Dimond v. Bostock (r)—in each of which cases the bequest was to the children or nephews and nieces of a person dead at the date of the will—notwithstanding a dictum to the contrary by Kindersley, V.-C., in Cruse v. Howell (s). But if the gift is to named individuals, also described as a class, they take as personæ designatæ; as in Bain v. Lescher (t), where the gift was to "the children of L. D., to wit, J. D., E. D., and A. D."

(l) Per Lord Selborne, in Pearks v. Moseley, 5 App. C. 722.

(m) Ante, p. 333, and Chap. XXXVI.

(n) L. R., 10 Ch. 358.

(o) 4 Hare, 254.

(p) 17 Bea. 605.

(q) 2 Cox, 190.

(r) L. R., 10 Ch. 358.

(s) 4 Drew. 215. See also Allen v. Callow (3 Ves. 289) and Ackerman v. Burrows (3 V. & B. 54), which are sometimes cited in support of the theory that such persons take as personæ designatæ. In Capes v. Dalton, 86 L. T. 129, s. c. s. n. Kekewich v. Barker, 88 L. T. 130, where the gift was to "G. B., M. B., and the children now living of R. H.," there seems to have been some divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether it was a gift to a class, but the question of lapse did not arise.

(t) 11 Sim. 397.

And even if they are not described by name, but only by number, they take as personæ designatæ; thus a bequest to "the five daughters of A. B." (u), is not a gift to them as a class. In Re Stansfield (v) the testator directed certain moneys to be divided among "my nine children," and gave his residue upon trust to pay and divide it "equally to and between all my children, except that my oldest son J. . . shall receive 30*l.* less than each of my other children." It was held by Bacon, V.-C., that the residue was given to the children as personæ designatæ. The decision saved the share of a deceased child from lapse under sect. 33 of the Wills Act (w), but on principle the decision seems difficult to justify, for it would have excluded an after-born child (x).

In Havergal v. Harrison (y) it was held that a gift to "the brother and sister of A. and my brothers and sister equally," was a gift to the individuals in question, living at the date of the will, as personæ designatæ.

Where individuals are described only by relationship.

Where a testator gives pecuniary legacies to a number of persons by name, and gives the residue to "all the before mentioned pecuniary legatees," with certain exceptions, in proportion to the amounts of their legacies, this is not a gift to them as a class, and if one of them dies in the testator's lifetime his share lapses (z). But a gift to persons by reference may be (or have the same effect as) a gift to them as a class, if that intention appears (a).

Description by reference.

It has been already mentioned, that a gift to such of a number of named persons, as are living at a particular time, or survive the testator, is equivalent to a gift to a class, so far as the question of lapse is concerned (b).

Persons living at a certain time.

"It is not clear," says Mr. Jarman (c), "what would be the effect of a gift to certain other classes of persons, as to the next of kin or relations as tenants in common of A., a person who dies in the lifetime of the testator, in the event of any of the next of kin or Gift to next of kin or relations.

(u) Re Smith's Trusts, 9 Ch. D. 117.
Orford v. Orford, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 121.

(v) 15 Ch. D. 84.

(w) Post, p. 445.

(x) See the cases cited post, Chap. XLII. The question raised in these cases suggests the desirability of extending sect. 33 of the Wills Act to gifts to classes.

(y) 7 Bea. 49. Compare Jones v. Frewin, 12 W. R. 369, where Wood, V.-C., seems to have held that a gift to "my nephews and nieces" was a gift to individuals and not to a class; but "it is a very shortly reported judgment and difficult to follow": per North, J., in Re Hannam, [1897] 2 Ch. 46.

(z) Re Gibson's Trusts, 2 J. & H. 656; compare Nicholson v. Patrickson, 3 Giff. 209. As to the decision in Russell v. Kellett (3 Sm. & G. 264), where the bequests were charitable, vide ante, p. 239.

(a) See Knight v. Gould, 2 M. & K. 295, post, p. 438.

(b) Re Spiller, 18 Ch. D. 614; Re Featherstone's Trusts, 22 Ch. D. 111, supra, p. 430.

(c) First ed. p. 299.

CHAPTER XIII. relations dying in the interval between the decease of A. and of the testator ; since, in every case where such a gift has occurred (and in which the entirety has been held to belong to the surviving next of kin at the death of the testator), the bequest seems to have contained no words which could operate to sever the joint tenancy " (d). In Ham's Trusts (e), though there were words which severed the joint tenancy, yet there were other words which prevented the legatees from taking as a class ; Sir R. T. Kindersley, V.-C., however, appears to have been of opinion that without the latter words the gift would have been a gift to a class, and would have taken effect in favour of those only who survived the testator.

Gifts to executors
beneficially.

As a general rule, a gift to " my executors herein named," beneficially as tenants in common, is a gift to them as individuals, and not as a class, so that if one of them predeceases the testator, or renounces, his share lapses (f). The case of Knight v. Gould (g) is no authority to the contrary. There the testator bequeathed the residue of his estate " to my executors hereinafter named, to enable them to pay my debts, legacies, funeral and testamentary charges, and also to recompense them for their trouble, equally between them " ; and it was held that the executors took as a class in their official character, and that one having predeceased the testator, the whole went to the survivors. The decision no doubt gave effect to the intention, for the " recompense " was to go with the " trouble." Besides, the survivors took the whole in trust to pay debts ; and the same persons were, by the words of the will, entitled to keep for their own benefit what remained after such payment. The case turned on the special terms of the will (i).

Devises of legal or beneficial ownership only.

III.—Devises of Legal (or Beneficial) Ownership only.—Mr. Jarman points out (j) that " where the devise which lapses comprises the legal or beneficial ownership only, of course its failure creates a vacancy in the disposition merely to that extent. Thus, if a testator devise lands to the use of A. in fee, in trust for B. in fee, and A. die in the testator's lifetime, the legal estate comprised in the lapsed devise to A. devolves to the testator's heir (k), (or, if the (d) Bridge v. Abbot, 3 Br. C. C. 224 ; Vaux v. Henderson, 1 J. & W. 388, n.

(e) 2 Sim. N. S. 106 ; see this case stated post, Chap. XLI., where the cases settling the period at which next-of-kin are to be ascertained are stated.

(f) Barber v. Barber, 3 Myl. & C. 688 ; Hoare v. Osborne, 33 L. J. Ch. 586.

(g) 2 Myl. & K. 295.

(i) The case is always treated as a decision on gifts to a class (see Re Gibson's Trusts, 2 J. & H. p. 662).

(j) First ed. p. 299.

(k) In the case of a person dying since 1897, the legal estate would devolve to his personal representatives, who would apparently, under sect. 2 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, hold it as trustees for A.

will has been made or republished since 1837, and contains a residuary devise, then to the residuary devisee,) charged with a trust in favour of B., whose equitable interest under the devise is not affected by the death of his trustee. An example of the converse case is afforded by the recent case of Doe d. Shelley v. Edlin (l), where a testator gave (inter alia) to A. his real estates, to hold to A., his [heirs,] executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to receive the rents and profits thereof, and pay the same to B. for her life, for her separate use, free from the control of her husband; and after the decease of B., upon trust to convey the real estates to such uses and in such manner as B. by deed or will should appoint. B. died in the testator's lifetime. It was held, nevertheless, that the legal inheritance passed to A. under the devise. Lord Denman suggested a doubt whether the doctrine would apply to a case in which the trustee had no duty to perform, as in the case of a devise to the use of A. in fee in trust for B. It seems difficult to discover any solid ground for distinguishing such cases."

IV.—Gifts by way of Charge or Condition.—Mr. Jarman also points out (m) that "where an estate is devised to one, charged with a sum of money, either annual or in gross, in favour of another, the charge is not affected by the lapse of the devise of the onerated property. Thus, if Blackacre be devised to A. and his heirs, charged with or on condition that he pay 50*l.* a year, or the sum of 500*l.*, to B., and it happens that A. dies in the testator's lifetime, his (the testator's) heir at law (or his residuary devisee, if the will is subject to the new law), will take the estate charged with the annuity or legacy in question (n). This principle is strongly exemplified in the case of Oke v. Heath (o), in which a person having a power of appointment over a sum of money, by will appointed a less sum (part of the fund in question) to A.; and in consideration thereof A. was to pay to his mother an annuity of 100*l.* during her life for her separate use, and to enter into a bond, with a penalty, for the payment thereof; and the testatrix gave the residue of what she had power to dispose of to B. A. died in the testatrix's lifetime, yet the mother was held to be entitled to her annuity out of the fund, the whole of which, by the death of A., had devolved to B., the residuary appointee.

Lapse of devise of charged
property.

(l) 4 Ad. & Ell. 582 [1836].

(m) First ed. p. 300.

(n) Wigg v. Wigg, 1 Atk. 382; Hills v. Wirley, 2 Atk. 605; Re Kirk, 21 Ch. D. 431.

(o) 1 Ves. sen. 135. See Re Arrow- smith, 6 Jur. N. S. 1231, and on appeal (where the point did not arise) 2 D. F. & J. 474. See also Re Kirk, 21 Ch. D. 431, where the charge was simply in exoneration of the personal estate.

CHAPTER XIII.

Destination of a lapsed specific sum charged on real estate.

Rule as to contingent charges.

Where liable to failure by death, though not expressly contingent.

Charges absolute in event.

“ In the converse case, namely, where the person for whom the money is to be raised dies in the testator's lifetime, it is more difficult to determine the destination of the lapsed interest, the question being then embarrassed by the conflicting claims of the devisee of the lands charged, and of the heir of the testator : the former contending that the charge has become extinct for his benefit ; and the latter, that the lapsed sum is to be regarded as real estate undisposed of by the will.

“ This, at least, is clear, that where land is charged with a sum of money upon a contingency, and the contingency does not happen, the charge sinks for the benefit of the devisee (p). As in the case of a devise of land to A., charged with a legacy to B., provided B. attain the age of twenty-one, as to which Lord Eldon (q) has observed, ‘ The devise is absolute as to A., unless B. attain the age of twenty-one : if he does, he is to have the legacy. But his attaining the age of twenty-one is a condition, upon which alone he is to have it ; and, if he does not attain that age, then the will is to be read as if no such legacy had been given, and the heir at law does not come in because the whole is absolutely given to the devisee ; but a gift which fails must clearly be intended, upon the failure of the condition, to be for the benefit of the devisee.’ It would, of course, be immaterial, in such case, whether the death of the legatee during minority occurred in the testator's lifetime or afterwards.

“ Where a legacy, payable in futuro, though not expressly contingent, is bequeathed in such a manner as that it would fail by the death of the legatee before the time of payment, (and such is always the rule where the postponement is referable to the circumstances of the legatee, and is not made for the convenience of the estate,) the case evidently falls within the principle of Lord Eldon's reasoning ; and, consequently, if the legatee die before the vesting age, whether in the lifetime of the testator or not, the charge sinks in the estate.

“ It is to be observed, also, that a legacy which, though originally made contingent, becomes absolute by the effect of events in the testator's lifetime (subject, of course, to a liability to failure by lapse), is to be regarded, in applying the doctrine in question,

(p) Att.-Gen. v. Milner, 3 Atk. 112 ; Croft v. Slee, 4 Ves. 60 ; Re Cooper's Trusts, 23 L. J. Ch. 25, 4 D. M. & G. 757. “ But such a gift as that in Att.-Gen. v. Milner, would now be held to be vested.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(q) Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow,

210. As to the effect of an express direction by the testator that in a certain event the sum is to sink into his residuary personal estate, see Johnson v. Webster, 4 D. M. & G. 474, post, Chap. XXII.

in precisely the same light as if it were originally absolute. Thus, if land be devised, charged with a specific sum to A., on condition of his attaining the age of twenty-one years, and A. do attain that age, and subsequently die in the testator's lifetime, the gift receives the same construction as if it had not originally been made conditional on his attaining the prescribed age."

With respect to the general question, as to the destination of sums charged on real estate which lapse by the death of the legatee in the testator's lifetime, or the gift of which is void ab initio, the older authorities are chiefly cases in which gifts of specific sums were void ab initio, and the decision in each case generally turned upon the question whether the gift was an exception from the residuary devise, or a mere charge upon the land. Owing to the limited operation of a residuary devise under the old law (r), if the gift was an exception, the heir took the benefit in the event of its failure; if the gift was a mere charge on the land, the specific devisee took the benefit of its failure (s). The cases are not altogether consistent, partly because some of them proceeded on "the strong reluctance in the Court to disinherit an heir at law" (t), while in other cases the Court treated the question as one of intention.

Destination of sums payable out of land.

The leading case in favour of the heir is Arnold v. Chapman (u); there the testator devised a copyhold estate to A., he causing to be paid to the executors the sum of 1,000*l.*, and after payment of debts and legacies the testator gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to a charity; the 1,000*l.* being included in the residuary bequest to the charity, the gift of it was void, and the question arose whether it should go to the heir or sink for the benefit of A. Lord Hardwicke held that it went to the heir, apparently on the ground that the direction to pay to the executors severed it from the devise of the land, so as to prevent the devisee from having any interest in it, but as the gift of it to the charity was void, it retained the character of land and went to the heir as undisposed of real estate (v). Lord Hardwicke's decision seems to have turned entirely on the direction to pay to the executors, Decisions in favour of the heir.

(r) See Chap. XXV.

(s) Per Leach, M.R., Cooke v. Stationers' Co., 3 Myl. & K. p. 264.

(t) See the remarks of Lord Camden in Gravenor v. Hallum (Amb. 643), and of Lord Eldon in Tregonwell v. Sydenham (3 Dow, 210). The views of Mr. Jarman, as expressed in the first edition of this work, were also strongly in favour of the heir. The tendency of the Courts seems now to be the other way: see Freeman v. Freeman, 5 D. M. & G. 704.

(u) 1 Ves. sen. 108.

(v) See Lord Eldon's remarks in Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow, at p. 211; and in Sidney v. Shelley, 19 Ves. 363. See also the comments of Wood, V.-C., on Arnold v. Chapman in Heptinstall v. Gott, 2 J. & H. 449.

CHAPTER XIII. for he said that if the devise had been on condition to pay the 1,000*l.* to the charity, the condition would have been void, in which case it seems clear that A. would have taken the land free from the condition. In Gravenor v. Hallum (w) land was devised subject to a charge in favour of a charity, and it was held that the heir took the benefit of its failure, but the decision seems to have turned partly on the fact that, subject to the charge, the land was devised in trust for sale, and the case therefore seems to come more properly under another head (x). In Bland v. Wilkins (y) land was devised to E. N. in fee, upon condition that her executors and administrators should pay 10*l.* to a charity: it was held that the 10*l.* should go to the heir, as part of the produce of the land undisposed of. The report is too short to make the case an authority of any value; it seems inconsistent with the principle that where land is devised subject to an invalid condition, the devisee takes the land free from the condition (z). Henchman v. Att.-Gen. (a) is also an unsatisfactory case.

Decisions in favour of the devisee.

Among the decisions in favour of the devisee, the earliest is Jackson v. Hurlock (b): there the testator devised lands to A. subject to and charged with a sum which he afterwards directed to be paid to charities: it was held that the charge sank for the benefit of A. In Kennell v. Abbott (c), Arden, M.R., said that after some difference of opinion it was then (1799) perfectly settled that if an estate were devised, charged with legacies, and the legacies failed, no matter how, the devisee should have the benefit of it, and take the estate. King v. Denison (d) and Cooke v. Stationers' Co. (e) are to the same effect.

Modern decisions.

Since the Wills Act many cases have been decided bearing on this question. In considering them the alteration made in the law by sect. 25 of the Wills Act (f) must be borne in mind.

Ridgway v.
Woodhouse.

In Ridgway v. Woodhouse (g), where a testator devised real estate in trust for his wife for her life, but in case his wife's sister should reside with her, he directed his trustees to retain out of the rents 100*l.* for every day of such residence, and pay the same to a (w) Amb. 643.

(x) Post, Chap. XXII.
(y) 1 Br. C. C. 61 n.
(z) Arnold v. Chapman, supra; Wright v. Row, 1 Br. C. C. 61. See also Cooke v. Stationers' Co. (3 Myl. & K. 262), where Leach, M.R., said that a devise upon condition to pay certain legacies was no more than a charge of the legacies.

(a) 2 S. & St. 498; 3 Myl. & K. 485.
(b) Amb. 487; better reported 2 Ed. 263.
(c) 4 Ves. 802. See Barrington v. Hereford, 1 Br. C. C. 61; Baker v. Hall, 12 Ves. 497.
(d) 1 V. & B. 260.
(e) 3 My. & K. 262.
(f) Post, Chap. XXV.
(g) 7 Bea. 437.

charity, Lord Langdale, M.R., said : " The direction to pay to the charity is void, and consequently the direction to retain, so far as it was intended to operate for the benefit of the charity, was also void, and had no effect ; and that purpose failing, I think the direction to retain must fail altogether."

The point under consideration was much discussed in Re Cooper's Trusts (h), in which there was a specific devise on trust in the first place to raise 2,000*l.* by sale or otherwise ; and, " after raising as aforesaid," the estate was to be in trust for the testator's son and his issue. One half of the 2,000*l.* was directed to be held in trust for a daughter of the testator for life, and afterwards for her children. Then followed a residuary devise. The daughter survived the testator, but died without ever having had a child : it was held that the 2,000*l.* was a charge on the estate, and not an exception, and that the 1,000*l.* which lapsed sank for the benefit of the specific devisee. Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., treated the distinction between an exception and a charge as settled ; the question was to which head the case before him belonged. He said : " I was very much struck throughout with the ingenious argument in support of its being an exception. But when one looks through the cases, one is surprised to find—I do not know whether any case has arisen—but I do not find a single case in the books where a sum of money to be paid out of an estate has ever been held to be an exception. I cannot find a single case in the books to that effect."

Re Cooper's Trusts.

In Sutcliffe v. Cole (j) the testator devised lands specifically to A. subject to a charge of 7,000*l.*, which he directed his executors to raise by mortgage or sale, and he directed 1,000*l.*, part of the 7,000*l.* to be appropriated to a person who predeceased the testator. Kindersley, V.-C., held that A. took the estate discharged of the 1,000*l.* " If there is a devise of real estate less something, a devise with an exception out of it, the devisee can take no more than the actual devise. But if there is a devise subject to a charge for the particular purpose of a benefit to some individual, then it is a devise of the whole estate, and not of an estate less something."

In Tucker v. Kayess (k) the testator bequeathed to his executors a sum of money, " to be chargeable and paid as hereinafter mentioned," upon trusts which eventually failed by reason of the testator leaving no children ; he then devised certain lands to A.

(h) 23 L. J. Ch. 25 ; 4 D. M. & G. 757. See Re Newberry's Trusts, 5 Ch. D. 746. In that case the question did not arise, because the charge was on land comprised in a residuary devise.

(j) 3 Drew. 135.

(k) 4 K. & J. 339. See also Re Clulow's Trusts, 1 J. & H. 639.

CHAPTER XIII. subject to the payment of the said sum : it was held by Wood, V.-C., that the case fell within the principle of Re Cooper's Trusts (l), and that the charge sank into the devised property for the benefit of the devise. The V.-C. said : " It comes back to the old distinction between an exception and a charge. The true test being this : Is the thing in question excepted out of the devised property—did the testator mean to give that property minus the thing in question, or is it a charge upon the devised property ? If it is excepted out of the devised property, it goes to the residuary devisee ; if it is a charge on the devised property, it sinks into that property for the benefit of the person to whom it is devised ; and this case, I must say, is one of the strongest I ever saw of the latter description. I made the observation in Re Cooper's Legacy, that ' I do not find a single case in the books where a sum of money to be paid out of an estate has ever been held to be an exception,' and I am still of that opinion." However, in Heptinstall v. Gott (m), the Vice-Chancellor took somewhat different ground. There the testator gave his daughter four cottages subject to a charge of 150*l.*, and bequeathed all his personal estate to certain children and grandchildren, including the daughter. No specific disposition was made of the 150*l.* : it was held that the 150*l.* sank for the benefit of the devisee. The V.-C. explained that the principle on which he acted in Re Cooper's Trusts (n), was " that if you can ascertain from the terms of a will that a charge is meant as an exception out of a gift, there the charge will be operative, although the disposition of it may not take effect ; but that where the purpose of the charge is merely to provide for some object, and, subject to such purpose, to leave the estate to the devisee, there, if the purpose fails, the charge sinks for the benefit of the devisee." And the V.-C. went on to say that in Re Cooper's Trusts the legacy was contingent on the daughter having children, and this not having happened, the charge was held to sink for the benefit of the devisee, but " if any child had ever been in existence, I apprehend that the principle of Arnold v. Chapman (o) would have applied." If the V.-C. meant to suggest a distinction between the failure of a gift by reason of its illegality, or by reason of there being no one in existence to take the benefit of it, and the failure of a gift by the death of the legatee in the lifetime of the testator, it is submitted that the distinction cannot be supported (p). The question is entirely one of intention ; unless

(l) Supra, p. 443.

(m) 2 J. & H. 449.

(n) Supra, p. 443.(o) Supra, p. 441.(p) See the decision of Kindersley, V.-C., in Sutcliffe v. Cole, supra, p. 443.

the testator intended to sever the gift from the devise for all purposes so as to make it an exception from the devise, the devisee will take the benefit of its failure, whether the failure is caused by lapse or by any other means.

It seems to follow from Lord Hardwicke's remarks in Arnold v. Chapman (q), that if a testator devises land subject to a condition or charge for securing the payment to his executors of a certain sum of money, and does not expressly dispose of this sum, it will become part of his personal estate, and will not in any event sink for the benefit of the devisee. No such case seems to have arisen. In Heptinstall v. Gott (r), Wood, V.-C., thought such a construction possible, but in the circumstances of that case, inadmissible. In Simmons v. Pitt (s), a testator by his will directed that a sum of 6,000*l.* and interest which he had by deed charged on certain real estate should form part of his residuary personal estate, which he bequeathed upon trusts which were void as to the interest arising from the 6,000*l.*: it was held that this interest went to the next of kin, and did not sink into the real estate or go to the heir of the testator.

Charge in favour of executors.

V.—Charges on Personal Property.—Where personal property is specifically given to A. subject to a charge in favour of B., and the gift to B. lapses, A. takes the benefit of the lapse (t). The same rule applies where the charge is on a particular fund (u).

Charges on personal property.

In Fisk v. Att.-Gen. (v), a testatrix bequeathed a fund upon trust to apply as much of the income as should be necessary in keeping a grave in repair, and to divide the residue among the poor of the parish: it was held that, the trust to repair the grave being void (w), the whole income was applicable to the charitable purpose (x). Questions as to the effect of lapse in the case of a charge on a mixed fund of realty and personalty, and as to the acceleration of estates and interests by the lapse of preceding interests, are considered elsewhere (y).

VI.—Provisions of Wills Act.—The doctrine of lapse has been modified by the Wills Act in three important particulars. First, Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 25. Real estate comprised in lapsed or void devises included in residuary devise.

(q) Supra, p. 441.

(r) Supra, p. 444.

(s) L. R., 8 Ch. 978. See as to this case Chap. XXI.

(t) Per Wood, V.-C., in Tucker v. Kayess, 4 K. & J. at p. 342.

(u) Scott v. Salmond; 1 My. & K. 363.

(v) L. R., 4 Eq. 521.

(w) Supra, p. 228.

(x) Followed in Re Birkett, 9 Ch. D. 576; Re Vaughan, 33 Ch. D. 187; Re Rogerson, [1901] 1 Ch. 715.

(y) Chap. XXI, and post, p. 452.

CHAPTER XIII. by sect. 25, which provides, "That unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, such real estate or interest therein as shall be comprised or intended to be comprised in any devise in such will contained, which shall fail or be void by reason of the death of the devisee in the lifetime of the testator, or by reason of such devise being contrary to law, or otherwise incapable of taking effect, shall be included in the residuary devise (if any) contained in such will."

It seems clear that the object of this enactment was to give to a residuary devise the same sweeping effect with regard to real estate as a residuary bequest has always had with regard to personalty (z). Consequently if, under a will made since 1837, a specific devise lapses, or fails as being contrary to law, the land so devised passes under the residuary devise, if the will contains one, and not to the heir (a).

Under this enactment, the gift of a sum, forming an exception out of real estate, to a person who dies in the testator's lifetime, or the gift of which is void ab initio, will enure for the benefit of the residuary devisee. If, however, the will does not contain an operative residuary devise, or the sum excepted affects the property comprised in the residuary devise, such sum falls to the heir. Of course the act has no bearing on the question whether the sum be an exception or simply a charge; nor does it do away with the rule that the failure of a mere charge enures for the benefit of the specific devisee, and not of the residuary devisee (b); nor, again, does it apply to the class of cases first noticed, in which the gift of a sum of money charged upon land on a contingency, is defeated by the failure of the event (whether it be the decease of the object before a certain age, or otherwise), and not by lapse.

1 Vict. c. 26,
s. 32.

Devises in tail not to lapse if devisee leaves issue.

The next alteration in regard to lapse relates to devises in tail, to which sect. 32 provides, "That where any person to whom any real estate shall be devised for an estate tail, or an estate in quasi entail, shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue who

(z) Mr. Jarman thought that although this was "the immediate design" it was "evidently not the full scope of the clause." He thought that it altered the rule as to charges sinking for the benefit of the devisee under the doctrine above referred to (p. 440). "For instance, if a testator by a will made since 1837, devise Blackacre to A., he paying to B. 500*l.*, and all the residue of his estate to C., and it happen that B. dies in the testator's lifetime, the charge will not sink for the benefit of A., but will be raisable for the residuary devisee" (first ed. of this work, p. 310). It is quite clear from the cases above cited (pp. 443 seq.), that the section has no such operation.

(a) Carter v. Haswell, 3 Jur. N. S. 788.

(b) Tucker v. Kayess, 4 K. & J. 339; Sutcliffe v. Cole, 3 Drew. 135; 24 L. J. Ch. 486; and see ante, pp. 443 et seq.

would be inheritable under such entail, and any such issue shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such devise shall not lapse, but shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention should appear in the will."

The third and remaining alteration concerns gifts to the children or other issue of the testator, as to which sect. 33 declares, "That where any person, being a child or other issue of the testator, to whom any real or personal estate shall be devised or bequeathed, for any estate or interest not determinable at or before the death of such person, shall die in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue, and any such issue of such person shall be living at the time of the death of the testator, such devise or bequest shall not lapse, but shall take effect as if the death of such person had happened immediately after the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will."

Sect. 33.
Gift to testator's child or other descendant who leaves issue not to lapse.

"It will be observed," says Mr. Jarman (c), "that the words 'such issue,' occurring in sec. 32, admit of application either to the issue inheritable under the entail, surviving the deceased devisee, or the issue inheritable under the entail generally, whether living at the death of the devisee or not. According to the latter construction, if there be issue living at the death of the devisee or legatee, and also issue living at the death of the testator, the requisition of the statute is satisfied, though the same issue should not exist at both periods. Thus if lands be devised to A. in tail, who dies in the testator's lifetime, leaving an only child, and such child afterwards die in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue who, or any of whom, survive the testator, the devise would, it is conceived, be preserved from lapse. In the 33rd section, however, there is more difficulty in adopting a similar construction; for in this clause the words 'such issue' would seem to apply exclusively to the issue living at the death of the devisee or legatee; and if so, the result would be that in the case of a gift to a child of the testator, if it should happen that such child dies in his lifetime leaving issue, and such issue also dies leaving issue who survives the testator (certainly rather a large assemblage of contingencies to be crowded into the testator's lifetime), the existence of the last-mentioned issue would not prevent the lapse, the issue surviving the testator not being the same issue as existed at the death of the legatee. But here, also, possibly a liberal construction would be

Remarks upon
1 Vict. c. 26,
ss. 32 and 33.

Whether same issue must be living at death of devisee and of testator.

CHAPTER XIII.

adopted by considering the word 'issue' to be used as nomen collectivum, namely, as including every generation of issue, and not merely as designating the particular individual or individuals living at the death of the legatee; so that the existence of any person belonging to the same line of issue at the death of the testator would suffice to prevent the lapse; and in favour of this construction may be urged the desirableness of assimilating the effect of these two sections of the statute, from the penning and juxtaposition of which it is hardly to be supposed that any such difference was intended."

Lord St. Leonards was of a different opinion. He thought that there was intended to be a difference between sects. 32 and 33; and that sect. 33 "expresses what, looking at the object of the framer, it was no doubt intended to express, that some of the issue living at the death of the devisee or legatee must also be living at the testator's death" (d). But in In bonis Parker (e) Mr. Jarman's view prevailed. There the testatrix gave all her property to her daughter; the daughter died in her lifetime, leaving an only child who also died in the lifetime of the testatrix, leaving a child who survived the testatrix, and it was held by Sir C. Cresswell that the gift was saved from lapse by the 33rd section. Lord St. Leonards nevertheless maintained his view as to the operation of the section: "The decision is contrary to the express words of the statute, and equally contrary, it may be thought, to the intention of the legislature. The case is altogether distinguishable from the provision as to estates tail" (f).

Time of legatee's death immaterial.

Section 33 applies: (1) Where the will is made before 1838, if the death of the legatee and the republication of the will take place after the Wills Act came into operation (g); (2) where the testator makes a gift to a child who is dead at the date of the will (h).

Wills Act does not apply where gift does not lapse, but property passes over to another.

Mr. Jarman goes on to point out that "the application of both the enactments in question is excluded where the devise in tail or the gift to the testator's child or issue is expressly made contingent on the event of the devisee or legatee surviving the testator (i); for in (d) Real P. Stat. 384 (1st ed.).

(e) 1 Sw. & Tr. 523.

(f) Real P. Stat. 392 (2nd ed.).

(g) Winter v. Winter, 5 Ha. 306. In that case the legatee died before the execution of the codicil. In Wild v. Reynolds, 5 N. of C. 1, the legatee died before 1838, and the legacy was held to lapse, although the will was republished in 1840.

(h) Mower v. Orr, 7 Ha. 473; Wisden v. Wisden, 2 Sm. & G. 396.

(i) It is submitted that any expression of a contrary intention is sufficient to prevent the operation of sec. 33. Thus if a testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* to his son A., and proceeded: "but if my said son shall die in my lifetime, then I bequeath the sum of 200*l.* to each of his children," would not this be sufficient to exclude the operation of sect. 33, whatever the number of the son's children might be?

such a case to let in the heir in tail under sect. 32 would be something more than substitution : it would be to give the property to the heir in tail in an event upon which the testator has not devised it to the ancestor ; and in such a case to hold the child or other descendant of the testator to be entitled under sect. 33, would be in direct opposition to the language of the will.

“ Nor, is it conceived, does the statute touch the case of a gift to one of several persons as joint tenants ; for as the share of any object dying in the testator’s lifetime would survive to the other or others, such event occasions no ‘ lapse,’ to prevent which is the avowed object of both the clauses under consideration. Joint tenants.

“ The same reasoning applies to a gift to a fluctuating class of objects who are not ascertainable until the death of the testator, though made tenants in common. Thus, suppose a testator to bequeath all his personal estate to his children simply in equal shares, it should seem that the entire property would, as before the statute, belong to the children who survive the testator, without regard to the fact of any child having, subsequently to the date of his will, died in the testator’s lifetime leaving issue who survive him (?). As gifts to the testator’s children as a class are of frequent occurrence, their exclusion from this provision of the statute will greatly narrow its practical operation.” And the same reasoning applies where there is only one member of the class. Thus in Re Harvey’s Estate (k), the testator gave property to his daughter for life, and after her death to her child or children who should attain twenty-one or marry ; the daughter had one child only, who died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving a child who survived the testator : it was held by Chitty, J., that the gift failed. The learned judge concurred in the view expressed by Mr. Jarman, in the concluding sentence quoted above, but said that the law was too well settled to be now altered. Gift to class.

If, however, the gift is to a single child, it seems that it may be saved from lapse by sect. 33, even although the child who is to take is not ascertained at the date of the will. Thus if in Re Harvey the gift had been to “ my first or only daughter who attains twenty-one or marries,” it is submitted that in the circumstances of that case the gift would have taken effect. Gift to a single child to be ascertained at a future time.

The reader will perceive that sect. 33 does not substitute the surviving issue for the original devisee or legatee ; but makes the Under sect. 33, issue of child dying in testator’s lifetime not substituted.

(j) Since Mr. Jarman wrote, the law is settled in accordance with the view above expressed : Olney v. Bates, 3 gift to the latter take effect, notwithstanding his death in the testator's lifetime, in the same manner as if his death had happened immediately after that of the testator. The subject of gift is, therefore, to all intents and purposes constituted the disposable property of the deceased devisee or legatee, and as such follows the dispositions of his will (l). "Hence," as Mr. Jarman remarks (m), "occurs this rather novel result, that it cannot be predicated of any will of a deceased person, whose parent or any more remote ancestor is living, what may be the extent of property which it will eventually comprise, and no final distribution can be made pending this possibility of accession."

Drew. 319 ; Browne v. Hammond, Johns. 210.

(k) [1893] 1 Ch. 567.

CHAPTER XIII.

Construction. In Re Mason's Will (n), Romilly, M.R., said he thought that "a very nice point might arise on the statute, as to whether the will of a legatee who predeceases his father, the testator, is to be construed according to the event, or whether it is to be construed as if the legatee had survived the testator."

Other effects of sect. 33.

The effect of the section is to prolong the life of the original devisee or legatee by a fiction for a particular purpose; that purpose is to give effect to the will in which the gift which would otherwise lapse occurs, and it only points out the mode in which that effect is to be given. Thus the subject of gift devolves with any obligation to which, under that will, it would have been subject in the hands of the deceased devisee or legatee if he had actually survived; as an obligation to compensate other legatees under the same will, disappointed by his assertion of rights that defeat their legacies (o); and if a devisee of land, being a feme covert, dies without having made an effectual disposition of it by will, her husband will, if the devise is saved from lapse by sect. 33, be entitled to an estate by the curtesy (p). Where a testator bequeathed to his children his residue in equal shares, with a direction that the shares of his daughter B., in case she should survive him, should be subject to the trusts of her marriage settlement, and the daughter died in the testator's lifetime leaving issue, it was held by Pearson, J., that the share was still subject to the direction notwithstanding her death (q). So if A. devises land to (l) Johnson v. Johnson, 3 Ha. 157; Re Mason's Will, 34 Bea. 494. If he dies intestate, of course, it goes as part of his estate: Skinner v. Ogle, 9 Jur. 432.

(m) First ed. p. 314. Mr. Jarman adds that "though the will of the original testator must be under the new law, the will of the dying child or descendant-legatee need not."

(n) Supra.

(o) Pickersgill v. Rodger, 5 Ch. D. 163; see further as to this case, post, Chap. XVI.

(p) Eager v. Furnival, 17 Ch. D. 115; Hope v. Hope, [1892] 2 Ch. 336; Re Derbyshire, 75 L. J. Ch. 95.

(q) Re Hone's Trusts, 22 Ch. D. 663.

his son B., and B. dies in his lifetime leaving issue, and having devised all his property to A., this latter devise lapses, because A. is by sect. 33 deemed to have died in his son's lifetime, and the land goes to B.'s heir (r). If a testator gives a legacy to his daughter, a married woman, who dies intestate in his lifetime, leaving surviving her a husband, who dies before the testator, and two children, who survive him, the effect of the fiction is that the daughter dies a widow, and the two children take the legacy (s). Again, probate duty (or, since 1st August 1894, estate duty) is payable on the death of the testator, not only in respect of the property which passes on his death, but in respect of the property which passes on the fictitious death of a legatee (or devisee) under sect. 33 (t). But the fiction does not prolong the life of the devisee or legatee for all purposes. Thus, an agreement to settle property which should come to the deceased legatee (testator's daughter) "during coverture," was held not to include property which had so come to her only by this fiction (u).

The question how far sect. 33 applies to powers of appointment is considered elsewhere (v). Powers of appointment.

VII.—Effect of Lapse.—It may be useful to state shortly the effect produced under the present law by the lapse of a testamentary gift. Effect of lapse.

If an ordinary specific devise lapses, the property passes under the residuary devise (w). If there is no residuary devise, the beneficial interest passes to the heir. So if the whole or a part of the residuary devise lapses, the property passes to the heir. Real estate.

If an ordinary specific, demonstrative or pecuniary legacy, or annuity lapses, it falls into residue and passes under the residuary bequest. If there is no residuary bequest, lapsed legacies go to the next-of-kin. So if the whole or a part of the residuary bequest lapses, it goes to the next-of-kin (x). Personal estate.

Where by reason of lapse a testator's will is rendered wholly inoperative, he dies intestate (y), or if the lapse only affects a part of his property there is said to be a partial intestacy in respect of that part (z). As a general rule, the beneficial interest in the property Intestacy produced by lapse.

(r) Re Hensler, 19 Ch. D. 612.

(s) Re Allen's Trusts, [1909] W. N. 181, following In bonis Councill, L. R. 2 P. & D. 314.

(t) Re Scott, [1901] 1 K. B. 228.

(u) Pearce v. Graham, 32 L. J. Ch. 359.

(v) Chap. XXIII.

(w) Post, Chap. XXV., where the restricted operation of a residuary devise under the old law is explained.

(x) Post, Chap. XXIX.

(y) Re Ford, [1902] 2 Ch. 605.

(z) See Chap. XXI.

CHAPTER XIII. undisposed of goes to the heir at law in the case of realty (a), and to the next of kin in the case of personalty, the devolution of it being governed by the Statutes of Distribution. But the Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, does not apply to a partial intestacy (b).

Where a person dies intestate by reason of his will wholly failing to take effect, the provisions of the Statute of Distributions, 1671, as to advances to children apply (c).

Lapse of charge.

If real or personal property is given subject to a charge, and the charge lapses, the general rule is that the devisee or legatee of the property takes the benefit of the lapse (d).

Particular estate.

If real property is given by way of remainder to persons in succession, and the gift to one of them lapses, the subsequent remainders are accelerated, and the same rule seems to apply in the case of personalty. But where an executory interest is limited after a contingent interest, and the prior interest lapses, there is an intestacy until it is ascertained whether the contingent interest will take effect or not (e).

Gift over made valid by lapse of prior absolute gift.

Property may be devised or bequeathed to A., with a gift over to B. which would be void if A. survived the testator, yet if A. predeceases the testator the gift over is good, the result being that the lapse of the gift to A. validates the gift to B. Thus if personal property is bequeathed to A. and the heirs of his body, and in case of the failure of issue of A., then to B. : this is an absolute gift to A. if he survives the testator, and in that case the gift to B. is void ; if, however, A. dies in the lifetime of the testator (apparently whether he leaves issue or not) the gift to B. takes effect (f). It has not been actually decided that the rule applies to land, but on principle it would appear that it does, and that the rule may be stated in general terms.

Consumable things.

On the same principle, it would seem that a gift of consumable articles to A. for life, with remainder to B., would not lapse by the death of A. in the testator's lifetime, but would take effect in favour of B. (g).

(a) As to charges on land, see above, pp. 439 seq.

(b) Re Twigg's Estate, [1892] 1 Ch. 579.

(c) Re Ford, supra. See Chap. XXXII.

(d) Supra, pp. 444 seq.

(e) Post, Chap. XXI. (Acceleration of Future Interests.)

(f) Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 708 ; Mackinnon v. Peach, 2 Keen, 555 ; Donn v. Penny, 1 Mer. 20 ; Williams v. Lewis, 6 H. L. C. 1013 ; Re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348, over-ruling Hughes v. Ellis, 20 Bea. 193 ; Greated v. Greated, 26 Bea. 621, and the dictum of Knight Bruce, V.-C., in Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. 416.

(g) Theobald on Wills, 648, where Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. 690, is referred to. The views expressed by Knight Bruce, V.-C., on this point, and his dictum in Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. 416, are contrary to principle : Re Lowman, supra.

CHAPTER XIV.

UNCERTAINTY.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. General Doctrine	453	III. Uncertainty as to the
II. Uncertainty as to the		Object of Disposition ...	470
Subject of Disposition ...	455	IV. Trusts and Powers	481

I.—General Doctrine.—“In the construction of wills,” Mr. Jarman remarks (a), “the most unbounded indulgence has been shown to the ignorance, unskilfulness, and negligence of testators: no degree of technical informality, or of grammatical or orthographical error (b), nor the most perplexing confusion in the collocation of words or sentences, will deter the judicial expositor from diligently entering upon the task of eliciting from the contents of the instrument the intention of its author, the faintest traces of which will be sought out from every part of the will, and the whole carefully weighed together (c); but if, after every endeavour, he finds himself unable, in regard to any material fact, to penetrate through the obscurity in which the testator has involved his intention, the failure of the intended disposition is the inevitable consequence. Conjecture is not permitted to supply what the testator has failed to indicate; for as the law has provided a definite successor in the absence of disposition, it would be unjust to allow the right of this ascertained object to be superseded by the claim of any one not pointed out by the testator with equal distinctness. The principle of construction here referred to has found expression in the familiar phrase, that the heir is not to be disinherited unless by express words or necessary implication; which, however, must not be understood to imply that a greater degree of perspicuity or force of language is requisite to defeat the title of the heir to the real estate of a testator, than Indulgence shown to testators in the construction of wills.

(a) First ed. p. 315. The 4th section of this chapter, dealing with Misnomer and Misdescription, has been transferred to the new chapter (XXXV.) on “Description of Persons and Things.”

(b) See 3 Keb. pl. 49, 23; Henniker

v. Henniker, 12 Jur. 618; but see Jackson v. Craig, 20 L. J. Ch. 204, 15 Jur. 811; Baker v. Newton, 2 Beav. 112; Langley v. Thomas, 6 D. M. & G. 645.

(c) See Minshull v. Minshull, 1 Atk. 411.

CHAPTER XIV. would suffice to exclude the claim of the next of kin as the successor to the personalty; for though undoubtedly, on some points, a difference of construction has obtained in regard to these several species of property, that difference is ascribable, rather to the diversity in their respective nature and qualities, than to any disparity of favour towards the claims of the heir and next of kin (d).

"In modern times instances of testamentary gifts being rendered void for uncertainty are of less frequent occurrence than formerly; which is owing probably, in part, to the more matured state of the doctrines regulating the construction of wills, which have now assigned a determinate meaning to many words and phrases once considered vague and insensible, and in part to the more practised skill of the courts in applying these doctrines. Hence the student should be cautioned against yielding implicit confidence to any early cases (e), in which a gift has been held to be void for uncertainty, the principle whereof has not been recognised in later times.

"To the validity of every disposition, as well of personal as of real estate, it is requisite that there be a definite subject and object; and uncertainty in either of these particulars is fatal."

A condition may be void for uncertainty (f).

Uncertain condition.
Uncertainty
as to operation of limitation.

A gift may be void for uncertainty, not because there is any doubt as to the intention of the testator, but because it is uncertain when and how the gift will take effect. Thus in Re Viscount Exmouth (g), the testator, who was a peer, bequeathed chattels to trustees to go with the title as heirlooms, so far as the rules of law and equity would admit, and so that no person in existence at the testator's

(d) The rule in favour of the heir and next of kin to which Mr. Jarman refers is still occasionally cited (as in Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 19), but it may be doubted whether the rule has much, if any, real force at the present day. The presumption is rather the other way, namely, that when a man makes his will he does not intend to die intestate as to any part of his property (see Goodman v. Goodman, 1 De G. & S. 695). In Re Roberts (19 Ch. D. 520,) Jessel, M.R., said: "The modern doctrine is not to hold a will void for uncertainty unless it is absolutely impossible to put a meaning upon it. The duty of the Court is to put a fair meaning on the terms used, and not, as was said in one case, to repose on the easy pillow of saying that the whole is void for uncertainty."

Since this note was written, Mr. J. S.

Vaizey has been good enough to draw my attention to a passage in Lord Alvanley's judgment in Booth v. Booth (4 Ves. 407): "Every intendment is to be made against holding a man to die intestate, who sits down to dispose of the residue of his property." This doctrine, however, seems to have been originally confined to personal property, for there cannot be any doubt that the presumption in favour of the heir was stronger than in favour of the next of kin. [C. S.]

(e) Pride v. Atwicke, 1 Keb. 692, 754, 773; Price v. Warren, Skinn. 266, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 356, pl. 2.

(f) Infra, Chap. XXXIX.

(g) 23 Ch. D. 158, following the principles laid down in Egerton v. Earl Brownlow, 4 H. L. C. 1, and Clavering v. Ellison, 7 H. L. C. 707.

death, or born in due time afterwards, and afterwards coming to the title, should have any other than a life interest in the same, and so that no person should acquire an absolute interest in the same until the expiration of twenty-one years after the decease of all such persons as should be in existence at the time of the testator's decease and afterwards attaining the title; it was held that the latter clause of these limitations was void for uncertainty in operation, and that the first person born after the death of the testator who attained the title acquired an absolute interest in the chattels.

In Re Moore (h) the testatrix bequeathed a sum of stock to trustees upon trust to apply the dividends in maintaining and keeping in repair a certain tomb "for the longest period allowed by law, that is to say, until the period of twenty-one years from the death of the last survivor of all persons who shall be living at my death." It was held that the gift was void for uncertainty. It seems difficult to bring this decision within the principle of the cases cited above: there was no uncertainty in the operation of the limitation; the only difficulty was that of evidence. It is submitted, however, that the gift was an infringement of the Rule against Perpetuities (j).

II.—Uncertainty as to the Subject of Disposition.—Mr. Jarman remarks (k) that, "A simple example of a devise rendered void by uncertainty as to the intended subject-matter of disposition, is afforded by the early case of Bowman v. Milbanke (l), where the words, 'I give all to my mother, all to my mother,' were adjudged insufficient to carry the testator's land to his mother, as it was wholly doubtful and uncertain to what the word 'all' referred (m).

Gift of "all" held too indefinite.

"In Mohun v. Mohun (n), the will consisted merely of these words: 'I leave and bequeath to all my grandchildren, and share (h) [1901] 1 Ch. 936.

(j) Supra, p. 297.

(k) First ed. p. 317.

(l) "1 Lev. 130, 1 Sid. 191, T. Raym. 97, s. c. But in another early case (Taylor v. Web, Styles, 301, 307, 319; s. c. nom. Marret v. Sly, 2 Sid. 75), the words, 'I make my cousin, Giles Bridges, my sole heir, and my executor,' were held to constitute the cousin devisee in fee of the testator's lands: it being observed, that the testator not only made him his heir, but his executor also; and if he should not have the lands, the word 'heir' was nugatory, for, by being executor only, he should have the goods. The word 'heir' was said to imply two things: first, that he should have the lands; secondly, that he should have them in fee-simple." (Note by Mr. Jarman.) See also Parker v. Nickson, 1 D. J. & S. 177, "I acknowledge A. to be heir." Ante, p. 82 and post, Chap. XIX.

(m) This seems to be one of those early cases against which Mr. Jarman warns the student (ante, p. 454). One of the arguments which weighed with the Court was that "all" was an adjective and not a substantive: this shewed a remarkable ignorance of grammar on the part of the Court.

(n) 1 Sw. 201.

CHAPTER XIV. and share alike.' By a codicil the testator appointed certain persons to be trustees for his grandchildren and nieces: Sir T. Plumer, M.R., held that this was too uncertain to create a devise. It had been contended, he said, that the whole difficulty would be removed by the transposition of the word 'all,' which, in its present situation, was without effect, the word 'grandchildren' including all who correspond to that description; but his Honor observed that there was uncertainty both in the subject and object of the bequest, and the Court could not transpose words for the purpose of giving a meaning to instruments that had none.

Remark as to transposition
of words.

"To authorize the transposition of words, it is clearly not enough (as hereafter shown (o)) that they are inoperative in their actual position: they must be inconsistent with the context. In the case just stated the word 'all,' though silent where the testator had placed it, was not repugnant; and it is observable that the transposition of the word 'all,' even if justifiable, would not, according to Bowman v. Milbanke, have supplied a definite subject of disposition."

"After legacies, &c., are paid, I leave to A.," residue held to pass.

At the present day, however, the Court is always anxious to give effect to the testator's intention, even if vaguely expressed. Thus in Re Bassett's Estate (p), after giving several legacies, the will proceeded, "after these legacies and my funeral expenses are paid, I leave to my sister A., without any power or control of her husband; in case of her death to be equally divided amongst her children or grandchildren": this was held by Bacon, V.-C., to be a good gift of the residue to A. And if a testator, after making specific and pecuniary bequests, proceeds thus: "and all the rest to be divided between A. and B.," this operates, without question, as a gift of the residue, real as well as personal (q).

"The said."

Sometimes uncertainty is caused by a testator disposing of various parts of his property and effects, and then referring to "the said property and effects" in such a way as to make it doubtful whether he means (1) the property and effects last disposed of, or (2) the share of all his property and effects previously given to a certain person, or (3) all his property and effects. In such a case, the intention must be collected from the whole will (r). As a general rule, "the said" refers to the immediate antecedent (s).

(o) Chap. XVIII. s. 2.

(p) L. R., 14 Eq. 54.

(q) Attree v. Attree, L. R., 11 Eq. 280.

In that case the question was not argued as to the personal estate; as to the real estate, see post, Chap. XXVII.

(r) Re Willomier's Trusts, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 389.

(s) Healy v. Healy, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 418, and other cases cited post, as to the meaning of "the said" when applied to persons.

Sometimes a gift may be void for uncertainty by reason of events which have happened during the testator's lifetime, since the execution of the will. Thus in Re Gray (t) a testator bequeathed fifty shares in a certain company; at the date of the will the testator held seventy shares of 100*l.* each in an unlimited company of that name; subsequently the company was turned into a limited company, and the testator's seventy shares were converted into 140 shares of 60*l.* each: it was held, the bequest being general, that it was impossible to ascertain what the legatees took, and that the gift consequently failed (u).

CHAPTER XIV.

Uncertainty arising ex postfacto.

A blank does not necessarily make a bequest void for uncertainty; thus a bequest of " hundred pounds " is a good bequest of 100*l.* (v).

Effect of blank.

Where the intended subject-matter of disposition consists of an indefinite part or quantity, the gift necessarily fails for uncertainty. On this principle, a bequest of " some of my best linen " (w), or " of a handsome gratuity to each of my executors " (x), has been held void.

Gift of an indefinite part void

But a distinction seems to be taken where the will furnishes some ground on which to estimate the amount intended to be bequeathed. Thus, in Jackson v. Hamilton (y), where the testator directed his trustees to retain a reasonable sum of money to remunerate them for the trouble they should have in carrying out the trusts of his will, it was referred to the master to ascertain what would be a reasonable sum. So, where the bequest is for the maintenance, support, and education of an infant, or for the maintenance and support of an adult person, or to set him up in business, although no amount be specified, the Court will determine the amount to be applied for that purpose (z), unless the amount is left to the discretion of a named person, in which case he can determine it (a), or unless the words used are too vague to furnish a basis of calculation (b). And a bequest of " 3,000*l.* or thereabouts," to be raised by accumulating annual income, has been —except where the will furnishes grounds for estimating the amount.

Bequest for maintenance,
&c., of an infant or adult good, though no
sum specified;

(t) 36 Ch. D. 205.

(u) As to the rule where a gift of shares or stock is specific, see Re Slater, [1906] 2 Ch. 480; [1907] 1 Ch. 665. See also Chap. XXX.

(v) Makeown v. Ardagh, Ir. R., 10 Eq. 445.

(w) Peck v. Halsey, 2 P. W. 387.

(x) Jubber v. Jubber, 9 Sim. 503.

(y) 3 J. & Lat. 702.

(z) Broad v. Bevan, 1 Russ. 511. n.; Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 430; Kilvington

v. Gray, 10 Sim. 293; Batt v. Anns, 11 L. J. Ch. 52; Thorpe v. Owen, 2 Hare, 610; Pedrotti's Will, 27 Beav. 583; and see 1 Sim. N. S. 103, and other cases noticed along with the above, post.

(a) As to discretionary trusts for the benefit of a certain person, see Lewis v. Lewis, 1 Cox, 162; Re Sander-son's Trust, 3 K. & J. 497, and other cases cited in Chap. XXIV.

(b) Abraham v. Alman, 1 Russ. 509.

CHAPTER XIV.

—for founding a school;

—for repairing church,
&c.

Charitable purposes and other purposes.

held good: the words “or thereabouts” being considered as used only to meet the difficulty which would arise in accumulating up to the exact limit, and to render any little excess, occasioned by the addition of an entire dividend, subject to the same disposition as the specified sum (c). So, where a Scotch testator expressed a wish (in effect) to establish in Dundee a hospital for one hundred boys, like, but less than, Heriot’s Hospital, but omitted to say how much was to be appropriated for the purpose, it was held in the House of Lords (d), that the testator had sufficiently defined his object to enable the Court to determine the amount required for it. And where a testator creates a trust for the repair of a tomb, or the like (e) (not forming part of a church), although this, as already noticed (g), is a void trust, the Court will determine what would have been required for it, if a determination on that point is needed in order to give practical effect to other parts of the will (h). So also, where (i) a testatrix bequeathed a sum of 2,000*l.* to be disposed of “in and about restoring, altering and enlarging, and improving the church, parsonage house, and school” at M., and as to the residue thereof upon the trusts declared by her will concerning the proceeds of sale of her real estate, it was held that the gift was good to the extent to which it might be ascertained that the money would be required for such of the specific objects as were already in mortmain, and an inquiry was directed for the purpose of ascertaining the amount so required.

Where there is a gift for charitable purposes and also for purposes of an indefinite nature not charitable, and no apportionment is made by the will, so that the whole might be applied for either purpose, the whole gift is void for uncertainty. But where there is a gift for a charitable purpose and for another ascertained object, it will either be apportioned between them, or equally divided. The cases have been already considered (j).

A bequest of a sum “not exceeding” 100*l.* (k), or of “50*l.* or 100*l.*” (l), will be construed in a manner most beneficial to the (c) Oddie v. Brown, 4 De G. & J. 179, diss. K. Bruce, L.J.

(d) Magistrates of Dundee v. Morris, 3 Macq. 169; see also Adnam v. Cole, 6 Beav. 353.

(e) Fisk v. Att.-Gen., L. R., 4 Eq. 521; Re Birkett, 9 Ch. D. 576; Re Rogerson, [1901] 1 Ch. 715. The decision in Fowler v. Fowler, 33 Beav. 616, contra, must be considered overruled.

(g) Ante, p. 221.

(h) See Chapman v. Brown, and other cases cited ante, p. 228, and infra, p. 467.

(i) Champney v. Davy, 11 Ch. D. 949.

(j) Re Vaughan, 33 Ch. D. 187, and the cases there cited. Supra, pp. 228 seq.

(k) Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Coll. 395; Cope v. Wilmot, 1 Coll. 396, n.; Gough v. Bult, 16 Sim. 45.

(l) Seale v. Seale, 1 P. W. 290; and see Haggar v. Neaiby, Kay, 379.

legatee, and is, therefore, a good gift of the whole 100*l.*; and a bequest will not be void for uncertainty, merely because the amount is differently stated in different parts of the will, if the Court can collect that one statement was evidently a mistake, even though the mistake be contained in the very words of gift (m).

CHAPTER XIV.

Where the amount is differently stated.

An instance of uncertainty in the subject of gift occurred in Jones d. Henry v. Hancock, which underwent much discussion (n). The testator devised lands to his daughter, Ann Henry, for life, with remainder to her first and other sons in tail male, remainder to his other daughter Frances. The devise to Ann was upon condition that she married a man possessed of a property at least equal to, if not greater than, the one he left her. The testator then proceeded as follows: "And if she marries a man with less property than that, in that case I leave her only as much of mine as shall be equal to the property of the man she marries; and all the remainder of my property shall immediately pass over and be given up to my second daughter Frances Henry, to whom, in that case, I bequeath it." It was held in D. P., that the devise over was void for uncertainty, as the specific portion or share so given over did not appear in the will itself.

Uncertainty as to the share the devisee is to take.

The maxim "id certum est quod certum reddi potest," applies to gifts which would otherwise be void for uncertainty in the subject. Thus if a testator gives A. a power of selecting one of the testator's houses, and devises the other houses to B., this is a good gift to B. if A. exercises his power of selection (o). On this principle it has been held that a gift of portions to daughters, to be determined by the testator's wife and executors, according to the value of their services to the family, and, in the case of the marriage of a daughter, according to the match she might make, is not void for uncertainty, as the discretion given to the wife and executors removes that objection (p).

Where subject of gift is to be determined by third person.

A devise to two persons "in such shares as shall be determined by _____," would make them tenants in common in equal shares (q). On the same principle, an equal division is made where the donee of a power of distribution fails to exercise the power (r);

(m) Philipps v. Chamberlaine, 4 Ves. 51.

(n) 4 Dow, 145. See Gibbon v. Warner, Dyer, 281, n; Hoffman v. Hankey, 3 My. & K. 376, post; Rickards v. Rickards, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 419.

(o) See Boyce v. Boyce, 16 Sim. 476. As to the result of A. predeceasing the testator, see post, p. 466, where Jerningham v. Herbert, 4 Russ. 388, is also stated.

(p) Re Conn, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 337.

(q) Robinson v. Wheelwright, 21 Beav. 214.

(r) Salisbury v. Denton, 3 K. & J. 529.

CHAPTER XIV. or where the gift consists of a general direction that the legatees should "participate" (s).

Where devisee is entitled to select.

Where the gift comprises a definite portion of a larger quantity, it is not rendered nugatory by the omission of the testator to point out the specific part which is to form such portion, the devisee or legatee being in such case entitled to select; by which means the subject of the gift is reducible to certainty; and "id certum est quod certum reddi potest" is a settled rule in the construction of wills (t). Thus, if a man devise two acres out of four acres that lie together, it is said that this is a good devise, and the devisee shall elect (u).

Where testator intends to select.

So, if a testator devise a messuage, and ten acres of land surrounding it, part of a larger number of acres, the choice of such ten acres is in the devisee (v). And if a testator devise to his son John one freehold close of land in R. and to his son George one freehold close of land in R., the devisees must elect: apparently John has the first choice (w). On the same principle, where a testator, having three houses in A., devised "two houses in A.," the devisee was held entitled to elect which two he would take (x). But in cases of this kind "it is essential that the will should not shew that the testator was bequeathing any particular one of the properties to the legatee who desires to select, for the selection by the testator is incompatible with the view that he intended the legatee to select. If a will shews that a testator intends to give a particular property to a legatee, and, owing to the testator having several properties answering the description in the will of the particular property given, you are unable to say, either from the will itself or from extrinsic evidence, which of the several properties the testator referred to, then on principle the gift must fail for uncertainty, and the Court cannot, in order to avoid an intestacy, change the will, or construe it as giving to the legatee the option of choosing any one of the properties. This principle was applied in the case of Richardson v. Watson (y), though whether that case would now be followed on its particular facts may be doubted" (z). In Asten v. Asten (a)

(s) Liddard v. Liddard, 28 Beav. 266. See also Greville v. Greville, 27 Beav. 594.

(t) Peck v. Halsey, 2 P. W. 387.

(u) Grace Marshal's Case, Dy. 281 a, n., 8 Vin. Abr. 48, pl. 11.

(v) See Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 My. & K. 574; Jacques v. Chambers, 2 Col. 441.

(w) Duckmanton v. Duckmanton, 5 H. & N. 219.

(x) Tapley v. Eagleton, 12 Ch. D. 683.

(y) 4 B. & Ad. 787.

(z) Per Romer, J., in Asten v. Asten, [1894] 3 Ch. at p. 263. Cited with approval in Re Cheadle, [1900] 2 Ch. 620.

(a) [1894] 3 Ch. 260.

the testator gave "all that newly built house being No. Sudeley Place" to A., "all that newly built house being No. Sudeley Place" to B., with similar gifts to C. and D. It was held that the devises were void for uncertainty. CHAPTER XIV.

In such cases the Court strives to ascertain by extrinsic evidence what the testator's intention was (b). Extrinsic evidence.

Where a testator bequeaths to A. a certain number of shares in a company, and it appears that at the date of his will he held shares in that company of two different classes, one of which is more valuable than the other, and either of which is sufficient to satisfy the bequest, then the legatee has, it seems, the right of selection (c). But if the shares of the more valuable class are not sufficient to satisfy the bequest, it is a question of construction out of which class the bequest ought to be satisfied. Thus in Re Cheadle (d) the testatrix bequeathed to A. "my 140 shares in the C. B. Company"; she had 280 shares, of which 40 were paid up in full and the remaining 240 were partly paid up: it was held that A. was not entitled to select which of the 280 shares she would take, and that the bequest must be satisfied out of the 240 partly paid shares. Different kinds of shares.

No question of selection arises if it appears that the testator meant to give the legatee the whole of a certain kind of property belonging to him. Thus where a testator bequeathed all his property in the Austrian and Russian funds, "and also that vested in a Swedish mortgage," the testator having several Swedish mortgages, they were all held to pass (e). And where a testator having five leasehold messuages in L., comprised in four leases, bequeathed "his four leasehold messuages in L.," it was held that all five messuages passed upon a context somewhat favouring that construction (f). Mistake in description.

Sometimes a testator gives a legatee an express power of selection or disposition (g), and the question may then arise how far the power extends. Thus, in Edwardes v. Jones (h), where a testator devised to his daughter a house and garden in X., to be built at the expense of his executors, the gift would apparently have been void for uncertainty, if the executor (who was also residuary legatee) Indefinite power of selection or disposition.

(b) Richardson v. Watson, supra; Blundell v. Gladstone, 3 Mac. & G. 692.

(c) Jacques (or Jacques) v. Chambers, 15 L. J. Ch. 225; 16 L. J. Ch. 243; Millard v. Bailey, L. R., 1 Eq. 378; O'Donnell v. Welsh, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 115. The report of Jacques v. Chambers in 2 Coll. 435, appears to be inaccurate, as the other three reports agree. It would seem from the report in 16 L. J. Ch. 243, and 4 Rail. Ca. 499, that the case was compromised.

(d) [1900] 2 Ch. 620.

(e) Richards v. Patteson, 15 Sim. 501.

(f) Sampson v. Sampson, L. R., 8 Eq. 479.

(g) As to powers of appointment, see Chap. XXIII.

(h) 35 Bea. 474.

CHAPTER XIV.

had not built a house at the daughter's request. So, where a testator devised the residue of his property to his wife for life, "reserving to her power to will away any part" at her death, with a gift to his daughter of what his wife should not dispose of, it was held that the power extended to the whole estate (i). Where a testator bequeathed his household furniture, &c. on trust for sale, except such articles as his wife should wish to retain for her own use, which he thereby empowered her to appropriate, it was said that this intimated a confidence that the wife would make some selection, and would not take the whole; though to what extent short of that is not very clear (j). A more rational principle was laid down by Jessel, M.R., in a case where a testator gave his wife power to appropriate absolutely to herself such parts of his plate as she should desire to possess. The M.R. said, "Of course the widow takes the whole. Following the words literally she might take the whole of the plate with the exception of one article of probably no value, when the maxim de minimis would apply" (k). The same principle was followed in Re Sharland (l). The principle would probably not be applied where the things are few in number and of nearly equal value.

Gift of what shall remain or be left.

"It may be observed," says Mr. Jarman (m), "that in numerous instances a devise or bequest of what shall remain or be left at the decease of the prior devisee or legatee, has been held to be void for uncertainty (n). Some of these cases certainly had special circumstances, and the indefiniteness seems not to have been invariably considered to be such as to invalidate the gift (o). At all events, the expression is susceptible of explanation, where the property, or part of it, consists of household furniture, or other articles of a perishable nature, by considering these words as referring to the expected diminution of the property by the use and wear of the first taker. Such, it is clear, would be the construction, if the property (whatever were its nature) (p) were given to the first taker expressly for

(i) Cooke v. Farrand, 7 Taunt. 122. Re Richards, [1902] 1 Ch. 76, was the converse case; there the widow had a power of disposition during her life, but not apparently by will.

(j) Kennedy v. Kennedy, 10 Ha. 438.

(k) Arthur v. Mackinnon, 11 Ch. D. 385.

(l) 74 L. T. 664.

(m) First ed. p. 321.

(n) Bland v. Bland, 2 Cox, 349; Wynne v. Hawkins, 1 Bro. C. C. 179; Sprange v. Barnard, 2 Bro. C. C. 585; Pushman v. Filliter, 3 Ves. 7; Wilson

v. Major, 11 Ves. 205; Bull v. Kingston, 1 Mer. 314; Eade v. Eade, 5 Madd. 118. To these may be added Lechmere v. Lavie, 2 My. & K. 197; Horwood v. West, 1 Sim. & St. 387, and Ex parte Payne, 2 Y. & C. 636, considered by Mr. Jarman in connection with the subject of precatory trusts.

(o) Duhamel v. Ardovin, 2 Ves. sen. 162; Hands v. Hands, 1 T. R. 437 n.

(p) Except consumable articles: see Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. 690, and Chaps. XXXIII and XXXVIII.

life; indeed there is not, it is believed, any case in which such expressions have been held to render the gift void, where the prior interest was expressly limited in such terms; and the case of Cooper v. Williams (g) is an authority against such a construction."

But the cases to which Mr. Jarman refers in the opening sentence of this passage, have little if anything to do with the question of uncertainty; they can be supported on a different ground altogether, namely, that if a testator makes an absolute gift of property to A., any gift over of what may be left undisposed of by A. is repugnant and void (r).

Even a gift to X. in trust for A., with a direction that any balance remaining in X.'s hands after the death of A. should go absolutely to B., operates as an absolute gift to A. (s).

But a gift over of a legacy, or of so much thereof as shall not have been paid to the legatee, is not void for uncertainty (t).

Gift over of so much as shall not have been paid.

The question whether a life interest can be implied from a gift of "what shall remain on the death of X.," is considered elsewhere (u).

Sometimes a testator gives property to A. absolutely, with a request or direction that he will at his death leave the "bulk" or "remainder" of the property to B.; this is void, being too uncertain to create a precatory trust (v).

Uncertain words will not create precatory trust.

In Re Percy (w), the testator made the following bequest: "I give to my wife 10,000*l.*, afterwards to go to the understated residuary legatee E.": it was held by Bacon, V.-C., that this was an absolute gift to the wife, and that the "inept words" which followed did not affect it. It is submitted that this case is distinguishable from the cases where there is an attempted gift over of what remains or is undisposed of by the prior legatee, and that the (g) Pre. Ch. 71, pl. 64. Mr. Jarman also cites Gibbs v. Tait, 8 Sim. 132. The modern cases bearing on this point are cited below, p. 464.

(r) Re Mortlock's Trust, 3 K. & J. 456; Weale v. Ollive, 32 Bea. 421; Perry v. Merritt, L. R., 18 Eq. 152; Re Wilcocks' Settlement, 1 Ch. D. 229. Earlier cases are: Malim v. Keighley, 2 Ves. jun. 529 (disapproving Upwell v. Halsey, 1 P. W. 651); Grey v. Montagu, 2 Ed. 205; Att.-Gen. v. Hall, 1 Jac. & W. 158 n.; Bourn v. Gibbs, 1 R. & Myl. 614; Phillips v. Eastwood, Ll. & G. t. Sug. 270; Watkins v. Williams, 3 Mac & G. 622; Ross v. Ross, 1 Jac. & W. 154; Re Yalden, 1 D. M. & G. 53; Holmes v. Godson, 8 D. M. & G. 152; Bowes v. Goslett, 27 L. J. Ch. 249; Henderson

v. Cross, 29 Bea. 216; Cuthbert v. Purrier, Jac. 415; Green v. Harvey, 1 Ha. 428; Lightburne v. Gill, 3 Bro. P. C. 250. In Bull v. Kingston, 1 Mer. 314, the gift over ("in case she dies without a will") was held void on the ground of uncertainty. The case of Borton v. Borton, 16 Sim. 552, is considered elsewhere (Chap. XXXIV.).

(s) Re Walker, Lloyd v. Tweedy, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 5.

(t) Re Chaston, 18 Ch. D. 218; Re Goulder, [1905] 2 Ch. 100. These cases are considered in Chap. LVII.

(u) Chap. XIX.

(v) Eade v. Eade, 5 Madd. 118; Palmer v. Simmonds, 2 Dr. 221. See Chap. XXIV.

(w) 24 Ch. D. 616.

CHAPTER XIV. obvious intention of the testator was to give his wife only a life interest (x).

Trusts of an ascertained fund valid, though intended to embrace another unascertained.

Reference may here be made to the case of Ford v. Fowler (y), where the testator recommended (construed "directed") F. and his wife to settle a sum which he had bequeathed to the latter, "together with such sum of money of his (F.'s) own as F. shall choose," for the benefit of his wife and children. Lord Langdale, M.R., said that there being a certainty as to that which was in the testator's power, the trust as to that did not fail because the testator expressed a wish as to something over which he had no power.

Gift for life followed by gift over of unexpended capital.

Property may, of course, be given to a person for life, with power to appoint or expend the capital, followed by a valid gift over of the unappointed or unexpended part (z). But if a testator gives the income of property to his wife for life with a request that if it is more than she wants to live on, she will give the remainder to B., this request is too uncertain to create a trust in B.'s favour (a).

A gift to A. for life "and whatever she can transfer to go to her daughters B. and C.," is void for uncertainty as to B. and C. (b); so is a gift of what a tenant for life "can save out of the income" (c).

Power to expend capital.

In Re Pedrotti's Will (d), a testator bequeathed the income of property to his wife for life, and provided that "in case anything should occur that her income is not sufficient, she shall be at liberty to go to the principal"; it was held by Romilly, M.R., that she was only entitled to so much of the capital as with the income would afford her a maintenance suitable to her station in life. But in Re Richards (e), a power given by the testator to his wife to use such portion of the capital "as she may deem expedient," was held to give her a general power of appointment over the capital during her life. And in Re Willatts (f), a power given to the testator's wife to sell the testator's property, followed by a gift over of what was left at her death, was held to give the wife a life interest, with power to expend any part of the capital as she might think fit, what was left at her death passing under the gift over.

Gift over of what remains after life interest good.

The principle suggested by Mr. Jarman in the passage quoted above (g), namely that where property is given to A. for life with a gift over on his death of "what remains" to B., the gift over is good (x) See Re Hanbury, [1904] 1 Ch. 415, where the question of repugnancy was much discussed.

(y) 3 Bea. 146.

(z) Re Roland, 86 L. T. 78, seems to have been decided on this principle.

(a) Hudson v. Bryant, 1 Coll. 681.

(b) Flint v. Hughes, 6 Bea. 342.

(c) Cowman v. Harrison, 22 L. J. Ch. 993.

(d) 27 Bea. 583.

(e) [1902] 1 Ch. 76.

(f) [1905] 2 Ch. 135. The order was made by consent.

(g) Ante, p. 462.

notwithstanding those words, has been applied in several modern cases (h). Thus, in Re Thomson's Estate (i), the testator gave all his property to his wife "for the term of her natural life, to be disposed of as she may think proper for her own use and benefit according to the nature and quality thereof," and "in the event of her decease, should there be anything remaining of the said property or any part thereof," he gave "said part or parts thereof" to certain persons: it was held by Hall, V.-C., and by the Court of Appeal, that the widow had no power to dispose of the property by will, and that on her death the gift over took effect as to any part of the property then existing; whether she had anything more than a right to enjoy the property in specie during her life was not decided. Re Sheldon and Kemble (j), and Re Holden (k), are to the same effect. But in Re Jones (l), the testator gave all his property to his wife "for her absolute use and benefit, so that during her lifetime for the purpose of her maintenance and support she shall have the fullest power to sell and dispose of my said estate," and after her death, as to such parts of his estate as she should not have sold or disposed of as aforesaid, he gave it in trust for other persons: it was held by Byrne, J., that the wife took an absolute interest. On the other hand, in Re Sanford (m), the testator by his will made certain dispositions concerning his property; by a codicil he revoked these provisions and gave all his property to his wife "so that she may have full possession of it and entire power and control over it, to deal with it or act with regard to it as she may think proper"; he then provided that in the event of her dying "without having devised or appointed the whole or any part of my said property," the dispositions contained in his will should take effect. It was held by Joyce, J., that the wife took a life estate with a general power of appointment, and that any part of it which she did not appoint passed under the testator's will. The decision no doubt gave effect to the intention of the testator.

It will be remembered that if property is given absolutely to A. with a gift over which is void for repugnancy, and A. dies in the testator's lifetime, the gift over will, as a general rule, take effect (n).

Where prior gift lapses.

Mr. Jarman points out (o) that "if the gift of what shall be left

Gift of what shall be left preceded by a special power of disposition.

(h) Constable v. Bull, 3 De G. & S. 411; Re Adam's Trust, 14 W. R. 18; Re Stringer's Estate, 6 Ch. D. 1; Bibbens v. Potter, 10 Ch. D. 733; Re Sheldon and Kemble, 53 L. T. 527. See Scott v. Josselyn, 26 Bea. 174 and Gude v. Worthington, 3 De G. & S. 389, referred to in Chap. XXXIII.

(i) 14 Ch. D. 263.

(j) 53 L. T. 527.

(k) 57 L. J. Ch. 648.

(l) [1898] 1 Ch. 438.

(m) [1901] 1 Ch. 939.

(n) Re Stringer, 6 Ch. D. 1; Re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348, ante, p. 452.

(o) First ed. p. 322.

CHAPTER XIV. is preceded by a power of disposition or appropriation reserved to the prior legatee in favour of particular objects, the expression evidently points at that portion of the property which shall be unappointed or unappropriated under the power. As in Surman v. Surman (p), where a testator bequeathed his personal estate to his wife for life or widowhood, with a power to her to apply the same to her own benefit and the maintenance of A. and B. during minority : and at her decease or second marriage, he gave the same, or so much as should then remain, to certain persons ; this was held to be a good bequest of the personal estate unapplied to the prescribed purposes."

Surman v. Surman.

It is equally clear that if property is given to trustees with a discretionary power to appropriate it or any part of it for certain purposes or in a certain way, and any part of it not so appropriated is given to A., this operates as an absolute gift to A. subject to an exercise of the power (q).

Distinction between a gift of the whole except an unascertained part and a gift of the remainder after deducting an unascertained part.

It will be observed, that in these cases the words seemed or were considered to provide for carrying over everything that was not disposed of under the power, and, consequently, nothing having been disposed of, the ultimate limitation carried the whole subject of gift. The next two cases, however, seem to shew that if the words are such as to point to a division into parts, and to amount to a gift of the individual parts, then, if one of the parts cannot be ascertained, the legatee of the other part is necessarily disappointed, since his part is undetermined, and the words are not sufficient to carry the whole to him.

Jerningham v. Herbert.

Thus, in Jerningham v. Herbert (r), the testatrix gave to A. such of her jewels as should at her decease be deposited with Messrs. R., and gave the rest of her jewels to B. ; at her decease there were no jewels deposited with Messrs. R. ; Leach, M.R., said that the will contained no present gift of the jewels, but referred to a future act to be done by the testatrix in order to complete her gift, and that act being prevented, the intended gift wholly failed.

Boyce v. Boyce.

Again, in Boyce v. Boyce (s), where the testator devised certain houses in S. to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, and after her decease upon trust to convey to his daughter M. in fee such one of the houses as she should choose, and to convey and assure all the others which M. should not choose to his daughter C. ; M. having died in the testator's lifetime, Sir L. Shadwell, V.-C., said it was only a gift of the houses that should remain, provided M.

(p) 5 Mad. 123.

(r) 4 Russ. 388.

(q) Lancashire v. Lancashire, 2 Ph. 657 ; 1 De G. & S. 288.

(s) 16 Sim. 476.

should choose one of them, that no choice had been or indeed could have been made by M., and therefore the gift in favour of C. failed. The decision seems somewhat technical, for the testator meant C. to take what M. did not take, and as M. could not take, it might well have been held that the gift in C.'s favour included the whole.

Where the bequest is of the residue or surplus of a specified fund remaining after providing for an object which is illegal or unattainable, and the exact amount to be laid out on which is not specified, the bequest is necessarily void for uncertainty, unless the purpose is such and so defined that the Court can determine what would have been the proper amount to be expended had the object been legal or attainable, or unless (according to some recent cases) the bequest of surplus carries with it all that is not otherwise effectually disposed of. Thus in Chapman v. Brown (t), the testatrix, after giving some legacies, gave all the residue of her real and personal estate to her executors to be applied for the purpose of building or purchasing a chapel where her executors should think it was most wanted, and if any overplus should remain from purchasing or building the same, she directed it to be applied to such charitable uses as her executors should think proper. The bequest for the chapel being void, Sir W. Grant, M.R., declared that the gift of the overplus was void also, since the amount could not be ascertained. "He thought it impossible to frame any direction that would enable the master to form any idea as to what would have been proper to expend upon the chapel. If the testatrix had pointed out any particular piece, that might have furnished some ground of inquiry as to what size would be sufficient for the congregation to be expected there, but the gift in question was so entirely indefinite, it was quite uncertain what the residue would have been." Again, in Att.-Gen. v. Hinxman (u), there was a devise of a house to be used as a school for poor persons of the parish of W.; the executors were directed to put the house in repair, and to invest a sum of money in stock in the name of the minister, churchwarden, and overseers, who were to apply the dividends for the purposes of the school, and to apply the surplus, if any, after payment of the expenses of the school, among poor parishioners of W., as the trustees should think fit. The devise of the house for the school being void, and the first trust declared of the stock having consequently failed, Sir T. Plumer decided that the gift of the

CHAPTER XIV.

Gift of the residue of a fund after providing for an illegal object is void, if the amount required for such object is unascertainable.

Chapman v. Brown.

Att.-Gen. v. Hinxman.

(t) 6 Ves. 404.

(u) 2 J. & W. 270; and see Att.-Gen.

v. Davies, 9 Ves. 535; Att.-Gen. v.

Goulding, 2 Br. C. C. 428; Re Taylor, 58 L. T. 538.

CHAPTER XIV. residue of the surplus dividends, being unascertainable, was void. Again, in Limbrey v. Gurr (v), where a testator bequeathed 7,000*l.* upon trust to pay the expenses of the testator's funeral and monument, and of building eight almshouses on a particular piece of ground, and to apply the residue to the trusts directed of a legacy of 8,000*l.*, which he bequeathed upon trust out of the income to pay certain weekly sums to the poor persons in the almshouses, to purchase a quatern loaf for twenty other poor persons, and to keeping the almshouses in repair, and to apply the residue in distribution of bread as therein mentioned; Sir J. Leach held that the residue of each sum was unascertainable, by reason of the gifts to the prior objects failing, and the gift of both residues therefore void.

Secus if the amount is ascertainable.

Mitford v. Reynolds.

But if the testator has so defined his object as to furnish fair and reasonable data, the Court will determine the amount which ought to have been expended on it if it had been legal, and thus at the same time ascertain the amount of the surplus. Thus, in Mitford v. Reynolds (w), the testator, after several bequests, directed the purchase of a particular piece of land, and the construction of a vault for the bodies of himself and his parents and sister, and of a monument, the expense of which purchase and construction was to be met and provided for from the surplus property after payment of debts and legacies. Then came a bequest of the remainder of his property to a valid charitable purpose; and it was held by Lord Lyndhurst that assuming the prior object to be void, yet it was not so uncertain as to the amount that would be required for it as to vitiate the gift to the charity. He thought the difficulties which existed in Chapman v. Brown had no existence here. The place was defined, the very spot pointed out, and the extent required for the purchase; there was no difficulty in directing a reference to the master for the purpose of ascertaining what would be a proper sum to carry that intention of the testator into effect. That sum, being once ascertained, would be deducted from the residue, the amount of which would then be rendered certain (x).

Principle of Chapman v. Brown.

The principle underlying Chapman v. Brown is that where the (v) 6 Mad. 151.

(w) 1 Phil. 185, 706.

(x) The L.C. held that the direction as to the monument, &c., was a disposition of an integral part of the residue, and that the "remainder" was what was left of such residue after building the monument, 1 Phil. 199. But owing to the peculiar wording of the L.C.'s declaration concerning the charitable gift, Shadwell, V.-C., afterwards thought himself bound to hold that the prior purpose having failed through the refusal of the owner to sell the land, the whole residue was well given to the charity, 16 Sim. 105.

whole of the fund may possibly be wanted for the primary object, there will probably be no surplus for the secondary object, and consequently an inquiry would be useless, and the gift of the surplus fails(y). Accordingly, in Re Taylor (z), where a testator bequeathed money to build and keep up an almshouse on a particular piece of land not in mortmain, and to maintain the inmates and pay any surplus income to poor persons as outdoor pensioners, it was held by Kay, J., that the gift of the surplus income was void for uncertainty.

But if the position of things is reversed, and the primary purpose is only intended to require a small part of the fund, so as to leave a substantial surplus for the secondary purpose, the gift of the surplus is good, and the only question is what it consists of. Formerly the principle was considered to be, that in such a case an estimate should be made of the amount required for the primary purpose, and that the balance should be applied to the secondary purpose (a). It is possible that this principle may still be applicable where the secondary purpose is not charitable, but where it is charitable the rule is now settled that if the primary purpose is illegal, the whole fund is given to the secondary purpose. This rule was first established by the decision in Fisk v. Att.-Gen. (b): there the testatrix bequeathed 1,000*l.* to the rector and churchwardens of a parish and their successors upon trust to apply such part of the dividends as should from time to time be required in keeping in repair her family grave, and to pay or divide the residue of the said dividends at Christmas in every year for ever, among the aged poor of the parish. Wood, V.-C., held that the rector and churchwardens took the whole fund for the charitable purpose discharged from the illegal trust. This decision has been criticized, but has never been overruled, and the rule may now be considered as settled that where a fund is given to trustees upon trust to apply the income in keeping a tomb in repair, and as to the remainder of the income for a charitable purpose, the result of the trust for the repair of the tomb being illegal is that is substantial.

Where residue

(y) In Chapman v. Brown, "there was nothing to prevent the whole of the residue from being applied to the building of the chapel": per Jessel, M.R., in Re Birkett, 9 Ch. D. at p. 580.

(z) 58 L. T. 538.

(a) In the fourth edition of this work the decisions were examined at length: it has not been thought necessary to repeat Mr. Vincent's remarks in this edition, as the law is now settled, at all events so far as courts of first instance are concerned.

(b) L. R., 4 Eq. 521. The decision of Romilly, M.R., in Fowler v. Fowler, 33 Bea. 616, is inconsistent with the later cases and may be disregarded. It will be noted that in that case the M.R., if unhampered by authority, would have decided the case in accordance with the principle established by Fisk v. Att.-Gen.

CHAPTER XIV. the whole of the income becomes applicable for the charitable purpose (c).

Charitable gifts, when void for uncertainty.

Although the Courts always strive to give effect to charitable gifts, and never hold them void for uncertainty in the object (d), yet a charitable gift may be void if it is impossible to ascertain the amount of the fund required to give effect to it (e).

III.—Uncertainty as to Objects of Gift.—"Uncertainty in regard to the objects of gift," as Mr. Jarman points out (f), "arises either from the testator having described such objects by a term of vague and unascertained signification, or from his having specified a definite class or number of persons, but having shown that all are not to take, and then left it in doubt which of them he intended to select as the object or objects of his bounty. Examples of both kinds will be found in the sequel. It has been often laid down that if a devise be to one of the sons of J. S. (he having several sons), the devise is void for uncertainty, and cannot be made good (g). And if a man devise to twenty of the poorest of his kindred, this is void for the uncertainty who may be adjudged the poorest (h)." So where the devise was "to the testator's brother and sister's family," and the testator had two sisters, the devise was held void (i); and a bequest "to and amongst my nephews and nieces John and Nanny" (followed by a blank), or to such of them as should be living at the death of "the tenant of life," was held void for uncertainty, because although by using the plural number, "nephews and nieces," the testator showed he meant to include more than one of each sex, yet by his apparent intention to name those whom he intended for legatees, it was made doubtful whether he meant to include all (j).

Blank left for names.

(c) Re Rogerson, [1901] 1 Ch. 715, following Fisk v. Att.-Gen. (supra); Dawson v. Small, L. R., 18 Eq. 114; and Re Birkett, 9 Ch. D. 576. See also Hunter v. Bullock, L. R., 14 Eq. 45; Re Williams, 5 Ch. D. 735; Champney v. Davy, 11 Ch. D. 949; Re Vaughan, 33 Ch. D. 187; and Re Taylor, 58 L. T. 538, where Kay, J., expressed his concurrence with Jessel, M.R., in the criticism of Fisk v. Att.-Gen., made by the latter judge in Re Birkett.

(d) Post, p. 480.

(e) Flint v. Warren, 15 Sim. 626; stated in Chap. XXXV.

(f) First ed. p. 322.

(g) See Strode v. Lady Falkland, 2 Vern. 624, 625. So "one of my sisters to be executrix," In bonis Blackwell, 2 P. D. 72; Russell v. Russell, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 377; In bonis Baylis, 2 Sw. & T. 613.

(h) Webb's Case, 1 Roll. Ab. 609, (D) 1; et vid. Scrope's Case, 49 Ed. 3, pl. 4, cited 2 Bulst. 180, nom. Morris and Maule.

(i) Doe d. Hayter v. Joinville, 3 East, 172; and see Doe d. Smith v. Fleming, 2 C. M. & R. 638.

(j) Greig v. Martin, 5 Jur. N. S. 329. See however the cases in Chap. XLII. A bequest to nephews and nieces may be void for uncertainty if it appears that the testator did not mean nephews and nieces: M'Hugh v. M'Hugh, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 155.

But in Blackburn v. Stables (k), a devise "for the sole use and benefit of a son of J. B.," who had no son born during the testator's lifetime, but whose wife was at the testator's death pregnant of a son, was held good. So a devise to "one of my cousin N.'s daughters that shall marry with a Norton within fifteen years," was held good, apparently on the ground that the testator meant the daughter who should first marry a Norton (l). A gift in favour of "one child of A." or "a son of A." may appear from the context to mean the eldest (or only) child of A. (m). And a gift "to the family of Gregory" is not void for uncertainty, if the person whom the testator intended to designate by the name of Gregory can be identified (n).

CHAPTER XIV.
Devise to "a son of A."

Gift "to the family of A."

In the case above put of a gift to "one of the sons of J. S.," he having several sons, parol evidence is not admissible to remove the uncertainty, because the uncertainty is apparent on the face of the will, "the terms of which suppose the existence of more than one son, and moreover shew that the testator had not determined which of them to make the object of his bounty" (o). If, however, the gift is to "the son of my brother A.," and it appears that A. has two or more sons, extrinsic evidence is admissible in the first instance to shew whether the testator had reasons for preferring one son, and if no such evidence is forthcoming, evidence is admissible to shew which son the testator intended to benefit (p).

Uncertainty caused by extrinsic facts.

The same rule applies where the gift is to "John Smith," or "the children of John Smith," and there are two John Smiths known to the testator (q). It is, of course, assumed that there is nothing on the face of the will to shew which John Smith was intended; if so there is no uncertainty. Thus, in Healy v. Healy (r), there was a gift to "my nephew Joseph Healy," and another gift to "Joseph Healy, only son of my brother Joseph"; the testator had two nephews named Joseph Healy, one the son of his brother James, and the other

Latent ambiguity.

(k) 2 V. & B. 367. The basis of the decision was that the gift was rendered certain by the event. Ashburner v. Wilson, 17 Sim. 204, was decided on the ground that the testator meant the first-born son.

(l) Bate v. Amherst, T. Raym. 82. This ground did not save the gift in Smithwick v. Hayden, 19 L. R. Ir. 490, from being held void: there the gift was to "any" female relative who married in accordance with the provisions of the will.

(m) Powell v. Davies, 1 Bea. 532; Ashburner v. Wilson, 17 Sim. 204; Wilson v. Wilson, 1 De G. & S. 152.

(n) Gregory v. Smith, 9 Ha. 708; Commissioners, &c. v. Deey, 27 L. R. Ir. 289. As to the meaning of "family" see Chap. XLI.

(o) Note by Mr. Jarman (first ed. p. 322). "No person in particular is intended by the will": Wigram, pl. 209.

(p) See Chap. XV.

(q) Lord Cheyney's Case, 5 Rep. 68b; Re Stephenson, [1897] 1 Ch. 75, and other cases cited in Chap. XV.

(r) Ir. R., 9 Eq. 418. Compare Doe v. Morgan, and Doe v. Westlake, stated in Chap. XV.

CHAPTER XIV.

Gift to class except a person not named.

Mistake in number of class.

the son of his brother Joseph; it was held that the will itself shewed that "my nephew Joseph Healy" meant the son of James.

Again, a gift to a class, with the exception of one person of the class, who is not named, or cannot be ascertained, is not void, but takes effect in favour of the whole class (s). And where a testator, after devising property to his daughter A. in fee, and if she die under twenty-five without leaving any children, then over, gave other property on trust to be conveyed equally amongst "such" children of A., the context not showing what limit was intended to be put on the class of children, it was held that all took (t). So a gift to the testator's "aforesaid nephews and nieces," none having been previously named, was held to include all (u); and a bequest to the children of A., "including who the illegitimate of" A., was held, on the same principle, to be a good bequest to the legitimate children of A. (v), but to include no illegitimate child (w).

Where a testator gives a legacy to each of the children of A., and describes them as consisting of a specified number, which is less than the actual number at the date of the will, this misstatement is disregarded (x). The same rule is sometimes applied to other classes or descriptions of persons. Thus, in Lee v. Pain (y), under a bequest to the three sisters of A., the four sisters of A. were held to be entitled. And where a testator bequeathed "to the surgeon and resident apothecary of the Dispensary at B.," and to other persons, and amongst them the "surgeons" of other dispensaries, 19l. 19s. each, "or any who may hold the like situations at my decease," and it appeared that at the B. dispensary there was no apothecary, but two surgeons and a dispenser, those persons were each held entitled to a legacy of the specified amount (z). The general principle is that "if the Court comes to the conclusion, from a study of the will, that the testator's real intention was to benefit the whole of a class, the Court should not, and will not, defeat that intention because the testator has made a mistake in the number he has attributed to that class. The Court rejects an inaccurate enumeration" (a).

(s) Illingworth v. Cooke, 9 Hare, 37.

(t) Hope v. Potter, 3 K. & J. 206.

(u) Campbell v. Bouskell, 27 Beav. 325. The word "aforesaid" was thus rejected, the M.R. preferring that course to construing the gift as made to nephews and nieces by mistake for grandchildren, who were previously named.

(v) Gill v. Bagshaw, L. R., 2 Eq. 746.

(w) Mason v. Bateson, 26 Beav. 404.

(x) Post, Chap. XLII.

(y) 4 Ha. 249.

(z) Ellis v. Bartrum, 25 Bea. 109.

(a) Per Lindley, L.J., in Re Stephenson, [1897] 1 Ch. at p. 83.

CHAPTER XIV.

Devise to three, "the one to be heir to the other."

As an example of a devise being void for uncertainty, Mr. Jarman cites a case (b) "where one having three sons, J., E., and W., and lands in three counties, devised the lands in A. to J., the lands in B. to E., and the lands in C. to W.; and added, that if any of his said sons died, then the one of them to be heir unto the other. A., the eldest son, having died, the land devised to him was claimed by the other two; but the Court (the Chief Justice doubting) decided that nothing passed by the clause in question, as it was not certain what issue should have it. Some stress was laid on the fact that the original devise conferred only an estate for life.

"On the other hand, where (c) the testator devised to his eldest son Blackacre, to his second son Whiteacre, and to his third son Greenacre, in tail; and further willed that, in case any of his said sons should die without issue, the survivor to be each other's heir. The eldest son died without issue; and the question was, whether one or both the surviving brothers should have Blackacre? And the Court, on the first hearing of the case, was in great doubt; but it was afterwards holden that the surviving brothers were joint tenants; and, although the word 'survivor' was in the singular number, yet, in sense, upon the whole matter it should be taken and construed as for the plural number: (survivor should be each other's heir) i.e. each survivor, i.e. all the survivors.

"An instance of a bequest held void for uncertainty on account of the vague use of the word 'survivors' occurs in a case (d), where the words were, 'I give to my executors the sum of 1,000*l.* upon trust to be invested in the funds of the Bank of England, during the lives of the survivors or survivor, for the widows of John Sayce and Thomas Draper, to be divided between them, share and share alike.' It was contended for the two legatees that the words 'survivors or survivor' applied to the executors, and did not affect the gift to the widows, who, therefore, were absolutely entitled: but Sir J. Leach, M.R., observed that it was impossible

(b) First ed. p. 323, the case being Wood v. Ingersole, 1 Bulst. 61; s. c., but ill-reported, Cro. Jac. 260; see also Pollexf. 482; Hill and Baker's Case, cited 1 Bulst. 63; and see Saville, 92, 93.

(c) Hambledon v. Hambledon, 3 Leon. 262, Cro. El. 164, Owen, 25; see also Brook, title, Devise, pl. 38.

(d) Hoffman v. Hankey, 3 My. & K.

376. "Although the similarity of expression seemed, in some degree, to connect this with the preceding case, yet it rather belongs to the class of cases in which bequests have been held to be void on account of the uncertainty as to the extent of interest the gift was intended to comprise." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

CHAPTER XIV. to put any rational construction upon the bequest, which, therefore, was void for uncertainty."

In Hudson v. Bryant (e), the testator gave his property to his wife, and in the event of it being more than she wanted to live on, desired her to give the remainder to his daughters : and directed the money to be put in some bank trust as may be thought best "for her and those in trust": it was held that there was an intestacy after the widow's death.

Power of disposition void for uncertainty.

In Re Hetley (f) a testator appointed his wife sole executrix, and after giving her all his property for life, proceeded as follows : "And I desire and empower her by her will or in her lifetime to dispose of my estate in accordance with my wishes verbally expressed by me to her." It was held by Joyce, J., that parol evidence could not be admitted to shew what the testator's verbally expressed wishes were, and that the power of disposition given to the widow was void for uncertainty. The learned judge declined to extend the doctrine illustrated by Re Fleetwood (g).

Where gift is partly charitable.

On the same principle, where property is given to trustees for purposes which are partly charitable and partly of an indefinite nature not charitable, so that the whole might be applied for either purpose, the gift is void (h).

Gift wholly charitable.

A gift which is wholly charitable is never void for uncertainty in the object (i).

Trusts which fail from uncertainty.

The rules applying to cases in which property is given to trustees upon trusts which are too uncertain to be given effect to, are discussed elsewhere (j).

Words of reference.

Uncertainty is sometimes caused by the use of relative pronouns or words of reference; as where a testator gave property to his wife for life and after her death to M., "niece to my said wife. Item, I give the use of 500*l.* stock for and during her natural life": it was held on the context, that "her" referred to the wife (k).

A gift "amongst my relations hereafter named," where none are subsequently named, is void for uncertainty (l).

"The said."

The phrase "the said" generally refers to the immediate antecedent, but it is a question of construction on the whole will, and therefore if there are separate gifts to two persons each named A. B., and a subsequent reference to "the said A. B.," this may mean the one first named, if the context so requires.

(e) 1 Coll. 681, ante, p. 464.

(f) [1902] 2 Ch. 866.

(g) 15 Ch. D. 594, post, p. 496.

(h) Ante, p. 229.

(i) Ante, p. 226.

(j) Post, p. 481, and Chap. XXIV.

(k) Castledon v. Turner, 3 Atk. 257.

(l) Crampton v. Wise, 58 L. T. 718.

In such a case, the position in the will of the name of the legatee may prevent uncertainty. Thus, in Fox v. Collins (m), where legacies were given to S. C., A. C. of St. Ives, and S. B., and then a legacy to A. C. of Hereford, and others, and the residue was given "to the said S. C., A. C., and S. B.," it was held, that under the last gift A. C. of St. Ives was entitled, partly on the ground that the word "said" applied to the three persons taken together, and that in the previous part of the will A. C. of St. Ives was named between S. C. and S. B.

CHAPTER XIV.

Uncertainty avoided by position of name in will.

"Uncertainty," says Mr. Jarman (n), "is sometimes produced by the mention of several objects alternatively, as in the case of a gift to A. or B. (o).

Gift to several alternatively.

"In the early case of Beal v. Wyman (p), where a question arose on these words, viz., 'I give and bequeath one half of my lands to my wife, and, after her death, I give all my lands to the heirs males of any of my sons or next of kin'; it was contended that the words 'heirs males of any' of his sons were words certain enough to create an estate, for it was all one as if he had said, 'to the heirs males of all his sons, if they have heirs males, or to those who have heirs males (q)'; and the words, 'or to the next of kin,' were also certain

To "heirs males of any of my sons or next of kin."

(m) 2 Ed. 107. See also Doe v. Westlake, 4 B. & Ald. 57; Healy v. Healy, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 418.

(n) First ed. p. 324. No authority is cited by Mr. Jarman for the proposition that a simple gift to "A. or B." is void for uncertainty, nor, so far as the editor is aware, has the point ever been decided, but on principle the statement would seem to be correct. In Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124, Grant, M.R., said: "You must make some addition to the bequest: otherwise it would be void for uncertainty. A bequest to A. or B. is void; but a bequest to A. or B. at the discretion of C. is good, for he may divide it between them." Post, Chap. XVI. And in Re Sibley's Trusts (5 Ch. D. 494), Jessel, M.R., said: "There are authorities which shew that when you find a gift in a will to A. or B. that word 'or' is to have some meaning, and it is to have a meaning which depends upon what A. or B. really consists of. You cannot lay down a priori that the gift to A. or B. has any particular meaning; you must first of all know what A. and B. are." But the M.R. did not here have in mind the case of a simple gift to two individuals in the alternative. According to the civil law the rule appears to have been the other way: see Carey v. Carey, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 255 (post, p. 476). In In bonis Bradford, 72 L. T. 267, effect was given to an appointment of "B. or F." as executors, on the theory that the testator intended to appoint "B., or him failing, F."

(o) "In the case of a gift to several persons alternatively, there is a fatal uncertainty unless the secondly named person can be considered as intended to be substituted for the first in some event, or unless the word 'or' can be changed into 'and,' which has been often vexata quæstio. (See Chap. [XVIII.]") (Note by Mr. Jarman.) (p) Styles, 240, 2 Danv. 514, pl. 4; and see Marwood v. Darrel, Lee's Ca. t. Hard. 91.

(q) "Such, it is probable, would now be held to be the construction of this devise. The other question, on the words 'sons or next of kin,' is more difficult. Probably they would be construed as meaning 'my sons, or such other persons as may happen to be my next of kin.'" (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

CHAPTER XIV.

enough, being joined with the preceding words, and should be meant to the next of kin and their heirs males, if his sons had no heirs males : for in a will, if there be words to express the meaning of a testator, it is sufficient, though the words be not apt. On the other side, it was argued that this devise was void ; for it appeared not what heir male should have the land, whether the heir male of his son, or the heir male of his next of kin, for the words were disjunctive ; and the Court seems to have inclined to this opinion, but how the case was ultimately disposed of does not appear.

To " next of kin or heir at law."

" So, in Lowndes v. Stone (r), where a testator, by an unattested will, gave the remainder of his estate to his next of kin or heir at law. The personalty was claimed by the next of kin and the heir respectively ; the latter contending that the testator used the term ' heir at law ' as explanatory of the former expression, meaning ' such next of kin as shall be my heir at law.' Lord Loughborough, ' You have a fair retort upon each other. On the one side it is contended that " next of kin " means " heir at law " ; on the other, that " heir at law " means " next of kin." It must be distributed according to the statute.'

To A. " or his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns."

" Again, in Waite v. Templer (s), where a testator, resident in India, bequeathed a share of his personalty to A., ' who resided at L. when I left England, or to his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns for ever' ; Sir L. Shadwell, V.-C., held that A., having died in the testator's lifetime, the legacy failed, his Honor being of opinion that the additional words were too uncertain to create a substitutional gift."

Substitutional gift created by word " or."

There are, however, several cases in which " or " has had the effect of making the latter branch of a gift substitutional.

Thus, in Carey v. Carey (t), a testator directed that a certain fund should be distributed share and share alike between his son R. and his nephew E. or his nephew P. ; it was held that " or " could not be read " and," but that it imported substitution, namely that P. was only to take in the event of E.'s death ; consequently, E. having survived the testator, the fund went in equal moieties to R. and E.

(r) 4 Ves. 649. And see 7 Sim. 363. Lord Loughborough's expressions are hardly reconcilable with the notion (2 K. & J. 735) that he construed the words as implying heirship according to the nature of the property, and as intimating an intention that the rule of the statute should prevail. According to Jessel, M.R., the decision turned on the use of the word " heir at law " in the singular : Re Thompson's Trusts, post.

(s) 2 Sim. 524 ; see also Stone v. Evans, 2 Atk. 86 ; Graftley v. Humpage, 1 Bea. 46, post, Chap. XLI. Waite v. Templer was approved by Lord Brougham in Gittings v. M'Dermott, 2 My. & K. 69, but disapproved of by Lord St. Leonards, 3 H. L. Ca. 557.

(t) 6 Ir. Ch. Rep. 255.

The earlier part of the will contained a devise of real estate to R., and in case he died under twenty-one then to E., and in case he died under twenty-one then to P., but this does not seem to have influenced the decision.

The question whether "or" imports substitution arises most frequently in cases where the latter part of the gift is in favour of a class of persons related to the original devisee or legatee, such as "issue," "children," "heirs"; as, for example, where the gift is "to A. or his issue," or "to A. or in case of his death to his issue." The tendency of the modern cases is to construe such a gift as intended to substitute the issue for the original devisee or legatee in the event of the latter dying in the testator's lifetime (u).

In Re Delmar Charitable Trust (v), Stirling, J., doubted the accuracy of the general proposition that a gift in a will to A. or B. is primâ facie to be treated as a substitutional gift to B. in case A. cannot take the benefit which is intended for him. "Undoubtedly," said the learned judge, "there are many cases in which it has been decided that a gift to A. or B. is substitutional, and that conclusion has been arrived at more particularly in cases where the gift is in favour of A. or his children. A typical example is the case of Carey v. Carey (w) which was referred to in the argument, and which I have carefully considered since; but that case (and as it appears to me all the others which I have examined), was decided on a consideration of the whole will, and all the circumstances which can be taken into consideration upon the construction of a will."

Limitations
of rule as to construction
of "or."

Sometimes "or" is used by a testator to shew that he uses two phrases to mean the same thing. Thus, in Re Thompson's Trusts (x), where, after a life estate to A., a testator directed his real and personal estate to be sold, and the proceeds paid, "one-third to the heirs or next of kin of B. deceased, one-third to the heirs or next of kin of C. deceased, one-third to the heirs or next of kin of D. deceased"; Jessel, M.R., held that the testatrix meant not to make an alternative gift, but that the terms "next of kin" and "heirs" should apply to one class; consequently the statutory next of kin were entitled (y).

Synonymous construction of "or."

(u) Montagu v. Nucella, 1 Russ. 165; Turner v. Moor, 6 Ves. 557; Re Coley, [1901] 1 Ch. 40; Re Roberts, [1903] 2 Ch. 200, and other cases referred to post, Chaps. XVIII., XXXVI., and XLII.

(v) [1897] 2 Ch. 163. As to the so-called "alternative" construction of the word "or" which was adopted in this case, see post, Chap. XXXVI.

(w) Supra, p. 476.

(x) 9 Ch. D. 607.

(y) As to the construction of the word "heirs" when used in gifts of personal estate, see Chap. XL.

CHAPTER XIV.

Reference to uses of other estates, there being more than one.

Uncertainty sometimes arises from property being devised to the same uses as the testator's "other" estates, of which there are several, that are devised to different uses (z). It may also be occasioned by the testator's apparent misapprehension of the law regulating the devolution of property; as in Thomas v. Thomas (a), where a testator, after charging his real and personal estate with the payment of his debts, and giving it to his wife during widowhood, after her decease or marriage willed that all his real and personal estate "be divided according to the statute of distribution in that case made and provided"; and it was held that the real estate did not pass to the next of kin under this clause, the Court thinking it not clear that the testator intended the real estate to be distributed according to the Statutes of Distribution regarding personalty, but that he must have referred to some statute which he supposed applied to real estate.

No objection that beneficiary is to be ascertained by future act of testator.

"Id certum est quod certum reddi potest," Mr. Jarman remarks (aa), "is a rule no less applicable to the objects than (as we have seen) it is to the subjects of disposition; and, therefore, it is no objection to a gift that it is so framed as to make the objects dependent upon some extrinsic circumstance, though it be an act performed, or even to be performed, by the testator himself in his lifetime. As in Stubbs v. Sargon (b), where a testatrix directed her trustees to dispose of and divide the proceeds of certain property unto and amongst her partners, who should be in copartnership with her at the time of her decease, or to whom she might have disposed of her said business, in such shares and proportions as her said trustees should think fit and deem advisable. It was objected that the gift was void for uncertainty; but it appearing that the testatrix was, at the date of her will, in partnership with certain persons, to some of whom, conjunctively with another person, she, on the dissolution of such partnership, disposed of her business, Lord Langdale, M.R., [and on appeal, Lord Cottenham,] held that these latter persons were those among whom the trustees were to divide the property in such shares as they might deem advisable."

How far discretion may be given to trustees.

Another illustration of the same principle is to be found in the case of a trust for a class of persons which is valid, although the

(z) Leslie v. Duke of Devonshire, 2 Br. C. C. 187; Re Buckley, 8 T. L. R. 181. See Re Smith, 45 L. T. 246. The extreme complication of the beneficial trusts declared by a testator does not prevent the legal estate from passing to the trustees: Barclay v. Collett, 6 Scott., 408.

(a) 3 B. & Cr. 825.

(aa) First ed. p. 326.

(b) 2 Kee. 258, 3 My. & Cr. 507.

shares and interests which they are to take are left to the discretion of the trustees (c). But the class must be limited or defined in some way, for if property is given to trustees to be distributed or disposed of in such manner as they think fit, this is a discretion which cannot be controlled by the Court, and there is a resulting trust for the persons entitled in default of disposition. The trustees cannot take beneficially, because the form of the gift implies that they are to exercise their discretion for the benefit of other persons (d).

Mr. Jarman continues (e) : " In many cases devised to several persons successively have been contended to be void on account of the uncertainty respecting the order in which the objects are to take (f). Where the devise is to several specified individuals in succession, the obvious rule is, to hold them to be entitled in the order in which their names occur. If it be to a class of persons, (constituted such in virtue of birth (g)), as to children, sons, or brothers (h), then priority according to seniority of age may be presumed to be intended (i). And the circumstance of a condition being imposed on the devisees has been held not to vary the order in which they are successively entitled.

Gift to several successively, 'not saying in what order.'

" Thus, where (j) a testator devised to A. and his brothers successively, but not to be entered on or enjoyed until one month after their marriages, it was held that the devise was not (as contended) void for uncertainty ; for as the testator named A. first, who was the eldest son, the word ' successively ' implied that the estate was to go to his next brother after him ; and the Court agreed that the clause about marriage made no alteration in the exposition of the will, but only added a restriction to the devise, which before was general ; and, therefore, if the second son had married before the eldest, yet he could not have taken.' "

On the other hand, in Thomason v. Moses (k), where the bequest

(c) See the cases on discretionary trusts, cited in Chap. XXIV. ; and such cases as Re Conn, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 337, ante, p. 459.

(d) See Stubbs v. Sargon, Fowler v. Garlike, Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood, and other cases, cited post, p. 481.

(e) First ed. p. 327.

(f) See an instance of a limitation in a deed held to be void on account of uncertainty of this nature, Windsmore v. Hobart, Hob. 313.

(g) " This qualification, though it may sound strangely, seems requisite in order to exclude from the position in the text gifts to some other classes, such as executors." (Note by Mr. Jarman in the first ed.)

(h) Ongley v. Peale, 2 Ld. Raym. 1312, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 358, pl. 8 ; Young v. Sheppard, 10 Beav. 207.

(i) See Eastwood v. Lockwood, L. R., 3 Eq. 487, 495, where " next survivor according to seniority " was held on the context to mean next younger ; and Crofts v. Beamish, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 349.

(j) Ongley v. Peale, supra.

(k) 5 Beav. 77. See Prestwidge v. Groombridge, 6 Sim. 171, where effect was given to an extremely vague gift in favour of the testatrix's nephews in order of seniority.

CHAPTER XIV. was of the interest of a sum of money to the testator's father for life, then to his brother for life, and then to be continued to the testator's next nearest heir, and so on, and neither the father nor the brother was the testator's heir, the gift of the fund after the death of the brother was held void for uncertainty.

Where intended object cannot be identified, gift is void for uncertainty.

It must be remembered that with respect to charities gifts may be good, which, with respect to individuals, would be void. We have seen that charitable bequests are not void for uncertainty in the object (l); and where there are two charities of the same name, the legacy will be divided between them, or administered cy-près, if it cannot be ascertained which was the intended object (m). In the case of individuals, the gift would be void for uncertainty. The rule has occasionally been disregarded. Thus, in Hare v. Cartridge (n), the gift was "to my first cousins, the children of my father's brother of the name of Cartridge"; the father had two brothers of the name of Cartridge, both of whom had children, and the gift was held by Shadwell, V.-C., to take effect in favour of the children of both brothers, apparently on the ground that the testator had shewn an intention to benefit all his first cousins on the father's side, and that consequently the words "the children of my father's brother" were surplusage. As was remarked in the third edition of this work (o): "the decision seems opposed to all the other authorities on this subject." It was disapproved by the Court of Appeal in Re Stephenson (p). There the testator gave his property "unto the children of the deceased son (named Bamber) of my father's sister share and share alike." There were three deceased sons, all named Bamber, of the sister of the testator's father, and this fact was known to the testator: it was held that the gift was void for uncertainty.

Parol evidence.

Where a testator gives property to a person by a particular name or description, and it is found that there were at the date the will two persons answering to that name or description, parol evidence is admissible to shew which of them was intended (q).

(l) Ante, p. 226. It will be remembered that a gift for several purposes may be void for uncertainty, although some of the purposes are charitable; ante, p. 229.

(m) Waller v. Childs, Amb. 524; Bennett v. Hayter, 2 Beav. 81; Simon v. Barber, 5 Russ. 112; Re Clergy Society, 2 K. & J. 615; Re Alechin's Trusts, L. R., 14 Eq. 230; Re Barnard,

7 T. L. R. 73.

(n) 13 Sim. 167.

(o) By Messrs. Wolstenholme and Vincent, p. 348.

(p) [1897] 1 Ch. 75. It seems that evidence of intention would have been admissible: see Estate of Hubbuck, [1905] P. 129; post, p. 523.

(q) Chap. XV.

IV. Trusts and Powers.—With regard to trusts, the general rule is thus stated by Mr. Jarman^(r): “ Sometimes a testator distinctly shews an intention to create a trust, but does not go on to denote with sufficient clearness who are to be its objects ; the effect of which obviously is, that the devisees or legatees in trust (whom we suppose to be distinctly pointed out) hold the property for the benefit of the person or persons on whom the law, in the absence of disposition, casts it : in other words, the gift takes effect with respect to the legal interest, but fails as to the beneficial ownership.

CHAPTER XIV.

Effect where trust created, but object uncertain.

“ As in Stubbs v. Sargon (s), where a testatrix indorsed a promissory note for 2,000*l.* to Mrs. Sargon, which she accompanied with a letter, declaring the note to have been given to Mrs. Sargon for her sole use and benefit, independent of her husband, for the express purpose of enabling her to present to either branch of her (the testatrix’s) family any portion of the principal or interest, as she might consider the most prudent ; and, in the event of the death of Mrs. Sargon, by that bequest the testatrix empowered her to dispose of the said sum and interest by deed or will to those or either branch of her family she might consider most deserving ; and that to enable her (Mrs. Sargon) to have the sole use and power of the said sum of 2,000*l.* due by the above note of hand, she had specially indorsed the same in her favour. Lord Langdale, M.R., was of opinion, that the promissory note was not indorsed and delivered to Mrs. Sargon for her own absolute use, but for the purpose of the money secured by it being disposed of by her to such parts or members of the testatrix’s family as were intended to be thereby designated. Unfortunately, the letter was so expressed, that the objects could not be ascertained ; and the trust being too indefinite for the Court to act upon, the 2,000*l.* must be treated as part of the testatrix’s personal estate. On appeal, Lord Cottenham was of the same opinion ” (t).

Stubbs v. Sargon.

In Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood (u), one of several testamentary papers contained the following words : “ In a codicil to my will, I gave to the corporation of Gloucester 140,000*l.* In this I wish that my executors would give 60,000*l.* more to them for the same purpose as I have before named.” No codicil or testamentary paper containing any gift to the corporation could be found ; and it was decided by Sir J. Wigram that neither legacy Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood.

(r) First ed. p. 333.

(s) 2 Kee. 255, 3 My. & Cr. 507. See also Harland v. Trigg, 1 Bro. C. C. 142 ; Doe v. Joinville, 3 East, 172 ; Robinsonv. Waddelow, 8 Sim. 134, stated post, Chap. XLI.

(t) 3 My. & Cr. 507.

(u) 3 Hare, 131.

CHAPTER XIV.

could be supported as a gift to the corporation for their own use (though he admitted that a gift to A. "for a purpose" may sometimes be equivalent to a gift to A. absolutely), nor as a general charitable legacy (though it was improbable that a corporation was intended to hold in trust for a private person): the purposes of the gift were therefore uncertain, and the corporation were trustees for the residuary legatees. This decision was affirmed in the House of Lords (v).

Where gift in trust though discretionary.

So if the gift be expressly "in trust," though to be disposed of in such manner and for such purposes as the donees think fit, they are trustees, and the beneficial interest results to the heir or next of kin (w): and a gift "to be expended and appropriated in such manner as the donees, or a majority of them, shall in their discretion agree upon," without the words "in trust," would probably produce the same result (x).

In Buckley v. Buckley (y), a gift of residue to trustees to be applied "to meet contingencies which may be caused by vacancies, repairs, or casualties in my family," was held void for uncertainty.

Precatory and undefined trusts.

The question of uncertainty often arises in connection with precatory trusts, and trusts without definite objects, both of which topics are considered in another chapter (z). It may however be useful to notice some distinctions which have been drawn.

Uncertainty in subject.

1. A testator may express a clear intention to create a trust, and yet his intention may fail to take effect, because he has not defined the subject-matter of the trust with sufficient certainty (a).

Uncertainty in subject and object.

2. "Wherever the subject to be administered as trust-property, and the objects for whose benefit it is to be administered, are to be found in a will not expressly creating trust, the indefinite nature and quantum of the subject, and the indefinite nature of the objects, are always used by the Court as evidence that the mind of the testator was not to create a trust" (b).

(y) 1 H. L. Ca. 272, and see Aston v. Wood, L. R., 6 Eq. 419.

(w) Fowler v. Garlike, 1 R. & My. 232. See also Buckle v. Bristow, 10 Jur. N. S. 1095.

(x) Per Wood, V.-C., Buckle v. Bristow, supra. The doctrine laid down by Sir W. Grant in Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 V. & B. 294, is erroneous: see Ellis v. Selby, 1 Myl. & C. 294; Buckle v. Bristow, supra; Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo, L. R., 6 P. C. 381; Fenton v. Nevin, 31 L. R. Ir. 478.

(y) 19 L. R. Ir. 544.

(z) Chap. XXIV.

(a) Abraham v. Alman, 1 Russ. 509;

Lechmere v. Lavie, 2 My. & K. 197; Horwood v. West, 1 Sim. & St. 387; Ex parte Payne, 2 Y. & C. 636. Some of the cases referred to in the earlier part of this chapter (ante, pp. 455 seq.) were decided on this ground.

(b) Per Lord Eldon in Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 10 Ves. at p. 536; Harland v. Trigg, 1 Br. C. C. 142; Knight v. Boughton, 11 Cl. & F. 513; per Bowen, L.J., in Re Diggles, 39 Ch. D. 257, cited post, Chap. XXIV. The scope of the doctrine was examined by Wood, V.-C., in Bernard v. Minshull, John. 276.

3. A testator may shew an intention, either by mandatory or precatory words, that a person to whom he has given property by his will is to hold it upon trust for objects who are not ascertained: in such a case, although the intention of the testator cannot be carried out, yet the trust is not without effect. "Suppose, for instance, that by the precatory words in the will, the donee is requested to apply property, the amount of which is ascertained, 'for the benefit of—,' . . . there would be uncertainty enough as to the object, and yet such a trust would be created as would effectually exclude the donee from applying the property to his own use" (c). The effect of such a trust is considered in another chapter (d).

CHAPTER XIV.

Where object only is uncertain.

With regard to powers, the question of uncertainty arises chiefly Powers. in those cases where a person is empowered to appoint property among the "family" or "relations" of a person: the decisions on this point are referred to in the chapter on Powers (e). A power may also be void for uncertainty because the objects are not defined at all (f).

(c) Per Wood, V.-C., in Bernard v. Minshull, John. at p. 286.

(d) Chap. XXI.

(e) Chap. XXIII. See also Harland v. Trigg, 1 Bro. C. C. 142; Williams v.

Williams, 1 Sim. N. S. 358, both referred to in Chap. XLI.

(f) Re Hetley, [1902] 2 Ch. 866, referred to in Chap. XXIII., and ante, p. 474.

CHAPTER XV.

PAROL EVIDENCE, HOW FAR ADMISSIBLE.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Inadmissible to explain Contents of Will	484	V. Admissible to explain Technical Terms, Foreign Words, Nicknames, &c.	501
II. Admissible to reconcile Inconsistency in Will ...	490	VI. When the State of Facts at the Date of the Will may be regarded	503
III. Admissible to shew Insertion of Words or Execution of Will through Mistake or Fraud	492	VII. Admissible to identify Subject or Object of Gift ...	508
IV. Admissible to prove or repel Trusts, Double Portions, &c.	495	VIII. Ambiguity—Evidence of Intention	516

Parol evidence inadmissible to control will.

I.—Inadmissible to explain Contents of Will.—“As the law requires wills both of real and personal estate (with an inconsiderable exception (a)) to be in writing, it cannot, consistently with this doctrine, permit parol evidence to be adduced, either to contradict, add to, or explain the contents of such will; and the principle of this rule evidently demands an inflexible adherence to it, even where the consequence is the partial or total failure of the testator’s intended disposition; for it would have been of little avail to require that a will ab origine should be in writing, or to fence a testator round with a guard of attesting witnesses, if, when the written instrument failed to make a full and explicit disclosure of his scheme of disposition, its deficiencies might be supplied, or its inaccuracies corrected, from extrinsic sources. No principle connected with the law of wills is more firmly established or more familiar in its application than this; and it seems to have been acted upon by the judges, as well of early as of later times, with a cordiality and steadiness which shew how entirely it coincided with their own views. Indeed, it was rather to have been expected that judicial experience should have the effect of impressing a strong conviction of the evil of offering temptation to perjury” (b).

There are numerous cases in which the Courts have refused

(a) Ante, p. 102.

(b) First ed p. 349. Mr. Jarman, it is clear, would not have approved the decision in Re Fleetwood, post, p. 496.

to admit parol evidence to contradict the express terms of a will (c). But where a will contains an erroneous recital or statement of fact, parol evidence is sometimes admissible to contradict it (d). CHAPTER XV.

The application of the general principle stated by Mr. Jarman was much discussed in the case of Higgins v. Dawson (e), where it was contended that parol evidence of the state of the testator's property, at the time he made his will, was admissible to explain what he meant by words which in themselves were unambiguous, and capable of being construed without extrinsic aid. The evidence was therefore disregarded. The decision proceeded on the fundamental distinction between evidence simply explanatory of the words of the will themselves (as in Fonnereau v. Poyntz (f), Colpoys v. Colpoys (g), and other cases cited in a subsequent part of this chapter (h)), and evidence sought to be applied to prove intention itself as an independent fact.

On the same principle, evidence was not admissible, under the old law, to prove that a testator's personal property was insufficient to satisfy the dispositions of his will, and thus to shew an intention on his part to exercise a general power of appointment (i).

Among the older cases cited by Mr. Jarman in support of the general proposition laid down by him is Strode v. Lady Falkland (j); letters and oral declarations of the testator being offered to prove the intention to include a reversion in the words, "All other my lands, tenements, and hereditaments, out of settlement," it was unanimously agreed by Lord Cowper, C.J., Trevor, M.R., T. Trevor, C.J., and Tracy, J., that this kind of evidence could not be admitted, for that where a will was doubtful and uncertain, it must receive its construction from the words of the will itself; and no parol proof or declaration ought to be admitted out of the will to ascertain it.

Letters and oral declarations of testator rejected.

So, in Brown v. Selwin (k), (which is a leading authority), where the testator having bequeathed the residue of his personal estate

Evidence of mistake by person who drew the will rejected.

(c) Hampshire v. Peirce, 2 Ves. sen. 216; Lowfield v. Stoneham, 2 Stra. 1261; Horwood v. Griffith, 4 D. M. & G. 708; Barrs v. Fewkes, 34 L. J. Ch. 522; Smith v. Conder, 9 Ch. D. 170 (cited post, p. 500); Re Aird's Estate, 12 Ch. D. 291 (post, Chap. XVI.; Wigram on Wills, 5; Re Boyd, 63 L. T. 92.

(d) See Re Taylor's Estate, Re Kelsey.

(e) Re Grainger, [1900] 2 Ch. 756; [1902] A. C. 1, stated post, p. 507.

(f) 1 Bro. C. C. 42.

(g) Jac. 451.

(h) Post, p. 507, 516. See also Re Glassington, [1906] W. N. 128.

(i) See Andrews v. Emmot, 2 Br. C. C. 297, and other cases cited in Chap. XXIII.

(j) 3 Ch. Rep. 98. See also Cheyney's case, 5 Rep. 68; Vernon's case, 4 Rep. 4; Lawrence v. Dodwell, 1 Ld. Raym. 438; Bertie v. Falkland, 1 Salk. 232; Towers v. Moor, 2 Vern. 98; Bennet v. Davis, 2 P. W. 316; Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. 189; Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 374; Parmiter v. Parmiter, 1 J. & H. 135.

(k) Cas. t. Talb. 240, s.c. sub nom. Selwin v. Brown, 3 B. P. C. Toml. 607, CHAPTER XV. to two persons, whom he appointed his executors, and one of whom was indebted to him by bond, it was attempted to be proved by the evidence of the person who drew the will, that he received the testator's written instructions to release the bond debt by the will, but that he refused to do so, under the impression that the appointment of the obligor to be one of the executors extinguished the debt: Lord Talbot held the evidence to be inadmissible; and his decree was affirmed in the House of Lords.

But a distinction has been established between such cases as Selwin v. Brown, and cases where the testator has, during his lifetime, independently of his will, shewn an intention to forgive a debt due to him by an executor, and it has been held that evidence is admissible to prove this intention (l).

Parol evidence of mistake.

It is explained elsewhere that if, by the mistake of the person who prepares or copies the will, a particular clause is inserted contrary to the intention of the testator, and his attention is not drawn to it, evidence of the fact is admissible, and if it is proved, the passage may be omitted from the probate (m). If, however, the testator knows the contents of his will, and erroneously supposes that it will not have the effect which the law gives it, the general rule applies, and evidence of his real intention is not admissible (n).

Devise inadvertently omitted cannot be supplied.

Mr. Jarman continues (o): "A fortiori, parol evidence is not admissible to supply any clause or word which may have been inadvertently omitted by the person drawing or copying the will.

"Thus, in the much discussed case of The Earl of Newburgh v. Countess of Newburgh (p), where a testator gave instructions to his

(l) Strong v. Bird, L. R., 18 Eq. 315; Re Applebee, [1891] 3 Ch. 422; Re Hyslop, [1894] 3 Ch. 522, post, p. 498.

(m) Ante, p. 30, and post, p. 492. So if the will is wrongly dated the error may be corrected: Reffell v. Reffell, L. R., 1 P. & D. 139.

(n) In the previous editions of this work the leading case in support of the proposition stated in the text (Walpole v. Cholmondeley, 7 T. R. 138; s. c. Lord Walpole v. Lord Orford, 3 Ves. 402) is discussed at length. The general principle is so well settled that the present editor has not thought it necessary to reprint Mr. Jarman's observations. The cases are referred to ante, pp. 32, 190, 194.

(o) First ed. p. 353.

(p) "5 Mad. 364. In Langston v. Langston, 8 Bli. 167, 2 Cl. & Fin. 194, a nice question of construction arose, in consequence of the omission of a line by the person copying the will for signature; and Lord Brougham called for and inspected the draft, with a view of informing himself of this fact, in spite of the protestations of the appellant's counsel. Its inadmissibility, however, was admitted by his Lordship, who, in his judgment, emphatically disclaimed all reliance on or influence from the information derived from this source. Perhaps, however, the principle which excludes such evidence was somewhat infringed by the inspection of the draft will, even with the disclaimer; for in such cases who can venture to affirm that his mind has not received a bias, by allowing the inadmissible evidence to have access to it?" (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

The principle laid down in Newburgh v. Newburgh was acted on in Sullivan v. Sullivan, Ir. R., 4 Eq. 457 (probate case).

solicitor to prepare a will, by which his wife was to take an estate for life in lands in the counties of Sussex and Gloucester. The solicitor prepared the draft, and laid it before a conveyancer to settle, by whom it appeared that the word 'Gloucester' had inadvertently been struck out, and the person who made the fair copy of the settled draft changed the word 'counties' into 'county'; and the will, therefore, omitted altogether the estate for life in the lands in the county of Gloucester. When the will was executed, the abstract of the will (which agreed with the instructions given by the testator), and not the will itself, was read to the testator, so that the mistake remained undiscovered. The widow filed a bill, praying to have the will corrected on this evidence; but Sir J. Leach, V.-C., refused it, because, admitting it to be clearly made out that the mistake existed, the Court had no authority to correct the will according to the intention. The will, executed with that omission, was certainly not the will of the deviser; and so it must be found by a jury upon the facts stated as to the Gloucester estate; but the Court could not, for that reason, set up the intention of the testator, which by mistake he had been prevented from carrying into execution, as if he had actually executed that intention in the forms prescribed by the Statute of Frauds. To assume such a jurisdiction would, in effect, be to repeal the Statute of Frauds in all cases where a testator failed to comply with the statute by mistake or accident. His Honor added, that he was willing to direct an issue, whether this was the will of the testator as to the Gloucester estate; and upon this issue the evidence tendered would be admissible (q). No such issue was asked. The case was afterwards reheard before the V.-C., when it was suggested, on the result of the conveyancer's evidence, that there was no omission in the will, but that the error was owing to the introduction of a passage which he had at first written, but afterwards struck through with a pen; but which had been copied by mistake in the fair will: and it was contended, therefore, that there ought to be an issue, to try whether those words so introduced by mistake were part of the will. The V.-C. thought that, if such a case had been originally

(q) Mr. Jarman here interpolates the following remark in parenthesis: "The reporter states that a case was cited at the bar, on the authority of Lord C. B. Richards, in which Lord Eldon had sent it to the jury upon the same description of facts." But Lord St. Leonards says (Law of Prop. 207) it could not be maintained that the omission of the word "Gloucester" in the particular devise would render the whole will void as to the Gloucester estate: because although the will did not contain all that the testator intended as to this estate, it contained in the actual devise of it nothing but what he did intend. The case was ultimately decided in D. P. upon the construction of what still appeared on the face of the will. Law of Prop., p. 367.

CHAPTER XV.

made, they would have been entitled to such an issue (r) ; but that, as it was opposed to the allegations on the record, he could not entertain it. The case was carried to the House of Lords, where the question, whether parol evidence was admissible to prove such mistake, for the purpose of correcting the will and entitling the appellant to the Gloucester estate, as if the word ' Gloucester ' had been inserted in the will, was submitted to the judges, who declared their unanimous opinion to be, that the evidence was not admissible " (s).

Construction not to be influenced by parol evidence of actual intention.

" It is clear," continues Mr. Jarman (t), " that parol evidence of the actual intention of a testator is inadmissible for the purpose of controlling or influencing the construction of the written will, the language of which must be interpreted according to its proper acceptation, or with as near an approach to that acceptation as the context of the instrument and the state of the circumstances existing at the time of its execution (which, as we shall presently see, forms a proper subject of inquiry), will admit of. No word or phrase in the will can be diverted from its appropriate subject or object by extrinsic evidence, showing that the testator commonly (u), or, on that particular occasion (v), used the words or phrase in a sense peculiar to himself, or even in any general or popular sense, as distinguished from its strict and primary import."

The rule as thus stated, must, however, as pointed out by Mr. Jarman (w) be taken subject to the qualification that it " supposes the existence of an appropriate subject or object ; otherwise it should seem evidence would be admissible of the testator having

(r) See as to the distinction here suggested, post, p. 492. Upon this Lord St. Leonards remarks—" This is a dangerous jurisdiction : for although no doubt the striking out of the two lines would have made the will what the testator directed, yet those lines, though inaccurate, were introduced in order to carry the instructions for the will into legal operation. It might on the same ground be contended that a mistake in a legal limitation made through carelessness or ignorance could be corrected by striking out the words improperly introduced." Law of Prop., p. 197. See also Harter v. Harter, L. R., 3 P. & D. 11 ; In bonis Davy, 1 Sw. & Tr. 262, 29 L. J. Prob. 161, 5 Jur. N. S. 252 ; Rhodes v. Rhodes, 7 App. Ca. (P. C.) 192. Moreover the effect of striking out the words in Newburgh v. Newburgh, would be the opposite of that in the decided cases : it would create a devise and not an intestacy. Per Sir J. Wigram, Wills, pl.

183, n. And see Stanley v. Stanley, 2 J. & H. 502.

(s) 1 M. & Sc. 352. See Wade v. Nazer, 12 Jur. 188.

(t) First ed. p. 358.

(u) See per Parke, B., Shore v. Wilson, 9 Cl. & Fin. 558 ; Crosley v. Clare, 3 Sw. 320, n. ; Millard v. Bailey, L. R., 1 Eq. 378.

(v) Mounsey v. Blamire, 4 Russ. 384 ; Green v. Howard, 1 Br. C. C. 31 ; Strode v. Russell, 2 Vern. 625 ; Barrow v. Methold, 1 Jur. N. S. 994 ; Knight v. Knight, 2 Giff. 616, is contra ; but the rule as stated in the text is firmly settled. See v. Pain, 4 Hare, 251, post ; Douglas v. Fellows, Kay, 118.

(w) First ed. p. 358, n. See also the rule as stated by Wood, V.-C., in Bernasconi v. Atkinson, 10 Ha. p. 348. As to the case of Beaumont v. Fell, 2 P. W. 141, cited by Mr. Jarman in support of the suggested exception to the general rule, see post, p. 513.

commonly described the object (and why not the subject also?), by the terms used in the will." Thus if a testator bequeaths a legacy to Percy the son of A. B., and A. B. has a son named Percy, evidence is not admissible to shew that the testator really intended the legacy for another son named Herbert; but if A. B. has no son named Percy, evidence is admissible to shew that A. B. had a son Herbert, commonly known as "Bertie" and from that fact the Court may infer that he was the person intended by the testator (x). In Barrow v. Methold (y), a testator, being possessed of a policy of assurance in the R. A. Company for 1,000*l.*, on which a bonus of 400*l.* had lately been declared, bequeathed to his wife "the premium of assurance with the R. A. Company." It was held by Wood, V.-C., that the word "premium" must be read as meaning "bonus," and that evidence was not admissible to shew that by the word "premium" the testator meant "policy"; if, however, there had been no bonus the case would have been different.

Evidence is also admissible in certain cases to explain words which have a peculiar, technical or local meaning (z).

Subject to these qualifications the rule is of general application.

Thus, in Doe d. Brown v. Brown (a), it was held that a devise of copyhold lands could not be extended to freeholds, by the production of evidence shewing that the testator had so described them in a deed executed by him, the will itself furnishing no distinct indication that the testator meant to give what was conveyed by the deed, and there being copyhold lands to satisfy the devise.

So, in Doe d. Chichester v. Oxenden (b), (which is a leading authority), where a testator devised his "estate of Ashton, in the county of Devon"; and evidence was adduced to shew that the testator was accustomed to distinguish by the appellation of his "Ashton estate" the whole of his maternal estate, including property in several contiguous parishes; the Court of Common Pleas, notwithstanding this evidence, held that only the property in the manor of Ashton passed; Sir James Mansfield observing, that this would give the will an effectual operation, and herein the "Copyhold" not extended to freeholds by parol evidence.

Extent of "estate of Ashton" not enlarged by extrinsic evidence.

(x) Re Hooper, 88 L. T. 160. As to the use of nicknames, &c., see post, p. 502.

(y) 1 Jur. N. S. 994.

(z) Post, p. 501.

(a) 11 East, 441. See Hughes v. Turner, 3 My. & K. 666, where Sir C. Peyps, M.R., held that a revoked will could not be looked at for the purpose of influencing the construction of the subsequent unrevoked instrument. See also M'Leroth v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 165; Randall v. Daniel, 24 Beav. 193. These cases must be distinguished from those in which a revoked will can be referred to for the purpose of correcting a mistake in the description of a legatee, &c., post, p. 512.

(b) 3 Taunt. 147. This case seems to have settled a point left in doubt by Whitbread v. May, 2 B. & P. 593.

CHAPTER XV. case differed from all others in which such evidence had been received: for in them, without it, the devise would have had no operation; and it was, he said, safer not to go beyond the line. This decision was affirmed in D. P. on the unanimous opinion of the judges (c); and the principle of it has been since repeatedly recognised. Thus, in Doe d. Browne v. Greening (d), the Court of K. B., on its authority, rejected evidence offered to shew that, under a devise of lands "at Coscomb," it was intended to include lands near Coscomb.

Construction of words not varied by evidence of actual intention. So, in Doe d. Tyrrell v. Lyford (e), where the testator devised lands at Sutton Wick, in the Parish of Sutton Courtney, which he purchased of S., the same Court would not allow it to be proved by extrinsic evidence that he intended to include certain pieces of ground not in the hamlet of Sutton Wick, but parcel of the estate purchased of S., and in the parish of Sutton Courtney.

Evidence to shew meaning in which testator used name. But cases of this kind must be distinguished from those cases in which a testator uses a general name to designate a property made up of parts, some of which do not properly answer the description. Such are the cases of Doe v. Jersey (f), and Ricketts v. Turquand (g), discussed in later sections of this chapter (h).

Words of will are those of the testator. The Courts always assume that the language of a will is the language of the testator. Even where, as is generally the case, the language of the will is not that of the testator, but is proposed to him by his professional adviser, by executing the will he adopts its language, and the words must therefore be taken to be his (i). Parol evidence that a will was or was not drawn by a skilled person is not admissible, though any evidence on the point apparent on the face of the will may be considered in construing it (j). But if the will contains technical terms of law, the technical is the primary meaning (k).

Words may be diverted from their primary acceptance by inconsistency of context. II.—Admissible to reconcile Inconsistency in Will.—Mr. Jarman continues (l): "If, however, the context of the will presents

(c) 4 Dow, 65, s. n. Doe d. Oxenden v. Chichester.

(d) 4 M. & Sel. 171. See also Evans v. Angell, 26 Beav. 202. But as to the meaning of "at," see Homer v. Homer, 8 Ch. D. 758.

(e) 4 M. & Sel. 550. See also Doe d. Preedy v. Holton, 5 Nev. & M. 391; King v. King, 13 L. R. Ir. 531. As to Collison v. Gurling, 4 My. & C. 63, 9 Cl. & Fin. 88 (Collison v. Curling), see Wigr. Wills, 43, 48 n., 4th ed.

(f) 3 B. & Cr. 870.

(g) 1 H. L. C. 472.

(h) Post, pp. 491, 510.

(i) Per Wood, V.-C., in Bernasconi v. Atkinson, 10 Ha. at p. 349. See Weale v. Olive, 32 Bea. 423; Rhodes v. Rhodes, 7 A. C. 199; Parker v. Felgate, 8 P. D. 171; Re Dayrell, [1904] 2 Ch. 496.

(j) Richards v. Davies, 13 C. B. N. S. 69, 861.

(k) Theellusson v. Rendlesham, 7 H. L. C. 449, 486; Leach v. Jay, 9 Ch. D. 42; Re Fraser, [1904] 1 Ch. 111.

(l) First ed. p. 361.

an obstacle to the construing of the terms of description in their strict and most appropriate sense, a foundation is thereby laid for the admission of evidence shewing that they are susceptible of some more popular interpretation, which will reconcile them with, and give full scope and effect to, such seemingly repugnant context.

“ To this principle, it is conceived, may be referred the important and much discussed case of Doe d. Beach v. Earl of Jersey” (m). In that case a testatrix, after reciting a power reserved to her by her settlement, on her marriage with G. V. P., devised, subject to the estate for life of her husband therein, all that her Briton Ferry estate, with all the manors, advowsons, messuages, buildings, lands, tenements, and hereditaments thereto belonging, or of which the same consisted. In a subsequent part she added : “ Also I give my Penlline Castle estate, which, as well as my Briton Ferry estate, is situate, lying, and being in the county of Glamorgan,” &c. A claim was laid under this devise to certain lands which were neither in the parish of Briton Ferry nor in the county of Glamorgan, but in a parish in the county of Brecon. It appeared by special verdict that the Glamorganshire lands contained 30,000 acres, part whereof consisted of the messuage and lands in the parish of Briton Ferry, comprising the whole of the parish ; and that the Brecon lands contained 4,000 acres : that there were six advowsons, of which the advowson of the parish of Briton Ferry was one, and one manor, and one undivided sixth of another manor in Glamorgan, and that there was no manor of Briton Ferry. Objections were made to the reception of certain evidence, consisting of old account-books, in which was the following entry : “ Briton Ferry Estate in the county of Brecon ” ; and of proof that the lands in question, together with the other property, had all gone by the name of the Briton Ferry estate. Abbott, C.J., delivered the opinion of the judges, namely, that the words “ all that my Briton Ferry estate, with all the manors, &c.” found in the will of this testatrix, in which mention also was made of “ her Penlline Castle estate,” denoted a property or estate known to the testatrix by the name of her Briton Ferry estate, and not an estate locally situate in a parish or township of Briton Ferry (n), and consequently that a question arising upon any particular tenement was properly a question of

Devise of the “Briton Ferry
Estate.”

(m) 3 B. & Cr. 870; post, p. 510.

(n) The same case had previously been before the Court of K. B. on a somewhat different point; and there Bayley, J., said it was clear that the devise could not be confined to that part of the estate which was within the parish of Briton Ferry, for the testatrix spoke of manors and advowsons, and in that part of the estate there was no manor and only one advowson; the devise, therefore, must extend to the whole of the Briton Ferry estate : 1 B. & Ald. 558.

CHAPTER XV.

parcel or no parcel, and they therefore thought the several matters offered to be proved and given in evidence on the part of the defendant were admissible and ought to have been received. However, on account of an imperfection in the special verdict, the House of Lords awarded a venire de novo.

Words
"thereunto belonging."

So, in Doe d. Gore v. Langton (o), it was contended that the words "thereunto belonging" must be taken in their primary sense, the consequence of which would be to exclude the lands in question by reason of the words being correctly applicable in every particular to other lands. But the Court of K. B. thought that it was to be collected from the face of the will itself, that the testator had not used the disputed words in their primary sense (p), and held that extrinsic evidence was therefore admissible to shew in what sense he had used them. Lord Tenterden, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court said: "The extrinsic facts in this case leave no room to doubt that the testator intended his newly-acquired property to pass by his will as part of his Barrow estate; but, nevertheless, it cannot pass unless that meaning can be collected from the will itself; and there are two clauses in the latter part of the will which appear to manifest that intention, and to be sufficient to authorize us to put such a construction on the words thereunto belonging as will accord with, and give effect to, that intention."

Clause improperly introduced into will may be rejected on issue devisa-vit vel non.

III.—Admissible to shew Insertion of Words or Execution of Will through Mistake or Fraud.—In cases of mistake the authorities seem to have established this distinction (q), "that though you cannot resort to parol evidence to control the effect of words or expressions which the testator has used, by shewing that he used them under mistake or misapprehension, nor to supply words which he has not used, yet that you may, upon an issue devisavit vel non, prove that clauses or expressions have been inadvertently introduced into the will, contrary to the testator's intention and instructions, or, in other words, that a part of the executed instrument is not his will. In support of this doctrine may be adduced the case of Hippesley v. Homer (r), where a testator, having, by his will dated in 1800, devised his estate to certain limitations, by a codicil made in 1804, after empowering one of the devisees for life to make a jointure and charge portions for children, made certain variations in the (o) 2 B. & Ad. 680.

(p) 2 B. & Ad. 693.

(q) So stated by Mr. Jarman, first ed. p. 355. See the distinction suggested by Leach, V.-C., in Earl of Newburgh v. Countess of Newburgh, ante,

p. 488.

(r) T. & R. 48 n. See also Powell v. Mouchett, 6 Mad. 216; Lord Trimles-town v. D'Alton, 1 D. & Cl. 85; Lord Guillamore v. O'Grady, 2 Jo. & Lat. 210.

limitations in the will, and gave certain additional powers of management to his trustees. The bill alleged, that the testator executed the codicil upon the representation and in the belief that it contained nothing but powers to the devisee for life to make a jointure and charge portions for children, and prayed that it might be set aside. The facts charged were admitted by the answer. Issues were directed—First, as to whether the testator did, by a paper writing, purporting to be a codicil to his will, devise in manner following: (Then follow the words of the codicil, by which only the powers of jointuring and charging portions were conferred). Secondly, whether the testator did, by the said codicil, devise in manner following: (Here was set forth the remaining part of the codicil). The jury found that the part of the codicil which was the subject of the second issue did not constitute the will of the testator; and that the part of the codicil which was the subject of the first issue did constitute the will of the testator. Whereupon the Court (not being able to direct the instrument to be delivered up, as part of it was good), declared that so much of the codicil as did not constitute the will of the testator was void.”

Under the modern practice, the question whether words have been introduced into a will by mistake is often considered by the Court of Probate, and if it is found that they do not form part of the will, the Court directs them to be omitted from the probate (s). The right words, however; cannot be inserted (t), although a clear mistake as to the name or residence of an executor may be corrected in order to avoid difficulties with banks, companies, &c. (u). And in Birks v. Birks, where a testator executed a new will, intending it to be a copy of his old will, with one clause omitted, parol evidence was admitted to shew that other parts had been omitted by mistake, and both wills were admitted to probate in order to rectify the mistake (v).

Probate practice.

When a will has been proved, evidence is not admissible in a

(s) In bonis Duane, 2 Sw. & Tr. 590; In bonis Oswald, L. R., 3 P. & D. 162; Fulton v. Andrew, L. R., 7 H. L. 448; Rhodes v. Rhodes, 7 App. Ca. at p. 198; Morrell v. Morrell, 7 P. D. 68; Farrelly v. Corrigan, [1899] A. C. 563; Brisco v. Baillie Hamilton, [1902] P. 234. See Karunaratne v. Ferdinandus, [1902] A. C. 405, where the nature of the evidence required to justify the Court in omitting words from probate was discussed.

(t) In bonis Schott, [1901] P. 190, overruling In bonis Bushell, 13 P. D.

7, and In bonis Huddleston, 63 L. T. 255. See also Sullivan v. Sullivan, Ir. R., 4 Eq. 457; In bonis Walkeley, 69 L. T. 419; In bonis Durlacher, 75 L. T. 664. As to omitting words by consent of all parties see In bonis Boehm, [1891] P. 247; In bonis Schott, [1901] P. 190.

(u) In bonis Honeywood, [1895] P. 341; In bonis Baskett, 78 L. T. 843; In bonis De Rosaz, 2 P. D. 66; In bonis Cooper, [1899] P. 193.

(v) 4 Sw. & Tr. 23.

CHAPTER XV. Court of Construction to shew that certain words contained in the probate copy were inserted in the original will by mistake (w).

Execution of wrong instrument; —of a pretended will; Parol evidence is admissible in the Court of Probate to shew that a document duly executed as a will was never intended to operate as the will of the deceased; as, if two persons, intending to make their wills, each by mistake executes the document prepared for the other (x): or to shew that a document was not intended to be testamentary, but only as a contrivance to effect some collateral object, e.g., to be shewn to another person to induce him to comply with the pretended testator's wish (y). In both these cases the animus testandi is wanting. So extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove that an incomplete will was intended to revoke a complete will of earlier date (z), or to shew what papers constitute the will, and for this purpose declarations made by the testator, whether before or after the execution of the will, are admissible (a). But if

—of a duplicate. probate is granted of two documents which are identical, or nearly identical, parol evidence is not admissible in the Court of Construction to shew that the later was intended to be a duplicate of the earlier one, and not a distinct instrument (b).

Presumptions as to testator's knowledge of contents of his will. The execution of a will by the testator is primâ facie proof that he knew and approved its contents (c), and if a testator knows that certain words are contained in his will and executes it under a mistaken belief as to their effect, they stand as part of the will (d). If a testator reads over his will, or has it read over to him, he is presumed to know its contents unless it can be shewn that the will was not read over in a proper way (e).

Mistake corrected by Court of Construction. Cases have occurred in which, after a will has been proved, the Court of Construction has arrived at the conclusion that a word forming part of the description of a person or thing has been inserted by mistake, and that a person or thing to which the description does not apply was intended to be referred to by the testator (f).

(w) Re Bywater, 18 Ch. D. 17.
(x) In bonis Hunt, L. R., 3 P. & D. 250; Estate of Meyer, [1908] P. 353.

(y) Lister v. Smith, 3 Sw. & Tr. 282.
(z) Jenner v. Finch, 5 P. D. 106; Estate of Bryan, [1907] P. 125; ante, p. 176.

(a) Gould v. Lakes, 6 P. D. 1.
(b) Wilson v. O'Leary, L. R., 7 Ch. 448. The decision in Hubbard v. Alexander, 3 Ch. D. 738, is obviously erroneous: the question whether the testator meant the legacies to be cumulative or substitutional must be decided by the wording of the will and codicils, with evidence of the state of facts. See Robley v. Robley, Coote v. Boyd, Whyte v. Whyte, and other cases cited in Chap. XXX. In Doe v. Strickland, 8 C. B. 724, the will was a will of realty under the old law.

(c) Beamish v. Beamish, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 7.

(d) Guardhouse v. Blackburn, L. R., 1 P. & D. 109; Collins v. Elstone, [1893] P. 1.

(e) Fulton v. Andrew, L. R., 7 H. L. 448; Garnett-Botfield v. Garnett-Botfield, [1901] P. 335.

(f) Post, p. 512.

Mr. Jarman continues (g): "Parol evidence is also admissible for the purpose of counteracting fraud; for to reject it in such case would be to make a rule, whose main object is to prevent injustice, instrumental in producing it. As in Doe d. Small v. Allen (h), where it appeared that the testator, upon being pressed by some persons to execute a second will, inquired if it were the same as the former; and being told that it was, executed the will, which turned out to be different. The Court of King's Bench held that evidence of these facts ought to have been received. 'I agree,' said Lord Kenyon, 'that the contents of a will are not to be explained by parol evidence; but, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds, evidence may be given to shew that a will was obtained by fraud; and the effect of the evidence offered in this case was to shew that one paper was obtruded on the testator for another which he intended to execute.'" And as a charge of fraud may be supported, so it may be rebutted by evidence of this nature. Thus, in Doe v. Hardy (i), where the defence to a claim under a codicil to the testator's will was, that the codicil was a forgery; an objection was made to the receipt of evidence offered by the plaintiff of declarations by the testator, that he intended the lessor of the plaintiff should have the property. But Littleale, J., thought the declarations of the testator were admissible to shew his intentions where the defence was either fraud, circumvention, or forgery.

CHAPTER XV.

Rule in cases of fraud.

One will surreptitiously obtruded for another.

If A. fraudulently induces a testator to include in his will a legacy or other provision in A.'s favour, probate will be granted of the rest of the will (j).

If a testator is induced by the fraud of A., the residuary legatee, to omit from his will a provision in favour of B., it seems that the Court of Probate may declare A. to be a trustee for B (k). A Court of Equity has no jurisdiction (l).

Whether person obtaining will by fraud is a trustee for persons defrauded.

IV.—Admissible to prove or repel Trusts, Double Portions, &c.—Mr. Jarman continues (m): "Another illustration of the principle occurs in the case suggested by Lord Eldon in Stickland v.

Promise by heir or devisee to testator enforced.

(g) First ed. p. 356.

(h) 8 T. R. 147,

(i) 1 Moo. & R. 525.

(j) Farrelly v. Corrigan, [1899] A. C. 563.

(k) See Mitchell v. Gard, 3 Sw. & Tr. 75; Betts v. Dougherty, 5 P. D. 26.

(l) Allen v. M'Pherson, 1 H. L. C.

191; Meluish v. Milton, 3 Ch. D. 27. An attempt to invoke the jurisdiction was made in Re Birchall, 44 L. T. 243, but there the defendant was executor and trustee of the will: the attempt failed in the absence of evidence of fraud.

(m) First ed. p. 356.

CHAPTER XV. Aldridge (n), 'of an estate suffered to descend, the owner being informed by the heir, that, if the estate is permitted to descend, he will make a provision for the mother, wife, or any other person, there is no doubt equity would compel the heir to discover whether he did make such promise. So, if a father devises to the youngest son, who promises that, if the estate is devised to him, he will pay 10,000*l.* to the eldest son, equity would compel the former to discover whether that passed in parol; and, if he acknowledged it, even praying the benefit of the statute, he would be a trustee to the value of 10,000*l.*'

"And it is clear that, in such a case (and this, indeed, is the point which is chiefly material here), if the trust were denied by the heir or devisee, it might be proved aliunde" (o).

Trust apparent on will.

In the cases cited by Mr. Jarman, the existence of a trust was not disclosed on the face of the will, but the principle applies also to those cases where the gift appears by its terms to be wholly or partially upon trust (p).

Re Fleetwood.

In Re Fleetwood (q), a testatrix bequeathed to B. her personal estate, "to be applied as I have requested him to do." Before the execution of the will the testatrix communicated to B. her wishes with regard to the disposition of the property. Hall, V.-C., upon the authority of decisions made before the Wills Act (which requires a will of personalty to be in writing), and of an Irish case, Riordan v. Banon (r), held that evidence of the parol trust thus communicated was admissible, and that the trust was valid against the next-of-kin. The correctness of the decision seems to have been questioned by Farwell, J., in Re Huxtable (s), but no doubt on this point was felt by the Court of Appeal (t). In that case a testatrix bequeathed 4,000*l.* to C, "for the charitable purposes agreed upon between us"; the Court of Appeal held that evidence was admissible to shew what the charitable purposes were, but not to shew that they were only to continue during the life of C.

Doctrine does not apply to powers.

The doctrine laid down in Re Fleetwood does not apply to powers. Accordingly in Re Hetley (u), where the testator gave his property to his wife for life, and empowered her to dispose of it "in accordance (n) 9 Ves. 519. See also Drakeford v. Wilks, 3 Atk. 539. The question of undisclosed trusts is also discussed in Chap. XXIV.

(o) See Oldham v. Litchford, 2 Vern. 506; Chester v. Urwick, 23 Beav. 407; Proby v. Landor, 28 Beav. 504; McCormick v. Grogan, L. R., 4 H. L. 82; Norris v. Frazer, L. R., 15 Eq. 318, and other cases cited in Chap. XXIV.

(p) Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 644; Irvine v. Sullivan, L. R., 8 Eq. 673; and other cases cited in Chap. XXIV.

(q) 15 Ch. D. 594.

(r) Ir. R., 10 Eq. 469.

(s) [1902] 1 Ch. 214.

(t) [1902] 2 Ch. 793.

(u) [1902] 2 Ch. 867.

with my wishes verbally expressed by me to her," it was held by Joyce, J., that evidence could not be admitted to shew what these wishes were, and that there was consequently an intestacy, subject to the widow's life interest. CHAPTER XV.

It is also clear that the doctrine in question does not allow a testator to create a trust by an unattested paper not incorporated in the will, and not communicated to the devisee or legatee during the testator's lifetime. Thus, where a testator by his will gave all his property to C. absolutely, and died without having communicated to C. any directions as to its disposal, but after the testator's death an unattested paper was found expressing the testator's wish that C. should hold the property as trustee for B. ; it was held by Sir E. Kay, J., that no valid trust in favour of B. was created ; and C. admitting himself to be only a trustee, he was declared to be trustee for the next-of-kin (v).

"It seems, too," says Mr. Jarman (w), "that parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of rebutting a resulting trust ; as in such case, it does not contradict the will, its effect being to support the legal title of the devisee against, not a trust expressed (for that would be to control the written will), but against a mere equity arising by implication of law" (x). But the doctrine in question is anything but clear. In Gladding v. Yapp (y), where it was contended that a direction to keep accounts made the executrix a trustee, Leach, V.-C., stated the rule thus : "Parol evidence is not admissible to contradict a will, and if the will contain express declarations that the executor is to be a trustee, evidence cannot be received against the effect of that declaration ; but if there be no express declaration of trust in the will, and only circumstances which afford inference or presumption of trust in the executor, there parol evidence is admissible to answer that inference or presumption." And in Croome v. Croome (z), Stirling, J., held that parol evidence was not admissible to rebut a resulting trust. Whether parol evidence is admissible to repel a resulting trust.

If a testator appoints his debtor as his executor, although this operates as a release of the debt at law, in equity the debt remains for the benefit of the testator's legatees. But this equity may be Imperfect release or gift to executor.

(v) Re Boyes, 26 Ch. D. 531.

(w) First ed. p. 357.

(x) Mallabar v. Mallabar, Cas. t. Talb. 79.

(y) 5 Madd. 56 ; Barrs v. Fewkes, 34 L. J. Ch. 522.

(z) 59 L. T. 582 ; 61 L. T. 814. The Court of Appeal and House of Lords held that there was no resulting trust, and consequently the point as to evidence became immaterial. See post, Chaps. XXI., XXIV.

CHAPTER XV. rebutted by evidence that the testator during his lifetime forgave the debt, without legally releasing it. Thus in Strong v. Bird (a), a testatrix appointed A. her executor. Some years before, A. had borrowed money from the testatrix, part of which he repaid. He alleged that she had forgiven him the balance, and adduced evidence which satisfied the Court that she intended to do so, and thought she had done so. It was held that as the appointment of A. as executor operated as a release of the debt at law, the intention of the testatrix to release it made the release complete in equity also.

On the same principle, if a testator makes an imperfect gift of personal property to A. in such a way as not to pass the property at law, but shewing a complete intention to do so, and appoints A. his executor, this makes the gift effectual (b).

It is immaterial whether the donee is sole executor, or one of several (c).

Parol evidence admissible to support claim of executor to residue against Crown.

Presumption raised by legacy to sole executor,

On the principle above stated, parol evidence was, under the old law, admissible to support the claim of an executor (now taken away by the Executors Act, 1830) to the undisposed of residue of a testator's personal estate, against the presumption in favour of the next-of-kin created by a legacy to the executor (d), and is still admissible in cases where a testator leaves no next-of-kin, so that there is a contest between the executor and the Crown. In such cases, the general rule is that the executor shall have "the undisposed of residue" (that is, all personal estate which is not disposed of, or attempted to be disposed of, by the will (e)), unless there is a strong presumption to the contrary. A legacy to him (specific or pecuniary), affords that presumption (f), but it is not so strong as to deprive

(a) L. R., 18 Eq. 315. Re Applebee, [1891] 3 Ch. 422; Re Hyslop, [1894] 3 Ch. 522; ante, p. 486.

(b) Re Griffin, [1899] 1 Ch. 408; Re Stewart, [1908] 2 Ch. 251.

(c) Ibid.

(d) The question is discussed in detail in Roper on Legacies, 4th ed., 1685 seq. Only the most important rules are here referred to. As to the effect of an express gift of the residue to an executor, see Chap. XXI.

(e) Consequently he does not take property comprised in a bequest which lapses or is void (Androvin v. Poilblanc, 3 Atk. 299; Bennet v. Batchelor, 3 Br. C. C. 28; A.-G. v. Tomkins, Ambl. 216), or property given to the executor upon a trust which is void or fails (Powell v. Merrett, 1 Sm. & G. 381; Dacre v. Patrickson, 1 Dr. & S. 182; Johnstone

v. Hamilton, 11 Jur. N. S. 777; Chester v. Chester, L. R., 12 Eq. 444): or upon trusts which are not declared (Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 295; Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Sim. 8; Vezey v. Jamson, 1 S. & St. 69; Cradock v. Owen, 2 Sm. & G. 241; Read v. Stedman, 26 Bea. 495; Chester v. Chester, L. R., 12 Eq. 444).

(f) Nourse v. Finch, 1 Ves. jun. 344; s. c., s. n. Hornsby v. Finch 2 Ves. jun. 78; Southcot v. Watson, 3 Atk. 226; Seley v. Wood, 10 Ves. 71; Oldman v. Slater, 3 Sim. 84; and Lynn v. Beaver, T. & R. 63 (three cases of reversionary legacies); Zouch v. Lambert, 4 Br. C. C. 326 (life interest to testator's wife); Dicks v. Lambert, 4 Ves. 725 (same case). As to a contingent reversionary interest, see Jones v. Westcomb, Prec. Ch. 316; Lynn v. Beaver, T. & R. 63. The executor's him of the opportunity of proving, by parol evidence, that the testator intended him to take the residue beneficially (g). Where there are two or more executors, a similar presumption is raised by the fact that pecuniary legacies of equal amount are given to all of them, but not where the legacies are unequal; or where there are legacies to some and not to others (h); or where, although equal pecuniary legacies are given to all the executors, other interests in the personal estate are given them by the will, which result in their taking unequal beneficial interests (i). It seems that the presumption would arise if the executors took equal interests in the personalty, but unequal interests in the real estate (ii).

It may appear from the general tenour of the will, or from the terms in which the executor is appointed, that he is "only named for the sake of executing the will, and to have the trouble and not any benefit" (j). Again, if the testator "manifests an inchoate intention to appoint a residuary legatee," but fails to do so, this raises a presumption that the executor was not intended to take the residue for his own benefit, which may be rebutted by parol evidence (k). But if the testator gives a legacy to the executor (or to one of several executors) "for his care" or "for his trouble," or gives the residue upon a trust which fails, or clearly intends to create a trust although he does not do so, then it appears on the face of the will that the executor was intended to take the office only (l), and parol evidence to shew that he was intended to take

CHAPTER XV.

—or equal legacies to several executors.

Intention to exclude executor shewn in other ways.

claim to the residue is not affected by a devise or bequest to his wife: Wilson v. Ivat, 2 Ves. sen. 166; Fruer v. Bouquet, 21 Bea. 33.

(g) Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. jun., 465; Langham v. Sanford, 2 Mer. 6. But if the legacy is given by way of exception out of another bequest, or as a particular interest (Griffith v. Rogers, Pr. Ch. 231; Beaufort v. Granville, 3 Bro. P. C. 37; Newstead v. Johnston, 2 Atk. 45), no presumption arises against the executor's claim. Where the presumption arises, it is not rebutted by the fact that legacies are given to the next-of-kin: Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425; Dicks v. Lambert, 4 Ves. 725; Farrington v. Knightly, 1 P. W. 544.

(h) Saltmarsh v. Barrett, 3 D. F. & J. 279; Cradock v. Owen, 2 Sm. & G. 241; Re Hudson's Trusts, 52 L. J. Ch. 789; Bowler v. Hunter, 1 Br. C. C. 328; Oliver v. Frewen, ib. 590; Williams v. Jones, 10 Ves. 77; Griffiths v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 298; Wilson v. Ivat, 2 Ves. sen. 166; Rawlings v. Jennings, 13 Ves. 39; Re Knowles, 49 L. J. Ch. 625; Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 193; Russell v. Clowes, 2 Coll. 648; Omanney v. Butcher, T. & R. 260.

(i) Att.-Gen. v. Jefferys, [1908] A. C. 411, affirming C. A. in Re Glukman, [1908] 1 Ch. 552, reversing [1907] 1 Ch. 171.

(ii) Muckleston v. Brown, 6 Ves. 64.

(j) Androvin v. Poilblanc, 3 Atk. 300; Seley v. Wood, 10 Ves. 71; Braddon v. Farrand, 4 Russ. 87; De Mazar v. Pybus, 4 Ves. 644; Giraud v. Hanbury, 3 Mer. 150; Dillon v. Reilly, 9 L. R. Ir. 57; Sadler v. Turner, 8 Ves. 617.

(k) Bishop of Cloyne v. Young, 2 Ves. sen. 91; North v. Purdon, 2 Ves. sen. 495; Mordant v. Hussey, 4 Ves. 117; Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. 348; Re Bacon's Will, 31 Ch. D. 460.

(l) Seley v. Wood, 10 Ves. 71; White v. Evans, 4 Ves. 21; Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 295; Ellicock v. Mapp, 3 H. L. C. 492; Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Sim. 8; Read v. Stedman, 26 Bea. 495; Dawson v. Clarke, 15 Ves. 409; 18 Ves. 247; Re Roby, [1908] 1 Ch. 71, post, Chap. XXI. In Dawson v. Thorne, 3 Russ. 235, it was held that the bequest to one the residue beneficially is not admissible (m). The executor's claim is also excluded, if the testator declares his intention of disposing of a part only of his personal estate (n), or directs that his residue shall go as if he were to die intestate (o), or if there is a secret trust which fails (p). In all these cases the executor is trustee for the next-of-kin, or if there are none, for the Crown (q).

CHAPTER XV.

Specific trust. But if the executor is only appointed trustee for a specific purpose, this does not exclude his claim (r).

To rebut presumption against double portions and legacies, satisfaction, &c.

Parol evidence may also be adduced to repel the presumption that two legacies given to the same person by the same instrument were intended to be substitutional (s); and the presumption against double portions (t); in other words, to shew that a legacy by a parent to his child was intended not to be (as the general rule would make it) a satisfaction of a portion previously due to such child by the testator, or that a subsequent advancement to the child was not to be (as it would be, according to the general doctrine) a satisfaction or ademption, entire or partial, according to its amount (u), of a legacy to such child (v). It is hardly necessary to say that, where a will contains an express direction to bring advances into hotchpot, parol evidence is not admissible to shew that the testator afterwards agreed to treat the advances as gifts (w). So evidence is admissible to rebut the presumption that a debt is satisfied by a legacy of greater amount (x), or that a legacy given for a purpose has been adeemed by a payment for the same purpose (y).

Other examples.

It is clear, also, that parol evidence is admissible to prove the fact that the testator intended to place himself in loco parentis towards a legatee, who was not his child (z); or to prove that gifts have been made to the legatee by the testator in his lifetime, and that they

of the executors was for services not incident to the office.

(m) Lynn v. Beaver, T. & R. 68; Re Hudson's Trusts, 52 L. J. Ch. 789; Rachfield v. Careless, 2 P. W. 158; Roper on Legacies, 1702, 1739. If the intention to create a trust is not clear, parol evidence is admissible: Gladding v. Yapp, 5 Madd. 56.

(n) Urquhart v. King, 7 Ves. 225.

(o) Cranley v. Hale, 14 Ves. 307.

(p) Johnstone v. Hamilton, 11 Jur. N. S., 777.

(q) Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Sim. 8; Johnstone v. Hamilton, supra; Read v. Stedman, supra; Chester v. Chester, L. R., 12 Eq. 444.

(r) Batteley v. Windle, 2 Br. C. C. 31; Griffiths v. Hamilton, 12 Ves. 298;

Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 193.

(s) See Chap. XXX.

(t) The old cases will be found in Roper on Legacies, 391 seq.; among modern cases may be mentioned Re Tussaud's Estate, 9 Ch. D. 363; Montagu v. Earl of Sandwich, 32 Ch. D. 525; Re Lacon, [1891] 2 Ch. 482; Re Ashton, [1898] 1 Ch. 142; Re Scott, [1903] 1 Ch. 1. See Chap. XXXII.

(u) Pym v. Lockyer, 5 My. & C. 29.

(v) Roper on Legacies, 367 seq.

(w) Smith v. Conder, 9 Ch. D. 170.

(x) Wallace v. Pomfret, 11 Ves. 542.

(y) Re Pollock, 28 Ch. D. 552. See the rule stated in Chap. XXXII.

(z) Powys v. Manfield, 3 My. & C. 359.

were of a nature to bring them within the equitable presumption (a), or within the terms of an express declaration contained in the will (b), that advancements should be in satisfaction of legacies. And for this purpose contemporaneous declarations of the testator's intentions are admissible; since the rule which would exclude them, if the intention had been committed to writing, does not apply.

In all these cases, where parol evidence is admissible to repel the presumption, counter-evidence is also admissible in support of it; the evidence on either side being admissible, not for the purpose of proving, in the first instance, with what intent the writing was made, but simply with the view of ascertaining whether the presumption, which the law has raised, is well- or ill-founded (c). But evidence in support of the presumption is not admissible, unless evidence to rebut it has been first admitted; still less is evidence admissible to create a presumption not raised by the law; in the former case it is unnecessary (d), and in both cases its effect would be to contradict the apparent meaning of the will (e).

Counter-evidence.

V.—Admissible to explain Technical Terms, Foreign Words, Nicknames, &c.—If a testator make his will in a foreign language, or introduce therein certain terms or characters which are not understood by the Court, recourse may be had to persons conversant with the subject, for the purpose of translating the will, or deciphering the characters (f). And where the testator makes use of words which in their ordinary sense are intelligible, but which are used by a certain class of persons to which the testator belonged (g), or in a certain locality where he dwelt (h), in a peculiar sense, parol evidence

As to translating or deciphering peculiar characters, —and explaining local or technical terms.

(a) Rosewell v. Bennet, 3 Atk. 77; Kirk v. Eddowes, 3 Hare, 509; Twining v. Powell, 2 Coll. 262.

(b) Whateley v. Spooner, 3 K. & J. 542; McClure v. Evans, 29 Beav. 422.

(c) Kirk v. Eddowes, 3 Hare, 517.

(d) Kirk v. Eddowes, 3 Hare, 520; White v. Williams, 3 V. & B. 72.

(e) Hall v. Hill, 1 D. & War. 94; Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare, 216; Palmer v. Newell, 20 Beav. 39.

(f) Masters v. Masters, 1 P. W. 421; Norman v. Morrell, 4 Ves. 769; Kell v. Charmer, 23 Beav. 195; Clayton v. Lord Nugent, 13 M. & W. 206, per Alderson, B.; Goblet v. Beechey, 3 Sim. 24, 2 R. & My. 624, Wig. Wills, App. In the last case the question was, whether the word "mod." occurring in the codicil to the will of a sculptor, applied to his models. The opinions of sculptors and persons skilled in handwriting differed on this point; and the ultimate conclusion of Lord Brougham was, that the formal bequest in the will could not be revoked by an imperfectly-expressed and doubtful word introduced into the codicil. An attempt was made to explain the testator's meaning by the evidence of a person who attested his will; but this, of course, was inadmissible.

(g) Clayton v. Gregson, 5 Ad. & Ell. 302; Shore v. Wilson, 9 Cl. & Fin. 525.

(h) Per Parke, B., Richardson v. Watson, as reported 1 Nev. & M. 575; Smith v. Wilson, 3 B. & Ad. 728; Anstee v. Nelms, 1 H. & N. 225. In the last case, the devise was of "lands in the parish of D.," and evidence was admitted to shew that a part of the testator's lands which was in another parish was generally reputed to be in the parish of D. But where a word has received a legal signification by statutory definition evidence Meaning of contraction used by testator.

CHAPTER XV. may be given to shew the fact of such usage, unless it also appears on the face of the will that the testator used the word in the ordinary sense. Generally speaking, for instance, evidence would be admissible to shew that the word "close" meant the same thing as "farm" in the country where the property was situate; but if the testator has in another part of the will used the word "closes" (in the plural), it is manifest that he has used the word "close" in its ordinary sense as denoting an "inclosure"; and then such evidence is not admissible; for that would be to contradict the words of the will (j).

In Re Rayner (k), it was held that a testator, in using the word "securities" meant investments, and evidence was admitted to shew that the word was commonly used in this sense by stock-brokers and men of business, but the decision seems to have turned on the language of the testator.

In Re Glassington (l), a testatrix devised all her "real estate"; she never had any real estate to which she was beneficially entitled, but there was vested in her as trustee of her father's will certain real estate upon trust for sale, and she was beneficially entitled to a moiety of the proceeds of sale; it was held that this moiety passed by the devise (m). Evidence was tendered to the effect that she had before the execution of her will stated that she was entitled to real estate; this evidence was not used, but Joyce, J., inclined to think that it was admissible.

Nicknames.

Again, the testator may have habitually called certain persons by peculiar or nicknames, by which they were not commonly known. If these names should occur in his will, they could only be explained and construed by the aid of evidence, to shew the sense in which he used them, just as if his will were written in cypher or in a foreign language (n). Thus, in Lee v. Pain (o), a testatrix, by a codicil dated in 1836, bequeathed "to Mrs. and Miss Bowden, of H., widow and daughter of the late Rev. Mr. Bowden, 200*l.* each." The legacies were claimed by Mrs. and Miss Washbourne, the widow and daughter of Mr. D. Washbourne, who had been a dissenting minister at H. The evidence proved that Mrs. Washbourne was the daughter of Mr. Bowden, who died leaving a widow, which is not admissible to shew that a testator has used that word in a different sense: thus it has been held that extrinsic evidence was not admissible to shew that a testator who devised forty-five acres of land in Ireland meant Irish, not statute, acres: O'Donnell v. O'Donnell, 13 L. R. Ir. 226.

(j) Richardson v. Watson, 1 Nev. & Man. 575, cited post, p. 518, on another point. As to the actual decision in this case, see ante, p. 460.

(k) [1904] 1 Ch. 176.

(l) [1906] 2 Ch. 305.

(m) In accordance with the doctrine stated post, Chap. XXXV, where this case is referred to.

(n) Per Lord Abinger, C.B., Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & Wels. 368.

(o) 4 Hare, 251.

latter died in 1820; that the testatrix had been intimately acquainted with Mr. Bowden, and with the claimants, whom she had been in the habit of calling by the name of Bowden, and, on the mistake being pointed out, had acknowledged it. Sir J. Wigram, V.-C., held that the evidence was admissible, and, there being no other Mrs. and Miss Bowden, decreed the legacies to the claimants (p).

If there is no person strictly answering the description used by the testator, evidence is admissible to shew that there is a person commonly known by the name used by the testator, although it is not his real name (q).

It frequently happens that a testator gives property to persons by some generic description—such as “children,” “nephews,” &c.—which has a well-defined meaning, but the extrinsic circumstances shew that the testator used the description in an inaccurate sense. These cases are referred to in the next section.

Gifts to relations inaccurately described.

VI.—When the State of Facts at the Date of the Will may be regarded.—“Though it is (as we have seen) the will itself (and not the intention, as elsewhere collected) which constitutes the real and only subject to be expounded, yet, in performing this office, a Court of construction is not bound to shut its eyes to the state of facts under which the will was made; on the contrary, an investigation of such facts often materially aids in elucidating the scheme of disposition which occupied the mind of the testator. To this end, it is obviously essential that the judicial expositor should place himself as fully as possible in the situation of the person whose language he has to interpret (r); and guided by the light thus thrown on the testamentary scheme, he may find himself justified in departing from a strict construction of the testator’s language, without (to borrow the words of an elegant writer) allowing ‘conjectural interpretation to usurp the place of judicial exposition’ (s). Thus, if it appears (and of course it can only appear by extrinsic evidence), that there is no subject or object answering

State of facts at the date of will proper to be regarded.

(p) See also Wigr. Wills. pl. 65, and n.

(q) Dowset v. Sweet, Amb. 175; Re Hooper, 88 L. T. 160, and other cases cited in Chap. XXXV. And see the remarks on the case of Beaumont v. Fell, infra, p. 514.

(r) “You may place yourself, so to speak, in [the testator’s] armchair, and consider the circumstances by which he was surrounded when he made his will to assist you at arriving at his intention”: per James, L.J., in Boyes v. Cook, 14 Ch. D. p. 56. See also per Lord Cairns in Charter v. Charter, L.R., 7 H. L. 377.

(s) “Vide Wigram on ambiguities in Wills, and the Admissibility of Parol Evidence, 2nd ed. 75; a work which should be perused by every person who wishes to acquire an intimate acquaintance with this intricate subject.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

CHAPTER XV. to the description in the will, strictly and literally construed, but that there is a subject or object precisely answering to such description, interpreted according to the popular and less appropriate sense of the words, the conclusion that the testator employed them in the latter sense is irresistible. Examples of this principle of construction are widely scattered through the present treatise" (t). It may be discerned in those cases in which a disposition of property operates as an appointment under a special power, where it would otherwise be nugatory for want of property on which to operate (u). It is also exemplified in those cases in which a devise of lands at a given place has been extended to property not strictly answering to the description, because there is none which does precisely correspond to it (v), or in which an apparently specific bequest of stock in the public funds has been held to authorize payment of the legacy out of the general personal estate, the testator having no such stock when he penned the bequest (w). Again, we discover traces of the doctrine in the rule (hereafter discussed) which construes a gift to the children of a deceased person, or the children "now born" of a living person, as comprising illegitimate children, there being no legitimate child to supply the gift with a more appropriate object; or a gift to the testator's nephews, as a gift to his wife's nephews, he having none, and there being, at the date of his

(t) The rule as thus stated by Mr. Jarman (first ed. p. 363), is clearly established. See Doe d. Templeman v. Martin, 4 B. & Ad. 771, per Parke, J.; Smith v. Doe d. Lord Jersey, 2 Br. & B. 553, cit. 5 B. & Ald. 387, per Bayley, J.; Doe d. Freeland v. Burt, 1 T. R. 701; Guy v. Sharp, 1 My. & K. 602, per Lord Brougham; Att.-Gen. v. Drummond, 1 Dr. & War. 367, per Sugden, C.; Shore v. Wilson, 9 Cl. & Fin. 555, per Parke, B.; Doe d. Thomas v. Beynon, 12 Ad. & Ell. 431; Blundell v. Gladstone, 3 Mac. & G. 692; Phillips v. Barker, 1 Sm. & Gif. 583; Wigr. Wills, Prop. V. But in Pilcher v. Hole, 7 Sim. 210, the V.-C. said he could not look at the price of stocks for the purpose of putting a construction on a will. How far it may be assumed that a testator, when he makes his will, has the material circumstances in his mind, see Hopwood v. Hopwood, 22 Beav. 494, 495; Re Herbert's Trusts, 1 J. & H. 121. If he shews by the will that he has taken a mistaken view of the circumstances, that view must govern the construction; see Hannam v. Sims, 2 De G. & J. 151. As to the cases in which a legatee is allowed to adduce evidence to contradict an erroneous statement in a will, see under "Estoppel," in Chap. XVI.

(u) See Chap. XXIII.

(v) Doe v. Roberts, 5 B. & Ald. 407; see Baddeley v. Gingell, 1 Exch. 319; but learn the limits of this doctrine from Miller v. Travers, 1 M. & Scott, 342.

(w) Selwood v. Mildmay, 3 Ves. 306; see, on this much-discussed case, Miller v. Travers, ubi sup. (where Tindal, C.J., refers it to the head "falsa demonstratio non nocet"). In Lindgren v. Lindgren, 9 Beav. 358, Lord Langdale, M.R., followed it, and said of it, "The absence of the fund purported to be given shewing that a specific legacy was not intended, other evidence was admitted to shew how the mistake arose: and this being clearly shewn, it was held that the legatees were entitled to payment out of the general personal estate." See also Wigram, Wills, pp. 102, 103, 164, 167; Auther v. Auther, 13 Sim. 422, where the V.-C. took the context for his sole guide. If in another part of the will the testator correctly described the subject, the inference that he meant to include it in the incorrect description would be rebutted, Waters v. Wood, 5 De G. & S. 717.

will, no possibility of his ever having any (x), or a gift "to the children of A. and B." (living persons), as meaning "to B. and the children of A." in equal moieties, it appearing that for some years before the date of the will A. had not lived with his wife and family (y); and lastly, in the rule which reads a devise or bequest as applying to a person or thing imperfectly answering the name and description in the will, there being no person or thing more precisely answering to them. The application of this last rule is discussed elsewhere in connection with the question of misnomer and misdescription (z), and in connection with the question what passes by a bequest of "real estate," "stock," "shares," "debentures," &c. (a). Extrinsic evidence is rarely admissible to explain the operation of a residuary bequest, but it was admitted in Re Cadogan (b), in order to assist the Court in determining whether a bequest of the testatrix's "money" passed the whole of her personal estate. In these instances, and many more which might be adduced, the application of the rules of construction evidently depends on and is governed by the state of extrinsic facts (c).

"It would be dangerous, however," as Mr. Jarman points out (d), "to place this statement of the doctrine in the hands of the reader, unaccompanied by a caution against the mistaken application of it to gifts comprising a subject or object, or a class of objects, which, by the rules of construction, is to be ascertained at the death of the testator, or at any other period posterior to the date of the will. In such cases, it would be manifestly improper to admit the state of facts existing when the will is made to have any influence upon the construction; for instance, since a residuary bequest comprehends all the personal property of which the testator is possessed at the time of his decease, the absence of any given species of property, or of any property whatever, at the date of the will, to satisfy such bequest, ought not, in the slightest degree, to affect its construction,

State of facts at date of will, when not to influence construction.

(x) Sherratt v. Mountford, L. R., 8 Ch. 928.

(y) Re Walbran, [1906] 1 Ch. 64.

(z) See Chap. XXXV, and also, in the case of charities, ante, p. 227.

(a) See Chap. XXXV.

(b) 25 Ch. D. 154. See Higgins v. Dawson (infra, p. 507), where the will was construed without recourse to extrinsic evidence; and compare Re Glassington, [1906] 2 Ch. 305, where the admissibility of evidence in the case of a gift of "real estate" was discussed: ante, p. 502.

(c) "Observe that, in all the above cases, the parol evidence is not adduced to shew that the testator actually intended the devise to have the operation which is given to it, but merely to supply facts from which the Court infers such to be the intention; and this inference would not be allowed to be controlled by the production of evidence shewing that the construction thus put on the will is at variance with the testator's real intention." (Note by Mr. Jarman, first ed. p. 365.) See Stringer v. Gardiner, 27 Beav. 35, 4 De G. & J. 468; Sherratt v. Mountford, L. R., 8 Ch. 928, and the cases cited in the next section.

(d) First ed. p. 365.

CHAPTER XV. by extending the bequest to property not strictly belonging to the testator, or over which he has not any power of disposition. On the same principle, if a testator bequeaths all the stock of a particular denomination, of which he may be possessed at the time of his decease, no argument is supplied for extending the bequest to stock of any other denomination by the circumstance that the testator had at the making of the will no stock answering to the description (e). Again, as a devise or bequest to the children of a living person as a class will comprise all who come in esse before the death of the testator, the fact of there being no child properly so called, i.e., no legitimate child, at the date of the will, raises no necessary inference that the testator had in his contemplation then existing illegitimate children" (f). And in every case it must be remembered that, whatever the surrounding circumstances, it is still the will that is to be construed. In the words of an eminent Judge (g), "when the Court has possession of all the facts which it is entitled to know, they will only enable the Court to put a construction on the instrument consistent with the words; and the Judge is not at liberty, because he has acquired a knowledge of those facts, to put a construction on the words which they do not properly bear."

Where will is unambiguous.

The reader will have gathered from the foregoing discussion of the general principle, that if the words of the will are definite and free from doubt, parol evidence is not admissible to shew that they meant something different (h). Thus in Maybank v. Brooks (i), a testator bequeathed a legacy to A., "his executors, administrators and assigns:" A. was dead at the date of the will, which, however, took no notice of the fact: but the personal representative of A. claimed the legacy, insisting that the terms of the bequest made it transmissible, and in support of his claim proposed to read (amongst other) evidence of the testator's knowledge that A. was dead: but Lord Thurlow rejected it, saying, "The only fact to which evidence is afforded is, that the death of A. was within the knowledge of the testator. The end to which it is to be read is, that the legacy was meant to be transmissible: that could not be

(e) The foregoing statement of the general principle must, of course, be read subject to the qualification that if there is any ambiguity in the description of the property, parol evidence as to the state of the testator's property is admissible, vide supra, pp. 503 seq.

(f) Post, Chap. XLIII., and see Doe d. Allen v. Allen, 12 Ad. & E. 451.

(g) Per Sugden, C., Att.-Gen. v. Drummond, 1 D. & War. 367. And see per Cotton, L.J., Everett v. Everett, 7 Ch. D. 433, 434.

(h) Compare the rule that where there is a person answering the description of a legatee, &c., in the will, parol evidence is not admissible to shew that the testator meant some one else who does not answer to the description: post, p. 527.

(i) 1 Br. C. C. 84.

from a legatee who had been dead several years. . . . I must accordingly decree the legacy to be lapsed." Again, where a testator, after directing payment of his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, bequeathed a number of pecuniary legacies, and then gave "all the residue and remainder" of two specified mortgage debts then due to him, after payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses, to three persons named, it was held that parol evidence could not be admitted to shew the state of the testator's property in order to found on it the inference that the testator meant his legacies, as well as his debts, &c., to be paid out of the mortgage debts (j). The earlier authorities (elsewhere referred to) of Fonnereau v. Poyntz, Colpoys v. Colpoys, Att.-Gen. v. Grote, Barksdale v. Gilliat, and Druce v. Denison, in each of which evidence of the condition of the testator's property was admitted, were examined by Rigby, L.J., and shewn to be either cases in which property had been bequeathed by an unintelligible description (k), or cases in which the testator had, by a testamentary document, referred to the state of his property as explaining the dispositions of his will. Unless some such question arises, it is clear that evidence as to the amount or state of the testator's property is inadmissible to influence the construction of the will, whether the gift is specific (l) or residuary (m), and whether the property alleged to be disposed of or affected is the testator's own property, or property over which he has a power of appointment (n).

For the same reason, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to shew that a plain and unambiguous direction in a will is founded on a mistake on the part of the testator. Thus, where a testator, after reciting that he had advanced to A. 4,000*l.*, directed that 4,000*l.* should be brought into account and deducted from his share of the residue, it was held that A. was bound by the recital, although the Evidence inadmissible to prove recital, &c. to be erroneous.

(j) Higgins v. Dawson, [1902] A. C. 1, reversing the decision of Lord Alverstone and Collins, L.J. (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), in Re Grainger, [1900] 2 Ch. 756.

(k) Where a gift is primâ facie specific, evidence of the state of the property at the date of the will is admissible: Sayer v. Sayer; Innes v. Sayer, 7 Ha. 377; 3 Mac. & G. 607. See Horwood v. Griffith, 4 D. M. & G. 708.

(l) Horwood v. Griffith, 4 D. M. & G. 708. The decision of Lord Brougham in Boys v. Williams, 3 Sim. 563; 2 R. & M. 689, seems to be erroneous.

(m) Stephenson v. Heathcote, 1 Ed. 38; Cave v. Cave, 2 Ed. 144; Sibley v.

Perry, 7 Ves. 532; Lord Inchiquin v. French, Amb. 40; Abbott v. Middleton, 7 H. L. C. 68; Wigr. Wills, p. 81, 3rd ed. Doe v. Gillard, 5 B. & Ald. 788, is contra: sed qu. But it is otherwise if it appears by the will that the testator is estimating the amount of his property and its sufficiency for the payments he directs; Barksdale v. Gilliat, 1 Sw. 565; Colpoys v. Colpoys, Jac. 451, 457; and see Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Ca. 418, 425. And as to real estate see Stanley v. Stanley, 2 J. & H. 503: with which compare Davenport v. Coltman, 12 Sim. 605; Tennent v. Tennent, 1 J. & Lat. 384.

(n) See Re Huddleston, [1894] 3 Ch. 595.

CHAPTER XV.

amount advanced to him was less than 4,000*l.* (o). In Re Taylor's Estate (p), the direction to bring advances into account was so worded as, if literally followed, to lead to a palpable absurdity ; the Court therefore held that evidence was admissible to shew that the statements of fact contained in the will were inaccurate. This decision, therefore, turned on the special words of the will, and does not affect the general principle laid down in Re Aird's Estate (q).

Inadmissible to define what is indefinite.

It also follows that if the language of the testator is vague and indefinite, parol evidence is not admissible to shew that he had something definite in his mind. Thus, if he gives property to be held on trusts contained and specified in any memorandum amongst his papers, parol evidence is inadmissible to shew that he had in his mind an existing document (r).

Effect of the Wills Act on the cases under consideration.

" And it is material to observe," says Mr. Jarman (s), " that the recent enactment [stat. 1 Vict.] which (we have seen) makes the will speak as to both real and personal estate from the death of the testator, will tend greatly to narrow the practical range of the rule which authorizes the application of words to a less appropriate subject, on account of the non-existence of one, strictly and in all particulars answering to those words. If, therefore, a testator, by a will made or republished since 1837, should devise all his lands in the parish of A., the fact of his then not having lands in that parish will supply a much less forcible and conclusive argument than heretofore, for holding the words to apply to lands in a contiguous parish, seeing that a testator not only may extend his devise to after-acquired estates, but that a devise is to be construed as speaking at his death, unless the contrary appears ; so that the testator may have contemplated, and is to be presumed to have contemplated, the future acquisition of lands in the parish in question, to satisfy the terms of the devise in their strict and proper acceptation."

Parol evidence admissible to shew what is comprised within a given description.

VII.—Admissible to Identify Subject or Object of Gift.—

Mr. Jarman continues (t) : " Of course, parol evidence is admissible, (and that, without intrenching on the doctrine of Doe v. Oxenden) (u), in order to ascertain what is comprehended in the terms of a given description, referring to an extrinsic fact.

" Thus, if a testator devise the house he lives in (v), or his farm

(o) Re Aird's Estate, 12 Ch. D. 291.

(p) 22 Ch. D. 495.

(q) Re Wood, 32 Ch. D. 517.

(r) University College of North Wales v. Taylor, [1908] P. 140.

(s) First ed. p. 366.

(t) First ed. p. 367.

(u) Ante, p. 489.

(v) Doe d. Clements v. Collins, 2 T. R. 498.

called Blackacre (w), or the lands which he purchased of A., parol evidence must be adduced to shew what house was occupied by the testator, what farm is called Blackacre, or what lands were purchased of A.; such evidence being essential for the purpose of ascertaining the actual subject of disposition. The distinction obviously is, that although evidence dehors the will is not admissible, to shew that the testator used his terms of description in any peculiar or extraordinary sense, yet it may be adduced to ascertain what the description properly comprehends.

“Of this principle we have a useful example in Sanford v. Raikes (x), decided by Sir W. Grant, a Judge whose exposition of the principles of law was ever marked by a perspicuity and felicity of illustration peculiarly his own. A testator by codicil devised in these words, ‘I give the house in Seymour Place, which I have given a memorandum of agreement to purchase (and which is to be paid for out of timber, which I have ordered to be cut down), to the Rev. John Sanford.’ It happened that the testator had shortly before entered into an agreement to purchase the house in question for 7,350*l.*, and had, two days after that contract, given an order in writing to his steward, to cut down timber on a particular estate, to the amount of 10,000*l.* One of the objections made by the heir to this devise was, that the codicil did not refer to any particular timber, and could not be made good by evidence aliunde; and reliance was placed upon the cases deciding that a will to incorporate another instrument must so describe it, that the Court could be under no mistake. But the M.R. conclusively answered this reasoning. ‘I had always understood,’ he observed, ‘that where the subject of a devise was described by reference to some extrinsic fact, it was not merely competent, but necessary, to admit extrinsic evidence to ascertain the fact; and through that medium, to ascertain the subject of the devise. I do not know what this has to do with cases where there is a reference to some paper which is to make part of the will. There it may be considered that the will itself must specify the paper that is to be incorporated into it. Here, the question is not upon the devise, but upon the subject of it. Nothing is offered in explanation of the will, or in addition to it. The evidence is only to ascertain what is included in the description which the testator has given of the thing devised. Where there is a devise of the estate purchased of A., or of the farm in the occupation of B., nobody can tell what is given, until it is an extrinsic document.

Reference to

(w) Goodtitle v. Southern, 1 M. & Sel. 299; see also Buck d. Whalley v. Norton, 1 B. & P. 53.
(x) 1 Mer. 646.

CHAPTER XV. shewn by extrinsic evidence, what estate it was that was purchased of A., or what was in the occupation of B. In this case, the direction with regard to payment for the house, amounted in effect to a devise of so much of the produce of the timber ordered to be cut down, as should be sufficient to pay for the house. What is there in the fact here referred to, namely, an antecedent order for cutting down timber, that makes it less a subject of extrinsic evidence, than such a one as I have alluded to ? The moment it is shewn that it was a given number of trees growing in such a place, or 10,000*l.* worth in value of the timber on such an estate, that the testator had ordered to be cut down, the subject of the devise is rendered as certain, as if the number, value, or situation of the trees, had been specified in the will.'

"So, in Ongley v. Chambers (y), where a testator devised the rectory or parsonage of M., with the messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, hereditaments, and all and singular other the premises thereunto belonging, with their and every of their rights, members and appurtenances ; it was held, that lands, and a messuage (in addition to the parsonage house) in the same parish, which had been acquired by the owners of the rectory about two centuries ago, and had been uniformly demised and occupied with it since that period, and had been so purchased by and conveyed to the devisor, passed : Lord Gifford, C.J., observed, that the expression was 'messuages' ; whereas, strictly speaking, there was but one messuage belonging to the rectory, namely, the parsonage-house. The having recourse to the leases and other extrinsic evidence, to shew what lands had been usually enjoyed with the rectory, was objected to on the authority of Doe v. Brown and the class of cases before stated ; but the distinction between the cases is obvious. Here it was a question of parcel or no parcel, the description referred to the fact, and it was governed by the same principle as the case suggested by Sir W. Grant of a devise of lands in the occupation of A."

Remark on Ongley v.
Chambers.

Devise of "my estate called A."

In Ricketts v. Turquand (z), a testator who had purchased a house and lands, which, together, were generally called and known as the "Ashford Hall estate," devised as follows :—"As it is my wish and desire that all my estate in Shropshire, called Ashford Hall, should be sold, I do, therefore, give and devise the same unto" A. and B., (y) 8 J. B. Moo. 665.

(z) 1 H. L. Ca. 472 ; see also Doe d. Gore v. Langton, 2 B. & Ad. 680 ; Doe v. Jersey, 1 B. & Ald. 550, 3 B. & Cr. 870 ; Goodtitle v. Southern, 1 M. & Sel. 299 ;

Purchase v. Shallis, 2 H. & Tw. 354 ; Webb v. Byng, 1 K. & J. 580, stated post ; Gauntlett v. Carter, 17 Beav. 586 ; Ross v. Veal, 1 Jur. N. S. 751 ; Harrison v. Hyde, 4 H. & N. 805.

“in trust to sell,” &c. Parol evidence was admitted to shew in what sense the testator was in the habit of using the term “my estate called Ashford Hall.”

CHAPTER XV.

Difficulty is sometimes caused by the fact that the testator has, subsequently to the date of his will, added to property devised by it. In such cases, the question arises whether evidence is admissible to shew that the testator treated the after-acquired portions as part of the property. It seems clear that if the description of the property is sufficiently wide, the after-acquired part will pass by the devise by virtue of sect. 24 of the Wills Act; as where the testator devises “all my land at Stour Wood” (a) or “my dwelling-house in B., with the appurtenances thereto belonging” (b). But if the description is ambiguous, the case is more difficult. In Webb v. Byng (c), the testatrix devised “all my Q. H. Estates in Essex”; this term was not a recognized description of any particular property. Wood, V.-C., admitted evidence to shew what Estates the testatrix understood to be comprised in that description; but there does not appear to have been any evidence to shew that the testatrix treated the after-acquired property as part of the Q. H. Estates, and he held that it did not pass by the devise. In Castle v. Fox (d), the testator devised his “mansion and estate called Cleeve Court, with the appurtenances”; Malins, V.-C., admitted evidence shewing what property the testator designated by the description up to the time of his death, and held on that evidence that parts of the estate acquired after the date of the will passed by the devise.

After-acquired property.

Mr. Jarman continues (f): “Upon the same principle, of course, it is not essential to the validity of the gift, either of real or personal estate, that the person who is the intended object of the testator’s bounty should be actually pointed out on the face of the will; it is enough that the testator has provided the means of ascertaining it, according to the maxim, id certum est quod certum reddi potest. Nor is it material that the description makes the objects of gift to depend upon circumstances or acts of persons which are future and contingent, or even upon the future acts of the testator himself,

Sufficient to testator provide means of ascertaining the object of gift.

(a) Per Cotton, L.J., in Re Portal and Lamb, 30 Ch. D. at pp. 52-53; per Lindley, L.J., ib. at p. 56.

(b) Re Midland Railway Co., 34 Bea. 525. The question discussed in this case was as to the effect of the words “wherein D. C. now resides”: see ante, p. 418, and post, Chap. XXXV.

(c) 2 K. & J. 669.

(d) L. R., 11 Eq. 542; Jennings v. Jennings, 1 L. R. Ir. 552 is to the same effect; Ricketts v. Turquand, 1 H. L. C. 472 is cited in the judgment, but in that case the point did not arise; ante, p. 510. See also Re Potter, 83 L. T. 405, stated ante, p. 415.

(f) First ed. p. 369.

CHAPTER XV. though this is sometimes resisted as contravening the principle of the statutory requisition of attesting witnesses. There seems, however, to be no valid ground for the objection. Every description must more or less involve inquiry into extrinsic facts; and there is no reason why the ascertainment of the objects may not depend as well upon the facts or conduct, past or future, of the testator, as upon any other contingent circumstance (g). Hence it was recently decided (h), that a devise in favour of the persons who might be partners of the testatrix, or to whom she might sell her business, was valid; Lord Langdale observing, that if the description be such as to distinguish the devisee from every other person, it is sufficient, without entering into the consideration of the question, whether the description was acquired by the devisee after the date of the will, or by the testator's own act in the course of his affairs, or in the ordinary management of his property."

Latent ambiguity.

Even where the intended object of the testator's bounty is described by name on the face of the will, uncertainty may be caused by extrinsic circumstances, as where the gift is to "John Smith," and it appears that there are two John Smiths known to the testator. In such a case evidence is admissible to shew which John Smith was meant by the testator (i).

Misnomer and misdescription.

The rule admitting evidence of the nature now under consideration is frequently applied in those cases in which the subject or object of gift is erroneously described in the will. They are referred to in detail in another chapter (j), and it is unnecessary to repeat them here. But as an illustration of the nature of the evidence admissible in such cases, reference may be made to the case of Re Feltham's Trusts (k), in which there was a bequest to "Thomas Turner, of Regency Square, Brighton," the facts being that there was a James Turner of Regency Square, surgeon, and a Rev. Thomas Turner, of Daventry, both nephews of the testatrix's husband; an old will containing a bequest to "Thomas Turner, of Regency Square, Brighton, surgeon," was admitted to prove the fact that the testatrix always called the surgeon Thomas. From that fact the Court inferred that the actual will (which was not strictly applicable to either claimant), erred in the name and not in the Prior will referred to.

(g) The question is whether the supplementary act is testamentary; supra, p. 134.

(h) [1837] Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Kee.

255; 3 My. & Cr. 507; ante, p. 478.

(i) Post, p. 518.

(j) Chap. XXXV.

(k) 1 K. & J. 528.

description. Again, in Re Gregory's Settlement (l), where the testator bequeathed a legacy to "the youngest son of A. B.," by the wrong name, a former will was held admissible in evidence to prove that the testator knew of the state of the family of A. B. And in Re Ofner (m), a memorandum in the testator's handwriting (being instructions for his will), was admitted in explanation of a misdescription of a legatee.

Re Waller (n) is another illustration of the same principle. There the testator bequeathed legacies to the unmarried daughters "of my late friend, Ignatius Scholes, deceased." There was a person called Ignatius Scholes, known to the testator, but he was alive at the date of the will and was a Jesuit priest. The testator had, however, been an intimate friend of Joseph John Scholes, the father of Ignatius Scholes; he was dead at the date of the will, and left five unmarried daughters, who were referred to by name in a former will of the testator, and it was held that these facts put it beyond doubt that the name "Ignatius Scholes" was a mistake for "Joseph John Scholes."

Where there is a gift to A. B., without any addition or description by which he can be distinguished or identified, and it cannot be found that there is any person of that name known to the testator, it seems that evidence is admissible to shew that there is a person of a somewhat similar name known to the testator, and thus to lead to the inference that he is the person intended by the gift. In Masters v. Masters (o), the testator bequeathed a legacy to "Mrs. Sawyer," and as it could not be found that any person of that name was known to the testator, it was referred to the Master to inquire whether a Mrs. Swapper, by whom the legacy was claimed, was the person intended. So in Beaumont v. Fell (p), a testator bequeathed £500 to "Catherine Earnley," which was claimed by a person whose name was Gertrude Yardley; it appeared that there was no such person as Catherine Earnley; that the testator's voice, when he made his will, was hardly intelligible; that the testator usually called Gertrude Yardley by the name of "Gatty," and that he had often declared that he would do well for her. The M.R. admitted the evidence, and held Gertrude Yardley to be entitled. It seems clear that the evidence of the testator's intention to benefit Gertrude answering description.

No person

(l) 34 Bea. 600. Other cases in which prior wills have been admitted in evidence are Blundell v. Gladstone, 1 Ph. 279; s.c., Lord Camoys v. Blundell, 1 H. L. C. 778; Reynolds v. Whelan, 16 L. J. Ch. 434; Re Waller, 68 L. J. Ch. 526; Flood v. Flood, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 538.

(m) [1909] 1 Ch. 60.

(n) 68 L. J. Ch. 526.

(o) 1 P. W. 425.

(p) 2 P. W. 141.

CHAPTER XV. Yardley was wrongly admitted, the case not falling within the rule which allows the admission of such evidence (g), but the decision itself seems to be in accordance with the principle on which Dowset v. Sweet and Re Hooper were decided (r). The authority of Beaumont v. Fell has indeed been questioned (s), and in Mostyn v. Mostyn (t), Lord Brougham treated it as having been overruled by Miller v. Travers (u). But it is submitted that the two cases rest on different principles; for in Miller v. Travers the evidence tendered would have contradicted the will, while in Beaumont v. Fell the evidence explained what was otherwise unintelligible (v). If in Miller v. Travers the testator had devised all his estates in the county (let us say) of Clane (there being no such county), would not evidence have been admissible to shew that he had estates in the county of Clare, and thus to lead to the inference that he meant them to pass by the devise? It is sometimes said that the admission of such evidence is an infraction of the rule which requires wills to be in writing, but if so the rule is equally infringed by the admission of evidence to supply a partial blank in the name of a legatee (w).

Total blanks for names not to be supplied.

"But though, as we have seen," says Mr. Jarman (x), "cases may be adduced in which legacies have been decreed to persons to whom not any part of the description in the will applies, yet in no instance has a total blank for the name been filled up by parol evidence (y). In such cases, indeed, there is no certain intent on the face of the will to give to any person: the testator may not have definitely resolved in whose favour to bequeath the projected legacy (z).

(g) Post, p. 516.

(r) Chap. XXXV.

(s) By Mr. Jarman, in the first edition of this work, p. 383; and by Lord Abinger, in Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 Mee. & W. p. 371. Mr. Wigram seems to think that the decision in Beaumont v. Fell was correct, except so far as the M.R. admitted evidence of the testator's declarations. In that respect the decision was, it is submitted, clearly erroneous.

(t) 5 H. L. C. p. 168.

(u) Supra.

(v) The distinction is clearly stated by Sir J. Strange in Hampshire v. Peirce, 2 Ves. sen. 216.

(w) Infra, p. 515.

(x) First ed. p. 383.

(y) See Roper, 186, citing Winne v. Littleton, 2 Ch. Ca. 51; Baylis v. Atk.-Gen., 2 Atk. 239; Ulrich v. Litchfield, ib. 372; Taylor v. Richardson, 2 Drew.

16. The decision in Re Bacon's Will, 31 Ch. D. 460, appears to contradict the statement in the text. But the circumstances in that case were very peculiar. The testatrix, who was illegitimate and left no next-of-kin, made her will on a printed form, whereby, after giving certain legacies, she gave all her residue "unto to and for own use and benefit absolutely," and she nominated C. "to pay all my debts, &c., to be executor of this my will." Probate of the will was granted to C. as executor. It was held by Kay, J., that under the special circumstances of the case, parol evidence was admissible to rebut the presumption against the executor, and that C. was beneficially entitled to the residue. As to the general rule in such cases, see ante, p. 498.

(z) Per Parke, B., Doe v. Needs, 2 M. & Wels. 139.

"The effect of partial or imperfect descriptions, however, has often come under consideration. In the case of Hunt v. Hort (a), where the bequest was to Lady _____, Lord Thurlow considered it as equivalent to a total blank, and, therefore, that the name could not be supplied by parol evidence. But in Price v. Page (b), where the Christian name only was omitted, the bequest being to Price, son of _____ Price, Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., admitted the claim of a son of the testator's niece of that name, on parol evidence by which it appeared that the claimant had been brought up by the testator, (who had no other relation of the name of Price,) and had promised to provide for him (bb). And in Abbot v. Massie (c), where the bequest was to Mr. and Mrs. G., Lord Loughborough directed an inquiry as to who Mrs. G. was. Of course, if there had been more than one person answering to the imperfect description in the will, and the evidence had failed to point out which of them was the intended object of the testator's bounty, the bequest would, in both the preceding cases, have been void for uncertainty" (d).

It is clear that blanks may be supplied by reference to the context of the will, and for this purpose the Court is entitled to look at the original will as well as at the probate copy (e).

At the conclusion of his judgment in Blundell v. Gladstone, the V.-C. said he decided the case upon the words of the will, coupled with that evidence only which had been given as to the state of the Weld family at the date of the will, and which he thought was the only part of the evidence which ought to be received (f). But besides that evidence, there was parol evidence (g) of the testator having, both before and after making his will, and even after the correction of his mistake, repeatedly called the possessor of Lulworth by the name of Edward Weld. This evidence had been received in the Master's office, and in delivering the opinion of the judges in sometimes admissible though im-material.

Evidence

(a) 3 Br. C. C. 311; see also 1 M. & Sc. 351.

(b) 4 Ves. 680. Compare Gill v. Bagshaw, L. R., 2 Eq. 746; ante, p. 472.

(bb) Sic in the original text. It will be noticed that the M.R. admitted evidence that the testator had promised to provide for his niece's son, but this would probably not be allowed at the present day. See post, p. 516.

(c) 3 Ves. 148; see Clayton v. Lord Nugent, 13 M. & W. 200.

(d) The same rule was followed in Phillips v. Barker, 1 Sm. & G. 583. In In bonis De Rosaz, 2 P. D. 66, the surname was left blank, the bequest being to "Percival _____, of Brighton," and evidence was admitted to shew who was intended; and in Estate of Hubbuck, [1905] P. 129, where the testatrix gave all her property "unto my granddaughter _____," and appointed her executrix, evidence was admitted to shew which of the testatrix's three granddaughters was intended. See also Phelan v. Slattery, 19 L. R. Ir. 177.

(e) Re Harrison, 30 Ch. D. 390; Furniss v. Phear, 36 W. R. 521.

(f) 11 Sim. 488.

(g) Ib. 470.

CHAPTER XV.

D. P. (where the suit was carried), Parke, B., said, they thought it was rightly received (h). Hence it is to be inferred that evidence (to which, upon the principles discussed in this chapter, there is per se no objection) of facts connected with the case, and which may by possibility influence the construction of the will, is admissible, although ultimately it is found to be immaterial and has to be excluded from consideration (i).

Rule as to patent and latent ambiguities, how far conclusive in deciding on admissibility of evidence.

VIII.—Ambiguity—Evidence of Intention (ii).—The admission or rejection of parol evidence is commonly said to depend in all cases on the canon, which rejects it in the case of patent ambiguities, or those which appear upon the face of the will, and admits it in the case of latent ambiguities, or those which seem certain, for anything that appears upon the face of the will, but there is some collateral matter, out of the will, that breeds the ambiguity (j). And this ambiguity being raised by parol evidence, may, it is said, be fairly removed by the same means. But upon examination the maxim proves not to be an universal guide; for, on the one hand, there are many recognized authorities for the admission of parol evidence to explain ambiguities appearing on the face of the will (k), while, on the other hand, the existence of a latent ambiguity will certainly not, as appears sometimes to have been supposed, warrant the admission in all cases indiscriminately of parol evidence to shew what the testator meant to have written as distinguished from what is the meaning of the words he has used (l). It is to the admissibility of this species of evidence that attention is now to be turned. To say that such evidence is admissible, because the ambiguity complained of has been raised by the extrinsic facts, is to lose sight of the essential difference between the nature and effect of the evidence which raises the ambiguity, and that by which it is to be removed; for the former is confined to a development of facts with reference to which the will was written, and to which the language of the will expressly or tacitly refers; and, therefore, it lies within the strict limits of exposition, (h) 1 H. L. Ca. 778, nom. Camoy's v. Blundell.

(i) See also Lowe v. Lord Huntingtower, 4 Russ. 532, n.; Sayer v. Sayer, 7 Hare, 381, Wigr. Wills, pl. 103.

(ii) The two following paragraphs are taken verbatim from the third edition of this work, by Messrs. Wolstenholme and Vincent, pp. 399 seq. Note (o) on p. 517 has been added by the present editor.

(j) Bacon's Maxims, Reg. 23.

(k) Doe d. Gord v. Needs, 2 M. & Wels. 129; Doe d. Smith v. Jersey, 2 B. & B. 553; Fonnereau v. Poyntz, 1 Br. C. C. 472; Colpoys v. Colpoys, Jac. 451, Wigr. Wills, 65, 66, 178, whence the views expressed in the text have been adopted.

(l) See cases, ante, p. 485, n. (j).

which it cannot be denied that the latter transgresses (m). To render the ground tenable, it must be taken to support the proposition only so far as it asserts, that, if an ambiguity is introduced into an otherwise unambiguous will by parol evidence of the state of the testator's family, or other circumstances, that ambiguity may be removed by further evidence of the same nature (n). But in admitting this interpretation of the rule, all distinction between patent and latent ambiguities is lost, for in every case the Judge by whom a will is to be expounded is entitled to be placed, by a knowledge of all the material facts of the case, as nearly as possible in the situation of the testator when he wrote it. A patent ambiguity, it is true, may not be explained by any other kind of evidence, and so far the first branch of the canon is undoubtedly true (nn). But by our hypothesis to this precise extent, and no further, is the latter branch true also. We come, therefore, to the conclusion either that the distinction taken by the canon between latent and patent ambiguities is an unsubstantial one, or that the proposition does, in its second branch, assert the admissibility of evidence to shew the testator's intention (as distinguished from the meaning of his written words); and that, consequently, if true, its application must be confined to a special class of cases.

It remains for us to see in what cases, if any, such evidence is admissible. Suppose, then, that evidence has been given of all the material facts and circumstances of the case, and that these have ultimately raised an ambiguity by disclosing the existence of more than one object or subject to which the words are equally applicable (o). The uncertainty as to which of these was in the testator's contemplation would, if the investigation stopped here, necessarily be fatal to the gift. Under these peculiar circumstances, however, declarations of the testator or other direct evidence of his intention are admissible to clear up the ambiguity, by pointing

(m) See Wigr. Wills, 121; per Romilly, M.R., Stringer v. Gardiner, 27 Beav. 38.

(n) Per Alderson, B., 13 M. & Wels. 204.

(nn) Cheyney's Case, 5 Rep. 68b; Castledon v. Turner, 3 Atk. 257; Clayton v. Lord Nugent, 13 M. & Wels. 200; Strode v. Russell, 2 Vern. 625.

(o) [It is hardly necessary to point out that, in accordance with the general principle stated ante, p. 488, if there is an object or subject which correctly answers the description in the will, parol evidence is not admissible to shew that the gift was intended to include another object or subject which it does not accurately describe; evidence of intention was rejected on this ground in Horwood v. Griffith, 4 D. M. & G. 700. See also Re Mayo, [1901] 1 Ch. 404, where a testator bequeathed property to the three illegitimate children of Mrs. A. B. In fact, A. B. had four illegitimate children, but in the absence of any evidence to shew that the testator knew of the existence of the eldest child, no ambiguity arose, and it was held that the other three were entitled. Farwell, J., seems to have doubted whether, if the ambiguity had arisen, evidence of intention would have been admissible.]

CHAPTER XV.

"Equivocation."

Effect where there are two subjects or objects answering to description.

Evidence admitted to shew which of two persons answering to the name was intended.

out (if they can) the actual subject or object of gift, among the several properties or persons answering to the description. Of this nature are the examples given by Lord Bacon, in illustration of the maxim, "Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur"; and are styled by him cases of equivocation (p).

Thus, where a testator devises his manor of Dale, and it is found that he had at the date of his will two manors, North Dale and South Dale, evidence may be adduced to shew which of them was intended (q). Again, if a testator, having two closes in the occupation of A., devises all that his close in A.'s occupation, evidence is admissible to prove which of the two closes he meant to devise (r).

If no sufficient evidence is forthcoming, the gift is void for uncertainty (s).

The same principle, of course, is applicable (and it has been most frequently applied) to the objects of a devise. Thus, in Lord Cheyney's Case (t), it was resolved that if a man have two sons, both baptized by the name of John, and, conceiving that the elder (who had been long absent) is dead, devises his lands, by his will in writing, to his son John, generally, and in truth the elder is living; in this case the younger son may produce witnesses to prove his father's intent, that he thought the other to be dead, or that he, at the time of the will made, named his son John the younger; for, observes Lord Coke, no inconvenience can arise, if an averment in such case be taken (u); because he who sees such will, ought at his peril to inquire which John the testator intended; which may easily be known by him who wrote the will, and others who were privy to his intent.

So, in Jones v. Newman (v), where a testatrix devised to John Cluer of Calcot. There were two persons, father and son, of that name, and evidence was admitted to shew which was intended. One of them had subsequently died in the testatrix's lifetime; but, of course, that could not influence the construction. So,

(p) See, as to the meaning of the word ambiguity, Wigr. Wills. pl. 210; Cic. Q. Tusc. III. 9.

(q) Per Tindal, C.J., in Miller v. Travers, 1 M. & Sc. 346.

(r) Richardson v. Watson, 4 B. & Ad. 787 (where the evidence was insufficient); Asten v. Asten, [1894] 3 Ch. 260; ante, pp. 460, 502.

(s) Richardson v. Watson, supra.

(t) 5 Rep. 68 b.

(u) "But the effect of the doctrine is to render it necessary to the completeness of a title derived under a devise, that it should be ascertained that there is not more than one person answering to the description; but this is seldom attended to in practice, unless some discrepancy occurs between the terms of the will and the actual name or addition of the claimant." (Note by Mr. Jarman, first ed. p. 372.)

(v) W. Bl. 60.

where a testator bequeathed a legacy to "W. R., his farming man," and it appeared he had two farming men of that name, evidence of the testator's declarations in favour of one of them was admitted (w).

CHAPTER XV.
Declarations of testator
admitted.

Again, in Doe d. Morgan v. Morgan (x), where a testator devised certain property to his nephew Morgan Morgan, and then in the same will devised other property to his nephew Morgan Morgan, of the village of Mothvey. It appeared that the testator had two nephews of this name, one of whom lived at Mothvey, and the other elsewhere; it was contended that as the first devise was to Morgan Morgan simpliciter, and the second devise to Morgan Morgan of Mothvey, it was to be presumed that the testator in making this distinction had different persons in his contemplation, and that, this being apparent on the face of the will, parol evidence to the contrary was inadmissible; but the Court held that evidence of the testator's oral declarations, made at the time of the will, was admissible.

In Doe d. Gord v. Needs (y), there was a devise to George Gord, the son of John Gord; another to George Gord, the son of George Gord; and a third to George Gord, the son of Gord. The Court of Exchequer held, that evidence of the testator's declarations, that he intended George Gord, the son of George Gord, to take the property devised to George Gord, the son of Gord, was admissible: that it was clear the testator had selected a particular object of his bounty; though if there had been a blank before the name of Gord the father, that might have made a difference: that if there had been no mention in the will of any other George Gord, the son of a Gord, evidence of the testator's declarations would undoubtedly have been admissible, upon the authorities, which were all characterized by the fact that the words of the will did describe the object or subject intended, and the evidence of the testator's declarations had not the effect of varying the instrument in any way whatever; it only enabled the Court to reject one of the subjects or objects to which the description applied, and to determine which of the (w) Reynolds v. Whelan, 16 L. J. Ch. 434. The evidence was that by an earlier will, made before the unsuccessful claimant entered his service, the testator gave W. R., "one of my farming men," a legacy, and that before the date of his last will he told a witness that he had given "Old Will" 50*l.*, and intended to leave him 100*l.*; if the Court relied on the evidence as to the earlier will, the case does not properly belong here: see per Wood, V.-C., in Re Feltham, 1 K. & J. 532, ante, p. 512.

(x) 1 Cr. & M. 235. Compare Healy v. Healy, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 418.

(y) 2 M. & Wels. 129. See also Phillips v. Barker, 1 Sm. & Gif. 583. In Re Mayo, [1901] 1 Ch. 404, Farwell, J., expressed doubts whether Doe v. Needs would be followed by the Court of Appeal at the present day.

CHAPTER XV.

two the devisor understood to be signified by the description which he used in the will : that the mention in other parts of the will of two persons, each answering the description of George the son of Gord, had no more effect for this purpose than proof by extrinsic evidence of the existence of such persons, and that they were known to the devisor, would have had : and that though the claimant under the devise in question was more perfectly and fully described in another part of the will, still he was correctly, however imperfectly, described by that devise.

In Doe d. Allen v. Allen (z), a testatrix devised her land to her brother T. A. for his life, and after his decease to John A., grandson of her said brother T. A., his heirs and assigns, charged, nevertheless, with the bequest of 100*l.* to each and every of the brothers and sisters of the said John A. At the time of making the will, there were two grandsons of T. A., each named John ; but one of them, the lessor of the plaintiff, had brothers and sisters ; the other, the defendant, had none : it was held, that the bequest to the brothers and sisters of the said John A. did not contain a description of the devisee, so as to exclude extrinsic evidence in favour of the defendant's claim, as it would have applied to after-born brothers and sisters ; and that a declaration by the testatrix, of her intention in the defendant's favour, was admissible.

Contra, where ground for preferring either is afforded by the will ;

On the other hand, in Doe d. Westlake v. Westlake (a), where the devise unto " Matthew Westlake, my brother, and to Simon Westlake my brother's son " ; and it appeared by the evidence, that the testator had three brothers, Thomas, Richard, and Matthew, each of whom had a son named Simon ; Thomas and Richard were mentioned in previous parts of the will : the Court of King's Bench held (and that in perfect consistency with the preceding cases (b)), that the fact of there being several brothers' sons named Simon did not raise a latent ambiguity, so as to let in evidence of oral declarations made by the testator respecting his intention ; it being clear, on the face of the will, that the nephew intended was the son of Matthew. " My brother's son " evidently meant the son of that brother who was then particularly in his mind.

(z) 12 Ad. & Ell. 451. In Bennett v. Marshall, 2 K. & J. 740, the case of two persons, one with several Christian names, the other with only one, that one being identical with the first Christian name of the former, was considered to be the same as the case of two persons bearing the same name. It is not stated, however, what was the nature of the parol evidence admitted. See also per Malins, V.-C., Webber v. Corbett, L. R., 16 Eq. 518.

(a) 4 B. & Ald. 57 ; see also Douglas v. Fellows, Kay, 114 ; Webber v. Corbett, L. R., 16 Eq. 518 ; and cf. Fleming v. Fleming, 1 H. & C. 242 ; Healy v. Healy, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 418.

(b) See Wigram, Wills, pl. 144.

And the result would doubtless be the same where the evidence of surrounding circumstances disclosed reasons for the testator preferring one person to another of the same name (c) : for there is properly no "ambiguity" until all the facts of the case have been given in evidence, and found insufficient for a definite decision (d).

CHAPTER XV.

—or by surrounding circumstances.

Again, if the person intended to be benefited can be ascertained by some definite rule of construction, evidence of intention is, it seems, inadmissible (e). For example, as Mr. Jarman observes (f), "relative pronouns, which have no independent force or signification, but whose effect depends wholly upon the position which they occupy in the instrument, cannot, by means of parol evidence, be shifted, so as to relate to a different antecedent. Thus, in Castledon v. Turner (g), where a testator had made dispositions in his will to several, and but two women were mentioned throughout the whole will, viz. his wife and his niece, and, in the latter part of the will, a particular estate was devised to 'her' for and during her natural life—Lord Hardwicke refused to receive parol evidence for the purpose of shewing to which of the two women 'her' referred; his Lordship thinking that the offering it was an attempt contrary to the principles of the Court, because it would tend to put it in the power of witnesses to make wills for testators. And his Lordship held, that, although 'her' was a relative term, it related to the wife, upon the ground that, throughout the will, in other places, 'her' seemed to relate to the wife" (h). So, where the gift is to "the two children of A.," and A. has four children, and there is nothing in the context of the will or the circumstances to shew which two are meant, the ordinary rule applies (i), and all four children share in the gift: evidence of intention is therefore not admissible (j).

Evidence of intention not admitted against rule of construction.

The rule that extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove that two legacies given by the same instrument to the same person were

(c) Careless v. Careless, 1 Mer. 384; Jefferies v. Michell, 20 Beav. 15.

(d) Wigr. Wills, Prop. VI. and VII.

(e) "Where the presumption arises from the construction of words simply, quâ words, no evidence can be admitted": per Lord Thurlow, Coote v. Boyd, 2 Br. C. C. p. 527.

(f) First ed. p. 361.

(g) 3 Atk. 257, cit. 2 Ves. sen. 216.

(h) Parol evidence is also inadmissible for the purpose of raising a case of election, Clementson v. Gandy, 1 Kee. 309, post, pp. 541 seq.; or of shewing that a person to whom property is upon terms which imply a trust was intended to take beneficially; Barrs v. Fewkes, 34 L. J. Ch. 522.

(i) Post, Chap. XLII, s. 10.

(j) Matthews v. Foulshaw, 11 L. T. 82, citing Daniell v. Daniell, 3 De G. & S. 337, where, however, the point was not decided. In Re Mayo, [1901] 1 Ch. 404, the point did not arise, but Farwell, J., expressed an opinion that evidence of intention is not admissible in these cases. Hampshire v. Peirce, 2 Ves. sen. 216, was wrongly decided on this point: 5 M. & W. 371.

CHAPTER XV. intended to be cumulative, but not to prove that two legacies given by different instruments to the same person were intended to be substitutional, rests on the same principle (k).

Doubtful decision of Malins, V.-C.

In Webber v. Corbett (l), there was a specific bequest to "my niece Clara" and another to "my niece Laura" both of them being described as daughters "of my brother John Webber"; in a later part of the will there was a legacy of 50*l*. "to each of my nieces Kate G., Hannah T., Harriet Bird, and Laura Webber," and a bequest of 100*l*. to "each of my nieces the said Clara Webber, Laura Webber," and others, and "the said Laura Webber" was one of the residuary legatees; in addition to Laura Webber, the daughter of John, the testatrix had a niece Laura F. T. Webber, whom she was in the habit of calling Laura; this Laura Webber and Kate G., Hannah T., and Harriet Bird were daughters of William Webber. Malins, V.-C., held that Laura, the daughter of John Webber, was entitled under all the gifts. The decision seems open to question; the V.-C. himself thought that the fact of the legacies of 50*l*. being given to persons who were all daughters of William, and the absurdity of giving separate legacies of 50*l*. and 100*l*. to the same person, pointed strongly to the conclusion that the legacy of 50*l*. was intended for Laura F. T. Webber, but he laid it down as a general rule of construction that where a legatee is once accurately described in a will, every subsequent reference to a person of that name must mean the legatee so described. It is submitted that there is no such rule.

To "my brother," &c., the testator having several brothers.

"There seems to be no doubt," says Mr. Jarman (m), "though it has never been distinctly decided, that the principle of the preceding cases (n) applies to a devise to a person sustaining a given character, as 'to my brother, son,' &c., without specification of name; so that if the fact should happen to be, that there were more persons than one to whom the description applied, parol evidence would be admissible to shew which of them was the intended object of gift; for, as the uncertainty does not appear until the parol evidence discloses the plurality of persons answering to the terms of the will, it seems to be an instance of the ambiguitas latens. In several reported cases, indeed, devises of this kind have failed, on account of the uncertainty of the object; but in none of them does parol evidence appear to have been offered to remove the ambiguity.

(k) Hurst v. Beach, 5 Madd. 351; Lee v. Pain, 4 Ha. 201. "In all these cases the evidence is received in support of the apparent effect of the instrument, and not against it," per Leach, V.-C., Hurst v. Beach, supra. As to Hubbard

v. Alexander, 3 Ch. D. 738, see Chap. XXX. s. 7.

(l) L. R., 16 Eq. 515.

(m) First ed. p. 375.

(n) Lord Cheyney's case, Jones v. Newman, and Doe v. Morgan.

“ Thus, in Dowset v. Sweet (o), a bequest to the son and daughter of W. W. was held to be void as to the son, on account of there being more than one. So, in Doe d. Hayter v. Joinville (p), one of the grounds on which the devise to the testator’s ‘ brother and sister’s family ’ failed was, that there were children of two sisters of the testator, one living and one dead, and it did not appear which of them was intended.”

In Phelan v. Slattery (q), where a testator devised property to “ my nephew,” evidence was admitted to shew which nephew was intended. But in Estate of Hubbuck (r), where the gift was to “ my granddaughter _____,” evidence of intention was admitted on the ground of the blank, and Gorell Barnes, P., seemed to think that if the gift had been to “ my granddaughter ” simply, the evidence would have been inadmissible. It is submitted, however, that Mr. Jarman’s statement of the principle is correct, and that it is supported by the authority of Lord Thurlow (s).

Mr. Jarman continues (t) : “ Sometimes it happens that one part of the description applies to each of the several claimants in common, and another part to neither of them ; as in the case of Still v. Hoste (u), where a testator bequeathed a legacy to Sophia Still, daughter of Peter Still. Still had two daughters only, Selina and Mary Anne ; and, upon evidence of Selina being intended by the testator, she was held to be entitled. It is clear that, if Selina had been the only daughter, her claim might have been supported on the terms of the will, without the aid of extrinsic evidence.”

Where part of description applies to each of several persons, and part to neither, evidence admitted.

So, in Price v. Page (v), where a testator gave a legacy to ——— Price, the son of ——— Price. The report states that the plaintiff was the only person who claimed the legacy, but the executors raised the question whether the father of the plaintiff, to whom the description was equally applicable, was not intended. Evidence was admitted and relied on by Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., that the testator had said that he had or would provide for the plaintiff, and that he had left him something by his will.

Of the two cases last cited, it was said by Lord Abinger, C.B. (w), (o) Amb. 175.

(p) 3 East, 172. The decision in Re Stephenson, [1897] 1 Ch. 75, also seems to have proceeded on the absence of evidence of intention.

(q) 19 L. R. Ir. 177.

(r) [1905] P. 129 ; supra, p. 515, n. (d).

(s) In Delmare v. Robello, 1 Ves. jun. 415.

(t) First ed. p. 378.

(u) 6 Mad. 192. The evidence was that of the attorney who made the will, and another person : the question was referred to the Master. See also In bonis Brake, 6 P. D. 217.

(v) 4 Ves. 679.

(w) In Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & Wels. 370. His remarks included Careless v. Careless, 1 Mer. 384, but in that case evidence of intention was not required : ante, p. 521.

CHAPTER XV.

that they did not materially differ from the class immediately preceding. That they differed indeed in this, that the equivocal description was not entirely accurate (x); but they agreed in its being (although inaccurate) equally applicable to each claimant; and that they all concurred in this, that the inaccurate part of the description was either, as in Price v. Page, a mere blank, or, as in the other two cases, applicable to no person at all. That these, therefore, might fairly be classed also as cases of equivocation, and in that case evidence of the intention of the testator seemed to be receivable.

Where part of description applies to one and part to another, evidence of intention is inadmissible.

There is yet another class of cases in which it has been made a question, whether evidence of the nature now under consideration can be legally admitted, namely, where the description in the will, taken altogether, answers to no person or thing, but part of it applies to one, and part to another. Cases are to be met with, supporting the conclusion, that a testator's declarations are admissible to shew which of the imperfectly-described persons or things he intended to be the object or subject of the gift (y). But in Doe d. Hiscocks v. Hiscocks (z), where part of the description in the will applied to one person and part to another, the Court of Exchequer rejected evidence of the testator's declarations, at the time of giving instructions for his will, respecting his actual intention. The devise was to the testator's son John H. for life, and on his decease to his (testator's) grandson John H., eldest son of the said John H. for life, and on his decease to the first son of the body of his said grandson John H., in tail male, with other remainders over. At the time of making the will, the testator's son John H. had been twice married; he had by his first wife one son, Simon; by his second wife an eldest son John, and other younger children, sons and daughters. It was held, that evidence of the instructions given by the testator for his will, and of his declarations after its execution, was not admissible to shew which of these two grandsons was intended by the description in the will. Lord Abinger, in delivering the judgment of the Court, reviewed most of the principal cases on this subject. In the opinion of the Court there was but one case, in which evidence was admissible, of the testator's declarations, of the instructions given for his will, and other circumstances

(x) Legal certainty, not perfect accuracy, is required, see Wigr. Wills, pl. 186.

(y) Thomas d. Evans v. Thomas, 6 T. R. 678; Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 2 Y. & C. 72; in Doe d. Le Chevalier v. Huthwaite, 8 Taunt. 306, 2 Moo. 304, 3 B. & Ald.

632, sometimes cited in support of the same doctrine, it does not appear that any declarations by the testator were offered in evidence. The case is said to have been ultimately compromised, per Lord Brougham, 1 H. L. Ca. 797.

(z) 5 M. & Wels. 363.

of the like nature, which were not adduced for explaining the words or meaning of the will, but either to supply some deficiency or remove some obscurity or ambiguity. That case was where the meaning of the testator's words was neither ambiguous nor obscure, and where the devise was, on the face of it, perfect and intelligible, but, from some of the circumstances admitted in proof, an ambiguity arose as to which of the two or more persons or things, each answering the words in the will, the testator intended to express. Though it was clear he meant one only, both were equally denoted by the words, whence there arose an "equivocation," and evidence of previous intention might be received to solve this latent ambiguity; for the intention shewed what he meant to do; and when you knew that, you immediately perceived that he had done it by the words he had used, and which in their ordinary sense might properly bear that construction. It appeared to them that in all other cases parol evidence of what was the testator's intention ought to be excluded. This case is generally considered to have settled the law upon this subject (a), and to decide that "the only cases in which evidence to prove intention is admissible, are those in which the description in the will is unambiguous in its application (i.e., equally applicable in all its parts) to each of several subjects."

The rule stated.

So in Re Taylor (b), a testatrix gave a share of her residuary property to her "cousin Harriet Cloak"; the share was claimed by two persons, viz., Harriet Crane, whose maiden name was Cloak, and who was a first cousin of the testatrix, and Harriet Cloak, who was herself not related to the testatrix, but had married Thomas Cloak, who was a first cousin of the testatrix; it was held that extrinsic evidence of the intimacy between the testatrix and the respective claimants was admissible, and that Harriet Cloak, the wife of T. Cloak, was entitled to the share. Sir H. Cotton, L.J., in that case observed as follows (c):—"Evidence of the testatrix's expressions of intention before and after the making of the will is not admissible. Such evidence of intention is only admissible where the words are equally applicable to two or more persons, which is not the case here, where the words are not strictly applicable to any person. But evidence of the surrounding circumstances and of the knowledge of the testatrix is admissible."

(a) Wigr. Wills, pl. 215; Blundell v. Gladstone, 11 Sim. 467, 470, 1 Phil. 282; Thomson v. Hempenstall, 13 Jur. 814; Drake v. Drake, 8 H. L. C. 172; Bernasconi v. Atkinson, 10 Hare, 348; Charter v. Charter, L. R., 7 H. L. 364, 377; In bonis Brake, 6 P. D. 217; In bonis Chappell, [1894] P. 98. In Re Blackman, 16 Beav. 377, the rule was transgressed, but the decision seems right without the questionable evidence: see Chap. XXV.

(b) 34 Ch. D. 255.

(c) Ibid. at p. 258.

CHAPTER XV.

Declarations need not be contemporaneous with will.

Where evidence of intention is admissible, it is no objection to its reception that the declarations relied on were subsequent to the making of the will. In the case of Doe v. Allen (d), the declarations admitted as evidence had been made by the testatrix ten months after the date of her will, and were objected to on that account. Lord Denman, C.J., concluded the judgment of the Court by saying, that "none of the cases which were referred to in the books to shew that declarations contemporaneous with the will were alone to be received, established such a distinction. Neither had any argument been adduced which convinced the Court that those subsequent to the will ought to be excluded wherever any evidence of declarations could be received. They might have more or less weight according to the time and circumstances under which they were made, but their admissibility depended entirely on other considerations." The same remarks would apply to declarations made before the will (e).

Rule where there is a person answering to the description.

It was stated in a former page that evidence of all the material facts of the case was admissible to assist in the exposition of the will. And this statement was necessarily qualified by the insertion of the word "material," because though the rules specially applicable to the subject now under consideration, may not raise any peculiar obstacle to the admission of evidence tendered in support of a given fact; yet if that fact, supposing it to be proved, ought not to influence the construction of the will, the evidence in support of it is immaterial, and therefore inadmissible. Thus it is a well-known rule, that words shall be interpreted in their primary sense, if the context and surrounding circumstances do not exclude such an interpretation, even though the most conclusive evidence of intention to use them in some popular or secondary sense be tendered (f).

(d) 12 Ad. & El. 455; Wigr. on Wills, 162.

(e) Langham v. Sanford, 19 Ves. 649; 2 Tayl. Evid. p. 1009, 7th ed. Lord Kenyon's dictum, Thomas v. Thomas, 6 T. R. 677, seems therefore to be overruled.

(f) Wigr. Wills, Prop. II. supra. And see Horwood v. Griffith, 4 D. M. & G. 708. In Grant v. Grant, L. R., 5 C. P. 727, Blackburn, J., cited with approval "Blackburn on Contracts," where it is said that in applying the rule a distinction must be observed between contracts and wills, and a greater latitude allowed in construing wills, because in them the testator soliloquized, but that in a contract each party spoke to the other: and accordingly it was held in that case that "nephew" meant "wife's nephew," although it would not have been insensible with reference to extrinsic circumstances if it had been strictly interpreted. The decision in Grant v. Grant seems to have been approved by James, L.J., in Sherrott v. Mountford, L. R., 8 Ch. 928. However, in Wells v. Wells, L. R., 18 Eq. 505, Sir G. Jessel, M.R., reaffirmed Sir J. Wigram's proposition and declined to follow Grant v. Grant. See also the doubt thrown on Grant v. Grant, by Cotton, L.J., in Re Taylor, 34 Ch. D. at p. 257, and in Re Parker, 17 Ch. D. 262, and the discussion in In bonis Ashton, [1892] P. 83.

Therefore a person, to whom the terms of the description are imperfectly applicable, may not, by parol evidence of facts tending to prove an intention in his favour, support his claim against another person exactly or more nearly answering to all the particulars in the description.

Thus, in Delmare v. Robello (g), where a testator in 1785 bequeathed the residue of his estate, in trust to pay the interest for life to all the children of his two sisters, Reyne and Estrella; in case of the death of any, their issue to have their respective shares, with benefit or survivorship for want of issue. The testator died in 1789, leaving three sisters: Reyne, who was never married, but in 1757 changed her profession of religion from the Jewish to the Roman Catholic persuasion, and became a professed nun, and was baptized by the name of Maria Hieronyma, and lived at Genoa; and Estrella and Rebecca, who were married, and lived at Leghorn. Rebecca had several children, who set up a claim on the ground that the testator intended Rebecca when he named Reyne. Parol evidence of the circumstances as well as of the testator's declarations in support of this claim was rejected by Lord Thurlow, who suggested that Maria Hieronyma might have changed her mind, and have escaped into this country, and have married and had children, notwithstanding her vow. He decided, therefore, that the claim of the children of Rebecca was untenable, inasmuch as there was a sister answering to the name in the will; for he considered that the assumption of the conventual name did not prevent the applicability of the former name: it was a part of the profession, and was not meant for the rest of the world; the former name, therefore, continued, and by that such persons were always spoken of.

So, in Andrews v. Dobson (h), where the bequest was to "James, son of Thomas Andrews, of Eastcheap, printer." There was no person by the name of Thomas Andrews in Eastcheap, but there was James Andrews, a printer, who lived there: he had one son, named Thomas, by his first wife, who was related to the testator; he had also a son by a second wife, named James, who was in no manner related to the testator. The son by the first wife claimed the legacy, insisting that the testator meant "Thomas, the son of James," instead of "James, the son of Thomas"; and prayed some inquiry respecting the circumstances; but Sir. L. Kenyon, M.R., said that though there were cases in which legacies were left to persons by nicknames, and evidence had been admitted to shew Evidence not admissible to exclude a person answering to description.

(g) 1 Ves. jun. 412.

(h) 1 Cox, 425.

CHAPTER XV. that the testator usually called them thereby, yet he thought that this was beyond all precedent, and dismissed the bill.

In this case there could have been no doubt as to the identity of the father : but the difficulty was in admitting the claim of a son of a different name, there being a son of the name used by the testator.

In In bonis Peel (i), the testator appointed as one of his executors Francis Courtenay Thorpe, of Hampton, gentleman ; it appeared that this description applied to a youth of twelve years of age ; the Court refused to admit evidence to shew that the testator intended to appoint the father of the youth, whose name was Francis Corbet Thorpe.

Again, in Holmes v. Custance (j), where there was a legacy to the children of Robert Holmes, "late of Norwich, but now of London." It appeared that, at the date of the will, the testator had no relative named Robert, but that a person of this name, who was related to the testator, and had gone from Norwich to London, at the age of fourteen or sixteen, had died in London, a few years before, leaving a child. It was contended that the legacy did not apply to the child of this person, but to the children of George Holmes, who was a relative of the testator, had been formerly of Norwich, and was then resident in London, and had several children, some of whom were in habits of intimacy with the testator ; but Sir W. Grant held that the description was not so inapplicable to Robert, as to let in evidence that George was the person intended ; that the sense of "late" was not "recently" but "formerly" ; and as to his being dead at the time, that the testator might not have known or might have forgotten it, he being at a distance.

And in Wilson v. Squire (k), where a testator bequeathed a legacy to "The London Orphan Society in the City Road," and it appeared that there was no institution precisely answering this description, but there was one in the City Road called the Orphan Working School, which claimed the legacy : evidence was tendered that there was a society called the London Orphan Asylum at Clapton, and that the testator was many years a subscriber to it, and in his lifetime avowed his intention of leaving it a legacy ; but Sir J. K. Bruce held, that the Orphan Working School was sufficiently described by the will, and therefore that none of the evidence was admissible.

(i) L. R., 2 P. & D. 46.

(j) 12 Ves. 279 ; see also Doe v. Westlake, 4 B. & Ald. 57, ante, p. 520 ;

Re Ingle's Trust, L. R., 11 Eq. 578 ; Re Chenoweth, 17 T. L. R. 515.

(k) 1 Y. & C. C. C. 654.

On the same principle, if a testator refers to "my nephew A. B.," and it appears that he has two nephews of that name, one legitimate and the other illegitimate, there is as a general rule no ambiguity, for primâ facie "nephew" means a legitimate nephew, and therefore in such a case evidence is not admissible to shew that the testator intended to refer to his illegitimate nephew (l). But it may appear from the language of the will that the testator applied the description of "nephew" to his legitimate and illegitimate nephews indiscriminately, and in such a case evidence is admissible to shew that in referring to "my nephew A. B." the testator intended to refer to his illegitimate nephew of that name (m).

CHAPTER XV.

Two claimants, one legitimate, the other illegitimate.

This doctrine was carried even farther in the case of Henderson v. Henderson (n). There the testator gave property for the benefit of his grandson, Robert William Henderson; he had a grandson of that name, and also a grandson named William Robert Henderson; it was held that evidence was admissible to shew that the testator was in the habit of calling the latter Robert William, and also to shew that he intended to benefit William Robert, and not Robert William. The decision seems contrary to the principle recognized in Charter v. Charter. It is true, as Lord Selborne remarked in that case, that the principle does not rest on a rational foundation, but it is clearly established.

Henderson v. Henderson.

And even where no person actually answers to any part of the description in the will, it would seem, upon principle, to be impossible to admit parol evidence of intention in support of the claim of one to whom the description is in every respect inapplicable: for the will ought to be made in writing; and if the testator's intention cannot be made to appear by the writing, explained by the circumstances, there is no will (o).

Evidence of intention inadmissible to support claim of one to whom no part of description applies.

Thus, Sir John Strange (p), in citing a case where the executor constituted in a will was "my nephew Robert New," which in the engrossing was written "Nune," and parol evidence was admitted, and thereupon New was declared the person meant, observed, that this would hardly have done, if it had not been for the relative words "my nephew," and its appearing that New was the testator's nephew, and that he had no such nephew as Robert Nune.

Again, in Miller v. Travers (q), a testator devised all his Same rule as to subject of gift.

(l) Re Fish, [1894] 2 Ch. 83

(m) In bonis Ashton, [1892] P. 83.

(n) [1905] 1 Ir. R. 353. See Re Bowman, 8 T. L. R. 117.

(o) Per Lord Abinger, Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 M. & Wels. 369.

(p) Hampshire v. Peirce, 2 Ves. 218

(q) 8 Bing. 244, 1 M. & Sc. 342. The judgment of Tindal, C.J., contains a full and able examination of the authorities. See also Okeden v. Clifden, 2 Russ. 309; Re Clergy Society, 2 K. & J. 615; Re Mayo, [1901] 1 Ch. 404; Barber v. Wood, 4 Ch. D. 885.

CHAPTER XV. freehold and real estates whatsoever, situate in the county of Limerick, and in the city of Limerick, to trustees and their heirs. At the time of making his will, the testator had no real estate in the county of Limerick, but he had considerable real estates in the county of Clare : and it was held by Lord Brougham, L.C., assisted by Tindal, C.J., and Lord Lyndhurst, C.B., that evidence to prove that the testator intended his estates in the county of Clare to pass by the devise, and that the word "Limerick" was inserted by mistake instead of "Clare," was not admissible.

Evidence of
state of facts admissible in such a case.

But this rule does not prevent the admission of parol evidence to shew that the description in the will was inserted by mistake, and that there is a person answering a similar name or description who stood in such a relation of friendship or intimacy to the testator as to lead to the conclusion that he is the person whom the testator intended to benefit (r).

The limits of the doctrine are also illustrated by the case of Re Ofner (s), where a contemporaneous memorandum in the testator's handwriting was admitted as evidence to identify a person wrongly described in the will ; the fact that this memorandum happened to be instructions for the will was held not to make it inadmissible.

(r) Supra, p. 512.

(s) [1909] 1 Ch. 60.

CHAPTER XVI.

ELECTION AND ESTOPPEL.

ELECTION.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Nature and Extent of the Doctrine	531	V. Claims by Widow of Testator	547
II. Parol Evidence inadmissible to raise Election ...	541	VI. When Election is excluded	552
III. What Dispositions are sufficient to raise Election	543	VII. Election by persons under Disability	554
IV. Where the Testator has only a Partial Interest	545	VIII. Time and Mode of Election	555
		IX. Onerous Property	556

I.—Nature and Extent of the Doctrine.—Although Mr. Jarman states the general doctrine of election, he does not deal with it except so far as it is applicable to a particular class of cases, namely, where a testator disposes of his own property, and also professes to dispose of property which does not belong to him. There are, however, other classes of cases to which the doctrine is applicable. Some of them are referred to in connection with appointments under powers (a). Questions with regard to election also arise where persons to whom benefits are given by will have claims on the testator arising out of a transaction entered into by him during his lifetime; as in the case where a father, on the marriage of one of his children, covenants to settle property on the child, and afterwards gives benefits to that child by his will. This subject is considered elsewhere (b).

Extent of the general
doctrine.

The limits of the general doctrine were discussed in Wollaston v. King (c), where James, V.-C., said: "The rule laid down by the Limits of the doctrine.

(a) Chap. XXIII.

(b) Chap. XXXII. The cases where an infant is put to her election whether she will take under or against a settlement made on her marriage (as in Barrow v. Barrow, 4 K. & J. 409; Codrington v. Codrington, 1. R., 7 H. L. 854; Carter v. Silber, [1891] 3 Ch. 553:

[1892] 2 Ch. 278; Edwards v. Carter, [1893] A. C. 360; Viditz v. O'Hagan, [1899] 2 Ch. 569; [1900] 2 Ch. 87, and cases there cited), do not fall within the scope of this work.

(c) L. R., 8 Eq. 165, 174. See Gray, Perp. § 561a.

CHAPTER XVI. Master of the Rolls in Whistler v. Webster (d), is, in general terms, 'that no man shall claim any benefit under a will without conforming, so far as he is able, and giving effect to everything contained in it whereby any disposition is made shewing an intention that such a thing shall take place.' This rule, expressed in these terms, was certainly not applied in the case of Carver v. Bowles (e) and the cases which followed it. There it was clear that certain persons were intended to take benefits under the will, and other persons were allowed to take other benefits without conforming to, and giving effect to, the first dispositions, and, in fact, after defeating them. But why? The only intelligible principle which I can find is that it was held that the failure of the first dispositions, so far as they failed, did, under the will itself, enure for the benefit of the legatees; that the legatees were allowed to retain both benefits because they took both as legatees under the will itself without calling in aid any other instrument or any adverse title. It results in this, that the rule as to election is to be applied as between a gift under a will and a claim dehors the will, and adverse to it, and is not to be applied as between one clause in a will and another clause in the same will."

Condition. Questions of election sometimes arise where a testator makes a bequest or devise to A. on condition that A. releases some right or transfers some property of his to B.; here A. must elect whether he will comply with the condition or forfeit the gift under the will (f).

Right of selection. The cases in which one of several houses, pieces of land, chattels, or other kinds of property, is devised or bequeathed in such a way that the devisee or legatee has a right to elect which he will take, are discussed elsewhere (g).

Doctrine of election, what. "The doctrine of election," says Mr. Jarman (h), "may be thus stated: That he who accepts a benefit under a deed or will, must adopt the whole contents of the instrument (i), conforming to all its (d) 2 Ves. jun. 367.

(e) 2 Russ. & My. 301.

(f) Wilkinson v. Dent, L. R., 6 Ch. 339, where East v. Cook, 2 Ves. sen. 30, is explained; Boughton v. Boughton, 2 Ves. sen. 12; Coote v. Gordon, Ir. R., 11 Eq. 279; Thornton v. Thornton, 11 Ir. Ch. 474; Cosby v. Lord Ashtown, 10 Ir. Ch. 219; Re Earl of Sefton, [1898] 2 Ch. 378. A condition that a certain fund or property shall be brought into hotchpot obviously does not give the legatee a right of election: Middleton v. Windross, L. R., 16 Eq. 212.

(g) Ante, p. 460.

(h) First edition of this work, p. 385. The two leading cases of Noys v. Mor-daunt, 2 Vern. 581, and Streatfield v. Streatfield, C. t. Talb. 176, are given in White and Tudor's L. C. with valuable notes.

(i) The "instrument" may consist of several documents carrying out one entire disposition: Re Woodleys, 29 L. R. Ir. 304, in which Kirkham v. Smith, 1 Ves. sen. 258 and Bacon v. Cosby, 4 De G. & S. 261 are cited.

provisions, and renouncing every right inconsistent with it. If, therefore, a testator has affected to dispose of property which is not his own, and has given a benefit to the person to whom that property belongs, the devisee or legatee accepting the benefit so given to him must make good the testator's attempted disposition; but if, on the contrary, he choose to enforce his proprietary rights against the testator's disposition, equity will sequester the property given to him, for the purpose of making satisfaction out of it to the person whom he has disappointed by the assertion of those rights.

"An anonymous case in Gilb. Cas. in Eq. (j) furnishes a simple illustration of the principle. A. seised of two acres, one in fee, and the other in tail, and having two sons, by his will devised the fee-simple acre to his eldest son, who was issue in tail, and the entailed acre to his youngest son, and died. The eldest son entered upon the entailed acre, whereupon the younger son brought his bill against his brother, that he might enjoy the entailed acre devised to him, or else have an equivalent out of the fee acre; because his father plainly designed something for him. Lord Cowper said, 'The devise of the fee acre to the elder must be understood to be upon the tacit condition, that he shall suffer the younger son to enjoy quietly, or else that the younger son shall have an equivalent out of the fee acre.' And he decreed the same accordingly." This case is the more remarkable, as shewing the length to which the doctrine of election has been carried; because the elder son was actually entitled to both acres by his better title as general or special heir, and took nothing under the will. Yet the mere intention to give him property by the will was held sufficient to put him to his election (k).

But a devisee or legatee is not precluded from claiming derivatively, through another, property which such other person has taken in opposition to the will. Thus, a man may be tenant by the curtesy, in respect of an estate of inheritance taken by his wife in opposition to a will under which he has accepted benefits, without affecting his title to those benefits (l). For compensation having once been made by the wife (m) cannot be exacted a second time.

Does not extend to derivative claims.

(j) Anon., Gilb. Cas. Eq. 15; see also Pre. Ch. 351; Belt's Suppl. to Ves. 250; 2 P. W. 199; 1 Ves. sen. 234; 1 Br. P. C. Tom. 300; 3 ib. 167; Amb. 388, 1 Ed. 532; 3 Br. C. C. 316; Blake v. Bunbury, 4 Br. C. C. 21; Wilson v. Lord Townshend, 2 Ves. jun. 693; 5 Ves. 515; Thellusson v. Woodford, 13 Ves. 209; 1 Dow, 249; Dillon v. Parker, 1 Sw. 359, and Gretton v.

Haward, ib. 409, with Mr. Swanston's celebrated notes; Abdy v. Gordon, 3 Russ. 278; 2 Drew. 93.

(k) See Schroder v. Schroder, Kay, 584-586. But 9 Pri. 573, Richards, C. B. dub.

(l) Lady Cavan v. Pulleney, 2 Ves. jun. 544, 3 Ves. 384.

(m) 2 Ves. jun. 555,

CHAPTER XVI.

And a devisee or legatee who claims derivatively through another to whom the will gave nothing is equally free ; for whether the true owner took subject to an obligation which he has discharged, or subject to no obligation whatever, can make no difference : thus one co-heiress electing to take under a will, may retain a share which since the testator's death has descended to her from a deceased co-heiress, although bound to give up her own original share (n).

It must however be understood that the obligation attaches on whoever at the testator's death is true owner of the property wrongfully disposed of, and to whom also a benefit is given by the will. This is the point of time to be regarded. And it matters not from whom, or by what previous acts or devolutions, such owner's title was derived (o).

Intention of testator.

The doctrine does not depend on any supposed intention of the testator, but is based on a general principle of equity. Consequently the obligation of election extends to the whole of the benefits taken under the two instruments or titles (p).

Election by several persons.

If the property which the testator affects to dispose of belongs to several, as tenant for life and remainderman, each has a separate right of election (q). And if the person on whom the obligation to elect is cast dies without having elected, and his property devolves on several persons, each of them has a separate right of election (r). If A., the person who is bound to elect, elects to take against the will but dies before B., the disappointed legatee or devisee, asserts his rights, A.'s estate is liable to make compensation to B. to the extent of the benefits which A. was entitled to receive under the will (s). In Pickersgill v. Rodger (t), a testatrix bequeathed a sum of 15,000*l.* (which really belonged to her four children, W., J., R., and H. in equal shares, subject to the testatrix's life estate) to R. and H. in equal shares, and devised her real estate to J., subject to the payment thereout of a sum of 10,000*l.* to W. The son J. died before his mother, having by his will given his real estate to one person and his personal estate to others ; he left issue, so that the

(n) Wilson v. Wilson, 1 De G. & S. 152. And see Howells v. Jenkins, 2 J. & H. 706 ; Grissell v. Swinhoe, L. R., 7 Eq. 291. But see per Lord Moncrieff, L. R., 7 H. L. 79.

(o) Cooper v. Cooper, L. R., 6 Ch. 15, 7 H. L. 53. In that case a person who, if he had survived the testatrix, would have been put to his election, died intestate in her lifetime, leaving children, who were his next-of-kin : it was held that they were bound to elect, an allowance being made for the debts of the deceased.

(p) Cooper v. Cooper, L. R., 7 H. L. 53.

(q) Ward v. Baugh, 4 Ves. 623.

(r) Fytche v. Fytche, 19 L. T. 343. The report of this case in L. R., 7 Eq. 494, is so incomplete as to be almost worthless. See also Harris v. Watkins, 2 K. & J. 473.

(s) Rogers v. Jones, 3 Ch. D. 688 ; 7 Ch. D. 345 ; Re Carpenter, 51 L. T. 773.

(t) 5 Ch. D. 163.

devise to him of the real estate under the original testatrix's will did not lapse : it was held by Jessel, M.R., that the disappointed legatees under that will were entitled to compensation out of the real estate devised to J., but that no case of election arose against his residuary legatees.

Where several were disappointed, the sequestered property is divided among them in proportion to the value of the interest of which they are disappointed (u).

In all cases of election, the amount of compensation is ascertained as at the date of the testator's death (v).

The practical working of the rule as to compensation in cases of election is exemplified in Re Booth (w). In that case a testator was absolutely entitled to certain lands, and was also tenant for life of other lands, without any power of disposition over them, the persons entitled to them subject to his life interest being such of his children as attained twenty-one. By his will he devised his own lands and the settled lands to some of his children and to other persons in various shares, the shares of the children under the will not corresponding to their shares under the settlement. Consequently the interests of three classes of persons had to be considered, namely (A) persons entitled under the settlement to whom the testator gave part of his own property and also purported to give shares in the settled property ; (B) persons entitled under the settlement, to whom the testator gave no part of his own property, but purported to give shares in the settled property ; and (C) persons not entitled under the settlement, to whom the testator purported to give shares in the settled property. All the persons comprised in classes (A) and (B) elected to take against the will, the result being that some of them were deprived of the shares in the settled property purported to be given them by the will. It was held (first) that the members of class (A) were entitled to compensation inter se, so that every member of class (A) was bound to make compensation not only to class (C) but also to every other member of class (A) ; and (secondly) that all compensation received by any member of class (A) formed part of the benefits received by him under the will.

If the property which the testator professes to dispose of does not belong to the legatee, no case of election arises. In Re Lord Chesham (x), certain heirlooms were settled by deed upon trusts

When compensation is ascertained.

Where property belongs to a class and testator purports to give it to some members of the class and to strangers.

Compensation of parties electing inter se.

Where property does not belong either to testator or to legatee.

(u) Howells v. Jenkins, 1 D. J. & S. 617.

(v) Re Hancock, [1905] 1 Ch. 16.

(w) [1906] 2 Ch. 321.

(x) 31 Ch. D. 466. Compare the cases where a married woman is restrained from anticipation, post, p. 553.

CHAPTER XVI.

under which they were to go with the possession of a house of which the testator was tenant for life, with remainder to A. as tenant for life; the testator bequeathed these heirlooms upon trust for sale for the benefit of B. and C., and gave his residue to A. It was held by Chitty, J., that no case of election arose, because A. could not give up the heirlooms. The learned judge distinguished the case before him from the case of Williams v. Mayne (y), in which a testator bequeathed a legacy to a married woman, and purported to dispose of a fund in which she had a reversionary interest under her marriage settlement, and it was held that the legacy must be impounded until the reversionary interest fell into possession. Williams v. Mayne seems to have been decided in accordance with the views held by the Court of Appeal in Robinson v. Wheelwright (z).

Doctrine applies to contingent and reversionary interests.

The doctrine of election clearly applies as well to contingent as to vested rights (a); and to reversionary and remote as well as to immediate interests (b). "Lord Hardwicke, indeed," as Mr. Jarman points out (c), "at one time seems to have thought that it did not extend to a remainder expectant on an estate tail (d); but the notion stands upon no intelligible principle, and is inconsistent with his Lordship's own decision in Graves v. Forman (e), in which he would not allow an heir at law to whom an estate for life in remainder after an estate tail was devised, to take it without giving up a copyhold disposed of to another, but upon which the will could not (in the then state of the law) operate, for want of a previous surrender. The heir it seems (strangely enough) elected to take the estate for life in remainder, and eventually got nothing; the tenant in tail having acquired the fee-simple by suffering a common recovery."

Immaterial whether testator is acquainted with his want of title.

Mr. Jarman continues (f): "It is immaterial in regard to the doctrine of election, whether the testator, in disposing of that which is not his own, is aware of his want of title, or proceeds on the erroneous supposition that he is exercising a power of disposition which belongs to him; in either case, whoever claims in opposition to the will, must relinquish what the will gives him (g). This seems to

(y) Ir. R., 1 Eq. 519.

(z) 6 D. M. & G. 535, disapproving Wall v. Wall, 15 Sim. 513.

(a) Per Lord Loughborough, 2 Ves. jun. 696, 697.

(b) Webb v. Earl of Shaftesbury, 7 Ves. 480; Wilson v. Lord John Townshend, 2 Ves. jun. 697.

(c) First ed. p. 386.

(d) Bor v. Bor, 3 Br. P. C. Toml. 178, n.

(e) Cited 3 Ves 67; see Mahon v. Morgan, 6 Ir. Jur. 173.

(f) First ed. p. 387.

(g) Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. jun. 370; Thellusson v. Woodford, 13 ib. 221; Welby v. Welby, 2 V. & B. 199, overruling Cull v. Showell, Amb. 727, unless decided on the ground of the great lapse of time, which seems probable. Re Brooksbank, 34 Ch. D. 160.

result from the impossibility of knowing with certainty that the testator would not have made the disposition, had he been accurately acquainted with the title; and (as a great judge has observed), 'nothing can be more dangerous than to speculate upon what he would have done, if he had known one thing or another' (h).

"A question which has been much discussed is, whether the principle governing cases of election under a will is forfeiture or compensation; or, to speak more explicitly, whether a person claiming against a will is bound to relinquish the benefit thereby given to him in toto, or only to the extent of indemnifying the persons disappointed by his election. The strong current of the authorities, particularly those of a recent date, is in favour of the principle of compensation (j); interrupted, certainly, by some dicta (k), which seem to favour the doctrine of forfeiture (l). In the case of Green v. Green (m), Lord Eldon is generally supposed to have used expressions indicating a similar opinion. His Lordship, however, expressly admits the cases to have decided that the party electing against a will was not bound to give up more than was enough to make satisfaction for that which was intended for another; and when his Lordship states the contrary doctrine, it is with reference to the case before him, which arose upon a deed, 'in which,' he observed, 'as it is a contract, it is very difficult to say that compensation only is to be made' (n). The doctrine of compensation was also subsequently recognized by the same high authority in the House of Lords, in Ker v. Wauchope (o), as well as in the earlier and much-discussed case of Lord Rancliffe v. Parkyns (p); and were it not that the contrary doctrine has received the support of a gentleman of great ability and eminence (q), the writer would not

Principle of doctrine is compensation, not forfeiture.

(h) See Sir R. P. Arden's judgment in Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. jun. 370.

(j) Webster v. Mitford, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 363, stated from Reg. Lib. 1 Sw. 449; Bor v. Bor, 3 Br. P. C. Toml. 167; Ardesoife v. Bennet, 2 Dick. 463; Lewis v. King, 2 Br. C. C. 600; Freke v. Lord Barrington, 3 Br. C. C. 284; Blake v. Bunbury, 1 Ves. jun. 523; Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. jun. 372; Lady Cavan v. Pulteney, 2 Ves. jun. 560; Ward v. Baugh, 4 Ves. 627; Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 49; Welby v. Welby, 2 V. & B. 190. (See these cases stated in Mr. Swanston's note to Gretton v. Haward. 1 Sw. 433); Tibbits v. Tibbits, Jac. 317.

(k) Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. W. 119; Cookes v. Hellier, 1 Ves. sen. 235; Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 404; Vil- lareal v. Lord Galway, 1 Br. C. C. 292, n.; Wilson v. Townshend, 2 Ves. jun. 697; Wilson v. Mount, 3 Ves. 194; Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. 609; Thellusson v. Woodford, 13 Ves. 220.

(l) And by an express decision of Lord Langdale to that effect: Greenwood v. Penny, 12 Beav. 406.

(m) 2 Mer. 86.

(n) 19 Ves. 668.

(o) 1 Bli. 1.

(p) 6 Dow, 149.

(q) 1 Roper's Husband and Wife, by Jacob, 556, n.; "The writer understands that other eminent equity lawyers concur in Mr. Jacob's views." (Note by Mr. Jarman.) See also Sug. Pow. p. 575, 8th ed., where the doctrine of forfeiture is preferred.

CHAPTER XVI.

No compensation where legatee takes under will.

Personal competency to express intention requisite.

As to infants and femes covertes.

have thought the point open to discussion." It is now generally accepted as the settled doctrine of the Court (r).

If the person who is put to his election elects to take under the will, no question of compensation arises (s).

Mr. Jarman continues (t): "In order to raise a case of election, there must be a personal competency on the part of the author of the attempted disposition, as the doctrine is founded on intention (u), which supposes such competency. Thus, under the old law, where personalty was, and real estate was not, disposable by the will of a person under age, the heir of the infant testator was allowed to take his real estate in opposition to the will, without relinquishing a legacy bequeathed to him by the same will (v). And though the disability of coverture is, in some respects, distinguishable from and less absolute than that of infancy, (a feme covert having, it is said, a disposing mind, but not a disposing power, while an infant has neither the one nor the other,) yet the principle seems, according to the authorities, to apply to the attempted dispositions of married women. If, therefore, a feme covert, having a testamentary power, makes an appointment by will in favour of her husband, and by the same will professes to bequeath to another personal estate to which her power does not extend, the husband may take the benefit appointed to him, and also defeat the intended bequest of the other property, by the assertion of his marital right" (w).

So if a married woman, subject to the old law, makes a valid testamentary disposition in favour of her heir, and attempts to devise real estate, not settled to her separate use, to a stranger, the heir is not put to his election (x). Or if she makes a valid appointment of personalty in favour of her next of kin, and an invalid appointment of another fund to strangers, the next of kin are not put to their election (y).

But if a married woman attempts to dispose by will of property which belongs to her husband otherwise than jure mariti, and

(r) Schroder v. Schroder, Kay, 578; Howells v. Jenkins, 1 D. J. & S. 617; Cooper v. Cooper, L. R., 6 Ch. 15, 7 H. L. 53; Re Vardon's Trusts, 28 Ch. D. 124; 31 Ch. D. 275. Compare Griffith Boscawen v. Scott, 26 Ch. D. 358.

(s) Re Lord Chesham, 31 Ch. D. 466, and cases there cited.

(t) First ed. p. 388.

(u) That is, a disposing intention, not an intention to put the owner to his election; see per Lord Cairns, Cooper

v. Cooper, L. R., 7 H. L. 67.

(v) Hearle v. Greenbank, 1 Ves. sen. 298. See Re Anderson, [1905] 2 Ch. 70.

(w) Rich v. Cockell, 9 Ves. 370. The passage above quoted was referred to by Kay, J., in Re De Burgh Lawson, 55 L. J. Ch. 46, as a correct statement of the law.

(x) Re De Burgh Lawson, 55 L. J. Ch. 46.

(y) Blakelock v. Grindle, L. R., 7 Eq. 215.

makes a valid disposition of other property in his favour, he is bound to elect (z). CHAPTER XVI.

In Rich v. Cockell (cited by Mr. Jarman, supra) the will was wholly inoperative, except as to the testatrix's separate estate; it had not been proved, and could not be proved without the husband's assent. Since the Married Women's Property Acts, the will of a married woman is entitled to probate (ante, p. 45), and it is submitted that this alteration in the law has rendered obsolete the doctrine stated above by Mr. Jarman. Re Harris (a) seems to have been partly decided on this ground. In that case a testatrix gave her husband an annuity of 100*l.*, and bequeathed to C. a gold watch which had formerly belonged to her, but became her husband's property, jure mariti, on her marriage in 1873: it was held by Parker, J., that the husband was put to his election.

Effect of
M. W. P.
Acts.

Where under the old law, a testator, by a will sufficient in point of execution to pass personal estate, but not adequately attested for the devise of freehold estate, devised such estate away from the heir, to whom, by the same will, he bequeathed a legacy, no case of election arose against the heir (b), unless the legacy to him was bequeathed upon the express condition that he should confirm the devise (c). Of course this question cannot now arise under wills made or republished since the year 1837, which, if sufficiently executed for the bequest of a personal legacy, will also be effectual to dispose of freehold estate. Nor is this the only instance in which the Wills Act has tended to narrow the practical range of the doctrine under consideration; for now that the devising power extends to after-acquired real estate, it can no longer be a question (as formerly (d)), whether the testator has, by attempting to dispose

As to heir.

Effect of 1 Vict. c. 26,
on doctrine.

(z) Coutts v. Acworth, L. R., 9 Eq. 519.

(a) [1909] 2 Ch. 206. In his judgment Parker, J., seems to doubt whether Mr. Jarman's statement of the law was justified, even in 1844, by the decision in Rich v. Cockell.

(b) Hearle v. Greenbank, 1 Ves. 298, 3 Atk. 697, 716; Cary v. Askew, 1 Cox, 241; Sheddon v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 481; Brodie v. Barry, 2 V. & B. 127; Gardiner v. Fell, 1 J. & W. 22. Wilson v. Wilson, 1 De G. & S. 152, seems contra. But see as to that case Middlebrook v. Bromley, 9 Jur. N.S. 614; and per Lord Alvanley, Buckridge v. Ingram, 2 Ves. jun. 665, cited by Lord Eldon, 8 Ves. 500. So where a devise was revoked by an alteration of the estate of the testator, Jacob v. Jacob, 82 L. T. 270; ante, p. 161.

(c) Boughton v. Boughton, 2 Ves. 12.

(d) See Churchman v. Ireland, 4 Sim. 520, 1 R. & My. 250 (questioning Back v. Kett, Jac. 534); Tennant v. Tennant, 2 Ll. & G. t. Plunket, 516; Schroder v. Schroder, Kay, 578; Hance v. Trauwitt, 2 J. & H. 216. In Schroder v. Schroder the testator (who died before the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 3, came into operation), after making his will, which purported to devise his after-acquired real estates, contracted to buy a certain estate, and then made a codicil directing his trustees to complete the purchase, and hold the estate on the trusts of the will, which were partly in favour of the heir; afterwards the codicil was revoked by a conveyance to uses to bar dower in the testator's favour (vide ante, p. 161), and it was held that the heir must elect. But

CHAPTER XVI.

In what cases a Scotch heir is put to election by English will.

of the real estate to which he may be entitled at his decease, raised a case of election against the heir in respect of such property. Even before the act, the heir was held not to be put to his election in cases of revocation by alteration of estate (a).

Nearly allied to the cases last noticed, are those where a testator entitled to heritable property in Scotland, affects by will in the English form, ineffectual to pass the Scotch property, to devise it away from the Scotch heir, at the same time giving him property in England. It seems now well settled that in such cases, if the English will purports to give the Scotch property either by name or under the general denomination of property in Scotland (b), or of property "in any part of the United Kingdom" (c), the Scotch heir is put to his election, while, on the other hand, a devise in general terms of all the testator's property whatsoever and where-soever is held to refer only to such property as he has power to give by the will, and the Scotch heir may claim both by descent and under the will (d); the first proposition also seems to apply where the disposition is in the Scotch form, but not sufficient to pass lands in England away from the English heir (e), and it is presumed the latter proposition would be held to apply also, as the doctrine of approbate and reprobate in Scotland, and of election in England, seem to be identical (f).

In Douglas-Menzies v. Umphelby (g), a testator domiciled in Scotland made two wills, under each of which he gave benefits to his wife; one will was to take effect according to the law of New South Wales, the other according to the law of Scotland; the wife took if a testator before 1838 devised estate A., which he had contracted to buy, to one person, and estate B., with all other estates which he might subsequently acquire, to another, and gave benefits to his heir, and afterwards took a conveyance of estate A. to uses to bar dower in his own favour, and acquired other estates, it was questioned by the V.-C. whether the heir was bound to elect; for there was no intention to give estate A. to the devisee of B., and the whole doctrine of election proceeded so entirely on the ground of intention, that perhaps the heir might be entitled to retain the estate against both devisees, neither of whom would have a better right against him than the other.

(a) Plowden v. Hyde, 2 Sim. (N.S.) 171; Tennant v. Tennant, 2 Ll. & Go. 516; Sugd. Pow. 577, 8th ed.

(b) Brodie v. Barry, 2 V. & B. 127; Reynolds v. Torin, 1 Russ. 129; M'Call v. M'Call, Dru. t. Sug. 283.

(c) Orrell v. Orrell, L. R., 6 Ch. 302.

(d) Johnson v. Telford, 1 R. & My. 244; Allen v. Anderson, 5 Hare, 163; Maxwell v. Maxwell, 16 Beav. 106, 2 D. M. & G. 705; Maxwell v. Hyslop, L. R., 4 Eq. 407. As to land in France, see Baring v. Ashburton, 54 L. T. 463.

(e) Dundas v. Dundas, 2 D. & Cl. 349. The Scotch Courts, therefore, unlike the English Courts, will read against the English heir an instrument imperfectly executed according to the Statute of Frauds, so as to put him to an election; and in like manner the English Courts (treating the Scotch heir differently from the English heir, Dewar v. Maitland, L. R., 2 Eq. 834) will read against the Scotch heir an instrument insufficient according to the law of Scotland to disinherit him.

(f) 2 D. & Cl. 352; 16 Beav. 107; Ker v. Wauchope, 1 Bli. 1; Codrington v. Codrington, L. R., 7 H. L. at p. 866, (g) [1908] A. C. 224.

proceedings in Scotland in which she successfully asserted a claim to share in the testator's property contrary to the terms of the will, and it was held that under the doctrine of approbate and reprobate she could not take any benefit under the Australian will.

CHAPTER XVI.

In Haynes v. Foster (h), a testator devised land in Turkey, which by the law of that country he had no power to dispose of by will, and it was held that his son, being one of his heirs by Turkish law, was put to his election.

Land in Turkey.

The application of the doctrine of election to appointments under powers is discussed elsewhere (i).

Powers of appointment.

The doctrine of election has been held not to apply to creditors; and, therefore, where a testator appropriated to the payment of debts property which was not liable thereto, and by the same will disposed of, in favour of other persons, property which was by law assets for the payment of debts, it was held that the creditors might take the latter in subversion of the testator's devise, without abandoning their claim to the former (j). And where a testator devised for payment of debts certain lands, (including some which were not his own, but belonged to his son,) the son was allowed to participate as a creditor in the provision for debts, out of the other property, without relinquishing his own estate to the creditors (k). But now real estates of every description are assets for the payment of debts (l).

Not applicable to creditors.

II. Parol Evidence inadmissible to raise Election.—"At one period," says Mr. Jarman (m), "it was doubted whether evidence dehors the instrument was admissible for the purpose of shewing that a testator considered that to be his own which did not actually belong to him, or was not under his disposing power. In the well-known case of Pulteney v. Darlington (n), rent-rolls and steward's accounts were admitted to prove that the testator dealt as absolute owner with lands of which he was only tenant in tail, and, consequently, that he must have intended them to pass under a general devise of his real estate, so as to impose election on the heir in tail, Whether parol evidence is admissible.

(h) [1901] 1 Ch. 361.

(i) Chap. XXIII.

(j) Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136; see also Clark v. Guise, 2 Ves. 617.(k) Deg v. Deg, 2 P. W. 412. See further as to the position of creditors with reference to the doctrine of elec-tion, per Lord Cairns in Cooper v. Cooper, L. R., 7 H. L. p. 66.

(l) Chaps. LIII, LIV.

(m) First ed. p. 391.

(n) (Lady Cavan v. Pulteney; Darlington v. Pulteney); 2 Ves. jun. 544, and 3 Ves. 384.

CHAPTER XVI. to whom, by the same will, a benefit was given, though the testator had a large estate of his own, to which the words were applicable (o).

“ Lord Commissioner Eyre, however, in Blake v. Bunbury (p), laid it down, that ‘ the intent of the testator to dispose of that which was not his, ought to appear on the will.’ The admissibility of extrinsic evidence, too, was strongly denied by Lord Loughborough, in Stratton v. Best (q); and the same Judge expressed his disapprobation of Pulteney v. Lord Darlington, in Rutter v. Maclean (r); as did Lord Eldon in Pole v. Lord Somers (s), and Druce v. Dennison (t). In the latter case, however, his Lordship admitted a statement of property written by the testator, and books of account, as evidence that he considered himself to be owner, and, as such, intended to dispose of certain messuages and leases, the property of his wife, part of which the testator had made his own by alienation; but Lord Eldon seems to have regarded the papers themselves as testamentary, and to have thought that he must either admit the testator’s explanatory statement as extrinsic evidence, or give the parties an opportunity of propounding it as part of the will in the Ecclesiastical Court. This case, however, does not contain so decided an expression of his Lordship’s opinion on the subject, as we find in a subsequent case in the House of Lords (u) in which he observed that he thought the rules as to election had been settled: ‘ It must appear on the face of the will, that the testator proposes that there should be an election, and as to what subjects.’ And his Lordship referred to Druce v. Dennison as standing, to some extent at least, on the special ground which has been noticed. Lord Eldon also adverted to a case of Andrews v. Lemon, where a testator bequeathed all his personal property (he having personal property of his own, and also personal property not so strictly his own, but which he had power to dispose of by deed or will), for purposes for which his own was insufficient; Sir L. Kenyon, M.R., sent it to the Master to inquire whether by personal property he meant his own strictly, or intended to include both: but when the evidence was taken, he was so much struck with his own decision, that he said, ‘ Though the evidence has been taken, I shall not now admit one word of it, it being necessary, for the general interests of mankind, that persons should in their wills state clearly what they mean.’

(o) See also Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 516; Rutter v. Maclean, 4 Ves. 531; Pole v. Lord Somers, 6 Ves. 309; and Druce v. Denison, ibid. 385; and see Finch v. Finch, 4 Br. C. C. 38, 1 Ves. jun. 534.

(p) 1 Ves. jun. 523.

(q) 1 Ves. jun. 285.

(r) 4 Ves. 537.

(s) 6 Ves. 322.

(t) Ibid. 402.

(u) Doe v. Chichester, 4 Dow, 76, 89, 90.

“The doctrine thus earnestly advocated by these eminent Judges has prevailed in subsequent cases. As in Clementson v. Gandy (v), where parol evidence was tendered for the purpose of shewing that the testatrix had supposed herself to be absolute owner of, and intended to include in the residuary bequest in her will, certain settled property, in which she had only a life interest, in order to raise a case of election against a legatee under the will, who also took an interest in such property under the settlement; but the evidence was rejected, Sir J. Leach, M.R. (w), observing that the intention to dispose must in all cases appear by the will itself; that there was no ambiguity in the expressions the testatrix had employed; and extrinsic evidence for the purpose of contradicting the intention was inadmissible.”

CHAPTER XVI.

Parol evidence
rejected.

III.—What Dispositions are sufficient to raise Election.—With respect to the intention, as manifested by the will itself, it is to be observed, that, in order to raise a case of election, it must be clear and decisive; for if the testator's expressions will admit of being restricted to property belonging to or disposable by him, the inference will be, that he did not mean them to apply to that over which he had no disposing power (x). Thus, in Dummer v. Pitcher (y), where the testator having, before making his will, transferred certain 4 per cent. and 5 per cent. stock (then forming the whole of his funded property) into the joint names of himself and his wife, bequeathed the rents of his leasehold houses, and the interest of all his funded property or estate, of whatsoever kind, to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her decease upon trust to pay divers legacies of 4 per cent. stock, the aggregate amount of which fell short by 50*l.* only of the amount of stock of that description so formerly transferred by him: he afterwards made some further purchases of 5 per cent. stock, taking the transfers in the joint names of himself and his wife. The testator at his death left no funded property, except the 4 per cents. and 5 per cents. before mentioned, exclusive of which his assets were greatly inadequate to pay his legacies. It was held, first, that all

Expressions must be clear in order to raise a case of election.

(v) 1 Kee. 309; see also Dixon v. Samson, 2 Y. & C. 566. The exploded doctrine of Darlington v. Pulteney was treated obiter as law by Jessel, M.R., in Pickersgill v. Rodger, 5 Ch. D. 171; but the subsequent cases were not cited.

(w) The judge was Lord Langdale.

(x) See Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 41; Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow, 149;

Minchin v. Gabbett, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 1, and the other cases cited infra, p. 546.

(y) 5 Sim. 35; 2 My. & K. 262; see also Crabb v. Crabb, 1 My. & K. 511; Blommart v. Player, 2 S. & St. 597; Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare, 411; Smith v. Lyne, 2 Y. & C. C. 345; Seaman v. Woods, 24 Beav. 381; Jervoise v. Jervoise, 17 Beav. 566.

CHAPTER XVI. the sums of stock then standing in the joint names of the husband and wife, and whether transferred before or after the date of his will, became, by survivorship, the absolute property of the wife; secondly, that the will did not purport to dispose of the stock in terms sufficiently distinct and explicit to put the wife to her election (z).

But if the will is so expressed as to shew that the testator had in mind some specific property, the case is different (a).

General devise restricted to property of testator.

A general devise of the testator's real estate has always been held to shew an intention to give what strictly and properly belonged to him, and nothing more, even if the testator had no real estate of his own upon which the devise could operate. The same principle was held, in Timewell v. Perkins (b), to apply to a devise of a specified kind of property, as "ground-rents"; in regard to which however, it is to be observed, that the bequest, even under the old law, would have included, and, therefore, might have been designed to include, leasehold ground-rents purchased by the testator after the making of the will; so that no inference that he had not his own property in contemplation arose from the circumstance of his not having any such when he made his will.

Devise of "ground-rents."

General clause of revocation.

On the same principle, a clause in general terms revoking all settlements theretofore made by the testator, is not sufficient evidence of an intention to put the beneficiaries to their election (c).

Devise of lands answering to certain locality.

With respect to wills subject to the old law, Mr. Jarman observes (d), that, though a general devise was construed as comprising property belonging to the testator and that only, even when there was nothing properly and strictly his own on which it could operate, "yet a devise of lands answering to a particular locality seems to stand upon a different footing. It is hardly to be supposed that a testator would make such a devise without having a particular property in view" (e).

How affected by 1 Vict. c. 26.

Such a question, however, will present itself under a different aspect in regard to wills made since the year 1837, which (we have seen (f)) speak, in reference to the property comprised in testator and his wife.

(z) See also Henry v. Henry, Ir. R., 6 Eq. 286; Minchin v. Gabbett, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 1.

(b) 2 Atk. 102.

(c) Re Booker, 34 W. R. 346.

(d) First ed. p. 394.

(a) Att.-Gen. v. Fletcher, 5 L. J. (N.S.), Ch. 75; Shuttleworth v. Greaves, 4 My. & Cr. 38; Coates v. Stevens, 1 Y. & C. 66; Grosvenor v. Durston, 25 Bea. 97; Re Harris, [1909] 2 Ch. 206. In Poole v. Odling, 31 L. J. Ch. 439, a bequest of 800l. consols was held to be general, and therefore not to refer to a like sum standing in the name of the

(e) See, however, Read v. Crop, 1 Br. C. C. 492; s. c. Cox's MS.; 1 Sw. 402, n., "where" as Mr. Jarman remarks "Lord Thurlow's remarks, it is conceived, must be taken in connection with the special circumstances of the case."

(f) Ante, Chap. XII.

them, from the death; though even with regard to such wills, devising lands in a particular locality, it is difficult to say that no inference that the testator had some specific property in view arises from the fact of his having none of his own to satisfy the devise at the date of its execution; for it is a whimsical intention to impute to a testator, when he affects to dispose of all property of a particular character, of which he has now, or may hereafter have power to dispose, that he makes that disposition without the least suspicion that he has then any property of that description, and solely with the notion that he may thereafter buy some such property (g). Where the devise is specific in the sense of being a gift of a particular estate, as "my R. property," the wife alone and not the devisor being entitled to that property, she must undoubtedly elect (h). And where (i) a testator was seised of freeholds in fee simple and of copyholds in tail, and himself occupied parts of each, and had let other parts of each to tenants at entire rents, and then by will, dated in 1859, devised his "real estate" upon trust as to the "lands occupied by him" for his wife, and confirmed his tenants "in their present occupations at their present rents" for twenty-one years, it was held that the heir in tail of the copyholds (to whom an annuity was bequeathed) must elect.

IV.—Where the Testator has only a Partial Interest.—But the most numerous as well as the most difficult class of cases with which the Courts have had to deal, consists of those in which the testator and the person against whom the election is sought to be raised, have each an undivided share, or some partial or limited interest, in the property; and in which, therefore, the question is not, as in the cases before discussed, simply whether the testator referred to particular tenements, but whether he intended the devise to comprise such property, inclusive of the interest of his co-owner. Thus, in Padbury v. Clark (j), the testator being entitled to a moiety of a freehold house, devised "all that my freehold messuage, &c., now on lease to A. and in his occupation," giving the person entitled to the remaining moiety benefits under his will; he was also entitled to a moiety of some other property, which he devised by the description of "all that my moiety," &c. Lord Cottenham observed that he found no ground for a doubt as to the intention to give the entirety; that the words were ample, complete and Question whether testator intends to include interest of co-proprietor.

Padbury v. Clark.

(g) Per Wood, V.-C., Usticke v. Peters, 4 K. & J. 455.

(will in 1857).

(i) Honywood v. Forster, 30 Beav. 14.

(h) Whitley v. Whitley, 31 Beav. 173

(j) 2 Mac. & G. 298.

CHAPTER XVI. correct for that purpose, but wholly inapplicable to the supposed gift of a moiety only : and that if this were matter of any doubt, this construction would be strongly corroborated by the other devise, which shewed how the testator described a moiety when his intention was to give only a moiety. The L.C. therefore held that the owner of the other moiety must elect. A direction to repair the specifically described property would likewise corroborate this construction (k) ; but it would appear from Lord Cottenham's judgment, and from subsequent authorities (l), that a specific devise as of the entire subject will generally suffice, without such assistance, to put the co-owner to his election.

Swan v. Holmes.

So, in Swan v. Holmes (m), where a sum of 10,000*l.* consols stood settled in trust for two sisters for life, and after their deaths, two-thirds of the capital in trust for their brother, and one-third in trust for their sisters ; and the brother bequeathed the whole of his property to trustees, as to part on certain trusts for his sisters ; and he afterwards bequeathed the property, " including the 10,000*l.* trust money," to other persons : it was held that the sisters must elect between the benefits given them by the will, and their interest in the 10,000*l.* consols.

Question, whether testator, having reversion only, intends to include the immediate interest.

So, where the testator has a reversion only in the lands devised, it frequently becomes a question whether he intended to confine the will to that estate, or to include in it the immediate and absolute interest. Primâ facie, the testator must, of course, be understood to refer only to what he had power to dispose of. But the context of the will must be examined, to see whether an intention to include also what he had no such power to dispose of, be indicated ; and for this purpose, notwithstanding some strong expressions tending to shew the difficulty of applying the doctrine of election to such cases (n), the ordinary rules for collecting the testator's intention must be observed, the question being simply, what does the testator mean ? If he has subjected the lands in question to limitations which, if the devise be limited to the reversion, cannot, or probably will not, ever take effect, or has conferred powers on the devisees which, on the same hypothesis, they can never exercise, the intention to include the immediate interest will be sufficiently established (o). But these indications of intention (k) Howells v. Jenkins, 2 J. & H. 706. There was no such direction in Padbury v. Clark.

(l) Wilkinson v. Dent, L. R. 6 Ch. 339 ; Fitzsimons v. Fitzsimons, 28 Beav. 417 ; Miller v. Thurgood, 33 Beav. 496.

(m) 19 Beav. 471.

(n) See per Lord Eldon, in Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow. 149 ; Minchin v. Gabbett, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 1.

(o) Welby v. Welby, 2 V. & B. 187 ; Wintour v. Clifton, 21 Beav. 447, 8 D. M. & G. 641 ; Ustick v. Peters, 4 K. & J. 437.

will not prevail against an express and unreserved confirmation of the settlement creating the estates which precede the testator's reversion. Express declaration overrides conjecture, however probable (p).

On the same principle, if a testatrix devises "all my estate and interest to the lands of H.," in which she has only a life interest, this does not put the remainder-man to his election (q). And if a testator has a charge on land at L. and no other property there, and disposes of all his property at L., he has a sufficient interest to satisfy the words of the will (r).

Again, if a testator, having an estate subject to an incumbrance, simply devises the estate without saying more, he is to be taken to mean the estate in its actual condition; and the incumbrancer, to whom other benefits are given by the will, is not, in such a case, put to his election; still less, if the beneficiary be entitled only to participate in the incumbrances with others to whom no benefit is given by the will (s). But the provisions of the will may shew an intention that the incumbrancer shall give up his charge (t).

Similar question where testator is entitled subject to incumbrances.

V.—Claims by Widow of Testator.—A similar question, and one which was formerly much agitated, was (u) whether the widow of a testator, married before 1834, was precluded, by a benefit given to her by his will, from claiming dower out of lands devised by that will. It is clear that, under the old law, a mere devise in general terms of the testator's real estate afforded no indication of an intention to dispose of the dower (v).

Dowress when put to her election.

General devise does not put dowress to her election.

And the addition of the word "all" would not enlarge the (p) Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow, 149. But confirmation of a portion of the settlement leaves the remaining portion unconfirmed, Blake v. Bunbury, 1 Ves. jun. 514.

(q) Galvin v. Devereux, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 185.

(r) Maddison v. Chapman, 1 J. & H. 470.

(s) Stephens v. Stephens, 3 Drew. 697, 1 De G. & J. 62; Sadlier v. Butler, Ir. R., 1 Eq. 415; Henry v. Henry, ibid. 286.

(t) Blake v. Bunbury, 1 Ves. jun. 514. See Sadlier v. Butler, supra, where the circumstances were very special.

(u) As this question can seldom be of any practical importance at the present time, the remarks of the learned writer and of former editors as to election by a dowress have been much abbreviated. For a fuller discussion of the cases referred to on this subject, see the fourth edition of this work, Vol. I. p. 458 et seq.

(v) Lawrence v. Lawrence, 2 Vern. 365, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 218 pl. 2, 1 Freem. Ch. Ca. 234, 3 B. P. C. Toml. 484, 8 Vin. Abr. Devise, 361, pl. 22; see also Lemon v. Lemon, 8 Vin. Abr. Devise, 366, pl. 45, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 355, pl. 13; Hitchin v. Hitchin, Pre. Ch. 133, 2 Vern. 403; Brown v. Parry, 2 Dick. 685; Incleidon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 430; Strahan v. Sutton, 3 Ves. 249; Lord Dorchester v. Earl of Effingham, Coop. t. Eldon, 319; see also Ayres v. Willis, 1 Ves. 230; Waller v. Fuller, 8 Vin. Abr. Devise, 244, pl. 19. So a bequest to the widow on condition that she make no claim on "the residue of my property," was held not to exclude her from dower. Wetherell v. Wetherell, 4 Gif. 51.

CHAPTER XVI. operation or vary the construction of the devise, which is still but a gift of "all" the testator's own estate (w).

According to the authorities, as well as upon principle, it seems to have been immaterial whether the lands devised to the widow were or were not part of those out of which her dower arose; nor, it should seem, would her dower have been excluded even in respect of the lands so devised, except in cases where the testator had introduced into the devise some special provision irreconcilable with the widow's claim of dower.

What provisions are inconsistent with claim of dower;

Thus, in Birmingham v. Kirwan (x), where a testator devised his house and demesne to trustees, upon trust to permit his wife to enjoy the same for life, she paying 13s. yearly for every acre, to keep the house in repair, and not to let, except to the person who should be in possession of the remainder; and the residue of his lands, subject to debts and legacies, to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee. The question was as to the wife's right of dower; first, in the part devised to her; secondly, in the residue. Lord Redesdale was of opinion that the directions that the widow should keep the house and demesne in repair, that she should not alien, except to the person in remainder (y), which directions applied to the whole of the house and demesne, could not be considered obligations on a person claiming title by dower. On the other question, however, his Lordship held, that the devise of the beneficial interest in the house and demesne was not a bar to the widow's right of dower in the rest of the estate.

—to use, occupy, and enjoy;

So, in Miall v. Brain (z), Sir J. Leach, V.-C., held, that the claim of dower was inconsistent with a trust to permit another to use, occupy, and enjoy the estate for her life; his Honor thinking that the testator contemplated the personal use, occupation and enjoyment. And, in Butcher v. Kemp (a), the same learned Judge considered that a direction to trustees, to whom a farm was devised during the minority of the tenant for life, who was the testator's daughter, "to carry on the business thereof, or to let the same upon lease for her benefit," was inconsistent with the claim of dower.

—to carry on business and let.

A power to lease put the widow to her election.

Again, in Hall v. Hill (b), there was a general devise of the testator's estates to a trustee, upon trust to pay his wife an annuity,

(w) Thompson v. Nelson, 1 Cox, 447; see also Dowson v. Bell, 1 Kee. 761; Harrison v. Harrison, ib. 765.

(x) 2 Sch. & Lef. 444.

(y) But Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., in Strahan v. Sutton, 3 Ves. 249, held that a restriction on letting did not render the devise inconsistent with the dowress's claim.

(z) 4 Mad. 119.

(a) 5 Mad. 61; see also Roadley v. Dixon, 3 Russ. 192.

(b) 1 D. & War. 94, 1 Con. & L. 120.

and to permit her to enjoy part of the property for her life, and the residue was otherwise disposed of. By a codicil a power to lease was given to the trustee. Sir E. Sugden, C., decided that the widow must elect between her dower and the benefits under the will (c).

CHAPTER XVI.

However fine the distinction, yet it is clearly settled, in accordance with an opinion of Lord Redesdale (d), that a general devise of all the testator's estates upon trust for sale did not put the widow to her election; because the sale might have been made subject to her right of dower (e).

Power of sale did not put the widow to her election.

Another point formerly much discussed was as to the effect of the property being devised to the dowress and others in equal shares. In Chalmers v. Storil (f), the devise was in these words: "I give to my dear wife A. and my two children [naming them] all my estates whatsoever, to be equally divided amongst them, whether real or personal." One of the questions was, whether the wife, taking a share under this devise, was bound to relinquish her dower. Sir W. Grant considered the claim of dower to be directly inconsistent with the disposition of the will. The principle upon which Chalmers v. Storil stands seems to have been adopted in several subsequent cases (g).

As to devise to dowress and another in equal shares.

Another question, which was formerly much litigated between the dowress and devisees, was, whether she was put to her election by a rent-charge, or an annuity charged on the property out of which the dower arose. Lord Hardwicke, in Pitts v. Snowden (h), decided that she was not, and although this has not been uniformly followed (i), it seems to have been treated as clear in all the later cases (j).

Barred by mere annuity out of property.

(c) This decision as to the effect of a power of leasing was followed in O'Hara v. Chaine, 1 J. & Lat. 662; Grayson v. Deakin, 3 De G. & S. 298; Parker v. Sowerby, 1 Drew. 488, 4 D. M. & G. 321; Linley v. Taylor, 1 Gif. 67. See also Reynard v. Spence, 4 Beav. 103; Lowe v. Lowe, 5 Hare, 501; Pepper v. Dixon, 17 Sim. 200; Thompson v. Burra, L. R., 16 Eq. 592.

(d) Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & Lef. 444.

(e) Ellis v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 313; Gibson v. Gibson, 1 Drew. 42; Bending v. Bending, 3 K. & J. 257. But see Parker v. Downing, 4 L. J. (N. S.) Ch. 198, where the devise was of a particular house on trust for sale, Shadwell, V.-C., held that the widow must elect. As to the implication of election as to the whole property from powers relating only to part, see Miall v. Brain, 4 Mad.

119; Roadley v. Dixon, 3 Russ. 204; O'Hara v. Chaine, 1 J. & Lat. 665.

(f) 2 V. & B. 222.

(g) Dickson v. Robinson, 1 Jac. 503; Roberts v. Smith, 1 S. & St. 513. See also French v. Davies, 2 Ves. jun. 577; Ellis v. Lewis, 3 Hare, 314; Gibson v. Gibson, 1 Drew. 58; Bending v. Bending, 3 K. & J. 257; Reynolds v. Torin, 1 Russ. 129; Goodfellow v. Goodfellow, 18 Beav. 356.

(h) 1 Br. C. C. 292, n.

(i) Arnold v. Kempstead, Amb. 466, 2 Ed. 236; Villa Real v. Lord Galway, Amb. 682, more fully reported 1 Br. C. C. 292, n.; Jones v. Collier, Amb. 730; Wake v. Wake, 3 Br. C. C. 255, 1 Ves. jun. 335.

(j) Pearson v. Pearson, 1 Br. C. C. 292; Foster v. Cook, 3 Br. C. C. 347; Miall v. Brain, 4 Mad. 119; Dowson v. Bell, 1 Kee. 761; Holdich v. Holdich, 2 Y. &

CHAPTER XVI.

To whom the bar of dower enures.

Widow, when excluded from share of personalty.

Effect of failure of disposition of dower-lands, where a benefit is given in lieu of dower.

And here it may be observed, that where a widow was barred of her dower in lands devised by the will, by a benefit given to her in satisfaction of such claim, the exclusion was considered as made, not in favour of the devisee personally, but of the estate; and, consequently, it enured to the benefit of the heir, in case of the devolution of the land upon him by the failure of the devise (k).

But a gift to the widow in satisfaction of all her claims on the testator's estate, does not preclude her from claiming her share of the personalty under the Statutes of Distribution, in the event of the failure of a bequest of that property (l). And an annuity given to the widow "in lieu and satisfaction of all dower and thirds or other claims and demands which she could or might have had or been entitled to" out of the testator's estate, will not bar her right as customary heir to her husband in respect of copyholds not disposed of by his will (m).

Mr. Jarman points out (n) that "The difference between such a case and that of dower seems to be this: Where a testator gives a benefit in lieu of dower, he purchases an interest in the estate for the benefit of any and every person claiming that estate under him, whether as heir or devisee; and the exclusion of the dower arises, not from the disposition of the property (which, it has been shewn, will not per se exclude the dower), but from the provision for the widow being given expressly in satisfaction of it, and, consequently, is not affected by the failure of the disposition. Whereas, in the case under discussion, though the gift is expressed to be in satisfaction of the widow's claim on the testator's estate, yet, in fact, the efficient part of the exclusion consists in the disposition, which gives the property to some other person: that disposition therefore failing, the widow's claim under the Statute of Distributions is revived; and such claim is not inconsistent with any disposition in

C. C. C. 18; Lowes v. Lowes, 5 Hare, 501; Hall v. Hill, 1 D. & War. 103. See also per Wickens, V.-C., Thompson v. Burra, L. R., 16 Eq. 602. As to annuities charged on mixed funds of realty and personalty, see French v. Davies, 2 Ves. jun. 572; Greatorex v. Cary, 6 Ves. 615.

(k) See Pickering v. Lord Stamford, 3 Ves. 337.

(l) Pickering v. Lord Stamford, 2 Ves. jun. 272, 581, 3 Ves. 332, 492; Tavernor v. Grindley, 32 L. T. 424; see also Sympson v. Hutton, 11 Vin. Ab. Executors, 185, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 439, but more correctly stated 3 Ves. 335; Naismith v. Boyes, [1899] A. C. 495.

But a declaration to this effect in a settlement will, of course, effectually bar the widow, Gurly v. Gurly, 8 Cl. & Fin. 743; Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 395; the former case appears to overrule Slatter v. Slatter, 1 Y. & C. 28. See also Coyne v. Duigan, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 138.

(m) Norcott v. Gordon, 14 Sim. 258. A provision made by settlement for a jointure and in lieu of dower and thirds at common law was held only to exclude the widow from further claim against the testator's lands: Colleton v. Garth, 6 Sim. 19. Compare Gurly v. Gurly, supra; Thompson v. Watts, 2 J. & H. 291.

(n) First ed. p. 407.

the will. It would seem to follow, from this view of the subject, that where the exclusion of the dower by means of election arises merely from the terms and mode in which the estate subject to the dower is devised, there is strong ground for holding that the failure of the devise lets in the claim of dower. The question, of course, is always a question of intention to be collected from the whole will."

With regard to the widow's claim to her share of the personalty, it is said to be different if, on the face of the will, there is an original intestacy as to a part of the personal estate, on the ground that the exclusion cannot then be represented as auxiliary to any disposition of that portion of the personalty; it must have an independent effect; and the only effect it can possibly have is to exclude the widow from participation in the undisposed part of the personalty (o).

Distinction in case of personalty where widow is in terms excluded but part of the personalty is left undisposed of.

There appears to be a distinction between those cases in which a testator makes a gift to his widow in satisfaction of all her claims on the testator's estate, and those in which he expressly excludes her from taking any share or interest in his estate, for such a direction may, if clearly expressed, amount to a gift by implication to the other persons entitled under an intestacy. It appears that Shadwell, V.-C., decided the contrary in Johnson v. Johnson (p), but if so it is submitted that the decision is erroneous (q).

Provision excluding widow.

The words "in lieu of dower or thirds at common law or otherwise," have been held to extend to the wife's right of freebench in copyholds (r).

The question whether a dowress is put to her election by the contents of her husband's will less frequently arises in regard to widows whose marriage was since the 1st of January, 1834; as such persons may, under the act of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, be excluded from dower by various acts of the husband, including a disposition of the property by deed or will (for which a general devise had been held sufficient (s), or a mere declaration therein, or a rent-charge, or other interest devised to her out of any lands subject to dower; but a mere gift of personal estate, or of an interest in lands not liable to dower, will not defeat the widow's claim. Moreover, all partial estates and interests, and charges created by the disposition or will of the husband, and all debts and Effect of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 105, upon points discussed in this chapter.

(o) Lett v. Randall, 3 Sm. & G. 83: not appealed on this point: 2 D. F. & J. 388. The doctrine so laid down is probably bad law.

(p) 4 Bea. 318.

(q) The cases are discussed, post, Chap. XIX, p. 679.

(r) Nottley v. Palmer, 2 Drew. 93.

(s) Lacey v. Hill, L. R., 19 Eq. 346.

CHAPTER XVI.

As to copyholds.

liabilities affecting his land, will oust the widow's right to dower; and the right is subject to any conditions, restrictions, or directions declared by the husband's will. This act does not affect copyholds (t); but it must be remembered that the Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, has been held (u) to render a devise of copyholds as effectual as a surrender to bar the widow of freebench.

Gift in lieu of a specified thing does not exclude from another gift.

VI.—When Election is excluded.—The ordinary doctrine of election may, doubtless, be excluded either wholly or partially, if the testator so desires. “The rule in Noys v. Mordaunt,” said Lord Hardwicke (v), “of not claiming by one part of a will in contradiction to another, is a true rule, but has its exceptions. . . . Several cases have been, and several more may be, in which a man shall give a child or other person a legacy or portion in lieu or satisfaction of particular things expressed, which shall not exclude him from another benefit, though it may happen to be contrary to the will; for the Court will not construe it as meant in lieu of everything else, when he has said a particular thing.”

The case put by Lord Hardwicke occurred in Brown v. Parry (w), where a testator gave his wife an annuity “to be accepted by her in lieu of her dower,” and also bequeathed other benefits to her (without adding in lieu of her dower); the widow elected not to take the annuity, but to keep her dower; and it was held by Lord Thurlow that she was nevertheless entitled to take the rest of the testator's bounty, and that the case was too clear for argument. In truth, this is not properly a case of election at all; which arises only when something is taken against the will. There is here a legacy upon an express condition which is submitted to, and another legacy without express condition. Why should a condition be annexed by implication to the latter bequest, when by taking it the legatee disappoints no part of the will?

But if the words of the will are sufficiently wide, the legatee may be put to election (x).

And the case is different where a gift is made in lieu of a particular thing expressed, and there is then a question—not whether the legatee, while rejecting the proposed exchange, can take another

(t) Powdrell v. Jones, 2 Sm. & Gif. 407; Smith v. Adams, 5 D. M. & G. 712.

(u) Lacey v. Hill, L. R., 19 Eq. 346, ante, p. 71. But see Thompson v. Burra, L. R., 16 Eq. 592, where the widow was put to her election between an annuity given by the will, and thereby charged on part of the testator's freeholds and copyholds, and her right to freebench out of devised copyholds.

(v) East v. Cook, 2 Ves. sen. 33. See also Bor v. Bor, 3 Br. P. C. Toml. 167.

(w) Romilly's No. Cas. 85, also reported, but imperfectly, 2 Dick. 685.

(x) Nottley v. Palmer, 2 Dr. 93.

gift under the will unconditionally, but—whether, while accepting the exchange, he can insist on his right to another property against the will. Thus, in Wilkinson v. Dent (y), where a testatrix gave to her brother T. 10,000*l.* in satisfaction of any sums in which she then was or might at her death be indebted to him, and to her brother W. 3,000*l.* in lieu and satisfaction of any rent-charge out of a certain part of her real estate, and specifically disposed of the entirety of another estate, in which both brothers had interests: it was held that the brothers taking their legacies must bring these latter interests into account as well as the debts and the rent-charge. Sir W. M. James, L.J., said, “The question is, whether there is testamentary bounty to a person whose estate and right are, under another part of the will, interfered with. It appears to me clear that this question must be answered in the affirmative, though before the amount of the bounty can be ascertained, the amount of the claims which the legatees had against the testatrix must be ascertained.”

Where a testator attempts to dispose of property in favour of A., and gives his own property to B., a married woman, with a restraint on anticipation, this shews that he intends to exclude the doctrine of election, so that if the property attempted to be given to A. devolves on B., she is not bound to make compensation to A. out of the property given to her by the testator's will. The doctrine of election does not apply, because the property, which if the doctrine applied would have to be sequestered, in order to compensate the disappointed legatee, has by the terms of the will itself been made inalienable (z). Where the restraint on anticipation, or inalienability, is created independently of the will, a different principle seems to apply (a).

Restraint on anticipation.

In Box v. Barrett (b), a testator by his will recited that his two daughters, A. and B., were entitled to certain property under a settlement, and stated that for this reason he had not given them so large a share of his own property as he would otherwise have done; he then devised to A. and B. certain estates, and to his two other daughters, C. and D., other estates, of much greater value; in fact his four daughters were entitled under the settlement; it was held that this mistake did not put C. and D. to their election.

Mistake.

(y) L. R., 6 Ch. 339.

(z) Re Wheatley, 27 Ch. D. 606; Re Vardon's Trusts, 31 Ch. D. 275; Haynes v. Foster, [1901] 1 Ch. 361. Smith v. Lucas, 18 Ch. D. 531, and Hamilton v. Hamilton, [1892] 1 Ch. 396, were cases of settlement by deed.

(a) Ante, p. 535 (Re Lord Chesham).

(b) L. R., 3 Eq. 244, where Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 27, and Langslow v. Langslow, 21 Bea. 552 were cited. See also Lewis v. Lewis, Ir. R., 11 Eq. 340.

CHAPTER XVI.

Infant.

Lunatic.

Married woman.

VII.—Election by Persons under Disability.—An infant cannot elect, and in those cases in which an infant, if adult, would have to elect, the ordinary practice is to direct an inquiry whether it is to his advantage to take under or against the will (c). But in some cases the infant has been allowed to postpone his election until he comes of age (d).

The Court has power, in certain cases, to elect on behalf of a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition (e).

On the question whether a married woman subject to the old law can elect, the authorities are not consistent, but the weight of authority seems to be against her having capacity to do so (f). It was decided in Ardesoife v. Bennet (g), that a married woman could elect to take under a will; and the same principle seems to be laid down in Griggs v. Gibson (h). But the dicta in Wilson v. Townshend (i) and Davis v. Page (j) lead to a contrary conclusion, and in Cooper v. Cooper (k), where it was decided that two persons (one of whom was a married woman) were put to their election, it was also held that the married woman could not herself elect, and that the Court must ascertain by inquiry whether it was for her benefit to take under or against the will. It is possible that the decision in Ardesoife v. Bennet may be explained on the principle

(c) Gretton v. Haward, 1 Sw. 413 and note; Brown v. Brown, L. R., 2 Eq. 481; Re Montagu, [1896] 1 Ch. 549; Re Barnett, [1900] W. N. 81; Cooper v. Cooper, L. R., 7 H. L. 53. As to the practice where the infant is tenant in tail, see Re Montagu, [1896] 1 Ch. 549.

(d) Boughton v. Boughton, 2 Ves. sen. 12; Streatfield v. Streatfield, Ca. t. Talb. 176.

(e) Re Marriott, 2 Moll. 516; Wilder v. Pigott, 22 Ch. D. 263. The question in that case was as to the confirmation of a settlement made during infancy, but the principle seems to be the same. See Re Earl of Sefton, [1898] 2 Ch. 378.

(f) As to the position of a married woman in this respect, see Nicholl v. Jones, L. R., 3 Eq. 696; Cahill v. Cahill, 8 A. C. 420.

(g) 2 Dick. 463; see Barrow v. Barrow, 4 K. & J. 409.

(h) L. R., 1 Eq. 685. It is clear from the cases of Barrow v. Barrow, 4 K. & J. 409; Willoughby v. Middleton, 2 J. & H. 344; Campbell v. Ingilby, 21 Bea. 567; Anderson v. Abbott, 23 Bea. 457; Smith v. Lucas, 18 Ch. D. 531; Wilder v. Pigott, 22 Ch. D. 263, and Viditz v. O'Hagan, [1900] 2 Ch. 87, that a married woman can elect to confirm or repudiate a settlement executed by her while an infant; but the principle on which this rule is based is quite different from that applicable to the question discussed in the text. Whether the rule applies where the interest of the married woman in personal property is reversionary, see Greenhill v. North British Co., [1893] 3 Ch. 474; Harle v. Jarman, [1895] 2 Ch. 419. The case of Williams v. Mayne (Ir. R., 1 Eq. 519) has been already referred to (supra, p. 536).

(i) 2 Ves. jun. 693. The same rule was acted on in the suit brought by Lord Darlington, as stated in Cavan v. Pulteney, 2 Ves. jun. at pp. 552–53. See also Frank v. Frank, 3 Myl. & C. 171.

(j) 9 Ves. 350. Some of the old cases seem to shew that where the Court held that a married woman was put to her election the original practice was to require her to signify her election before an officer of the Court, and only to direct an inquiry in the event of her failing to do so; see the cases cited in Gretton v. Haward, 1 Sw. 413, n., and compare Standerling v. Hall, 11 Ch. D. 652.

(k) L. R., 7 H. L. 53.

that as it was obviously to the benefit of the married woman to elect in a particular way, the Court would (if she had been living) have elected for her without an inquiry (l), and she being dead, the Court treated her, retrospectively, as having so elected.

It seems clear on principle, though the point has not been decided, that a married woman can elect in respect of her separate estate (m). Separate estate.

VIII.—Time and Mode of Election.—It seems that a person does not lose his right to elect by mere lapse of time, unless it can be shewn that injury would result to third persons by the delay (n).

In some of the older cases, infants have been allowed to postpone their election until after attaining majority (nn), and in the case of Williams v. Mayne (o), it was held that a married woman could not elect until a reversionary interest, settled on her marriage, fell into possession. Postponement of election by person under disability.

A person is not bound to elect until all the circumstances which may influence his election are known to him (p), and an election made in ignorance of material facts is not binding (q). Full knowledge required.

Where there is no express election, it may be implied or inferred from acts. But to raise an inference of election, it should appear that the person knew of his right to elect, and not merely of the instrument giving it (r). Even the receipt of income for sixteen years in ignorance of a right to elect will not operate as an election (s), though an election may be presumed from possession or receipt of income where there is full knowledge (t). Implied election.

Election is a question of intention, and in general may be inferred from a series of unequivocal acts (u). Receiving the income of, or dealing with, a fund or property is in general an election to take that fund or property, if the person was fully cognisant of his rights (v).

(l) Wilson v. Townsend, 2 Ves. jun. 693.

(m) See Re Davidson, 11 Ch. D. 341.

(n) Brice v. Brice, 2 Moll. 21; Spread v. Morgan, 11 H. L. C. 588.

(nn) Supra, p. 554.

(o) Ir. R., 1 Eq. 519, referred to above, p. 536.

(p) Wake v. Wake, 1 Ves. jun. 335; Boynton v. Boynton, 1 Br. C. C. 445; Chalmers v. Storil, 2 V. & B. 222; Dillon v. Parker, 1 Sw. 359; Jac. 505; 1 Cl. & F. 303; Douglas v. Douglas, L. R., 12 Eq. 617.

(q) Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136; Pusey v. Desbouvrie, 3 P. W. 315; Dillon v. Parker, supra.

(r) Morgan v. Edwards, 1 Bli. N. S. 401; Wake v. Wake, 3 Br. C. C. 254; Reynard v. Spence, 4 Bea. 103; Wintour v. Clifton, 21 Bea. 447; Watson's Comp. Eq. 184 seq.; Wilson v. Thornbury, L. R., 10 Ch. 239; Sweetman v. Sweetman, Ir. R., 2 Eq. 141.

(s) Sopwith v. Maughan, 30 Bea. 235.

(t) Butricke v. Broadhurst, 1 Ves. jun. 171; Worthington v. Wiginton, 20 Bea. 67; Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ba. & B. 1.

(u) Spread v. Morgan, 11 H. L. C. 588; Dillon v. Parker, supra.

(v) Ardesoife v. Bennet, 2 Dick. 463; Giddings v. Giddings, 3 Russ. 241; Briscoe v. Briscoe, 1 Jo. & Lat. 334; Dewar v. Maitland, L. R., 2 Eq. 834; and the cases cited above, notes (r), (s), and (t).

CHAPTER XVI.

Possession of both properties.
When compensation ascertained.

Election to accept.

Inferred from conduct.

Two gifts under same will—one may be taken, the other rejected ;

The mere fact that a person enters into the receipt of the rents and profits of two properties, as it affords no proof of preference, cannot be held an election to take one and reject the other (w).

The amount of the compensation to be made to the disappointed legatees, where the party elects to take against the will, is ascertained as at the date of the testator's death (x).

IX.—Onerous Property—A gift of property by will is supposed, primâ facie, to be beneficial to the devisee or legatee, and consequently it is also supposed, until the contrary is proved, that the gift is accepted by him. But he is at liberty to refuse or disclaim it, for the law will not compel a man to take property against his will (y). Disclaimer may be express or implied (z), but there can be no effectual disclaimer after the party has once elected to accept the gift (a). And election, like disclaimer, may be inferred from the conduct of the party. Thus if a devisee retains possession for some years of property subject to charges which exceed its value, he may be deemed to have elected to accept the devise (b). This, however, does not make him personally liable for the charges (c).

Where by the same will two properties are given to the same person, one beneficial and the other burdensome, he is generally at liberty to accept the former and reject the latter (d), although by so doing he throws a burden on the testator's general estate, which, if he accepted both, must be borne by himself ; as where the repudiated gift comprises shares in a company which, after the testator's death, fails and is wound up, the shareholders being called on to contribute (e), or where the subject is leasehold property, in respect of which the testator was liable at his death under his covenant to repair (f). So where a testator devised a house, which was mortgaged beyond its value, upon trust to permit his two sisters to have (w) Padbury v. Clark, 2 Mac. & G. 306; Spread v. Morgan, 11 H. L. C. 588; Brice v. Brice, 2 Moll. 21; but see Worthington v. Wiginton, 20 Beav. 67; and generally, as to what acts constitute election, see note to Dillon v. Parker, 1 Sw. 382; Giddings v. Giddings, 3 Russ. 241; Briscoe v. Briscoe, 1 J. & Lat. 334; Mahon v. Morgan, 6 Ir. Jur. 173; Ruttledge v. Ruttledge, 1 Dow. & Cl. 331; Fytche v. Fytche, 19 L. T. 343. As to how far the gain or loss to the person called on to elect is to weigh in presuming election, see Harris v. Watkins, 2 K. & J. 473.

(x) Re Hancock, [1905] 1 Ch. 16.

(y) Shepp. Touch. 284–85; see Davidson Conv. 5, part 2, p. 661, n., where the law of disclaimer is explained.

(z) Stacey v. Elph, 1 Myl. & K. 195 (disclaimer of trust); Re Birchall, 40 Ch. D. 436.

(a) Bence v. Gilpin, L. R., 3 Exch. 76.

(b) Re Cowley, 53 L. T. 494.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Andrew v. Trinity Hall, 9 Ves. 525.

(e) Moffett v. Bates, 3 Sm. & Gif. 468; Aston v. Wood, 43 L. J. Ch. 715. Putting a distringas on shares does not prevent a subsequent disclaimer: Hobbs v. Wayet, 36 Ch. D. 256.

(f) Warren v. Rudall, 1 J. & H. 1.

the use and occupation of it and the furniture in it: the furniture was sold and the proceeds invested, and it was held that the sisters were entitled to receive the income of the investments without keeping down the interest on the mortgage debt (g). But the question is one of intention, and, therefore, where a testator bequeathed an annuity to A., and also a leasehold house held at a rack-rent beyond its value, Sir J. Leach, M.R., thinking that the plain intention of the testator was that his estate should no longer be subject to the rent of the leasehold house, held that the legatee must take both bequests or neither (h). The cases are not easy to reconcile, but the test seems to be whether or not the gifts are separate and distinct. If onerous property and beneficial property are included in the same gift, as an aggregate, then, unless a contrary intention appears by the will, the donee cannot disclaim the onerous property and accept that which is beneficial; he must take the whole gift or nothing (i). But if two distinct gifts are made by the same will, one of them being onerous and the other beneficial, the donee may reject the former and take the latter (j).

—unless a contrary intention appears.

ESTOPPEL.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. By Possession under Devise	557	II. By Erroneous Statement in Will	559
		III. By Conduct	560

I.—By Possession under Devise.—The general principle that a person who takes possession of land under an instrument is estopped from denying its validity, applies to wills (k); consequently if a testator devises Blackacre, which really belongs to X., to A. for life with remainder to B., and A. enters and retains possession until X.'s title is extinguished by the Statute of Limitations, A. acquires only an estate for life with remainder to B (l). The fact that the testator devises the legal estate to trustees,

Possession
under title.

(g) Syer v. Gladstone, 30 Ch. D. 614, explained in Re Kensington, infra.

(h) Talbot v. Earl of Radnor, 3 My. & K. 254; Fairtlough v. Johnstone, 16 Ir. Ch. 442.

(i) Green v. Britten, 42 L. J. Ch. 187; Guthrie v. Walrond, 22 Ch. D. 573; Frewen v. Law Life Assurance Society, [1896] 2 Ch. 511; Parnell v. Boyd, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 571; Re Kensington, [1902] 1 Ch. 203; Honywood v. Honywood, [1902] 1 Ch. 347.

(j) Re Hotchkys, 32 Ch. D. 408.

(k) Dalton v. Fitzgerald, [1897] 1 Ch.

440; 2 Ch. 86. It is said in the old books that an heir is estopped from denying the will of his ancestor: Br. Abr. Estoppel, pl. 193; but that if A. and B. are named executors by a will, it is no estoppel for them to say that they were not made executors: ibid, pl. 185. As to the old rule that the heir is not presumed to have notice of his ancestor's will, see Doe d. Kenrick v. Beaucherk, 11 East, 667, cited post, Chap. XXXIX.

(l) Board v. Board, L. R., 9 Q. B. 48.

CHAPTER XVI. and that adverse possession is taken by one of the beneficiaries, does not make any difference (m).

The same principle applies where a devisee takes possession of land which really belonged to the testator, the devisee being under the erroneous belief that it passed by the will. Thus if a testator, being entitled to land in the parishes of X. and Y., devises the land in X. to A. for life, with remainder over, and A. takes possession of the land both in X. and Y., under the belief that the land in Y. passed by the devise, and retains possession for the statutory period, he cannot, it seems, claim to be entitled to the land in Y. for his own benefit: "My impression is (if it were necessary to decide the point), that the Statute of Limitations can never be so construed that a person claiming a life estate under a will shall enter, and then say that such possession was unlawful, so as to give his heir a right against the remainder-man. I think that no Court would so construe it" (n).

Accordingly, in Kernaghan v. M'Nally (o), where the testator devised lands to trustees, and the cestui que trusts took possession of certain land which did not pass by the devise, and held it as if they had been beneficially entitled to it under the devise, it was held that the title thus acquired under the Statute of Limitations vested the legal estate in the trustees and not in the beneficiaries.

The decision in Paine v. Jones (p) appears to be inconsistent with this principle. In that case a testator, by will made in 1824, devised all his real estate to A. and B. upon trust to pay the rents to A. for life, with remainders over. Part of the testator's real estate was purchased after the date of the will, and therefore did not pass by it; A. entered into possession of the after-acquired land, believing that it passed by the will, and continued in possession for more than twenty years: it was held by Malins, V.-C., that she had acquired a title to the fee against the remainder-man. In Dalton v. Fitzgerald (q), Lindley, L.J., thought this decision was intelligible having regard to the facts of the case, but he doubted the soundness of the distinction drawn by the V.-C. "between cases of persons having no title under a will, because it does not purport to include the lands they claim, although they believe that it does, and persons claiming under a will which purports to deal with land to which the testator had no title, although they thought he had."

(m) Hawksbee v. Hawksbee, 11 Ha. 230, and Kernaghan v. M'Nally, 12 Ir. Ch. Rep. 89. The question of estoppel did not arise in Scott v. Nixon, 3 Dr. & W. 388.

(n) Per Martin, B. in Anstee v. Nelms, 1 H. & N. at p. 232, quoted with approval by Blackburn, J., in Board v. Board, supra, and by Lindley, L.J., in Dalton v. Fitzgerald, supra.

(o) 12 Ir. Ch. R. 89.

(p) L. R., 18 Eq. 320.

(q) Supra.

But if the devise of the remainder is invalid because it transgresses some rule of law—such as the Rule against Perpetuities, or the rules governing charitable gifts—then the entry of the tenant for life under the will does not, it seems, affirm the invalid devise to the remainderman, whether the devise to the tenant for life himself is valid or invalid (r).

CHAPTER XVI.

Where devise is illegal.

In Re Anderson (s) it was held that the same principle applies where the devise is invalid by reason of the personal disability of the testator. In that case the testatrix was married, and acquired the property before 1883.

Where testator under disability.

II.—By Erroneous Statement in Will.—Somewhat analogous to the doctrine of estoppel is the rule that in certain cases a person claiming under a will is bound by an erroneous statement of fact contained in it. Thus in Re Wood (t), a testator gave his property upon trust for his children in equal shares, and after reciting that he had advanced certain sums (specifying the amounts) to four of his sons on account of their respective shares, he directed that “the respective sums hereinbefore recited to have been advanced” should be brought into hotch-pot; it was held that the sons were bound by the statement, and could not adduce evidence to shew that it was erroneous.

Legatee bound by erroneous statement in will,

Conversely, if the amount of the advance is understated, the legatee is entitled to the benefit of the error (u).

But the limits of the doctrine are not satisfactorily settled, and it seems that it will only be applied where the statement of the testator is unequivocal. Thus in Re Taylor's Estate (v), a testator bequeathed a legacy of 7,000*l.* in trust for his daughter, the wife of J. T., and her children; he then, after reciting (in effect) that he had paid upwards of 5,000*l.* for J. T., directed that if J. T. should not before his death have repaid him 5,000*l.* at least, the sum of 5,000*l.* should be taken in part payment of the 7,000*l.* Taken literally, the effect of this direction would have been that if J. T. only repaid 4,999*l.* the legacy of the daughter would be reduced by 5,000*l.*; it was held that this could not have been the intention, and that what the testator meant was that whatever was owing to him by J. T., up to 5,000*l.*, should be satisfied out of the legacy.

unless result would defeat intention.

(r) Per Jessel, M.R., in Re Stringer's Estate, 6 Ch. D. 1; the decision of the M.R. that the remainder was void was reversed by the C. A., and it became unnecessary to consider the point above stated.

(s) [1905] 2 Ch. 70.

(t) 32 Ch. D. 517, following Re Aird's

Estate, 12 Ch. D. 291. The case of Quikhampton v. Going, 24 W. R. 917, ante, p. 138, seems to have been decided on the same principle.

(u) Burrowes v. Clonbrock, 27 L. R. Ir. 538.

(v) 22 Ch. D. 495.

CHAPTER XVI.

So in Re Kelsey (w), a testator after reciting that a legatee of a share of residue owed him 5,000*l.*, forgave him 2,000*l.*, and directed the balance of 3,000*l.* or so much thereof as should remain unpaid at the time of distribution, to be brought into hotchpot; it was held that the legatee was not bound by the statement as to the debt of 5,000*l.*, which was erroneous, and that he was only chargeable with actual advances. Swinfen Eady, J., distinguished between the case of a testator erroneously reciting that a particular sum has been advanced and directing it to be brought into hotchpot, and the case of a testator erroneously reciting that a particular sum has been advanced and directing it "or so much thereof as shall remain unpaid" to be brought into hotchpot; in the former case the legatee is bound by the recital, in the latter case he is not.

Non-disclosure by executor-legatee.

III.—By Conduct.—In Re Lewis (x), a testatrix bequeathed a leasehold house to a son then abroad, and directed that "in case he should not return and claim the said house," the same should accrue to another son, whom she appointed executor of the will. The executor informed the legatee of the bequest to him of the house, but did not inform him that in the event of his not returning and claiming it the house would go to the executor; the legatee died abroad without having returned to claim the house; it was held that the executor was not estopped from claiming under the gift over.

Estoppel by litigation.

A person who is cognizant of litigation relating to a will, and stands by and takes the benefit of a decision on its construction under which a particular fund is distributed, is estopped from re-opening the question by instituting fresh litigation relating to another fund under the same will (y).

A person who is cognizant of proceedings in a Court of Probate in which the validity of a will is questioned, is bound by the result, if he had a right to intervene (z).

Heir-at-law.

Where the heir-at-law of a testator is made defendant, as one of the testator's next-of-kin, in a probate action to establish the will, and appears and contests its validity, which is established in the action, he cannot afterwards dispute its validity in respect of real estate affected by it, notwithstanding that he was not cited to appear in the action as heir-at-law (a).

(w) [1905] 2 Ch. 465.

(x) [1904] 2 Ch. 656. See Re Mackay, [1906] 1 Ch. 25.

(y) Re Lart, [1896] 2 Ch. 788.

(z) Wytherley v. Andrews, L. R., 2 P.

& D. 327, and other cases cited in Young v. Holloway, [1895] P. 87.

(a) Beardsley v. Beardsley, [1899] 1 Q. B. 746.

CHAPTER XVII.

EFFECT OF REPUGNANCY OR CONTRADICTION IN WILLS, AND AS TO REJECTING WORDS.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Provisions wholly Void for Repugnancy	561	III. Rejection of Words	575
II. Construction of Contradictory Provisions	565	IV. Distinct Gift not controlled by Ambiguous Context	579

I.—Provisions wholly Void for Repugnancy.—Before dealing with the question of ascertaining the intention of a testator where the dispositions of the will appear to be contradictory, it should be premised that a provision in a will may be void for repugnancy, apart from the question of intention. Thus where property is given to an adult person absolutely, coupled with a direction that the income shall be applied for his benefit in a certain way, or accumulated, this direction is generally void, being inconsistent with the right of enjoyment which follows from ownership (a). So, where a testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his son absolutely, with a direction that it should not be delivered to him till the completion of his twenty-fifth year, it was held that the son was entitled to payment on attaining twenty-one, the direction being rejected as repugnant to the enjoyment of a vested interest (b). And where an absolute vested interest is given to a person, an attempt to create a protected interest in the income by directing it

Provisions inconsistent with ownership.

(a) Gurney v. Goggs, 25 Bea. 334; Saunders v. Vautier, Cr. & Ph. 240; Gosling v. Gosling, John. 265; Re Thompson, 44 W. R. 582; Re Johnston, [1894] 3 Ch. 204. In Harbin v. Masterman, [1894] 2 Ch. 184 (s. c., s. n. Wharton v. Masterman, [1895] A. C. 186), it was held that the principle applies where the legatee is a charity. As to Billing v. Billing, 5 Sim. 232, see Chap. XXXIII.

(b) Rocke v. Rocke, 9 Bea. 66. See Re Young's Settlement, 18 Bea. 199; Re Jacob's Will, 29 Bea. 402; Gosling v.

Gosling, Johns. 265; Re Couturier, [1907] 1 Ch. 470. Compare the cases on the question whether a trust is created by directions as to the application of property given to a person absolutely: Chap. XXIV.

Where property is given to a class of persons with a trust for maintenance until the youngest attains a specified age, this is effectual to postpone distribution: see Hodson v. Micklethwaite, 2 Dr. 294; Berry v. Briant, 2 Dr. & S. 1; Hughes v. Hughes, 3 Br. C. C. 434, and other cases cited post, Chap. XLII.

CHAPTER XVII.

to be paid to him by weekly instalments until he attains the age of thirty-five, is nugatory (c).

In many cases the desired result may be attained by giving the property to trustees subject to a discretionary trust or gift over under which other persons have an interest in the property (d).

Restraint on alienation.

On the same principle, a person to whom the ownership of property is given cannot, as a general rule (e), be restrained from alienating it, either by express direction (f), or by condition (g), or by gift over to take effect in the event of his disposing, or attempting to dispose, of it; in such a case the gift over is void, and the beneficiary takes absolutely (h). So if property is given to a person absolutely, followed by a gift over to take effect on involuntary alienation, such as bankruptcy, the gift over is void (i).

And a restriction forbidding a particular mode of alienation, such as a mortgage or a charge by way of annuity, is void (j).

It seems now settled that a restraint on alienation is bad even if it is limited in point of time (k).

Limits of the doctrine invalidating restraints on alienation.

But a restraint on alienation may be good if it only prohibits alienation to a limited number or class of persons (l). Again, a gift over to take effect on the alienation of an interest in property, before it is absolutely vested, may be good (m). And a life interest may be made determinable on alienation (n). And a married woman may be restrained from anticipation (o).

Absolute interests cannot be given to persons in succession.

On the same principle, where there is an absolute gift of property to a person, followed by a gift over in the event of his dying intestate, or not disposing of it, the gift over is, as a general rule, repugnant and void (p). And a gift over in the event of the (c) Re Williams, [1907] 1 Ch. 180.

(d) See cases cited in the preceding notes, and post, Chap. XXIV.; Gott v. Nairne, 3 Ch. D. 278.

(e) As to married women, see Chap. XXXIX.

(f) Hood v. Oglander, 34 Bea. 513.

(g) See Chap. XXXIX.

(h) Bradley v. Peizoto, 3 Ves. 324; Shaw v. Ford, 7 Ch. D. 669; Re Dugdale, 38 Ch. D. 176; Corbett v. Corbett, 14 P. D. 7; Re Jones's Will, 23 L. T. 211; Re Wolstenholme, 43 L. T. 752; Re Bourke's Trusts, 27 L. R. Ir. 573.

(i) Re Machu, 21 Ch. D. 838; Metcalfe v. Metcalfe, 43 Ch. D. 633.

(j) Ware v. Cann, 10 B. & Cr. 433; Willis v. Hiscox, 4 My. & Cr. 197.

(k) This question is discussed in Chap. XXXIX.

(l) See Chap. XXXIX.

(m) Re Porter, [1892] 3 Ch. 481.

(n) Chap. XXXIX. The interest must be really a life interest, and not part of a series of limitations which in effect give the legatee an absolute interest: Re Wolstenholme, 43 L. T. 752.

(o) See Chap. XXXIX.

(p) Lightburne v. Gill, 3 Br. P. C. 250; Ross v. Ross, 1 Jac. & W. 154; Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare, 428; Re Yalden, 1 D. M. & G. 53; Re Mortlock's Trust, 3 K. & J. 456; Bowes v. Goslett, 27 L. J. Ch. 249; Henderson v. Cross, 29 Bea. 216; Gulliver v. Vaux, 8 D. M. & G. 167, n.; Holmes v. Godson, ib. 152; Barton v. Barton, 3 K. & J. 512; Perry v. Merritt, L. R., 18 Eq. 152; Re Wilcocks' Settlement, 1 Ch. D. 229; Re Percy, 24 Ch. D. 616; Re Jenkins' Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 162; Stretton v. Fitzgerald, ib. 310, 466; Parnell v. Boyd, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 571; Re Walker

devisee or legatee dying intestate is void, even if the interest given to him is contingent (q). CHAPTER XVII.

In some cases effect has been given to a gift over of "what shall remain," or the like, following the gift of a life interest (r). Life interest.

On the same principle, where a life annuity was given payable by trustees half-yearly, with a gift over, on the death of the annuitant, of so much "as should remain unapplied as aforesaid," the gift over was held void (s). Annuity.

So a condition or provision requiring a person, to whom property is given, to use it, or not to use it, in a particular way, is invalid if it is inconsistent with "those rights of enjoyment which are inseparably incident to the absolute ownership" (t). Provision as to user of property may be void for repugnancy.

It may indeed be stated as a general principle that any limitation or gift over, which is not in accordance with the rules governing the devolution and disposition of property, is void. Thus personal property cannot be given to persons in succession, in such a way as to prevent the absolute interest from vesting in accordance with the rules of law (u). And if a testator gives personal property to A. in tail, with remainder to B. in tail, and A. survives the testator, he takes absolutely, and the remainder to B. is void. But the death of A. in the testator's lifetime may have the effect of making the gift to B. valid (v). Gift over contrary to law.

A gift over on breach of a condition may be void if it does not fit in with the terms of the condition, or is inconsistent with the original gift (w).

Where a testator devised real estate to his son and his heirs, and declared that in case his son should die without leaving lawful issue, then the estate should go over to the son's heir-at-law to whom he gave and devised the same accordingly: it was held by (Lloyd v. Tveddy), [1898] 1 Ir. R. 5; Re Dixon, [1903] 2 Ch. 458; Comiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury (Re Hanbury), [1905] A. C. 84. Some of these cases are referred to ante, p. 463, in connection with the doctrine of uncertainty. As to Doe v. Glover, 1 C. B. 448; and Watkins v. Williams, 3 Mac. & G. 622, see Shaw v. Ford, 7 Ch. D. 669.

(q) Barton v. Barton, 3 K. & J. 512.

(r) See ante, p. 464.

(s) Re Sanderson, 3 Jur. N. S. 809. The annuitant was in fact non compos mentis, although the fact was not referred to in the will; the trustees did not apply the whole annuity for his maintenance; it was held that the surplus formed part of his estate.

(t) See the principle stated in Chap. XXXIX., where the cases of Att.-Gen. v. Catherine Hall, Jac. 395, and Att.-Gen. v. Greenhill, 33 Bea. 193, are referred to.

(u) Byng v. Lord Strafford, 5 Bea. 558.

(v) Re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348, infra, p. 565. So in Carte v. Carte, 3 Atk. 180, it was held that if land is devised to a person in fee, a gift over in the event of his committing treason, is void.

(w) Bird v. Johnson, 18 Jur. 976 (stated in Chap. XXXIX. in connection with another doctrine); Re Call's Trusts, 2 H. & M. 46; Musgrave v. Brooke, 26 Ch. D. 792.

CHAPTER XVII. the Court of Appeal that the gift over was repugnant and void, and that the son took an absolute estate in fee simple (x).

Restriction on right of owner to sell. In Re Rosher (xx) it was held that a condition annexed to a devise in fee requiring the devisee, in the event of his selling the property, to offer it to A. at a certain price, was repugnant and void. Again, in Re Elliot (y) a testator gave all his property, including his tea plantations, to A., and provided as follows: "On any sale of the said tea plantations I direct her [A.] to pay to B. 1000*l.* out of the proceeds of such sale": it was held that this direction was repugnant and void. So if an absolute gift to a person is followed by a clause cutting it down in the event of his embracing a religious life, this proviso is repugnant and void (z).

Estate tail. Conditions and gifts over intended to restrict alienation by a tenant in tail are, as a general rule, repugnant and void, as explained elsewhere (a).

Examples of valid gift over. In Re Sax (b) a testator bequeathed his business together with a leasehold messuage to his sons, subject to a proviso that if the sons ceased to carry on the business, the leasehold messuage should fall into residue: North, J., held that the proviso was not repugnant to the gift, and that it took effect on the conversion of the business into a private company.

A gift over in the event of the original gift being held void at law or in equity, is valid (c).

Where gift over becomes valid ex post-facto. It was held by Romilly, M.R., that where there is an absolute gift to A., with a gift over to B. in the event of A. dying without having disposed of the property, and A. dies in the testator's lifetime, so that the gift to him lapses, the gift over nevertheless fails (d). This view was dissented from by James, L.J. (e), on the ground that there can be no repugnance where the original gift never takes effect at all. And having regard to the present disposition of the Courts to pay more attention to the wishes of testators than to technical doctrines, it seems clear that the decisions of Romilly, M.R., would not now be followed. The general principle is that "where there are successive limitations of personal estate in favour of several persons absolutely, the first of them who survives (x) Re Parry and Daggs, 31 Ch. D. 130. The principle is a very old one: Tilbury v. Barbut, 3 Atk. 617. Compare Gulliver v. Vaux, 8 D. M. & G. 167, n. and the cases there cited.

(xx) 26 Ch. D. 801.

(y) [1896] 2 Ch. 353.

(z) Re Thompson, 44 W. R. 582.

(a) Chap. XXXIX.

(b) 62 L. J. Ch. 688.

(c) De Themmines v. De Bonneval, 5 Russ. 288 (deed). Compare Re Crawshaw, 43 Ch. D. 615, cited in Chap. XXIII.

(d) Hughes v. Ellis, 20 Bea. 193: Greated v. Greated, 26 Bea. 621.

(e) Re Stringer's Estate, 6 Ch. D. 15.

the testator takes absolutely, although he would take nothing if any other legatee had survived and taken. . . . The doctrine of repugnance has no application to gifts which fail. . . . This is entirely in accordance with the opinion expressed by James, L.J., in Re Stringer's Estate, already referred to, and is good sense" (f). Whether this principle applies to devises of real estate does not seem to have been decided, but the dictum of James, L.J., in Re Stringer's Estate expressly includes such cases.

II.—Construction of Contradictory Provisions.—Mr. Jarman states the general rule thus (g): "Doubt is sometimes cast upon the intention of a testator by the repugnancy or contradiction between the several parts of his will, though each part, taken separately, is sufficiently definite and intelligible. In such cases the context (which is so often successfully resorted to for the purpose of throwing light on a doubtful passage) becomes itself the source of obscurity; and, unless some principle of construction can be found authorising the adoption of one, and the rejection of the other of the contrariant parts, both are necessarily void, each having the effect of neutralising and frustrating the other. With a view to prevent this most undesirable result, it has become an established rule in the construction of wills, that where two clauses or gifts are irreconcilable, so that they cannot possibly stand together, the clause or gift which is posterior in local position shall prevail, the subsequent words being considered to denote a subsequent intention: Cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in testamento, ultimum ratum est (h). Hence it is obvious that a will can seldom be rendered absolutely void by mere repugnancy: for instance, if a testator in one part of his will gives Rule in case of contradiction or repugnancy.

(f) Per Lindley, L.J., in Re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 357, ante, p. 563. In Andrew v. Andrew (1 Coll. 690) a testator bequeathed consumable articles to his sister for her life, or so long as she should remain unmarried, "in either event then to go over to" A. The sister married in the testator's lifetime. It was held by Sir J. K. Bruce, V.-C., that the gift over was void. There was no express reference, he observed, to the happening of any event in the testator's lifetime; the testator meant death or marriage whensoever happening, not death or marriage happening only in his lifetime. "The words were intended to operate by way of remainder. It is a gift to her so long as she shall be living unmarried, and then over. Now the gift of consumable articles to a woman so long as she shall be living unmarried is the gift of an absolute interest. The gift over, therefore is void, nor rendered valid by the circumstance of the legatee having survived the testator and married in his lifetime." This decision also would probably not be followed at the present day.

(g) First ed. p. 411.

(h) Co. Litt. 112, b; Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 372; Sims v. Doughly, 5 Ves. 243; Constantine v. Constantine, 6 Ves. 100; Doe d. Leicester v. Biggs, 2 Taunt. 109; see also Chandless v. Price, 3 Ves. 99; Wykham v. Wykham, 18 Ves. 421; Marks v. Solomon, 18 L. J. Ch. 234, 19 L. J. Ch. 555.

CHAPTER XVII.

to a person an estate of inheritance in lands, or an absolute interest in personalty, and in subsequent passages unequivocally shews that he means the devisee or legatee to take a life interest only, the prior gift is restricted accordingly (i).

Clear gift not cut down by doubtful expressions.

It must be borne in mind, however, that the rule only applies where the later gift shews with reasonable certainty that the testator did not mean the prior gift to take effect according to its terms (j).

Absolute gift cut down to limited interest.

The simplest example of the general rule is where a gift to A., apparently absolute, is cut down to a life estate by a subsequent direction that on A.'s death the property is to go to B. There are numerous authorities to this effect (k). But the subsequent direction must be unambiguous (l).

And where there is an absolute gift of property to A., with a gift over to B. in the event of A. dying without having disposed of it, or a gift to B. of "what remains" at A.'s death, the question of the effect of these words is often a difficult one, and the authorities, as might be expected, are not wholly consistent (m).

Gift over not "fitting" condition.

Where there is gift upon condition, followed by a clause of forfeiture or gift over, which does not "fit" the condition, the effect may be that the latter clause is ineffectual and the gift absolute (n).

Whether absolute interest cut down in any event.

Where property is given to a person without limitation or qualification, followed by a direction that at his death it is to be divided among his children, the question arises whether he takes nothing more than a life interest in any case, or whether the subsequent direction is only to take effect in the event of his leaving children, so that if he leaves none the absolute gift remains in force. Thus in Joslin v. Hammond (o) a testator gave to his wife A., whom he appointed executrix, the whole of his property, on condition of her paying to his mother 130*l.* per annum during her life, and added, "at the death of my dear wife A., the whole of the property to be equally

(i) It will be remembered that Mr. Jarman is here dealing only with those cases where the two repugnant gifts are contained in the same testamentary instrument; if one of them is contained in a will and the other in a codicil, the question is one of revocation: see Chap. VII.

(j) Post, p. 574.

(k) The general rule is recognised in Constable v. Bull, 3 De G. & S. 411; Bibbens v. Potter, 10 Ch. D. 733; and was applied in Re Russell, 52 L. T. 559, and Re Houghton, 53 L. J. Ch. 1018. See also Chap. XXXVI. As to the difference between "at the death" and "after the death," see Re Hutchinson's Trusts, 21 Ch. D. 811.

(l) Re Jones, [1898] 1 Ch. 438, distinguishing Re Pounder, 56 L. J. Ch. 113; Re Percy, post, p. 575; Re Bourke's Trusts, 27 L. R. Ir. 574.

(m) Ante, p. 462 seq.; post, Chap. XXXIV.

(n) See Re Catt's Trusts, 2 H. & M. 46, and Musgrave v. Brooke, 26 Ch. D. 792, both cited ante, p. 563.

(o) 3 My. & K. 110. See Lassence v. Tierney, 1 Mac. & G. 551; Waters v. Waters, 26 L. J. Ch. 624, and the other cases discussed in Chap. XXXVIII.

divided amongst those of my children who may survive her ” ; and should his wife marry again, the testator directed that each of his children at the age of twenty-four be paid 400*l.* ; should she not marry, he left them implicitly to her kind and indulgent care. No child of the testator survived the widow. It was contended, therefore, that the widow was absolutely entitled, on the ground that the absolute interest which she would have taken under the first words of the will, was cut down to a life interest only in a certain event which had not happened ; but Leach, M.R., considered that, upon the whole context of the will, it was the intention of the testator that in no event the wife should have other than a life estate. “ If,” said his Honor, “ at her death, a child or children survived her, they were to take the property between them ; but he has not provided for the case of all the children dying during the life of his wife, and that event having happened, he has so far died intestate. It is not a probable intention to be imputed to the testator, that, if his children died in the lifetime of his wife, leaving families, his widow, on her second marriage, should enjoy the whole property.” His Honor did not advert to the annuity to the mother.

On the other hand, in Crozier v. Crozier (p), a testator gave all his property to his wife, “ and after her death to be equally divided to the children, should there be any ” : the testator had only one child, who was born after the date of the will and predeceased the testator : it was held by James, L.J., that the gift to the wife was absolute, and only to be cut down in the event of there being children : there being none, she took absolutely. The learned judge remarked that the testator clearly did not mean to die intestate, which would be the effect of giving the wife only a life interest (q).

The question whether the original gift is an absolute gift, with a subsequent gift in derogation, or whether it is a mere life interest with subsequent limitations, may be affected by the interposition of trustees (r).

In Re Hutchinson's Trusts (s) property was given to A. and B. share and share alike, and after their decease to their children share and share alike, and to their heirs for ever ; A. died without issue and B. died leaving issue : it was held by Kay, J., that as the absolute gift to each was only cut down in favour of his children,

(p) L. R., 15 Eq. 282. See Bell v. Jackson, 1 Sim. N. S. 547 ; Salmon v. Salmon, 29 Bea. 27.

(r) Ibid. . Scawin v. Watson, 10 Bea. 200.

(q) See also Monck v. Croker, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 56, post, Chap. XXXVII.

(s) 21 Ch. D. 811 ; see Re Rubbins, 78 L. T. 218 ; 79 L. T. 313.

CHAPTER XVII. the property was, in the events which had happened, divisible in moieties between the representatives of A. and the children of B.

The general rule stated by Mr. Jarman applies even where the apparently absolute nature of the prior gift is emphasised by the use of words of limitation.

Posterior of two inconsistent clauses preferred ;

As in Crone v. Odell (t), where a testator devised the residue of his real and personal property to his children, A., B., and C., and all their younger children, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for ever ; so far it was a clear joint devise ; but he went on to declare, that, nevertheless, his intentions were, that A. should receive the entire interest or yearly produce of such part of his real or personal fortune as he (testator) intended for his (A.'s) younger children during his life. The testator then made a similar direction as to B. and C. ; and he provided, that, in case any of his said three children should die, the share of such should go to the younger children of such children ; if no younger children, to the survivors ; and he gave the parents a power of distribution among their younger children. Lord Manners determined that the parents took life interests only, with a power of distribution among their younger children ; which decree was affirmed in D. P.

So, in Sherratt v. Bentley (u), where a testator, after bequeathing several legacies, devised unto his wife a certain messuage and all other his real estates, and his household goods and all other his personal estate, to hold to his said wife, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for ever. The testator then directed that none of the legatees should be entitled until twelve months after his wife's decease ; and, in case his wife should happen to die in his lifetime, and the before-mentioned devises and bequest to her should thereby lapse, the testator gave the estate and effects, as well real as personal, comprised therein, to S., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, to the use of such persons as his wife should, in her lifetime, by writing under her hand appoint. The testator then gave some pecuniary legacies, and proceeded to devise and bequeath to W. A. and his (the testator's) brother-in-law's children the residue of his real and personal estates, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike, at the

(t) 1 Ba. & Be. 449, (Odell v. Crone)
3 Dow, 61 ; see also Roe d. James v.
Avis, 4 T. R. 605.

(u) 2 My. & K. 149. See also Re

Brooks' Will, 2 Dr. & Sm. 362 ; Gravenor v. Watkins, L. R., 6 C. P. 500, post, Chap. XLV. ; Estate of Lupton, decease of his said wife. The heir-at-law contended, that the will was void for uncertainty, on account of the repugnance between the gift to the wife, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, and the subsequent gift of the residue to others, to be divided at her decease. The person claiming under the wife contended that the pecuniary legacies and the gift of the residue were only to take effect in the event of her decease in the testator's lifetime; but Sir J. Leach, M.R., was of opinion that the Court was not warranted in putting such a construction upon the will, for that the testator's general intention, as collected from the concluding passages in his will, was to give the wife the full enjoyment during her life only, and to give it over to the persons named afterwards; and that the words "heirs, executors, administrators and assigns," were to be rejected; and his Honor referred, as one of the grounds of his decision, to the rule, that the latter part of a will shall prevail against inconsistent expressions in the prior part of it. On appeal, Lord Brougham affirmed the decree, observing that either the testator had changed his intention and was minded to give his wife a life estate instead of the fee, or he was ignorant of the force of the words he had originally used, and those words must be rejected as having been used by mistake. The former alternative was the one to which the rule, sanctioned by the authorities (which he stated in detail), led. The latter was the inference drawn, not unfairly, from the whole instrument taken together.
[1905] P. 321.

In Hare v. Westropp (v) the testator gave all his property to his wife, and then gave all the rest residue and remainder of his estate and effects to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, with remainder to his children: it was held that the wife took a life interest in the whole of the testator's property.

"But in these cases," as Mr. Jarman points out (w), "it is a settled and invariable rule not to disturb the prior devise farther than is absolutely necessary for the purpose of giving effect to the posterior qualifying disposition."

—but prior devise not unnecessarily disturbed.

As in Doe d. Amlot v. Davies (x), where a testator devised all his messuage and garden in the occupation of D., and also all that his messuage and garden wherein he then resided, both situate in P., to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to pay the rents to

(v) 9 W. R. 689. But where there are two residuary gifts to different persons, the prior gift, if clear and distinct, will prevail unless the testator shews with reasonable certainty that he means the later gift to take effect: see post, Chap. XXIX.

(w) First ed. p. 414.

(x) 4 M. & Wels. 599. See also Crossman v. Bevan, 27 Beav. 502; Spence v. Handford, 4 Jur. N. S. 987, 27 L. J. Ch. 767.

CHAPTER XVII.

his wife during widowhood, and after the determination of that estate, to the use of his children by his said wife, equally to be divided between them and the lawful issue of their or his bodies or body, and, in default of such issue, to his nephew D. The testator immediately afterwards gave to his daughter F. a pecuniary legacy when she attained the age of twenty-one years, and the house where she then lived, after the decease of her mother or the day of intermarriage; and the testator gave to his daughter R. a legacy in like manner, and the house then in the occupation of D., after the decease of her mother or the day of her intermarriage. The two houses last referred to were those comprised in the previous devise. It was admitted that, under the first devise, the daughters would have been tenants in common in tail of the two houses, but, as the second devise clearly indicated an intention to give one of the houses to each daughter, the whole was in some degree reconciled by holding each to take an estate for life in severalty in her own house under the latter devise (which contained no words of inheritance), leaving the prior devise still to operate on the inheritance in remainder, of which it made the two daughters tenants in common in tail expectant on the estate for life of each in the respective houses.

Devise annulled by subsequent inconsistent devise in same will;

“The doctrine in question,” says Mr. Jarman (y), “has been sometimes unsparingly applied, even where the effect of the posterior devise is not merely (as in the two last cases) to restrict and qualify the interest conferred by the prior devise, but wholly to defeat and frustrate such prior devise. Thus in Ulrich v. Litchfield (z), where a testatrix bequeathed her real and personal estate to A. and B. equally for life, and, upon the death of A., she gave the whole estate to B. in tail, with remainder over, with a few pecuniary legacies, and charged her real estate with the payment of the legacies, if the personalty should be insufficient. The testatrix then gave all the residue of her personal estate to her uncle C.’s three daughters. Lord Hardwicke held the daughters to be entitled to the residue of the personal estate, considering that the testatrix must be presumed to have altered the intention expressed in the prior part of her will.

—the whole to be reconciled, if possible.

“But the rule which sacrifices the former of several contradictory clauses is never applied but on the failure of every attempt to give to the whole such a construction as will render every part of it effective (a). In the attainment of this object the local order of the limitations is disregarded, if it be possible, by the transposition of them, to deduce a consistent disposition from the entire will. Thus, if a man, in the first instance, devise lands to A. in fee, and in a subsequent clause give the same lands to B. for life, both parts of the will shall stand; and, in the construction of law, the devise to B. shall be first (b), the will being read as if the lands had been devised to B. for life, with remainder to A. in fee.

(y) First ed. p. 415.
(z) 2 Atk. 372.

(a) Langham v. Sanford, 19 Ves. 649; Shipperdson v. Tower, 1 Y. & C.

“So where (c) a testator, after devising the whole of his estate to A., devises Blackacre to B., the latter devise will be read as an exception out of the first, as if he had said, ‘I give Blackacre to B., and subject thereto, all my estate, or the residue of my estate, to A.’

“By parity of reason, where (d) a testator gives to B. a specific fund or property at the death of A., and in a subsequent clause disposes of the whole of his property to A., the combined effect of the several clauses, as to such fund or property, is to vest it in A. for life, and, after his decease, in B.

Devise qualified by subsequent disposition.

“Again (e), where a testator gave his real and personal estate to A., his heirs, executors and administrators, and in a subsequent part of his will gave all his property to A. and B., upon trust for sale, and to pay the interest of the proceeds to A. for life, and at her decease, upon trust to pay certain legacies, leaving the residue undisposed of, A. was held to be entitled, under the first devise, to the beneficial interest in reversion, not exhausted by the trust for the payment of legacies created by the second (f).

“Sometimes it happens that the testator has, in several parts of his will, given the same lands to different persons in fee. At first sight this seems to be a case of incurable repugnancy, and, as such, calling for the application of the rule, which sacrifices the prior of two irreconcilable clauses, as the only mode of escaping from the conclusion that both are void. Even here, however, a reconciling construction has been devised, the rule being in such cases, according to the better opinion, that the devisees take concurrently (g). The contrary, indeed, is laid Effect of separate contrariant devises, each in fee.

Both take concurrently.

C. C. 459; Briggs v. Penny, 3 De G. & S. 539; Jackson v. Forbes, Taml. 88; Brocklebank v. Johnson, 20 Beav. 205.

(b) Per Anderson, Anon., Cro. El. 9; see also Ridout v. Dowding, 1 Atk. 419; Plenty v. West, 6 C. B. 201; Usticke v. Peters, 4 K. & J. 437.

(c) Cuthbert v. Lempriere, 3 M. & Sel. 158; see also Anon., Dalison, 63; Adams v. Clerke, 9 Mod. 154; Allum v. Fryer, 3 Q. B. 442; Roe d. Snape v. Nevill, 11 Q. B. 466.

(d) Blamire v. Geldart, 16 Ves. 314.

(e) Brine v. Ferrier, 7 Sim. 549.

(f) In point of fact, in this case the inconsistent gifts were contained in several papers supposed to be written at different times; but as the Ecclesiastical Court had allowed them to be proved as one will, they were, of course, to be so construed.

(g) 3 Leon. 11, pl. 27; 8 Vin. Abr. Devise, 152, pl. 3; arg. in Coke v. Bullock, Cro. Jac. 49, and in Fane v. Fane, 1 Vern. 30.

CHAPTER XVII. down by Lord Coke (h) and other early writers (i), who say that the last devise shall take effect; and a similar opinion seems to have been entertained by Lord Hardwicke, though he admitted that, latterly, a different construction had prevailed (j). The point underwent much discussion in Sherratt v. Bentley (k), already stated; and Lord Brougham, after reviewing the authorities, and fully recognising the general doctrine, which upholds the latter part of a will by the sacrifice of the former to which it was repugnant, considered that, consistently with this rule, it might be held, that, where there are two devisees in fee of the same property, the devisees take concurrently. 'If, in one part of a will,' he said, 'an estate is given to A., and afterwards the same testator gives the same estate to B., adding words of exclusion, as "not to A.", the repugnance would be complete, and the rule would apply. But if the same thing be given, first to A., and then to B., unless it be some indivisible chattel, as in the case which Lord Hardwicke puts in Ulrich v. Litchfield, the two legatees may take together without any violence to the construction. It seems, therefore, by no means inconsistent with the rule as laid down by Lord Coke, and recognised by the authorities, that a subsequent gift, entirely and irreconcilably repugnant to a former gift of the same thing, shall abrogate and revoke it, if it be also held that, where the same thing is given to two different persons in different parts of the same instrument, each may take a moiety; though, had the second gift been in a subsequent will, it would, I apprehend, work a revocation.' "

Whether as joint tenants or tenants in common.

It is laid down by Lord Hardwicke in Ulrich v. Litchfield (l), that the two devisees, if they take concurrently, are joint tenants; this is supported by several old authorities (m), and appears to have been assumed by Lord Brougham, who speaks of their joint estate (n). When he speaks (as above) of each taking a "moiety," it is only as opposed to either taking the whole to the exclusion of the other. In Ridout v. Pain (o), Lord Hardwicke says, that "latterly such a devise has been construed either a joint tenancy or tenancy in common, according to the limitation"; and this it is said must be presumed to mean, "that if the two estates given by the will have the unity or sameness of interest in point of quantity essential to a joint tenancy, the devisees shall be joint (h) Co. Litt. 112.

(i) Plow. 541.

(j) See Ulrich v. Litchfield, 2 Atk. 374.

(k) 2 My. & K. 165, ante, p. 568.

(l) 2 Atk. 372.

(m) 14 Vin. Ab. 485, pl. 2; Anon., Cro. El. 9; Wallop v. Darby, Yelv. 210; Co. Litt. 21 a, n. (4).

(n) 2 My. & K. 166.

(o) 3 Atk. 493.

tenants, but otherwise shall be tenants in common" (p). Now, as both devisees are supposed to have vested estates in fee, this interpretation points to their being joint tenants. Independently of authority this seems the preferable construction, as less violence is thereby done to the testator's language than by making them tenants in common, as the creation of a tenancy in common requires positive intention.

CHAPTER XVII.

It is observable that both Lord Hardwicke and Lord Brougham considered that the doctrine in question did not apply to a single indivisible chattel; but such an exclusion, as Mr. Jarman points out (q), is attended with difficulty, "for though, certainly, it may seem rather absurd that a testator should give a horse or a watch to several persons concurrently, yet it is impossible to say that there may not be such an intention; and where is the line to be drawn? Is it to depend upon the greater or less convenience attending a joint or concurrent enjoyment of the subject of gift?"

Whether doctrine applies to an indivisible chattel.

Sometimes where an estate in fee is followed by apparently inconsistent limitations, the whole has been reconciled by reading the latter disposition as applying exclusively to the event of the prior devisee in fee dying in the testator's lifetime, the intention being, it is considered, to provide a substituted devisee in the case of lapse (r); or by understanding the latter devise to be dependent on a certain contingency mentioned in the will, though such contingency may not clearly appear to be attached to it (s).

Apparent inconsistency reconciled by reference to lapse.

The anxiety of the Courts to adopt such a construction as will reconcile and give effect to all parts of a will, is further exemplified by Holdfast d. Hitchcock v. Pardoe (t), where a testator devised to A. a farm in the occupation of C., and to B. lands in L. Marsh; and it appeared that part of the farm in the occupation of C. consisted of lands in L. Marsh; but there was another estate, not in his occupation, consisting entirely of marsh lands in L.; and it was held, that the subsequent devise was not, as contended, a revocation of the preceding devise, but that A. took the farm, and B. the marsh lands not included in that farm.

Instances of devises reconciled.

So, where (u) a testator devised to A. "her heirs, executors and administrators," a house in T. Street (describing it), and in distinct clauses gave her several other houses, "the whole of which premises were in the borough of Plymouth, during her natural life," but see remarks on this case post, Chap. LVII.

(p) Co. Litt. 112 b, n. (1), by Harg.

(q) First ed. p. 418.

(r) Clayton v. Lowe, 5 B. & Ald. 636;

(s) Ley v. Ley, 2 M. & Gr. 780.

(t) 2 W. Bl. 975; see also Woolcomb

v. Woolcomb, 3 P. W. 111.

(u) Doe d. Bailey v. Sloggett, 5 Exch. 107.

CHAPTER XVII.

but should A. have children, "the before-mentioned houses" to descend to them; but if she should die without issue (which happened), then the "said premises" to become the joint property of the children of X. The house included in the first devise being, as well as all the rest, in the borough of Plymouth, it was contended that it went with them to the children of X. But it was held, that although the words were not perfectly accurate, yet they could not intend that the testator meant by the subsequent words to cut down the estate in fee first given.

Mr. Jarman also cites the case of Bettison v. Richards (v) as being "perhaps, the strongest authority of this kind."

Clear gift not cut down by doubtful expressions.

These cases also exemplify a rule which is certainly not of less frequent application than that enunciated at the beginning of this section, viz., that where there is a clear gift in a will it cannot be cut down by subsequent words which are not clear and decisive (w). They need not (as sometimes stated (x)) be equally clear with the gift. "You are not to institute a comparison between the two clauses as to lucidity" (y). But the clearly expressed gift naturally requires something unequivocal to shew that it does not mean what it says. Thus if a testator gives all his property to A. and in a later part of the will appoints B. his residuary legatee, the general rule is that this does not affect the gift to A. (z), and lapsed legacies go to A., not to B. (a). So where a testator made a careful and elaborate disposition of the residue of his property in favour of his sons and daughters and a grandchild in unequal shares with clauses of accruer, and then made a gift of his residue to the same persons in equal shares, it was held by Fry, J., that the first gift prevailed (b). Again, in Re Spencer (c), where the testator filled up the first blank in a printed form by giving all his real and personal property to certain persons, after which came a full printed form of (v) 7 Taunt. 105.

(w) Thornhill v. Hall, 2 Cl. & F. 22; Re Segelcke, [1906] 2 Ch. 301.

(x) For example, by Knight Bruce, L.J., in Kiver v. Oldfield, 4 De G. & J. 30.

(y) Per Lord Campbell, Randfield v. Randfield, 8 H. L. Ca. 225, where the rule was held inapplicable. For further instances of the application of the rule, see Clavering v. Ellison, 3 Drew. 451; Re Larkin, 2 Jur. N. S. 229; Walmsley v. Foxhall, 1 D. J. & S. 605; Kerr v. Clinton, L. R., 8 Eq. 462; Crozier v. Crozier, L. R., 15 Eq. 282; Re Bywater, 18 Ch. D. 17; Re Viscount Exmouth, 23 Ch. D. 158. And see this rule further discussed, post, pp. 579 et seq.

(z) Davis v. Bennet, 30 Bea. 226; Kilvington v. Parker, 21 W. R. 121; Re Jessop, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 424.

(a) Johns v. Wilson, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 342; Re Isaac, [1905] 1 Ch. 427. See the cases referred to in detail in Chap. XXIX.

(b) Bristow v. Masfield, 52 L. J. Ch. 27. Fitzpatrick v. Knaresborough, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 338, seems to have been the converse of this case.

(c) 54 L. T. 597.

residuary gift in which he inserted the names of four other persons : CHAPTER XVII.
it was held that there was nothing on which the residuary clause could operate, and that the prior gift must prevail (d).

In Hoare v. Byng (e) a testator left all his personal estate and all his landed estates to his wife for life, and "afterwards" all his personal and landed estates to his sister for her life, and "then" to the eldest son of B. and "afterwards" to B.'s second, third, or any later sons, and "then" to the eldest and other sons successively of C. : it was contended that the words "then" and "afterwards" shewed an intention to give B.'s eldest and other sons nothing more than life interests, but it was held that the eldest son of B. took the personal estate absolutely. All the judges laid stress on the fact that where the testator intended to give estates for life, estates for life were in terms given. This element was absent in the case of Re Percy (f), where a testator, by an extremely short and concise will, bequeathed to his wife 10,000*l*. "afterwards to go to the understated residuary legatee E." : it was held by Bacon, V.-C., that the gift to the wife was absolute, and not cut down to a life interest by the "inept words" which followed it. But it is not very easy to see why the word "afterwards" should be considered more inept than the words "at her death," following an absolute gift (g).

Absolute gift not cut down to estate for life by vague words.

III.—Rejection of Words.—"It is clear," says Mr. Jarman (h), "that words and passages in a will, which are irreconcilable with the general context, may be rejected, whatever may be the local position which they happen to occupy ; for the rule which gives effect to the posterior of several inconsistent clauses must not be so applied as in any degree to clash or interfere with the doctrine which teaches us to look for the intention of a testator in the general tenor of the instrument, and to sacrifice to the scheme of disposition so disclosed, any incongruous words and phrases which have found a place therein.

Rule as to the rejection of words.

"Thus, in Boon v. Cornforth (i), where a testator bequeathed

(d) As to the construction of a will written on a printed form, see Re Harrison, 30 Ch. D. at p. 394.

(e) 5 Bea. 558 (Byng v. Stafford) ; 10 Cl. & F. 508.

(f) 24 Ch. D. 616. This case is also referred to supra, p. 463.

(g) Ante, p. 566.

(h) First ed. p. 420. It will be remembered that where words have been inserted in a will by mistake, they are sometimes omitted from the probate; ante, p. 30.

(i) 2 Ves. sen. 277; Robinson v. Waddelow, 8 Sim. 134; Jones v. Price, 11 Sim. 557; Aspinall v. Audus, 7 M. & Gr. 912; Hanbury v. Tyrell, 21 Beav. 322; Campbell v. Bouskell, 27 Beav. 325 ("aforesaid nephews," "aforesaid" rejected); Smith v. Crabtree, 6 Ch. D. 591 ("living at the death or second marriage of my wife" rejected).

CHAPTER XVII.

the interest of 6,000*l.* stock to his daughter for life, and after her decease, upon trust to dispose of the principal and interest to and between her husband and his (testator's) daughter's child and children, viz. her husband should have and enjoy one-half of the interest thereof for and during his natural life, if there should be no child or children (the words in italics were interlined (j)), and the child or children the other half ; on his death his half should go to the child or children, but till the child or children attained twenty-one the husband should have the whole interest, and on the death of their father, they should have the remaining 3,000*l.* ; but if no such child or children at the time of her death, or they

- should die before twenty-one, then to go on further trust as he should thereafter mention—Lord Hardwicke rejected the interlined words, as inconsistent and repugnant with the whole disposition, his Lordship being of opinion that he had no alternative but that of rejecting either these or the entire provision.

Passage at variance with context rejected.

“ So, in the case of Coryton v. Helyar (k), where a testator devised lands to the use of his son for ninety-nine years, and, after the determination of that estate, to the use of trustees during the life of the son, to preserve contingent remainders ; and, after the decease of the son, to the use of his first and other sons in tail male—Lord Hardwicke held that the term was, with reference to the true construction of the several parts of the will, to be construed, not as an absolute term, but as determinable with the decease of the son.

Ambiguous words inconsistent with prior devise rejected.

“ In several instances inconsistent words engrafted on a prior clear and express devise have been rejected.

“ Thus, where (l) the devise was to A. and her heirs, for their lives, Lord Ellenborough rejected the latter words ; which, he said, were merely the expression of a man ignorant of the manner of describing how the parties whom he meant to benefit would enjoy the property ; for whatever estate of inheritance the heirs might take, they could in fact only enjoy the benefit of it for their own lives.” And where (m) a testator gave to his wife, her heirs and

(j) Lunn v. Osborne, 7 Sim. 56, affords another instance of the rejection of words which had been interlined by a testator, and were at variance with the general context.

(k) 2 Cox, 340. See, for other examples of powers or interests reduced within a limited period by force of the context, Waltington v. Waldron, 4 D. M.

& G. 259 ; Chapman v. Gilbert, ib. 366.

(l) Doe d. Cotton v. Stenlake, 12 East, 515. See also Towns v. Wentworth, 11 Moo. P. C. C. 545 ; Hugo v. Williams, L. R., 14 Eq. 224.

(m) Doe d. Herbert v. Thomas, 3 Ad. & Ell. 123, 4 Nev. & M. 696. See also Brocklebank v. Johnson, 20 Beav. 205 ; Pasmore v. Huggins, 21 Beav. 103.

assigns for ever, his house and other property, with the intention that she might enjoy the same during her life, and by her will dispose of the same as she thought proper; it was contended that the wife took only a life interest with a testamentary power of appointment; but the Court held, that the latter part of the clause did not cut down the clear gift of a fee-simple contained in the former part, and that the testator merely meant to mention all the incidents of a fee which occurred to him at the time (n).

So, where (o) a testatrix bequeathed an annuity, to be equally divided between M. B., C. S., and C. A., "to them and their heirs, or the survivor of them, in the order they are now mentioned," Sir W. Grant rejected the latter words as repugnant.

The embarrassment often caused by cases of this description is exemplified by Morrall v. Sutton (p), where a testator limited life interests in his leasehold property charged with certain annuities, with remainder to S. C., "her executors, administrators and assigns, subject to the said annuities charged thereon during her natural life." The general rules above mentioned were acknowledged on all hands; but there was a difference of opinion upon the question, whether or not sufficient evidence of the testator's intention could be collected from the context to authorise the rejection of the words "during her natural life," so as to give S. C. the absolute interest; for, in the absence of such evidence, those words being placed last must, according to the general rule, overrule the preceding words "executors, &c.," thereby limiting S. C.'s interest to a life-estate. The case was ultimately compromised.

Where there is a gift to a limited class of children or issue, with a gift over in default of "such children," or "such issue," it may appear that the word "such" was not used in its proper sense, and it may be rejected or modified accordingly (q).

Where inappropriate words have apparently been inserted by mistake in a will shewing signs of having been carefully and skilfully prepared, the Court sometimes assumes that they were

The "blundering attorney's clerk."

(n) If there had been a gift over in the event of the wife not disposing of the property the construction would have been different: see Re Stringer's Estate, 6 Ch. D. 1, and the other cases cited in Chap. XXIII.

(o) Smith v. Pybus, 9 Ves. 566; see also Jesson v. Wright, 2 Bligh, 1, and other cases of the same class discussed, Chap. XLIX.; and Reece v. Steel, 2 Sim. 233; Townley v. Bolton, 1 My. & K.

148; Harvey v. Harvey, 5 Beav. 134; Re Bywater, 18 Ch. D. 17.

(p) 4 Beav. 478, 1 Phil. 533. Compare Bunbury v. Doran, Ir. R., 9 C. L. 284, where a testator devised to P. and M. a certain property "until I am able to live there and enjoy it myself": these words were rejected, as being inconsistent with the normal operation of a testamentary disposition.

(q) Chaps. XX., LII.

CHAPTER XVII. inserted by some "blundering attorney's clerk," and rejects them (g).

Words not to be expunged, unless inconsistent.

"But words are not to be expunged," says Mr. Jarman (r), "upon mere conjecture, nor unless actually irreconcilable with the context of the will, though the retention of them may produce rather an absurd consequence (s).

"Thus, where (t) a testator after bequeathing certain property to Thomas Brailsford, son of his nephew Samuel Brailsford, devised his real estates 'to the use of the said Thomas Brailsford and his assigns, for and during the term of his natural life, and after his decease, to the use of the said Thomas Brailsford, son of my nephew, Samuel Brailsford, his heirs and assigns, for ever.' The only Thomas Brailsford mentioned in the will was the son of Samuel, but the testator had another nephew of that name, (who was uncle of the legatee,) to whom, therefore, it was contended, that the devise to 'the said Thomas Brailsford' applied, though he was not before named, according to the case in Hawkins (u), that father and son having the same name, the son, not the father, is distinguished by an addition (v). The words 'the said,' it was observed, might be considered surplusage; and that the devise was either void for uncertainty, or, there must be an inquiry. But Sir William Grant said, that it was impossible to contend that there was, primâ facie, any ambiguity in the description; by the words, 'the same Thomas Brailsford,' the Thomas Brailsford who had been before mentioned was sufficiently described. 'The argument on the other side,' said his Honor, 'rests chiefly on the inconsistency of giving to the same person, in the same sentence, an estate for life and also an estate in fee; there is certainly a particularity in that; but the devise as it stands is not so insensible or contradictory as to drive the Court to the necessity of expunging or adding words to give it a meaning;' and this decree was affirmed by Lord Eldon on appeal (w).

Devise not controlled by reason assigned.

"And though repugnant expressions will yield to an intention and purpose expressed, or apparent upon the general context,

(g) Re Dayrell, [1904] 2 Ch. 496. The expression was first used by Bacon, V.-C., in Re Redfern, 6 Ch. D. 133, post, p. 590, n. (f).

(r) First ed. p. 423.

(s) See Mellish v. Mellish, 4 Ves. 45, where the inference that a name had been inserted by mistake, was very strong.

(t) Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. 368.

(u) 2 Hawk. P. C. 271, s. 106.

(v) See also Goodright d. Hall v. Hall, 1 Wils. 148.

(w) 19 Ves. 652, 2 Mer. 25; see also Roe v. Foster, 9 East, 405; Ridgeway v. Munkittrick, 1 D. & War. 90, 91; Ridout v. Pain, 3 Atk. 493; Langley v. Thomas, 6 D. M. & G. 645.

yet it does not appear that a bequest actually made, or a power given, can be controlled merely by the reason assigned. The assigned reason may aid the construction of doubtful words, but cannot warrant the rejection of words that are clear (x). Thus, where (y) a testator expressed his conviction of the honour and justice of his trustees, and made that conviction the ground of his reposing in them the trust of distributing his property among his relations, authorising them to fix both the objects and the proportions, but afterwards gave the power in express terms, to them, and the heirs, executors and administrators of the survivor of them—Sir W. Grant, M.R., observed: ‘Though it seems very incongruous and inconsequential to extend to unknown and unascertained persons the power which personal knowledge and confidence had induced the testator to confide to his original trustees and executors, yet I am not authorised to strike these words out of the will, upon the supposition, though not improbable, that they were introduced in this part by inadvertence or mistake.’ ”

IV.—Distinct Gift not controlled by Ambiguous Context.—

Again, it is a general rule, that a devise in general terms shall not, even though the result may be to render it inoperative, be held to control another devise made in distinct terms. Thus, in Borrell v. Haigh (z), where a testatrix devised all her messuages, cottages, closes, lands and hereditaments at H. to A., and afterwards gave all her copyhold estates and hereditaments at N. and T. “and elsewhere”; and it appeared that the only place besides N. and T., in which the testatrix had copyholds, was H.: Lord Langdale, M.R., held, nevertheless, that the prior devise, which per se clearly carried the copyholds at H., was not defeated by the vague expression which followed. Greenwood v. Sutcliffe (a) was decided on the same principle. In Mann v. Fuller (b) there was a bequest of 2,000*l.* to A. and his children, followed by legacies to other persons, and then a bequest of 1,000*l.* to A., “in addition to one thousand before mentioned”: it was held that this did not cut down the former legacy to 1,000*l.*

Distinct gift not cut down by vague words.

“It is to be observed, too,” says Mr. Jarman (c), “that a devise of lands, in clear and technical terms, will not be controlled by Clear devise not controlled by subsequent inaccurate words of reference.

(x) Per Sir W. Grant, 16 Ves. 46; and see 4 Ves. 808; Thompson v. White-lock, 5 Jur. N. S. 991.

(y) Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27. The general principle laid down by the M.R. as to the transmission of powers involving personal confidence, was dissented from by Farwell, J., in Re Smith, [1904] 1 Ch. 139; see Chap. XXIV.

(z) 2 Jur. 229. See also Sidebotham v. Watson, 11 Hare, 170 (4th question).

(a) 14 C. B. 226.

(b) Kay, 624.

(c) First ed. p. 425.

CHAPTER XVII. expressions in a subsequent part of the will, inaccurately referring to the devise, in terms which, had they been used in the devise itself, would have conferred a different estate, if the discordancy appear to have sprung merely from a negligent want of adherence to the language of the preceding devise.

“Thus, where (d) a testatrix devised lands to her eldest daughter A. S., and the heirs of her body for ever, with remainder over, charged with a sum of money to be raised out of the yearly profits; and the testatrix declared it to be her will that her executors (thereinafter named) should stand seised of the lands until they should have raised the said sum, or until the same should be discharged by A. S. and her heirs; and after the raising or payment thereof by the said A. S. or her heirs, then that A. S. and her heirs should enjoy the said lands for ever (e). It was held that the word ‘heirs’ of A. S. thrice repeated, referred to the special designation of heirs to whom the estate was devised in the beginning of the will, and were not intended to introduce a new and more general denomination of heirs, and to revoke the express estate tail given in the beginning of the will.

“So, where (f) the devise was to A. and the heirs male of his body, and, in case he should die without issue, then over, the words ‘without issue’ were held to mean without issue male.

“Both the preceding cases exhibit deficiency, rather than repugnancy of expression, and will serve, therefore, not inaptly to conduct to the commencing subject of the next chapter.”

(d) Doe d. Hanson v. Fyldes, Cowp. 833.

(e) The words “for ever” were not strictly repugnant, as an estate tail is capable of perpetuity of duration.

(f) Tuck v. Frencham, Moore, 13 pl. 50 (Buck v. Frencham), 1 And. 8; see also Ellicombe v. Gompertz, 3 My. & Cr. 127; Hillersdon v. Lowe, 2 Hare, 355; Mortimer v. Hartley, 3 De G. & S. 332.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AS TO SUPPLYING, TRANSPOSING, AND CHANGING WORDS.

	PAGE
I. As to Supplying Words	581
II. As to the Transposition of Words and Clauses	595
III. As to Changing Words	599

I.—As to supplying Words.—The question whether parol evidence is admissible to supply blanks left in a will has been already considered (a). Supplying blanks.

Where it is clear on the face of a will that the testator has not accurately or completely expressed his meaning by the words he has used, and it is also clear what are the words which he has omitted, those words may be supplied (b) in order to effectuate the intention, as collected from the context (c). Words may be supplied, when.

Of this we have a very simple example in an early case, where a devise to A. and the heirs of [his body, and, if he should die, then over, was read “and if he should die without issue” (d). So, where (e) a man having three sons, John, Thomas, and William, devised lands to John, his eldest son, and the heirs of his body, after the death of Alice, the devisor’s wife; and declared that if John died, living Alice, William should be his heir. [And the testator devised other lands to Thomas, and the heirs of his body, and, if he died without issue, then that John should be his heir; and he devised other lands to William and the heirs of his body, and, if all his sons should die without heirs of their bodies, then that his lands should be to the children of his brother. John

(a) Ante, Chap. XV.

(b) This is generally done by the Court of Construction and not by the Court of Probate: but if the missing words bear on the question of probate, they may be supplied: In bonis Morony, 1 L. R. Ir. 483.

(c) See Towns v. Wentworth, 11 Moo. P. C. 526; Hope v. Potter, 3 K. & J. 206; per K. Bruce, L.J., 3 De G. & J. 266, 267; Mellor v. Daintree, 33 Ch. D. 198. The general principle laid down by Knight-Bruce, L.J., in Key v. Key, 4 D. M. & G. at p. 84, was approved by Swinfen Eady, J., in Phillips v. Rail, 54 W. R. 517.

(d) Anon., 1 And. 33; see also Atkins v. Atkins, Cro. El. 248. The cases of Coryton v. Helyar, Doe v. Fyldes, and Tuck v. Frencham, cited in the last chapter (ante, pp. 576, 580), illustrate the same principle.

(e) Spalding v. Spalding, Cro. Car. 185.

CHAP. XVIII.

died in the lifetime of Alice, leaving a son ; and the Court held, that, upon the whole context of the will, the construction should be " if John died without issue, living Alice " ; and that this was the intent appeared, it was said, by other parts of the will, the other sons having other lands to them and the heirs of their bodies ; and that if they all died without issue, it should be to his brother's children, not meaning to disinherit any of his children. And it was declared not to be a contingent remainder or limitation to abridge the former express limitation.

" Without issue " read " without leaving issue."

And in several instances where a testator, in a will made before the year 1838, had used the phrase " without leaving issue " and " without issue " indifferently, in bequests of personalty, in regard to which alone (as hereafter shown) the difference of expression is material, the word " leaving " has been supplied, in order to produce uniformity, which, it was considered, must have been intended (f).

Words " under twenty-one " supplied.

Again, in Kirkpatrick v. Kilpatrick (g), where a sum of money was bequeathed to J. and S. to be equally divided ; but in the event of the death of either of them before he attained the age of twenty-one years, and without issue, his share to go to the survivor ; but in the event of both dying without issue, then over ; Lord Erskine, on the authority of Sheppard v. Lessingham (h), supplied the words " under twenty-one," in the ulterior bequest.

" On marriage " read " at twenty-one or marriage."

The case of Lang v. Pugh (i) was of the same kind. A testator gave a sum of money, in trust for his son T. for life, and after his death for his lawful issue if then of age or married, equally if more than one, if only one the whole to go to such only child ; or in case such child or children of his son should be under age at the death of the son, then " to be divided or paid to him, her, or them, in manner aforesaid, on their attaining their respective age or ages of twenty-one years, if sons, or if daughters, on their marriage

(f) Sheppard v. Lessingham, Amb. 122. See also Radford v. Radford, 1 Kee. 486, where freeholds and leaseholds were combined in the same devise. And see Greenway v. Greenway, 1 Gif. 131, 2 D. F. & J. 128. Cf. Pye v. Limwood, 6 Jur. 618, post, Chap. LII. As regards wills made since 1837 it is provided by sect. 29 of the Wills Act that words in a devise or bequest importing failure of issue are to mean issue living at the death unless a contrary intention appears by the will. See further on this point, post, Chap. LII.

(g) 13 Ves. 476 ; see also Wheable v.

Withers, 16 Sim. 505. But see Else v. Else, L. R., 13 Eq. 196. In Radley v. Lees, 3 M. & Gr. 327, the codicil shewed that the testator's intention would be defeated by supplying the words there proposed to be inserted in the will.

(h) Supra.

(i) 1 Y. & C. C. C. 718 ; see also King v. Cullen, 2 De G. & S. 252 ; Woodburne v. Woodburne, 3 ib. 643. So, in Re Dear, 61 L. T. 432, where there was a gift to the testator's widow so long as she should remain unmarried, with a gift over on her death, Kay, J., held that the words " or marriage " must be supplied.

respectively." Sir K. Bruce, V.-C., read the will as if it had been written, "or, in the case of daughters marrying earlier, upon marriage"; he thought it improbable that the testator could "have meant a daughter of T. surviving her father, and having attained majority in her father's lifetime, to take the fund or a portion of it absolutely, though never married, but that he meant altogether to exclude any daughter, a minor at her father's death, if not then married, unless she should at some period of her life marry."

Again, in the leading case of Abbott v. Middleton (j), a testator gave an annuity of 2,000*l.* to his wife for life, and directed funds to be set apart for securing it, "and on her decease the sums provided and set apart for such payment to become the property of my son A. so far as he the said A. my son shall receive the interest on such sum during his life, and on his demise the principal sum to become the property of any child or children he may leave, and in such sums as my said son shall will and direct; but in case of my son dying before his mother, then and in that case the principal sum to be divided between the children of my daughters" B., C., and D. The son A. having died before his mother but leaving a child, the question was, whether the words "without leaving any child" could be supplied after the word "dying" in the final gift over, so as to leave the child of A. in possession of the property, and it was held by Romilly, M.R., that those words must be supplied. Referring to Spalding v. Spalding (k), he said the principal ground of the decision there seemed to him to be the expression of the testator's intention that the heirs of the body of the first son should take, and it was to be observed that they could take only by descent through the father, whereas in the present case they took vested interests direct from the testator. The judgment of the M.R. was affirmed in the House of Lords, principally on the same ground (l). A clear gift was not to be divested but by an unmistakable provision to that effect (m).

"Dying" read "dying without leaving a child."

In the foregoing cases the testator had used expressions that

(j) 21 Beav. 143, 7 H. L. Ca. 68. And see Brotherton v. Burry, 18 Beav. 65.

(k) Ante, p. 581.

(l) By Lords Chelmsford and St. Leonards; Lords Cranworth and Wensleydale diss. Whether the words were supplied or not the will remained incomplete. If they were not supplied, the testator's bounty to his grandchildren would depend on their father's surviving his mother, which appeared unreasonable. If they were supplied, and the son survived his mother and died leaving no child, the fund would not go to the children of the daughters but would fall into the residue.

It should be noted that the general canon of construction laid down by Lord Cranworth in this case has often been cited with approval: see Gordon v. Gordon, L. R., 5 H. L. 254.

(m) See Hope v. Potter, 3 K. & J. 206.

CHAP. XVIII.

Elliptical expression supplied; but an event not contemplated will not be provided for.

were, or were considered to be, plainly elliptical. Some contingency or state of circumstances that was present to his mind was imperfectly described. But the Court cannot provide for an event which appears to have been absent from the testator's mind, however strange the omission may be. Thus in Eastwood v. Lockwood (n), where a testator disposed of all his property on trusts for the maintenance of his children until Hannah, the youngest, attained twenty-one; and as soon as she attained that age he disposed of his personal estate among certain of his children; and as to a specified part of his real estate, he devised it to his son A. in tail male, subject to a certain charge; and as to other specified parts, he devised one to each of his other sons in tail male, with a gift over "in case of any of his said sons should die during the minority of Hannah, or in the event of any of them dying without such lawful issue as aforesaid, and either before or after their or his share should be divisible according to the provisions of the will" (i.e., before Hannah attained twenty-one); A. died before that time leaving issue, and it was argued, on the authority of Spalding v. Spalding (o), that his estate was not cut down. Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., agreed that the words "in case of any son dying during the minority of Hannah" standing alone would have brought the case within that authority: but the words that followed made it different. The testator had put two classes of events together. He had said, "I point to a dying in the one case simpliciter during a given epoch. I point to a dying without issue in the other case generally, either before or after Hannah attains twenty-one." It was true that in one sense the second alternative might be included in the first, yet still it was emphatic; and although it seemed strange to suppose that he meant it in this sense, yet if he did, he could hardly have expressed himself more clearly. Notwithstanding the existence of issue, therefore, the estate of A. was divested and went over.

The principle of supplying omitted words has been applied in numerous other cases, from which the following have been selected, as affording apt examples of its application.

Thus, where (p) a testator having two sisters, A. H. and M. J., and also two cousins, F. and G., devised his estate at A. to his sister A. H. for life, remainder to his sister M. J. for life, remainder to another person for life, remainder to F. in tail, remainder Words supplied to provide for an alternative event, obvious, though not expressed.

(n) L. R., 3 Eq. 487.

(o) Ante, p. 581.

(p) Doe d. Leach v. Micklem, 6 East, 486; see also Webb v. Hearing, Cro.

Jac. 415; Anon., 2 Vent. 363; Pearsall v. Simpson, 15 Ves. 29; Lord Eldon's judgment in Doe d. Planner v. Scudamore, 2 B. & P. 296.

to G. in tail, with remainders over; and then devised another estate to B. "to his sister M. J. for life, or if she should survive his wife and sister A. H., so that she should come into possession of the estate at A.," then to L. J. for life, towards the support of his cousins F. and G., remainder to the said G. in fee. M. J. survived the testator's widow, but not his sister A. H., and it was therefore contended that the remainder to L. J. and G. failed; but the Court decided, that, as the word "or" so placed was unintelligible, being referrible to no other alternative; and as it was apparent from the whole context that the testator had in contemplation another alternative, namely, the death of his sister M. J., and that he meant to make a provision after the death of his sisters for his cousin G. as well as his cousin F., which was not satisfied by only giving G. a remainder in tail after a remainder in tail to his brother F.; in order to render the sentence complete and sensible, and to give effect to the apparent intent of the testator, the necessary words might be supplied to make the devise read as a gift to his sister M. J. for life, and after her death, or if she should survive his wife (g) and sister A. H., so that she should come into possession of the estate at A., then over to L. J., who consequently took a vested remainder, and was entitled in the events that had happened.

"But no case, probably," says Mr. Jarman (r), "has gone further in supplying words in compliance with the intention appearing by the context, than Doe d. Wickham v. Turner (s), where the testator's deficiency of expression left the devise without an object. The will was in these words: 'I give unto H. W. a messuage or tenement now in the possession of W. Item, I give further unto my nephew H. W. half part of my garden, and 100*l.* stock in the 4 per cent. Bank annuities. I give, further, my yard, stables, cowhouse, and all other outhouses in the said yard, my sister M. W. to have the interest and profits during her life.' The question was, whether the nephew was entitled to the yard under this devise. The Court (Best, J., diss.) decided in the affirmative: for as the testator had used the word 'further' in the preceding part of his will, when he made an additional gift to the same devisee, and as the clause would otherwise have been senseless and inoperative,

Object supplied by reference to preceding devise.

(g) It does not distinctly appear why the death of the wife is introduced; but probably she had a life estate in the property at A.; or, perhaps, it was because the wife had a life annuity of 50*l.* out of estate A.; and that, therefore, M. J. was not intended to lose estate B. till after the cesser of that charge upon her interest in estate A.

(r) First ed. p. 431.

(s) 2 D. & Ry. 398.

CHAP. XVIII.

the words 'to him' might be supplied, and then it was a devise to M. W. for life, remainder to her son H. W. in fee" (t).

A stricter construction was followed in Driver v. Driver (u): there the testator gave all his property to his executor upon trust for the purposes of his will, and gave 300*l.* to his daughter, and 5*s.* a week to his son J. D.; he then gave other property to his son R. D., and his daughter in equal shares, and proceeded as follows: "I further order that after paying the before mentioned 300*l.* to my daughter, and the aforesaid legacy to my son J. D., I give and bequeath the remainder of my property, of what nature or kind soever it may be [specifying various descriptions of property] and other property of which I may die possessed, and I nominate and appoint my son R. D. sole executor of this my last will and testament." Bacon, V.-C., refused to insert the word "to" after the words "of which I may die possessed" and held that there was an intestacy as to the residue.

Words supplied to preserve others.

Words are often supplied if, without them, other words would be inoperative. Thus, "if a man by his last will devise lands or tenements to a man and to his heirs male, this by construction of law is an estate tail, the law supplying these words (of his bodie)" (v).

Limitation to second and every other son to be begotten held to include eldest son.

In Langston v. Pole (w), where a testator, passing over the first son of A. (his son and devisee for life), proceeded to limit the estate to the "second, third, fourth, fifth, and all and every other the son and sons of the body, sons of A. lawfully to be begotten severally and successively in remainder in seniority of age and priority of birth" in tail male, and then to the first and other daughters of A. in like manner; on a case from Chancery the Court of C. B. supplied the vacancy in the series of limitations, by holding the first son to take an estate tail immediately expectant on his father's decease. It appears that the Court of B. R. had come to an opposite conclusion upon the same will. Neither Court gave reasons. The decision of the Court of C. B. was affirmed in D. P. Lord Brougham relied on the trusts of a term, which were, in case there should be only one son and one daughter, to raise a portion for the daughter; an absurd provision, if the daughter herself took the estate, as she would, under the circumstances, unless the son

(t) "There must be a mistake in this, as the will was destitute of any ground for raising a fee in the devisees, and it was not necessary for the Court to determine the quantity of the devisee's interest." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(u) 43 L. J. Ch. 279.

(v) Co. Litt. 27a. See Chap. XLVII.

(w) 2 M. & Pay. 490, 5 Bing. 228, Tam. 119, and in D. P. nom. Langston v. Langston, 8 Bli. N. S. 167, 2 Cl. & Fin. 194, Sugd. Law of Prop. 370. See also Newburgh v. Newburgh, Sug. Law of Prop. 367; Re Blake, 19 W. R. 765.

did. However, he was of opinion that the phrase "other sons" included the first son, and therefore the decision of the Court below was right, without supplying any words (x).

But although the general rule of construction as regards wills is to extend the words "to be begotten" to issue begotten before the date of the will (y), yet the rule is not so absolute but that it will give way upon indication of a contrary intention appearing from other parts of the will. Thus, in Locke v. Dunlop (z), where a testator devised real estate to the use of his second son F. for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons in tail

Same expression held on context of will to exclude eldest son.

(x) See also Clements v. Paske, 3 Dougl. 384, cit. 1 M. & Sel. 130, 2 Cl. & Fin. 230, n. The devise was to trustees during the life of J. C., upon trust for J. C. for life, and after his decease, to the eldest son of J. C., and for default of such issue, then likewise to the second, third, and every other son of J. C. successively, according to seniority, and the several and respective heirs male of the body and bodies of such (omitting the first son) second, third, or other son or sons, the eldest of such sons and the heirs male of his body being always preferred to and take before any of the younger sons and the heirs male of his body, and, in case of such issue male failing by J. C., then over. It was held in B. R. that the eldest son of J. C. took an estate tail, and not an estate for life. Lord Mansfield seems to have chiefly relied on the word "likewise," as indicating an intention that the first son should have the same estate as the younger sons, and not on the word "other" as (according to Lord Brougham's judgment in Langston v. Langston) he might have done. In Owen v. Smyth, 2 H. Bl. 594, Eyre, C.J., doubted whether words such as those which afterwards occurred in Langston v. Langston, could in a deed be considered to give an estate tail to the eldest son. In Barnacle v. Nightingale, 14 Sim. 456, there was a devise to A. for life, and, after his decease, to his first son, and, for default of such issue, to the second, third, &c., and all and every other son and sons of A., and the heirs of his or their bodies lawfully issuing, the elder always to be preferred and to take before the younger of such sons and the heirs of his body: Shadwell, V.-C., decided that the limitation to the heirs of the body of the first son had been omitted, and could not be supplied, and that such son took only an estate for life. The Court of B. R. decided the direct contrary on the same will, Doe d. Harris v. Taylor, 10 Q. B. 718; and with the latter decision agrees Galley v. Barrington, 2 Bing. 387, in which, upon a settlement expressed in very similar words, the Court of C. B. held that the limitation "to the heirs of the body" included the heirs of the body of the first as well as of the second and younger sons; and Owen v. Smyth, 2 H. Bl. 594, where the limitations in a deed were to the use of N. for life, remainder to the use of the first son of N., and for default of such issue to the use of the second, third, and all and every other son and sons of N. successively, and of the several heirs male of the body and bodies of all and every such son and sons, so that the elder of such sons and the heirs male of his and their bodies should always take before the younger of the same sons and the heirs male of his and their body and bodies; and it was held that the words in italics included the first son as well as the others and gave him an estate tail. It must be observed that the authority of Doe v. Taylor is impaired by the reasons given for the decision, viz. that the words "for default of such issue" did not, as is the universal rule, mean for default of such issue as took under the previous limitation, that is, "for default of such first son," but meant "for default of issue of such first son," and that the first son, therefore, took an estate tail by implication. See post, Chap. LII. and Re Arnold's Estate, 33 Beav. 163.

(y) Co. Lit. 20 b.; Hebblethwaite v. Cartwright, Cas. t. Talb. 31; Hewet v. Ireland, 1 P. Wms. 426; Doe v. Hallett, 1 M. & S. 124; Early v. Benbow, 2 Coll. 342; Almack v. Horn, 1 H. & M. 630.

(z) 39 Ch. D. 387, affirming the decision of Stirling, J., ibid.

CHAP. XVIII.

male, with remainder to the use of the testator's third son J. for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder in the following words: "And for default of such issue to the use of my fourth, fifth, and all and every other son and sons of my body on the body of my said wife to be begotten, born, or en ventre sa mère at the time of my decease, severally, successively, and in remainder one after another, as they and every of them shall be in seniority of age and priority of birth," in tail male, with remainder to the use of the testator's daughters "begotten or to be begotten, born, or en ventre sa mère at the time of my decease," equally as tenants in common in tail; all the testator's sons except the eldest having died without issue male, it was held by the Court of Appeal, that, having regard to the various limitations of the will, the words "to be begotten," &c., must be construed strictly, and that the eldest son was excluded from taking.

It may, indeed, be stated as a general rule, that mere conjecture or inference is not a sufficient ground for adding words to a will (a).

Words supplied to make limitations consistent with context.

It is clear, however, that words and even clauses, may be supplied in a set or series of limitations or trusts, from which they have been omitted without apparent design, where those limitations or trusts as they stand are inconsistent with the context, and the context shews what must be added to remove the inconsistency. Thus in Parker v. Tootal (b), where the testator devised land to A. for life, with remainder to the first son of A. severally and successively in tail male, the words "and other sons" were introduced, in order to prevent the words "severally and successively" from being in effect struck out of the will. So in Greenwood v. Greenwood (c), where a testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees on trust to sell and invest the sale moneys, and "pay the moneys and the investment for the time being representing the same to my wife during her life upon trust for all my children or any child who, being sons, shall attain twenty-one, or being daughters, shall attain that age or marry, in equal shares"; with power for the trustees, "after the death of my wife, or previously thereto if she shall so direct, to raise any part not exceeding one half of the then expectant presumptive or vested share of any child under the trusts hereinbefore declared" for the advancement of the child; and "after the death of my wife" to apply the whole or a part " of the income of the share to which any child shall for the time being be entitled in expectancy under the trusts hereinbefore declared " for maintenance of the child : and, in default of children, " then from and after the death of my said wife and such default of children," over. The question was whether the wife had a beneficial interest for her life in the fund, and it was held by the L.JJ. that she had. Sir W. James observed that if the will had ended with the gift to the children in equal shares, it would have been difficult to alter the natural meaning of the words, which imported a gift to the wife during her life in trust for the children, giving the latter an estate pur autre vie only. But when they read the powers of advancement and maintenance, which were powers dealing after the death of the wife with what the testator treated as already given to the children, it was evident that the natural meaning of the previous words could not be the true one, these powers being utterly inconsistent with the view that the previous trust for children was one determining with the wife's life ; they were driven therefore to separate the words in the gift to the children from the gift to the wife for life, the words " after her death " being implied after the gift of her life estate.

(a) See Jennings v. Newman, 10 Sim. 219; Eastwood v. Lockwood, L. R., 3 Eq. 487: ante, p. 584.

(b) 11 H. L. C. 143.
(c) 5 Ch. D. 954.

Re Daniel's Trusts (d), which was the case of a postnuptial settlement, was decided on the same principle.

Again, in Sweeting v. Prideaux (e), where a testator bequeathed 16,000*l.* in trust to pay the income of one moiety to his daughter A. for life for her separate use, and after her death to divide that moiety among her children, or failing children among her statutory next of kin ; and to pay the income of the other moiety to his daughter B. for life " in the same manner in every respect, and subject to the same control as he had before directed as to A., it being his intention that his said daughters' fortunes should not be subject to the control of their husbands." He then gave 6,000*l.* in trust for his son C. for life, and after his death for his children, and failing children to form part of his estate ; and he empowered the trustees to apply the income of the 16,000*l.* and 6,000*l.* for the maintenance of his said daughters' or son's children as they might think proper. B. died leaving children, and it was held by Hall, V.-C., that they were by implication entitled to the moiety given to B. for life. He said : " The daughters

(d) 1 Ch. D. 375. The remarks on this case by Mr. Vincent in the 4th and 5th editions of the present work have been omitted, as the case is not relevant to the law of wills.

(e) 2 Ch. D. 413 ; see also Re Smith, 45 L. T. 246. And as to interests created by reference, see Chap. XX.

CHAP. XVIII.

were treated collectively, it being his intention that their 'fortunes' should be alike, and the income was not only given to them but there was a provision for maintenance of his 'said daughters' and son's children.' There was a separate provision for the heads of the three families."

Acting on the principle laid down in the cases cited above, Bacon, V.-C., in Re Redfern (f), held that a trust for the children of one of the five daughters of the testator must be implied. North, J., in Mellor v. Daintree (g), held that an absolute gift of a moiety of the testator's estate to the testator's nephew must be implied; in Re Hunt (h) the words "shall attain the age of twenty-one years" were interpolated in a limitation to daughters, who would otherwise have taken vested interests only in the event of their marrying under that age; in Re Patterson (i), words giving a life interest to the widow of a tenant for life were interpolated; in Re Wroe (j) the residuary gift was construed as if the word "child" was inserted in it; and in Phillips v. Rail (k) limitations in strict settlement were supplied from a corresponding devise of other realty in the same will.

"Respective."
"Respectively."

There are several cases in which the word "respective" or "respectively" has been added in order to carry out the testator's intention (l).

Other cases illustrative of the general principle will be found in a later chapter (m).

Words of limitation used in one devise, not to be applied to a distinct devise.

"But," as Mr. Jarman points out (n), "it is not to be inferred from the preceding cases, that words may be inserted upon mere conjecture, in order to equalise estates created by several distinct and independent devises, in favour of persons with respect to whom the testator has expressed no uniformity of purpose, though it may reasonably be conjectured that he had the same intention as to all."

As illustrations of this principle Mr. Jarman cites numerous cases in which it had been decided, under the old law, that where a testator gave some of his lands to A. with words of limitation carrying the fee, and other lands to A. or B. without words of

(f) 6 Ch. D. 133. It was in this case that the V.-C. made his well-known allusion to "blundering attorney's clerks and law-stationers," as persons who are often responsible for obscure wills. Ante, p. 578, n. (q).

(g) 33 Ch. D. 198.

(h) 62 L. T. 753.

(i) [1899] 1 Ir. R. 324.

(j) 74 L. T. 302.

(k) 54 W. R. 517. Compare Munro v. Henderson, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 260.

(l) Wills v. Wills, L.R., 20 Eq. 342; Re Hutchinson's Trusts, 21 Ch. D. 811. But see Swabey v. Goldie, 1 Ch. D. 380.

(m) Chap. XIX.

(n) First ed. p. 432.

limitation, it could not be inferred that he meant the latter devise to carry the fee (o). And Mr. Jarman quotes from the case of Right d. Compton v. Compton (p) the following remarks of Lord Ellenborough: "That the exposition of every will must be founded on the whole instrument and made ex antecedentibus et consequentibus, is one of the most prominent canons of testamentary construction; yet, where between the parts there is no connexion by grammatical construction, or by some reference, express or implied, and where there is nothing in the will declarative of some common purpose, from which it may be inferred that the testator meant a similar disposition by such different parts, though he may have varied his phrase or expressed himself imperfectly, the Court cannot go into one part of the will to determine the meaning of another perfect in itself, and without ambiguity, and not militating with any other provision respecting the same subject-matter, notwithstanding that a more probable disposition for the testator to have made may be collected from such assisted construction. . . . From a testator having given persons in a certain degree of relationship to him a fee-simple in [part of] a certain farm, no conclusion, which can be relied upon, can be drawn, that his intention was to give to other persons, standing in the same rank of proximity, the same interest in another part of the same farm. Where the words of the two devises are different, the more natural conclusion is, that, as his expressions are varied, they were altered because his intention in both cases was not the same" (q).

Words not supplied in order to render uniform several devises of different parts of one farm, to persons in same relationship.

A question involving the principle now under discussion arose in Walker v. Tipping (r), where, among several legacies of 300*l.* each to the testator's grand-nephews, some of which were directed to be paid at particular ages, and others to be sunk in annuities for the lives of the respective legatees, there occurred two bequests as follows: "J. W., 300*l.* annuity for life." "Martha—, 300*l.*, an annuity for life." Sir G. Turner, V.-C., held, that he could not read these bequests as if they were gifts of sums of 300*l.* to be sunk

Gift of annuity not restricted by context.

(o) Spirit v. Bence, Cro. Car. 368; Right d. Mitchell v. Sidebotham, Dougl. 759; Paice v. Archbp. of Canterbury, 14 Ves. 366; Doe d. Child v. Wright, 8 T. R. 64; see also 1 B. & P. N. R. 335; where the same construction was adopted by three of the judges, with the reluctant concurrence of Sir James Mansfield. To these may be added Hay v. Earl of Coventry, 3 T. R. 83; Doe d. Crutchfield v. Pearce, 1 Pri. 353.

(p) 9 East, 267. See also Morris v.

Lloyd, 3 H. & C. 141. Anon., Moo. 52. But it is said a devise thus, "I give Blackacre to C. and his heirs, and also Whiteacre" (not repeating the devisee's name and the verb of gift), gives C. the fee in Whiteacre: per Levinz, J., 1 Mod. 130.

(q) The principle here laid down was applied in Re Patterson, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 324.

(r) 9 Hare, 800. But it is difficult to overcome the impression that the bequests in question were elliptical.

CHAP. XVIII.

Name of legatee not supplied by conjecture.

in annuities for the lives of the legatees, but must understand them in their plain and obvious sense as giving annuities of 300%.

The same principle is applicable to the objects of a devise. Thus, in Clarke v. Clemmans (s), where a testator bequeathed legacies to "my brother A.," "my sister B.," "the widow of my late brother C.," and "the eight children of D.," and gave the residue of his estate to X. for life, and after her death, "in trust for the said A., B., and C., and the eight children of the said D.," it was held by Sir R. Malins, V.-C., that the testator never intended to give a share of the residue to C., for he had already referred to him as dead at the date of the will; it was clear, therefore, that he had made some mistake, and it was highly probable that he intended to have given the share to C.'s widow, but as this intention was not certain, the Court could not make the addition needed to effectuate it (t).

Still less can the words of a devise contained in a will be extended to modify the effect of an independent devise contained in a codicil (u).

Revoked words cannot be restored.

Mr. Jarman says (v): "It is to be collected from the case of Holder v. Howell (w) that where a testator in a codicil recites that an inconvenient consequence may result from a devise in his will, as that in a particular event the devisee or legatee would be unprovided for contrary to his intention, and then, instead of confining himself to simply effecting the declared purpose of the codicil, he proceeds to revoke the whole devise, giving the land again to the same trustees upon certain trusts which he particularizes, and which are the same as the former trusts, with the exception of the matter expressly intended for correction, and of one other of the trusts, which he wholly omits; this omission, though probably undesigned, cannot be supplied. The principle of this case seems to be inconsistent with, and it may, therefore, be considered as overruling, the earlier case of Mathews v. Bowman (x), where a testator, having devised the residue of his estate to his

(s) 36 L. J. Ch. 171. See also Driver v. Driver, 43 L. J. Ch. 279, ante, p. 586.

(t) Note, however, that the words "the said" confined the choice to those previously mentioned, that C. was confessedly out of the question, that all the others were correctly re-named except C.'s widow and X. (on whose death the disposition was to take effect), and that between these two there could scarcely exist a judicial doubt.

(u) Biss v. Smith, 2 H. & N. 105; Grimson v. Downing, 4 Drew. 132.

(v) First ed. p. 164.

(w) 8 Ves. 97; and see Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 46; Viscount Holmesdale v. West, L. R., 3 Eq. 486, on app. (but this point not touched), L. R., 4 H. L. 543. See same case L. R., 12 Eq. 280.

(x) 3 Anst. 727, a reporter of very doubtful authority, and see In bonis Lewis, 14 Jur. 514, 7 No. Cas. 436.

daughters as tenants in common, by a codicil made for a particular purpose re-devised it to them, omitting the words of severance, it was held, that the legatees were tenants in common."

Conversely, a codicil may have the effect of removing an ambiguity which appears on the face of the will (y).

This seems to be a convenient place to consider those cases in which the question has arisen whether words at the beginning or end of a clause apply to the whole clause or only to the part which immediately follows or precedes them. Thus in Doe d. Ellam v. Westley (z), a testator gave several pecuniary legacies, prefacing each bequest with the word "Item," and made a specific devise, also commencing with the word "Item." He then proceeded as follows: "Item, I give and bequeath unto M. W. all that my messuage or dwelling-house wherein I now dwell, with the garden and all the appurtenances thereunto belonging; and I also give to the said M. W. all my household goods and chattels, and implements of household within doors and without, all for her own disposing, free will, and pleasure, immediately after my decease"; it was held, that the words in italics were confined to the last section of the clause, and consequently that the devisee took only an estate for life in the messuage. Again, in Gower v. Towers (a), a testator made two bequests to the same person in successive sentences, and in the latter added the words "for life"; it was held that they applied only to the second bequest. And in De Windt v. De Windt (b), where a testator devised his estates in N. to his nephew A. for life, and after his death to his sons in tail lawfully begotten; and in the event of his or their death without sons lawfully begotten, the testator left the said estates to his cousin B., and after his death to his sons lawfully begotten, beginning with the elder. It was held that these four words applied to the latter limitation only, and not to the limitation to the sons of A., who consequently took as tenants in common.

How far operation of words enlarging or modifying gifts extends.

But it may appear from the grammatical construction of the clause that the concluding words were intended to apply to the whole of it: as in Child v. Elsworth (c). And a similar result may follow from a consideration of the scheme of the whole will; as in Gordon v. Gordon (d) where the testator in effect devised his

Where whole disposition is affected.

(y) Re Venn, [1904] 2 Ch. 52.

(z) 4 B. & Cr. 667.

(a) 26 Beav. 81.

(b) L. R., 1 H. L. 87.

(c) 2 D. M. & G. 679.

(d) L. R., 5 H. L. 254.

CHAP. XVIII.

estates Blackacre and Whitacre, as to Blackacre in trust for his son R. and his issue, then for his son J. and his issue; and as to Whitacre in trust for J. and his issue, then for R. and his issue; and in default of issue of R. and J. in trust for the testator's daughter: it was held that the devise over included Blackacre as well as Whitacre, notwithstanding that each devise began with the words "as to" (e).

Effect, where clauses of will are numerically arranged.

And where a testator divides his will into sections, numerically arranged, and in some instances places the words of limitation at the end of each section, it seems that they will be considered as applicable to the several devises contained in that section, and not be confined to those in immediate juxtaposition. As, in Fenny d. Collings v. Ewestace (f), where a testator devised, "first," to his wife, all his household goods, &c., to her and her heirs for ever; also, he gave to his wife three cow commons, to her and her heirs for ever. "2ndly," To his two nephews, J. and T. C., all that piece of land called P.; also, he gave to his nephews, J. and T. C., all that piece of land called L., to be equally divided between them as tenants in common, and to their several heirs and assigns for ever. "3rdly," as follows: "I give unto my nephew J. D. all that my house and premises at P., in the occupation of R.; I also give unto my nephew J. D. all that my land in the parishes of P. and A., in the occupation of J. T. to him my said nephew J. D., his heirs and assigns for ever." The question was, whether the words of limitation in the last devise applied to the lands in the occupation of R., or were confined to those immediately preceding, i.e., in the occupation of J. T.; and it was held that they applied to both. Lord Ellenborough said, "If it had not been for the numerical arrangement, there might have been some difficulty, but that removes it. It seems clear, from the context, that both in the second and third clause, the testator, by reserving to the close of the entire sentence the words of limitation, meant to accumulate and comprehend within those words all that he had disposed of in the preceding parts of the sentence."

Gift to "the children of A. and B."

In some cases a gift to the children of A. and B. has been held

(e) Compare the case of Willis v. Curtois, 1 Beav. 189, where a testator gave to A. his "carriages, horses, &c., and chattels in and about his house at M.; and also his household goods and furniture, pictures, plate, &c., and likewise his watches and personal ornaments"; Lord Langdale, M.R., held that A. was entitled to all the testator's household goods, &c., and not those only which were at his house at M. As to the force of the word "item," or "also," see Hopewell v. Ackland, 1 Salk. 239: of the word "likewise," Paylor v. Pegg, 24 Beav. 105.

(f) 4 M. & Sel. 58; see also Child v. Elsworth, 2 D. M. & G. 679.

to mean the children of A. and the children of B., while in others it has been held to be a gift to B. and the children of A. These cases are considered in another place (g).

CHAP. XVIII.

II.—As to the Transposition of Words and Clauses.—"It is quite clear," says Mr. Jarman (gg), "that, where a clause or expression, otherwise senseless and contradictory, can be rendered consistent with the context by being (h) transposed, the Courts are warranted in making that transposition."

Words may be transposed, when.

Thus, where (i) A. devised all that his messuage, dwelling-house, or tenement, with all lands, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereto belonging, situate in Blythbury, in the parish of M. R., "now in the occupation of" T. W., except one meadow, called Floodgate Meadow; and it appeared that T. W. was in possession of the messuage, and a small part only of the lands in Blythbury, and not of Floodgate Meadow; it was held, that the words "now in the occupation of" T. W. might be transposed and applied to the dwelling-house, according to the fact, which would render the whole consistent; whereas, without this transposition, the exception of Floodgate Meadow was senseless and nugatory, as it had never been in the occupation of T. W. The effect consequently was, that the devise extended to all the lands in Blythbury, except Floodgate Meadow, whether in the occupation of T. W. or not.

Instances of transposition.

So, where (j) the devise was in the following words: "I devise all my hereditaments in Standon unto my sister Elizabeth Thorley and to her daughters Ann Shaw and Frances Thorley, their heirs and assigns, equally to be divided between and amongst them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, for and during the life of my said sister Elizabeth Thorley; and from and immediately after her decease, then I devise the said third part of the aforesaid hereditaments so devised to my said sister for life as aforesaid, unto her said two daughters Ann Shaw and Frances Thorley, their heirs and assigns for ever, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants." It was contended, that under this devise the daughters of the testator's sister took estates pur Words transposed in compliance with context.

(g) Chap. XLII.

(gg) First ed. p. 437.

(h) See Green v. Hayman, 2 Ch. Cas. 10; Spark v. Purnell, Hob. 75; Cole v. Rawlinson, 1 Salk. 234; East v. Cook, 2 Ves. sen. 30; Duke of Marlborough v. Lord Godolphin, ib. 74; Blamire v.

Geldart, 16 Ves. 314; Gibson v. Lord Montfort, 1 Ves. sen. 491; Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Sw. 201.

(i) Marshall v. Hopkins, 15 East, 309.

(j) Doe d. Wolfe v. Allcock, 1 B. & Ald. 137.

CHAP. XVIII.

auter vie for the life of their mother concurrently with her as tenants in common ; and as to one-third with remainder in fee to the daughters, leaving the reversion in fee in the other two-thirds undisposed of ; but it was held, that the daughters took estates in fee in the entirety expectant on the decease of their mother. Lord Ellenborough said, " The testator has thrown together a heap of words, the sense and meaning of which he did not clearly apprehend ; but although the language of this will is confused, and the words are scattered in such a way, as, if taken in the order in which they stand, they do not convey any meaning ; yet, in favour of common sense, we may take the liberty of transposing them, according to that order which we may fairly suppose the testator would wish to have adopted, and by which we can best effectuate his intention. The labour of the argument has been, to make the testator dispose of only one-third of his estate, and thereby to compel an intestacy as to the remainder ; whereas, his meaning evidently was to dispose of the whole."

Observations
upon Doe v.
Alcock.

Speaking of the conclusion thus arrived at, Mr. Jarman remarks (k): " That the construction adopted by the Court accorded with the intention of the testator is highly probable ; and if, as Lord Ellenborough suggested, the words taken in the order in which they stood did not convey any meaning, the established rules of construction clearly authorized the transposition. But the difficulty was in saying that the words were unmeaning in their actual order ; for it is submitted, that the will, read in that order, contained a clear and express devise to the three devisees for the life of the mother, remainder as to one-third to the two daughters in fee ; and had the testator deliberately intended to confine his dispositions to those estates, he could hardly have expressed himself in more technical or formal language. The construction indeed was apparently absurd, but let it be remembered that the absurdity of a disposition, if unequivocally expressed, is no objection to its receiving a literal interpretation (l). However, the case was professedly decided upon the principle before laid down, and may, therefore, properly be treated as an authority in favour of that principle " (m).

In Key v. Key (n) a testator devised an estate to S. K. for life

(k) First ed. p. 439.

(l) Mason v. Robinson, 2 S. & St. 295.

(m) But Holroyd, J., while concurring in the decision, rested his judgment on the ground that the words " equally to be divided " down to " Elizabeth Thorley," might be read as in a parenthesis, and so made to refer only to the mode of enjoyment during the life of E. Thorley, without affecting the quantity of estate to be taken by the devisees.

(n) 4 D. M. & G. 73. See also Surtees v. Hopkinson, L. R., 4 Eq. 98.

charged with certain annuities, but in case the annuitants, or any one of them, survived S. K. he gave the estate to S. K.'s eldest surviving son, charged with the annuities, and in default of issue male, then over; it was held that as a literal adherence to the words of the will would have defeated the manifest intention of the testator by making the devise to S. K.'s son dependent on his surviving some of the annuitants, the will ought to be construed as meaning that the son was to take subject to the annuities in case the annuitants were then living.

"Another case of transposition sometimes occurs," Mr. Jarman continues (o), "where a testator has devised lands at A. to B., and lands at C. to D., and it appears by the fact of the limitations of each devise being exactly applicable to the testator's estate in the lands comprised in the other, and other circumstances, that he has, in each instance, placed the devised estate in the position intended to have been occupied by the other.

Transposition
of the subject of devise.

"As where (p) J. H., having an estate in the county of Monmouth, of which he was seised in fee to his own use, and another estate in the county of Radnor, of which he was also seised in fee subject to the trusts of his marriage settlement (by which he had covenanted to convey the lands to the use of himself, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail); both which estates had formerly belonged to an uncle, and came to him, the one by descent, the other by purchase from another co-heir of his uncle, by his will, reciting that he was seised in fee of a messuage and lands at L., in the county of Radnor, and of a moiety of a messuage in the parish of O. R., in the county of Radnor, and that he was also seised of the reversion in fee expectant on the death of his wife, and of his son without issue, of lands in the counties of Monmouth and Northumberland, (whereas the settled lands were in Radnorshire, and those in Monmouthshire and Northumberland were absolutely his own), devised his said estate in the said county of Radnor to his wife for life, remainder to his only son for life, remainder to his (the son's) sons and daughters in tail, in strict settlement, remainder to his own daughter, &c., and devised the reversion of his said estates in the said county of Monmouth, after the deaths of his wife and only son without issue, to his daughter, &c. The will moreover referred to the lands devised as part of the estate of his late uncle. It was held that, comparing the devising clause with the recital and the

(o) First ed. p. 440.

(p) Mosley v. Massey, 8 East, 149.

Compare Doe d. Chevalier v. Huthwaite, 8 Taunt. 306, 3 B. & Ald. 632.

CHAP. XVIII.

facts, sufficient appeared to ascertain, beyond a possibility of doubt, that the devisor had made a mistake in the local description, and that his intent was to pass the present interest of his estate in fee in possession, which was in the county of Monmouth, and the reversion of his settled estate in the county of Radnor, although he had respectively misdescribed their local situations.”

Transposition
of words to fit the general intent.

It seems therefore that, although the words as they stand are not absolutely senseless or contradictory, transposition will be made if it be required to effectuate an intention clearly expressed or indicated by the context. Eden v. Wilson (q) is an instructive example of this doctrine. A testator devised his estates to his daughter for life, remainder to her first son R. for life, remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, remainder to her second son J. for life, with like remainder to his sons in tail, with remainders to the daughter's third, fourth and other sons in tail; and with a proviso shifting the estate from any son who might become entitled to the D. estates under the will of the late D. (by which those estates were entailed on the second and younger sons); “provided always that if my said daughter shall have no issue male of her body living at her death, or no such issue male as shall be entitled, by the true meaning of this my will, to my real estates hereby limited, then and in either of those cases, I devise the said real estates to all the daughters of the body of my said daughter living at her death as tenants in common and their heirs respectively, with cross remainders amongst them in case of any one or more of them happening to die under twenty-one and without issue, and if there should be but one such daughter living at my said daughter's decease and no issue of any other daughter then in being, then to such only surviving daughter and her heirs, but if any such daughter shall die in her said mother's lifetime leaving issue” such issue to take their parents' share, “and in case my said daughter shall have no issue of her body living at her death,” then over. At the death of the testator's daughter her two sons R. and J. were living, besides several daughters; but both sons afterwards died without issue, and it was contended that the second of the two cases “in either of” which the limitation to the daughters was to take effect had thus happened: but it was held in the House of Lords, upon the whole proviso, that the estates limited by it were not designed as a mere continuation of the previous limitations (to which they did not fit on), but were intended to take effect, if at all, at the daughter's death in favour of persons then living, and that to effect this the words "living at her death" in the introductory passage must be read in connection with the verb "have," not with the words "issue male of her body," and so made to run through both branches of the proviso. In other words, the expression "living at her death" was transposed and read as if it came immediately after the verb "have." It was not, however, a limitation cutting down the previous devise, but a remainder contingent on the determination of that devise in a particular manner.

(q) 4 H. L. Ca. 257; s.c. Wilson v. Eden, 1 Ex. 772, 14 Q. B. 256.

Mr. Jarman continues (r): "The same principle, too, is applicable to the objects of a devise; for it has been held, that, where (s) a testatrix, having two nieces, Mary who had never been married, and Ann who had been married and was dead leaving two children, bequeathed one moiety in a certain portion of her property to the children of her niece Mary, and the other moiety to her niece Ann; it being evident that the bequest to the children of Mary was intended for the children of Ann, and that to Ann for Mary, the Court corrected the mistake."

Transposition
of name.

III.—As to changing Words.—"To alter the language of a testator," as Mr. Jarman points out (t), "is evidently a strong measure, and one which, in general, is to be justified only by a clear explanatory context. It often happens, however, that the misuse of some word or phrase is so palpable on the face of the will, as that no difficulty occurs in pronouncing the testator to have employed an expression which does not accurately convey his meaning. But this is not enough: it must be apparent, not only that he has used the wrong word or phrase, but also what is the right one (u); and, if this be clear, the alteration of language is warranted by the established principles of construction (v). The recent and much discussed case of Doe v. Gallini (w) affords an apposite example of such a correction of phrase. The testator, after devising estates for life to his children, and, in case of the death of any of them, to their respective children living at their decease, for life, proceeded thus: 'And from and after the decease of all the children of each of my said sons and daughters without

As to changing words.

(r) First ed. p. 441.

(s) Bradwin v. Harpur, Amb. 374.

(t) First ed. p. 441.

(u) Taylor v. Richardson, 2 Drew. 16.

(v) It will of course be remembered that the Court of Probate has no power to change the wording of a will: ante, p. 30.

(w) 5 B. & Ad. 621, 3 Ad. & Ell. 340, 2 Nev. & M. 619, 4 Nev. & M. 894. And see Jarman v. Vye, L. R., 2 Eq. 784 ("all" admitted to mean "any").

CHAP. XVIII.

Words
"without issue" read leaving issue.

issue, I give and devise the estate or estates to them respectively limited as aforesaid, unto and among all and every the lawful issue of such child or children during their lives as tenants in common, and to descend in like manner to the issue of my said sons and daughters respectively, so long as there shall be any stock or offspring remaining.' It was contended that the word 'all' was to be changed into 'any,' and the words 'without issue' to be read 'leaving issue,' in order to render the language of the will sensible and consistent with the context; and the Court did not hesitate in adopting this construction, though the point was not the main subject of discussion in the case."

"Fourth"
read "fifth."

So, in Hart v. Tulk (x), where a testator's general intention appeared by the will to be to make an equal distribution of his property, (which he described in seven different schedules), amongst his seven children; and he subjected the properties comprised in the seven schedules to mortgage debts in such a manner, that, if in a particular clause, the words "fourth schedule" was read literally, not only would the entire plan of the will, as indicated above, be frustrated, but the payment of the debts in the manner provided by the will would become impossible; Sir J. K. Bruce and Lord Cranworth, L.JJ., held that they were warranted in reading the word "fourth" as meaning "fifth," which the context showed was the change required to render the will consistent.

"L.K." read
"C."

Again, in Re Northen's Estate (y) the will was read as if the words "the said C. estate" were inserted in the place of the words "the said L. K. estate."

Referential
gifts.

A somewhat similar principle is often applied in construing referential gifts, where a literal adherence to the original gift would defeat the manifest intention of the testator (a).

"Or" read
"of."

In Re Dayrell (b) the expression "son or any person" was read as "son of any person."

"One" read
"no."
Parol
evidence.

In Moore v. Beagley (c) "one" was read "no."

Several cases in which the court has refused to admit parol

(x) 2 D. M. & G. 300; and see Philipps v. Chamberlaine, 4 Ves. 51; Dent v. Pepys, 6 Mad. 350; Bengough v. Edridge, 1 Sim. 173; Berkeley v. Palling, 1 Russ. 496 (where "seven" was changed into "eight"); Pasmore v. Huggins, 21 Beav. 103 (where "future" might, it seems, have been read "former"); Re Bayliss's Trust, 17 Sim. 178, (where "are" was interpreted in a future sense); Taylor v. Creagh, 8 Ir.

Ch. Rep. 281 (400l. read 500l.); compare Thompson v. Whitelock, 5 Jur. N. S. 991.

(y) 28 Ch. D. 153.

(a) See Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. C. 143; Re Hutchinson, 55 L. J. Ch. 574; Surtees v. Hopkinson, L. R., 4 Eq. 98, and other cases referred to in Chap. XX.

(b) [1904] 2 Ch. 496.

(c) 33 L. T. 198.

evidence to correct alleged mistakes in names of persons and places, are referred to in other chapters (d).

CHAP. XVIII.

“The changing of words, however,” as Mr. Jarman points out (e), “has most frequently occurred in regard to expressions, which, in common parlance, are often used inaccurately; as the word ‘severally’ for ‘respectively,’ of which we have an instance in Woodstock v. Shillito (f), where a testator gave the interest of a fund to his wife for life, and after her death to such of his four daughters as should be then living, in equal shares, during their respective lives; and from and after the several deceases of his four daughters, he gave one-fourth of the capital to their respective children. One of the daughters died before the widow, leaving a child. The surviving daughters claimed to be entitled to the entire fund, under the express gift to the daughters living at the decease of the testator’s widow; but Sir L. Shadwell, V.-C., held, that the words ‘from and after the several deceases of my said daughters,’ were to be construed ‘from and after the decease of my daughters respectively.’ ‘It was clear,’ he said, ‘the testator meant to give to the children the share of their mother on her death.’

“Several” used in sense of respective.

“But by far the most numerous class of cases, exhibiting the change of a testator’s words, are those in which the disjunctive ‘or’ has been changed into the copulative ‘and’ and vice versâ. It is obvious that these words are often used orally without a due regard to their respective import; and it would not be difficult to adduce instances of the inaccuracy, even in written compositions of some note; it is not surprising, therefore, that this inaccuracy should have found its way into wills. Accordingly we find that the Courts have often been called upon to rectify blunders of this nature: so often, indeed, as to have swelled the cases on the subject into a mass requiring much attention and discriminative arrangement, in order to deduce from them any intelligible and consistent principles; and, in performing this task, the liberty must be taken of sometimes referring the cases to principles not distinctly recognised by the judges who decided them.

“Or” changed into
“and.”

“It has been long settled that a devise of real estate to A. and his heirs, or, which would be the same in effect, to A. indefinitely, and in case of his death under twenty-one, or without issue, over, the word ‘or’ is construed ‘and,’ and, consequently, the estate does not go over to the ulterior devisee, unless both the specified events happen.

In case of devise over, in event of death under twenty-one or without issue.

(d) Chaps. XV., XXXV.

(e) First ed. p. 442.

(f) 6 Sim. 416.

CHAP. XVIII.

“ One of the earliest authorities for this construction is the case of Soulle v. Gerrard (g) ; where a testator, having four sons, devised lands to Richard, one of his sons, and his heirs for ever ; and if Richard died within the age of one-and-twenty years, or without issue, then, that the land should remain to his other three sons. Richard died under age, leaving issue a daughter. It was held, that in the event which had happened, the devise over to the three sons had failed ; for, that by the words and intent, it was not to commence unless both parts were performed, and that it was ‘ all one as if the disjunctive or had been a copulative.’

Principle of the rule ;

“ The ground for changing the testator’s expression in these cases is, that as, by making the event of the devisee leaving issue a condition of his retaining the estate, he evidently intends that a benefit shall accrue to such issue through their parent, it is highly improbable that he should mean this benefit to depend upon the contingency of the devisee attaining majority ; while, on the other hand, it is very probable that the testator should intend, in the event of the devisee dying under age leaving issue, to give him an estate which would devolve upon the issue ; but that, if he attained twenty-one, (the age at which he would acquire a disposing competency,) he should take the estate absolutely, i.e., whether he afterwards died leaving issue or not. The change of or into and, therefore, substitutes a reasonable for a most unreasonable scheme of disposition.

—applicable to bequests of personalty.

“ And though it has generally happened that the subject to which this rule of construction has been applied is real estate, yet the rule is equally applicable (as the reason of it evidently is) to bequests of personalty ; and, therefore, in the case of a legacy to A., and in case of his death under age or without issue, to B., it is not to be doubted that A. would retain the legacy, unless he died under age and without leaving issue at his decease (h).

“ And, of course, it would be immaterial that the original bequest was expressly made contingent on the legatee attaining majority. As in Mytton v. Boodle (i), where a testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* to A. if he attained twenty-one ; but if he should not attain that age, or die without leaving issue, then over. It was held, that A., on attaining twenty-one, was absolutely entitled.

(g) Cro. El. 525 ; s.c. nom. Sowell v. Garrett, Moore, 422, pl. 590 ; Price v. Hunt, Pollex. 645 ; Barker v. Suretees, 2 Str. 1175 ; Walsh v. Peterson, 3 Atk. 193 ; Doe d. Burnsall v. Davy, 6 T. R. 30 ; Fairfield v. Morgan, 2 B. & P. N. R. 38 ; Eastman v. Baker, 1 Taunt. 174 ;

Right v. Day, 16 East, 67 ; Morris v. Morris, 17 Bea. 198. See also Doe d. Herbert v. Selby, 4 D. & Ry. 608, 2 B. & Cr. 926 ; Morrall v. Sutton, 1 Phill. 533.

(h) Wright v. Marsom, [1895] Week. N. 148.

(i) 6 Sim. 457.

"In this case (j) the expression which raised the question in the will was repeated in the codicil—a circumstance which was considered (and it is conceived rightly) not to indicate that it was used advisedly.

"And the same construction obtains where another event is associated with the dying under age and without issue, as in the case of a bequest to A., with a gift over in case of his dying during minority unmarried, or without issue (k); and that, too, though the copulative 'and' is found in company with the disjunctive 'or' in the same will, indeed, in this very sentence. As in Miles v. Dyer (l), where the bequest was to A. for life, and after her decease to her children on their attaining twenty-one; and in case they should die in the lifetime of A., or under twenty-one, and without leaving issue, then over, it was held that the interests of the children were not divested unless the three events happened.

Gift over in case of death during minority unmarried or without issue.

"It is obvious that the ground for changing or into and exists a fortiori where children or issue are the express objects of the prior gift; as where (m) there is a devise to a person when he attains twenty-one, for life, remainder to his children (the devise, in the case referred to, was to the sons successively and the daughters concurrently,) in tail, with a devise over if he die under twenty-one or without children.

"It would seem that the principle in question applies to every case where the gift over is to arise in the event of the preceding devisee or legatee dying under prescribed circumstances, or leaving an object who would, or, at least, who might take a benefit derivatively through the devisee or legatee, if his interest remained undivested, and to whom, therefore, it is probable the testator intended indirectly a benefit, not dependent upon the circumstance of the devisee or legatee dying under the prescribed circumstances or not. In this point of view it would seem to be immaterial whether the dying is confined to minority, or is associated with any other contingency, as in the case of a gift to A., and if he shall die in the lifetime of B. or without issue (n), [or die without issue or

Suggested extension of the rule.

(j) And in Framlingham v. Brand, infra.

(k) Framlingham v. Brand, 3 Atk. 390; See Doe v. Cooke, 7 East, 269, post: Re Clegg, 14 Ir. Ch. 70 (gift over in the event of legatee dying under age or unmarried); Re Cantillon, 16 Ir. Ch. 301.

(l) 5 Sim. 435; 8 Sim. 330.

(m) Hasker v. Sutton, 9 J. B. Moo. 2, 1 Bing. 500. [But the only question there was whether the remainder was vested or not. The defendants could not succeed unless it was, and it could be so only by adopting Lord Hardwicke's "construction" in Brownsword v. Edwards (post, pp. 604 seq.): reading or as and was insufficient: and the Court certified against them. And see now Cooke v. Mirehouse, 34 Beav. 27, post, p. 608.]

(n) Wright v. Kemp, 3 T. R. 470, a

CHAP. XVIII.

intestate (o),] then over ; or whether the event is leaving issue or leaving any other object who would derive an interest or benefit through the legatee, if his or her interest was held to be absolute, as a husband or wife.

Gift over on death under twenty-one, or without leaving a husband.

“ Thus, where (p) a testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his daughter, her executors, &c., with a proviso, that in case his daughter happened to die under twenty-one, or without leaving any husband living at her death, then he gave several legacies, all which he directed to be paid within twelve calendar months after his decease, in case of the death of his daughter under age as afore said ; and in such case he gave the residue to other persons—Sir W. Grant, M.R., held, that ‘ or ’ was to be read ‘ and,’ and that the expression ‘ under age as aforesaid ’ meant not leaving a husband.

“ The cases under consideration, perhaps, may seem to form an exception to the rule that words, unambiguous in themselves, are not to be rejected or changed on account of their unreasonableness ; but as this construction has obtained so long, is confined to a particular expression, and that expression one which is often used indiscriminately with the substituted word, there does not seem to be much danger in this seeming latitude of interpretation ; but it should, if possible, be made to rest upon some solid principle, fixing definite limits to its application. The cases, it is conceived, in effect though not professedly, warrant us in stating that principle to be (as before suggested), that where the dying under twenty-one is associated with the event of the devisee leaving an object, who would, if the devisee retained the estate, take an interest derivatively through him, the copulative construction prevails ; though it is by no means equally clear that the rule is confined to such cases.”

Whether rule applies to estates tail.

Lord Hardwicke, in Brownsword v. Edwards (q), expressed an opinion, that the construction in question was not applicable to estates tail, on the ground that there was no occasion for it ; since an estate tail was capable of a remainder, and the words might, by an “ easy construction,” be read as such ; so as to secure the estate to the issue, if any, and yet give effect to the remainder in case case on a transaction inter vivos ; Denn d. Wilkins v. Kemeys, 9 East, 366 ; Doe d. Knight v. Chaffey, 16 M. & Wels. 656.

(o) [Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare, 428 ; Beachcroft v. Broome, 4 T. R. 441 ; and see Incorporated Society v. Richards, 1 D. & War. 283 ; Greated v. Greated, 26 Beav. 621 ; Stretton v. Fitzgerald, the issue failed at any time. At the present day the Court follows Lord Hardwicke in declining to change “or” into “and” (or the contrary) where the prior estate is in tail, but rejects the “construction” upon which alone his opinion was based. The course of decision deserves attention. In some of the cases, it will be seen, the gift over was if the tenants in tail should die under twenty-one or without issue, in others the conjunction “and” was used.

23 L. R. Ir. 466.]

(p) Weddell v. Mundy, 6 Ves. 341.

(q) 2 Ves. sen. 243. The observations on Brownsword v. Edwards, Mortimer v. Hartley, Grey v. Pearson, and other cases contained in the following seven paragraphs, are taken from the 4th edition of this work by Mr. Vincent.

In Brownsword v. Edwards (r), the devise was to trustees and their heirs to receive the rents until A. should attain twenty-one; and if he should live to attain twenty-one or have issue then to A. and the heirs of his body; but if A. should die before twenty-one and without issue, then in trust for B. in like manner, with gifts over in the like words to other branches of testator’s family; and for want of such issue to his own right heirs. A. and B. were the testator’s illegitimate son and daughter, but for the purposes of the argument were taken to be legitimate. A. attained twenty-one and died without issue, and it was argued that the gift to B. had failed, only one of the two events upon which it was limited having happened. But Lord Hardwicke held B. to be entitled. He said: “There is no necessity in this case to transpose or supply material words; but there is a plain natural construction upon these words, viz. if A. shall happen to die before twenty-one, and also shall happen to die without issue; which construction plainly makes the dying without issue to go through the whole and fully answers the intent, which was in that manner. Had the first devise been to A. and his heirs this construction I believe could not be made; for where there is such a contingent limitation I do not know that the Court has changed heirs into heirs of the body to make it so throughout. But much stronger constructions than this have been made in devises: as, in a devise to one and his heirs, and if he should die before twenty-one or without issue, the Court has said it was not the intent to disinherit the issue, and therefore or shall be construed and; but if the first limitation had been in tail there would be no occasion to resort to that, but the Court would make the construction I do now” (shewing that, whether the word of the will was and or or, he thought some “construction” equally necessary), “viz. if he dies without issue before twenty-one then over by way of executory devise; if he dies without issue after twenty-one, when the estate had vested in him, it would go by way of remainder: an estate tail is capable of a remainder, and it is natural to expect a remainder after it. It is contrary to his intent to let

*Brownsword
v. Edwards.*

CHAP. XVIII. in this remainder to the right heirs to defeat all the intermediate limitations to his family."

Woodward v. Glasbrook.

Devise over if devisee in tail should die under twenty-one or unmarried.

A stricter adherence to the letter was preserved in the earlier case of Woodward v. Glasbrook (s), where a testator devised a house to his sons, James and Thomas, and the heirs of their bodies, in equal moieties, and devised other houses to his other children in like manner; and provided, that if any of his said children should die under twenty-one or unmarried (t), the part or share of him or her so dying should go to the survivors; and it was held by Holt, C.J., that the shares of two of the children dying unmarried, though they attained twenty-one, went to the devisees over.

Doe v. Jessep.

In Doe d. Usher v. Jessep (u), where A. devised to trustees and their heirs, in trust for his natural son J. and the heirs of his body, and if J. should die before he attained his age of twenty-one years, and without issue, then over. J. attained his majority, but died without issue. It was contended, on a mistaken view of Brownsword v. Edwards, that "and" was to be read or, which would, in the event that had happened, give effect to the devise over; but Lord Ellenborough, though he admitted the cases to be very similar, (the only distinction being that the limitation over in the cited case was in favour of a daughter, who, without such a construction as was there put upon the word "and," would have been without a provision, which is a distinction without a difference (v)), decided that the word was to be taken in its literal sense.

"And" not changed into "or" in limitation over after an estate tail.

Mortimer v. Hartley.

Again, in Mortimer v. Hartley (w), where the testator devised lands to John and Ann successively in tail (x), and "if it should please God to take away both Ann and John under age, or without leaving lawful issue" then over to X. Ann died under age and without issue, and John died without issue, but not under age. On a case from Chancery the Court of Exchequer refused to read "or" as "and," and held that the devise over took effect. Parke, B., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said, "If we abide by the words of the will, it is possible we may disappoint what we may conjecture to have been one intention of the testator, because it is (s) 2 Vern. 388.

(t) Not "without issue." But "unmarried" equally involves the extinction of the estate tail.

(u) 12 East, 288; see also Soulle v. Gerrard, Cro. EL 525 (stated ante, p. 602), where it was considered (though, according to subsequent authorities erroneously), that the first devisee had an estate tail.

(v) 6 H. L. Ca. 84, 85, 96.

(w) 6 Exch. 47, 3 De G. & S. 316.

(x) The Court of C. B. held upon the same will that the prior devise gave a fee, and then they read "or" as "and," 6 C. B. 819.

a reasonable intention to entertain, that is, to give a benefit to the issue if their parents should die under age, but we are sure of carrying into effect a manifest and declared intention of the testator to give the remainder over to X. on the determination of the estate tail: on the other hand, if we change 'or' into 'and' for the purpose of effecting the conjectured intention to give a benefit to the issue on the death of their parents respectively under age, we defeat the clear and manifest intention to give the remainder to X. on failure of the issue of John and Ann, and cause an intestacy as to that remainder, a circumstance which ought to be avoided." If the first devise had been in fee simple he admitted the authorities would have required the change; "but as none of the authorities apply to an estate tail and we have Lord Hardwicke's high authority for distinguishing such a case, we think we ought to do so, and abide by the ordinary sense of the words. If any change should be made, the one which would be most likely to effectuate the intent of the testator would be to read the words as if they had been 'if it should please God to take away both John and Ann under age or at any time without issue.' By so reading them the issue would take if their parents died under age and X. succeed on the determination of the estate tail. But if this cannot be done we think we should make no change at all."

But this was exactly the change which the Court had "Lord Hardwicke's high authority" to make. Whether it was made or not, the result, as it happened, was the same; for in either case the gift over took effect without disappointing any issue. But if there had been any issue they would have been disappointed, and it seems strange to invoke Lord Hardwicke's authority for a conclusion which it was the declared object of his construction to avoid. When the case came back to Chancery, Sir K. Bruce, V.-C., virtually adopted that construction, saying, "On the authority of Brownsword v. Edwards and Murray v. Jones (y) and other cases, I am of opinion that the testator has but inaccurately expressed that he disposed of everything after the failure of the limitations contained in the prior clauses, in whatever manner they might fail."

It is evident, however, that this construction strikes out the words "under twenty-one"; and in Grey v. Pearson (z), where the will was undistinguishable from the will in Doe v. Jessep, the devisee in tail attained twenty-one, but afterwards died without issue; and it was held in D.P., following Doe v. Jessep, that the words must be worth and Wensleydale, diss. Lord St. Leonards.

*Grey v.
Pearson.*

(y) 2 V. & B. 313, stated post, Chap. LVIII.

(z) 6 H. L. Ca. 61, by Lords Cran-

CHAP. XVIII.

taken literally, and that the gift over failed. It was admitted that where lands were devised to one and his heirs with a gift over if he died under twenty-one or without issue, “or” was to be read “and”; it was too late to question the authorities which had so decided: but, it was said, those decisions did not govern a case where the first devise was in tail, with a gift over if the devisee died under age and without issue. The House refused therefore to apply those authorities to the case before it; and on the ground that Lord Hardwicke’s “construction” had not been uniformly adopted it rejected that also, deeming it to be somewhat forced and very unusual (a).

Modern authority, therefore, while it still distinguishes the case of an estate tail, deals with it on wholly different principles from those upon which the distinction was originally based. For (as we have seen) Lord Hardwicke never meant to read the words so as in any event to disappoint the issue; whereas Mortimer v. Hartley and Grey v. Pearson will require both “or” and “and” to be strictly construed although the issue may be thereby disappointed. The readiness with which Lords Cranworth and Wensleydale accepted the distinction of an estate tail, while rejecting the grounds for it, was plainly due to their disapprobation of the so-called speculative system of construction adopted in the old authorities; and since Grey v. Pearson “or” has been strictly construed even in the case (already mentioned as furnishing an à fortiori argument for changing “or” into “and”) where children or issue were express objects of the prior gift: as, where (b) the devise was to A. for life if he should attain thirty-one, with remainder to his eldest son in fee, with a gift over if A. should die under thirty-one or not have a son. A attained thirty-one but died without having a son, and it was held that the gift over took effect, for that “or” could not be construed “and.” Sir J. Romilly, M.R., said he never knew of a case where the change had been made for the purpose of defeating the will and creating an intestacy. It will however be perceived that if A. had had a son and afterwards died under thirty-one the son would have been disappointed: for the construction could not properly depend on the event. The literal construction however has not yet been tested by any case where such disappointment would have ensued.

(a) Lord St. Leonards, on the other hand, thought it “easy and natural.” As to Doe v. Jessop he said it was hastily decided, and that the judges of K. B. showed by their remarks that they misunderstood the real nature of the case, 6 H. L. Ca. 97.

(b) Cooke v. Mirehouse, 34 Beav. 27. As to Hasker v. Sutton, 9 J. B. Moo. 2, 1 Bing. 500, vide sup. p. 603, n. (m).

Of changing "and" into "or" in cases where the previous estate is not in tail, more will be said hereafter (c).

To return to the cases in which "or" has been construed "and." "The argument for this construction," says Mr. Jarman (d), 'is of course very strong where the effect of an adherence to the words of the will would be to deprive the legatee of what was previously given to him in either of two alternative events, unless both events should happen, as in the case of a bequest to A. on his attaining thirty-one or marrying; and in case he should die under thirty-one or unmarried, then over; in such a case 'or' is necessarily construed and, in order to make the limitation over consistent with the terms of the prior gift" (e). So where property was given to a person in either of two events, and afterwards given over unless not only those two events, but an additional event also happened, Shadwell, V.-C., thought that, if it were necessary, the Court would read the word "or" as "and" (f).

Gift in either of two events, with gift over on non-happening of one or the other.

These decisions depended on the inconsistency which, upon a literal construction, would have existed between the prior gifts and the executory gifts over. Where there is no prior gift this ground fails: so that a bequest to A. after the death of testator's mother, or the second marriage, death, or forfeiture of his wife, although the testator had made life-provisions for both his mother and wife, upon whose death therefore a certain amount of the estate would be set free, was held to take effect immediately on the death of the mother without waiting for the second marriage, death, or forfeiture of the wife: in other words, the Court refused to read "or" as "and" (g). And a similar observation must be made with reference to the opposite change of "and" into "or" (h).

Where there is no prior gift.

Sometimes the general context or plan of the will calls for the conjunctive construction in cases not easily reducible to any specific head. Thus, in Long v. Dennis (i), where there was a devise to A. for life, upon condition that if he should marry with any woman not having a competent fortune, or without the consent of trustees, the estate should not vest; the Court of K. B.,

"Or" read "and" on general context.

(c) Post, p. 613.

(d) First ed. p. 450.

(e) Grant v. Dyer, 2 Dow, 87; Thompson v. Teulon, 22 L. J. Ch. 243; Collett v. Collett, 35 Beav. 312, cited Chap. XXXIX. Compare Re Clegg, 14 Ir. Ch. 70; Re Cantillon, 16 Ir. Ch. 301.

(f) Grimshawe v. Pickup, 9 Sim. 591; and Miles v. Dyer, ante, p. 603; Law

v. Thorp, 25 L. J. Ch. 75, 1 Jur. N. S. 1082; Johnson v. Simcock, 6 H. & N. 6, 7 ib. 344; Bentley v. Meech, 25 Beav. 197; Hawkins v. Hawkins, 7 Sim. 173. (g) Hawksworth v. Hawksworth, 27 Beav. 1.

(h) See Malden v. Maine, 2 Jur. N. S. 206.

(i) 4 Burr. 2052; see also Nicholls v. Tolley, 2 Vern. 389.

CHAP. XVIII. considering that the testator meant to require the sanction of the trustees only in case A. married a woman without a competent fortune, and also that conditions in restraint of marriage were odious, held that the estate vested upon performance of either part of the condition; that is to say, they read the word "or" as "and." And in another case (g), where a testator bequeathed the produce of real estate, after the cesser of certain life-estates, to J. A. for life, and after his death to his eldest son for life, "and to remain entailed on the eldest son descended from J. A. and his posterity from one generation to another for ever: but in case of death or want of issue from the said J. A.," then over: Shadwell, V.-C., read the will as if it had been "in case of death and failure of issue," so as to agree with the general intent collected from the context, that all the descendants of J. A. were to take in succession.

Gift to several objects alternatively.

Mr. Jarman continues (k): "Where there is a gift to two objects or classes of objects alternatively, the ambiguous use of the disjunctive 'or' occasions much perplexity. Sometimes, as we have seen, the gift has been held to be void for uncertainty (l); but more frequently, in such cases, the word has been changed into and. As in Richardson v. Spragg (m), where a testatrix bequeathed money in trust for such of her daughters or daughters' children as should be living at her son's death—it was held, that the children, as well of the living as of the deceased daughters, came in for their shares, the word 'or' being read and.

Gift to A. or his children, read and.

"So, in Eccard v. Brooke (n), where the bequest was to L. for his life, and after his decease to the nephews and nieces who should be then living, as well on the side of the testatrix's late husband as of her own, to wit, A. or her children, and B. or his children, and C. or his children, and D. or his children, and E. or her children, share and share alike. Of these five persons four died in the lifetime of L., three without issue and one leaving two children. The other was living and had no child. Sir L. Kenyon, M.R., was of opinion that the word 'or' must be considered as if it had been and, for that otherwise he must either adopt the argument that it meant to substitute the children of each nephew and niece who should happen to die, in the room of their father or mother, for which he saw no sufficient ground, or he must say that the clause was so uncertain that he could give it to none.

(g) Monkhouse v. Monkhouse, 3 Sim. 119; see also Hawkes v. Baldwin, 9 Sim. 355.

(k) First ed. p. 451.

(l) Ante, p. 475.

(m) 1 P. W. 434.

(n) 2 Cox, 213.

He held that the two children of the deceased niece and the surviving niece took in equal thirds; but that, if the latter had had any children living, they would have taken equally with her.

“Again, in Horridge v. Ferguson (o), where the testatrix directed the residue of her property to be divided among such of the children of five persons (naming them) as should be born in lawful wedlock and living at her decease, or the issue of such of them as should be married—Sir T. Plumer, M.R., considered, that, in order to make sense of the passage, ‘or’ might be construed and. All the children and grandchildren, therefore, took equally.”

Gift to A. or his issue.

And in Maude v. Maude (p), where a testator bequeathed a sum of money to his four sons A., B., C., and D., in trust for another son E. during his life, and after the death of E. without children upon trust to divide the money equally amongst the testator’s said sons A., B., C., and D., or to such other of his sons as should afterwards be, in succession, trustees for E. under the proviso thereafter contained, Romilly, M.R., held that “or” must be read “and”: otherwise, if two of the four had died, and two others had under the proviso become trustees in their place, and then E. had died without issue, would the two original or the two new trustees take the fund? If they did not all take, one class must be excluded.

“Or” read “and” to prevent uncertainty.

In Re Delmar Charitable Trust (q) the income of certain property was given to the P. A. Society “or some one or more kindred institutions”; it was held that the gift was in favour of the P. A. Society and such one or more kindred institutions as the Court might by scheme select.

In Solly v. Solly (r) there was a gift “to each of the children, grandchildren, or other direct descendants of A.,” and it was held that all the descendants of A. were entitled. Wood, V.-C., said that this was the grammatical meaning of the gift, and that it was not a question whether the word “or” should be read conjunctively or not.

Grammatical construction of “or.”

Mr. Jarman continues (s): “‘Or,’ too, has often been changed into and where interposed between the name of the devisee and words of limitation introduced into the devise, as in the case of a devise

To A. or his heirs.

(o) Jac. 583. See Parkin v. Knight, 15 Sim. 83.

(p) 22 Beav. 290.

(q) [1897] 2 Ch. 163. The expression attributed to Stirling, J., that the word “or” imported “not a substitutional but an alternative gift” must have been used per incuriam, for “alternative” implies mutual exclusion: see Chap. XXXVI.

(r) 5 Jur. N. S. 36.

(s) First ed. p. 452.

CHAP. XVIII.

"Or" read as introducing a substituted gift.

Gift to "assigns" implies an absolute interest.

"Or" introducing divesting clause.

Gift to "A. or B."

of real estate to A. or his heirs, or to A. or the heirs of his body (t). Whether the same construction would be applied to bequests of personalty to A. or his executors or administrators is not quite clear, for in such a case, as the words of limitation are not necessary to confer the absolute interest (a difference, however, which the new law extinguishes), there may seem to be more reason for contending that they are inserted diverso intuitu. The strong tendency of the modern cases certainly is to consider the word 'or' as introducing a substituted gift in the event of the first legatee dying in the testator's lifetime: in other words, as inserted, in prospect of, and with a view to guard against, the failure of the gift by lapse (u).

But if the gift be to the specified persons "or their heirs or assigns," it is clear that the words are words of limitation only; for the power of assigning implies an absolute and indefeasible interest (v).

And where there was a gift to four persons in succession for their lives, with an ultimate gift on the death of the survivor to "the heirs and assigns" of the survivor, the Court refused to read "and" as "or," the plain construction of the ultimate gift being to the heir of the survivor as persona designata (w).

It sometimes happens that the word "or" has the effect of adding a divesting clause; as where the gift is to A., B., and C., "or such of them as shall be living" at a future time: this gives each of them a vested interest, subject to be divested in the event of his dying before the time, and of the others (or one of them) surviving that time (x).

The case of a simple gift in the alternative to two individuals (as a gift to "A. or B.") is more difficult, and if there is nothing in the will or in the surrounding circumstances to (t) Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 642; Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. sen. 409; Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. 416; Greenway v. Greenway, 2 D. F. & J. 128; Adshead v. Willetts, 29 Beav. 358. So in the case of a devise to A. or his issue, where "issue" has been taken to be a word of limitation: Parkin v. Knight, 15 Sim. 83; but of course not where substitution, and not succession, is clearly intended, see Speakman v. Speakman, 8 Hare, 180; Holland v. Wood, L. R., 11 Eq. 91; Burt v. Hellyar, L. R., 14 Eq. 160. It seems open to question whether a devise to A. or his heirs since the Wills Act would not be construed as substitutional, so as to prevent a lapse in the event of A. predeceasing the testator.

See Hawkins on Wills, 180; Re Ibbetson, 88 L. T. 461, and post Chap. XXXVI.

(u) Mr. Jarman's examination of the authorities bearing on this subject has been transferred to Chap. XXXVI.

(v) Re Walton's Estate, 8 D. M. & G. 173; Re Hopkins' Trust, 2 H. & M. 411; Leach v. Leach, 35 Bea. 185; Re Masterson, [1902] Week. N. 192; ante, p. 426.

(w) Milman v. Lane, [1901] 2 K.B. 745. See Quested v. Michell, 24 L. J. Ch. 722 and other cases cited in Chap. XXIII.

(x) Sturges v. Pearson, 4 Mad. 411; Penny v. Comm. for Railways, [1900] A.C. 628, post, Chap. XXXVII.

shew what the testator meant, such a gift appears to be void for uncertainty (y). CHAP. XVIII.

Here we may distinguish those cases where, under a power to appoint in favour of A. "or" B. (A. and B. being either classes or individuals), a gift in default of appointment is implied between A. and B. (z). This is an apparent but not a real change of "or" into "and"; the true reason that A. and B. both take being that both are objects of the power, and no selection having been made by the person empowered to select, the Court divides the subject of gift equally between the objects of the power (a). Again, a gift to A. for life, and after his death to a class of persons "or the issue of such of them as shall then be dead" (b), or to A. for life, and after his death to such of a class as shall be then living "or their next of kin" (or "heirs"), will generally be construed to mean such of the class as shall be living at the death of the tenant for life, and the issue or next of kin (or heirs) of such as shall then be dead (c).

Power to appoint to A. or B. Implied gift to A. and B. in default.

The word "and," too, is sometimes construed "or." This change (being the converse of that which is exemplified by the preceding cases, but, like it, generally made to favour the vesting of a legacy, and not to divest it (d)) may be called for by the general frame and context of the will, as in Jackson v. Jackson (e), where a testator bequeathed a leasehold house to his wife for her life; "and after her death, if my son R. shall be living, then to him" for his life, "but if he should be living at the time of the death of my wife, and shall then or hereafter have any issue male of his body, then all the right therein to go to R.; but if R. should die in the life of my wife without leaving issue male," then over:

As to turning "and" into "or."

(y) See ante, p. 475.

(z) Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 708, 5 Ves. 495, 8 Ves. 561; Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124; Burrough v. Philcox, 5 My. & Cr. 72; White's Trust, Joh. 656; Penny v. Turner, 15 Sim. 368, 2 Phil. 493, overruling Jones v. Torin, 6 Sim. 255.

(a) 7 Ves. 128; 2 Phil. 495. The power is exclusive, ib. and Re Veale's Trusts, 4 Ch. D. 61, 5 Ch. D. 622. And see McGibbon v. Abbott, 10 App. Ca. 653 (Canadian case in P. C.).

(b) Shand v. Kidd, 19 Beav. 310.

(c) King v. Cleaveland, 26 Beav. 26, 4 De G. & J. 477; Re Philips' Will, L. R., 7 Eq. 151; Burt v. Hellyar, L. R., 14 Eq. 160; Wingfield v. Wingfield, 9 Ch. D. 658. But in Lachlan v. Reynolds, 9 Harc. 796, "their" was strictly construed as referring to the "children then living," so that "heirs" must if anything necessarily be deemed a word of limitation, and or be read and, which was confirmed by another gift to the children living at another period and their heirs.

(d) See per Wood, V.-C., Day v. Day, Kay, 708; Maddison v. Chapman, 3 De G. & J. 536.

(e) 1 Ves. sen. 217. This is an analogous case to Grant v. Dyer, 2 Dow, 87, ante, p. 609. The L.C. added, that if R. had survived the wife, but had no issue then living, he would have taken only a life interest, and that by the express words of the gift; so that it seems the Court, in effect, struck out of the clause introducing the bequest over the words "if he should be living at the time of my wife's death."

CHAP. XVIII.

Lord Hardwicke thought it clear, on the face of the will, that the testator did not intend the property to go over unless R. died in the lifetime of the wife without issue male; and to effect this end he construed "and" as "or"; so that, although R. died in the lifetime of the wife, yet, as he left issue male, he took the estate absolutely.

So, in Hetherington v. Oakman (f), where the ultimate bequest after the failure of certain prior interests under the will, was to the testator's nephews and nieces and such of them as should be then living, it was impossible, upon any reasonable construction, to read the word "and" otherwise than as "or." So if a testator give a power to be exercised by A. and his heirs and assigns, the words as they stand requiring the heirs to join with the ancestor, would prevent a sale being ever made at all; for nemo est hæres viventis: "and" must therefore be read disjunctively (g).

And where a testator made a bequest after a specified period "to such of his grandchildren and their issue as should then stand to him in equal degree of consanguinity, and their heirs as tenants in common," the word "and" was read "or," it being impossible that grandchildren and their issue could be in equal degree of consanguinity to the testator (h).

There are cases in which a gift to certain persons "and" their children, descendants, &c., has been read as a gift to them "or" their children, &c., so as to make the gift to the children substitut-tional (i).

The change of "and" into "or" may be called for, as Mr. Jarman points out (j), not only "by the general frame and context of the will," as in the cases above mentioned, but also "by the circumstance that a literal adherence to the testator's language occasions that one member of his apparently copulative sentence is included in, and, therefore, reduced to silence by another. On this ground, probably, the construction has prevailed in several cases where an ulterior gift was to take effect on the death of the first devisee unmarried and without issue."

Thus, in Wilson v. Bayly (k), where a testator devised certain Unmarried and without issue.

(f) 2 Y. & C. C. 299; see Hawes v. Hawes, 1 Ves. sen. 13, 1 Wils. 165; Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Kee. 255; Stapleton v. Stapleton, 2 Sim. N. S. 212; Davidson v. Rook, 22 Beav. 206. Malmesbury v. Malmesbury, 31 Bea. 407, where the change was not made, was the case of a deed.

(g) Jones v. Price, 11 Sim. 557; see acc. Sugd. Pow. 844, pl. 24, 8th ed.

(h) Maynard v. Wright, 26 Beav. 285.

(i) Burrell v. Baskerfield, 11 Bea. 525; Tucker v. Billing, 2 Jur. N. S. 483. But see Penny v. Turner, 2 Ph. 493.

(j) First ed. p. 455.

(k) 3 Br. P. C. Toml. 195.

leasehold lands to trustees, in trust for his son John until his marriage, and then to make provision for his wife; and if John should have any issue, then to assign the premises to him, to enable him to make provision for his children; and if John should happen to have no issue lawfully begotten, in trust for testator's son Mark in like manner; it being his intention that, if his son should die before he was married, or, if he were married, and should have no issue lawfully begotten, then the lands should be enjoyed by Mark; and in case both his sons, Mark and John, should "happen to die unmarried, and neither of them should have any issue lawfully begotten," then over. Mark died unmarried. John married, but had no issue. The devise over was held to have taken effect, the clause being construed in the disjunctive.

So, in Hepworth v. Taylor (l), a bequest over, in case the legatees died unmarried "and" without issue, was held to take effect on the death of one married but without leaving issue.

Again, in Maberley v. Strode (m), where the bequest was in trust for the testator's son A. for life, and after his decease for his children; but in case he should die unmarried "and" without issue, or having issue, they should all die, if sons, before they attained twenty-one, or, if daughters, before they attained twenty-one or were married, then over. A. married but died without issue; and Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., held that the gift over took effect.

So, in Bell v. Phyn (n), where a residue was bequeathed equally between the testator's three children, and in case of the death of any of his children, "without being married and having children," the share of the child so dying to be divided between the surviving children: Sir W. Grant, M.R., on the authority of the last case, held, that the word "and" was to be construed "or," for as, legally speaking, there could be no children without a marriage, it was almost necessary, in order to give effect to all the words, to construe the copulative as disjunctive. However, the daughter whose share was in question having married and also had a child, it was unnecessary to decide the point.

"Without being married and having children."

And in Mackenzie v. King (o), where real and personal property was given in trust for A. for life, and after her death for her children; but in the event of her not intermarrying nor having children, then the same property to be subject to her disposal by will or otherwise; Sir K. Bruce, V.-C., held that "nor" (the component

(l) 1 Cox, 112. See also Long v. Lane, 17 L. R. Ir. 11.
(m) 3 Ves. 450.

(n) 7 Ves. 453.
(o) 17 L. J. Ch. 448.

CHAP. XVIII.

parts of which are "and not") must be read "or not," and that the fund was at A.'s disposal, in the event either of her remaining single or marrying and not having a child.

Mr. Jarman continues (p): "But though, by construing the contingency of dying unmarried and without issue copulatively, the latter member of the sentence is rendered inoperative, (since the fact of being unmarried includes the not having or leaving issue, which always means lawful issue,) yet, on the other hand, the disjunctive construction reduces to silence the word 'unmarried'; for if the condition upon which the first taker retains the estate is his marrying and having issue, or, in other words, if the estate is to go over on the non-happening of either of these events, then, as the having issue includes the event of marriage, the result of the two events, placed disjunctively, is precisely the same as if the contingency of having issue stood alone. In these cases, it will be observed, the disjunctive construction can never operate to let in the devisee over to the exclusion of the children or issue of the first taker, as in the class of cases before noticed; which accounts for the seeming anomaly of torturing the words in both instances to produce a contrary effect." But since Grey v. Pearson (q) the cases last noticed have lost much of their weight as authorities for applying to any given case the rule which would change "and" into "or" in order to prevent one member of a compound sentence being rendered inoperative. Though it be a canon of construction that effect is if possible to be given to every word used, it is one which must bend to circumstances (r); and where the result of changing "and" into "or" would be only to render one member of the sentence inoperative instead of the other, the change certainly ought not to be made (s). It was made in the Irish case of Long v. Lane (t), but with this exception, it does not appear to have been made in any case since Grey v. Pearson; which indeed was treated by Romilly, M.R. (u), as

(p) First ed. p. 456.

(q) 6 H. L. Ca. 61, ante, p. 607.

(r) Per Lord Cranworth in Clarke v. Colls, 9 H. L. Ca. 612; and in Earle v. Barker, 11 H. L. Ca. 280, Lords Cranworth and Chelmsford (agreeing with Romilly, M.R., 33 Beav. 353) preferred construing an ambiguous clause, forming one member of a copulative sentence, in a way that rendered it inoperative, to changing "and" into "or." Lord Westbury would have preferred the latter course; but both led to the same decision.

(s) Re Kirkbride's Trusts, L. R., 2 Eq. 400.

(t) 17 L. R. Ir. 11. In that case the gift over was to take effect in the event of the devisee dying unmarried and without legal issue; he had a power to charge the lands with a jointure, and this necessarily excluded the conjunctive construction.

(u) In Seccombe v. Edwards, 28 Beav. 440, treated as rightly decided in Steen v. Steen, Ir. R., 6 C. L. 8; and see Re Sanders' Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 680, post, p. 619. "The cases of Maberley v.

having overruled Bell v. Phyn and Maberley v. Strode, as well as Brownsword v. Edwards. The decision in Doe d. Usher v. Jessep (v), where the Court refused to change "and" into "or," has been already referred to.

The decision in Grey v. Pearson is sometimes referred to as if the rule that words are primâ facie to be taken in their ordinary and grammatical sense was new, and as if a more strict and literal construction was now generally required than had previously obtained. But the rule is an old one (w). The application of it in that particular case was strict, and within its particular scope the decision is of course conclusive: but that no new principle of general application has been introduced by it is shewn by the subsequent decision of the House of Lords in Abbott v. Middleton (x), and by other cases noticed above (y).

"The word unmarried," as Mr. Jarman points out (z), "means either never having been married, or, not having a husband or wife at the time. The former is its ordinary signification; and it was considered as so used in the [cases stated above (a)], where, however, the effect of such construction was to render the word inoperative. But the sound rule in such cases would seem to be, to construe the expression as used in the latter, being its less accustomed sense (b), which has a twofold advantage, that it removes the necessity of changing the particle 'and' to 'or,' and gives effect to all the testator's words."

Grey v. Pearson and Abbott v. Middleton.

Whether "unmarried" means not having been married, or not being married at the time.

Strode, and Bell v. Phyn, were much canvassed in the case of Dillon v. Harris, 4 Bligh, N. S. 321, where Lord Brougham seemed very reluctant to consider them as general authorities for turning into or the word 'and,' occurring in a limitation over, in case of the prior legatee dying unmarried and without leaving lawful issue; his Lordship's opinion being that Sir W. Grant, in deciding Bell v. Phyn upon the authority of Maberley v. Strode, did not sufficiently advert to the special circumstances of the latter case. The case in the House of Lords, however, did not raise the point, as the prior bequest was to take effect upon the legatee marrying with consent, and the bequest over was in case he should so die unmarried and without leaving lawful issue; which Lord Brougham thought referred to such a marriage as had been previously referred to, namely, marriage with consent; and as the legatee had married without consent and had left no issue, (so that, even according to the disjunctive construction, the bequest over failed,) the question did not arise." (Note by Mr. Jarman, 1st ed., p. 457.)

(v) 12 East, 288, ante, p. 606.

(w) See Chaps. XV., LIX.

(x) 7 H. L. Ca. 68, ante, p. 583, where Lords Cranworth and Wensleydale were again opposed to Lord St. Leonards, but were not on this occasion in a majority.

(y) Pp. 590 seq.

(z) First ed. p. 457.

(a) Wilson v. Bayly, Hepworth v. Taylor, Maberley v. Strode, and Bell v. Phyn.

(b) "The word 'unmarried' is used in this sense in the stat. 3 W. & M. c. 11, s. 7, which provides, that, 'if any unmarried person, not having a child or children, shall be lawfully hired,' &c.; as no one, not having been married, can have children in the legal sense." (Note by Mr. Jarman.) The effect of the word "unmarried" is discussed in Chap. XXXV.

CHAP. XVIII.

“Unmarried” construed to mean not having husband or wife
at the time.

As illustrations of this mode of construction, Mr. Jarman cites two cases, Doe v. Cooke and Doe v. Rawding. In Doe v. Cooke (c), the bequest was to B. and his assigns (after the death or marriage of A.) for his life, and after his decease then to the child or children of B. by any future wife, his, her, or their executors, administrators and assigns ; but the testator declared his will to be upon this further condition, that in case B. should die an infant unmarried and without issue, then over to C. and his children. B. attained his majority, and died, leaving a widow, but without having had issue ; and it was held, that in these events the gift over failed. Lord Ellenborough said : “ The most rational construction we can give this will is, to construe it as Lord Hardwicke did the devise in Framlingham v. Brand (d), as one contingency, namely, B.’s dying an infant, attended with two qualifications, viz., his dying without leaving a wife surviving him, or dying without children. Had he left a wife, and had died an infant, and no children, the testator might have intended that, in such event, the widow should be benefited by taking her share under the Statute of Distribution with the next of kin, or that B. should be able to make a testamentary disposition in her favour ; meaning, also, that if he left children, they should have the estate in preference to the wife ; and that if he left neither wife nor children at his death during his minority, C. and his children should have the estate ; but that if he arrived at the age of twenty-one, he should have a power to dispose of it, though he left neither wife nor children.”

In Doe v. Rawding (e) a testator devised his lands to his daughter and any other children he might leave, and to her or their heirs and assigns for ever ; but in case his daughter and such other children as aforesaid should die under the age of twenty-one years unmarried and without lawful issue, then to his wife in fee. The daughter died under age and without issue, but leaving a husband surviving ; and it was held, on the authority of the last case, that the devise over failed.

“Unmarried” ought to be construed according to the context.

As B. in the former case left a wife, and the daughter in the latter case left a husband, surviving, neither of them was “ unmarried ” in any sense, and it was therefore unnecessary to decide upon the actual meaning of the word. The former case shows the opinion of Lord Ellenborough ; but in the latter, Bayley and Holroyd, JJ., seem to have thought that either of the two meanings might be

(c) 7 East, 269.
(d) 3 Atk. 390.

(e) 2 B. & Ald. 441.

ascribed to it according to the context, and Lord Cottenham was of the same opinion (f).

The principle stated by Mr. Jarman has, however, been adopted by the courts. Thus in Re Sanders' Trusts (g), where there was a gift over in the event of the primary legatee dying "unmarried and without issue," Wood, V.-C., declined to change "and" into "or," and held that "unmarried" meant "without leaving a widow." The same principle was applied in Re King (h), and Re Chant (i).

In Roberts v. Bishop of Kilmore (j) a testatrix devised property to her son H., and declared that if he died "unmarried and without issue" it should go over to her two elder sons. The devise was preceded by gifts in favour of such of her daughters as "remained unmarried," where the word "unmarried" clearly meant "spinsters," that is, "not having been married," and it was held by Porter, M.R., that the same construction was to be placed on the expression "unmarried and without issue" as used in the gift over following the devise to H. But this does not seem conclusive, for in the expressions "remaining unmarried" and "dying unmarried" the word "unmarried" does not necessarily mean the same thing (k).

A testator may by the context shew that he did not use "unmarried" in the sense of "without leaving a widow"; as where he devises land subject to a gift over in the event of the original devisee dying unmarried and without issue, and gives him a power to charge a jointure in favour of his widow (l).

If a gift over is to take effect in the event of the legatee "dying before marriage and leaving no issue," no question can arise (m). And if a testator expressly gives property to his two daughters, to be vested at the age of twenty-four or marriage, and if they both die under twenty-four and unmarried, then over, the Court will not alter "and" into "or," or give "unmarried" any other than its primary sense of "never having been married" (n).

(f) Maugham v. Vincent, 9 L. J. N. S. Ch. 329. See Chap. XLI., where the cases on the construction of gifts to the persons who would have been the next of kin of a married woman "if she had died unmarried" are considered. As to "unmarried" meaning "not married with consent," see Dillon v. Harris, referred to ante, p. 616, n. (u).

(g) L. R., 1 Eq. 675. See Carolyn v. Carolyn, 17 L. R. Ir. 25 n.

(h) 62 L. T. 789.

(i) [1900] 2 Ch. 345.

(j) [1902] 1 Ir. R. 333.

(k) Compare the case of Pratt v. Mathew, 8 D. M. & G. 522, where the word "unmarried" alone was used in two different senses in the same instrument.

(l) Long v. Lane, 17 L. R. Ir. 11.

(m) Secombe v. Edwards, 28 Beav. 440; Steen v. Steen, Ir. R., 6 C. L. 8 ("die without marrying and leaving no legal issue").

(n) Gonne v. Cook, 15 W. R. 576.

"Unmarried" construed to mean "not having been married."

CHAP. XVIII.

"And" not construed "or" where a previous gift would be thereby divested.

It has already been observed that in the majority of cases where "and" has been construed disjunctively, it has been in order to favour the vesting of a legacy, and not in order to defeat a previously vested gift; and generally it will not be so construed where the latter consequence would follow; as, where the bequest is to A. for life, remainder to his eldest son (or to his children), with a gift over if A. should die under twenty-one and without issue (or under twenty-one and without children) (o). Again in Day v. Day (p), where a testator bequeathed the interest of his residuary personal estate to his wife for life, and after her death to his brother for life, and after the death of the survivor, the capital to A., subject to the payment of 1,000*l.* each to B., C., and D., which the testator gave to them to be paid to each of them at the end of twelve months next after the decease of the survivor of his wife and brother; provided, that if either of the said B., C., and D. should die "in the lifetime of my said wife and my said brother" his legacy should lapse. Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., refused to read "and" as "or," and thereby cause a lapse of B.'s legacy, who had survived the wife but died before the brother (q). And this is independent of Grey v. Pearson.

"And" read "or" in power to apply fund "for advancement and benefit" of legatee.

Where a will contained a power for the trustees to apply the capital of a fund for the "benefit and advancement in the world" of the person entitled to the income of the fund for life, it was held (r) that the word "and" in the clause conferring the power must be read "or," and that the trustees might apply the fund not merely for "advancement" in the strict sense of the term, but for any purpose for the benefit of the legatee.

(o) Malcolm v. Malcolm, 21 Beav. 225; Key v. Key, 1 Jur. N. S. 372. See also Coates v. Hart, 32 Beav. 349, 3 D. J. & S. 504, 516.

(p) Kay, 703. See also Barker v. Young, 33 Bea. 353; Re Kirkbride's Trusts, L. R., 2 Eq. 400; Reed v. Braithwaite, L. R., 11 Eq. 514; W— v.

B—, 11 Beav. 621.

(q) It was held that "die in the lifetime of my said wife and my said brother" meant "die in their joint lifetime": and Brudnel's Case, 5 Co. 9, was cited.

(r) Re Brittlebank, 30 W. R. 99.

CHAPTER XIX.

GIFTS BY IMPLICATION.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Effect of Mistake	621	IV. Implication of Trust	649
II. Implication from Devises and Bequests on Death of a Person simply: (1) As to Real Estate. (2) As to Personal Estate: (3) Rebuttal of Implication: (4) Gifts to Survivors	629	V. Implication from Powers: (1) Powers of Selection or Distribution: (2) Other Powers	650
III. Implication from Gift on Death combined with some Contingency, &c.	644	VI. Implication of Estates Tail	656
		VII. Implication of Cross-Remainders	660
		VIII. Implication of Gifts to Children and Issue ...	673
		IX. Miscellaneous Cases	678

I.—Effect of Mistake.—“Sometimes,” says Mr. Jarman (a), “a testator shows by the recitals in his will, that he erroneously supposes a title to subsist in a third person to property which, in fact, belongs to himself. Such recitals do not in general amount to a devise; for, as the testator evidently conceives that the person referred to possesses a title independently of any act of his own, he does not intend to make an actual disposition in favour of such person; and though it may be probable, or even apparent, that the testator is influenced in the disposition of his property by this mistake, yet there is no necessary implication that, in the event of the failure of the supposed title, he would give to the person that benefit to which it is assumed he is entitled.”

Recitals, whether they create an actual gift.

Thus, in Wright v. Wyvell (b), a testator bequeathed unto A., his wife, 600*l.*, to be paid to W., saying it was for payment of lands lately purchased of W., and was already estated as part of a jointure to A. his wife during her life, being of the value of 67*l.* per annum; that of Wiskow, York, and Malton, the lands there amounting to the yearly value of 63*l.*, in all 130*l.*, which, being also estated upon A. his wife, was in full of her jointure.

(a) First ed. p. 460. Compare the rule as to the execution of special powers of appointment, Chap. XXIII. (b) 2 Vent. 56.

CHAPTER XIX. It appeared that these lands had not been settled on the wife. And it was held by Pollexfen, C.J., Rokeby, and Ventris, (Powell, J., dissentiente), that these expressions did not amount to a devise to the wife, for it appeared "that the testator did not intend to devise her anything by the will, for he mentions that she was estated in it before." Powell, J., relied upon a case (c) in which "I have made a lease to J. S., at 10s. rent," was held to be a good devise; but the other Judges considered the case to be of little authority.

So, where (d) J. S., tenant for life, with remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his own right heirs, expressed himself in his will as follows: "Item, my land at W. my wife Mary is to enjoy for her life, and after her death it of right goes to my daughter E. for ever, provided she has heirs." The Court held that the first clause was not a devise to the wife, for the lands were settled upon her for life; and what was said as to the daughter was only a declaration of the devisor what the condition of the estate was, and how she was to enjoy it; and he could not say of right who was to enjoy them, if she claimed under the will.

Again, where (e) B., by his will, reciting that he was entitled for life, under the will of A., to the advowson of the rectory of D., with remainders over, "subject to a direction in the said will, that my brother J. D. shall be presented to said rectory when it shall next become vacant, which it is my wish may be complied with; now, I hereby declare it to be my desire and earnest wish that, in case upon the vacancy of the said living the said J. D. shall not be then living, or in case the said rectory shall again become vacant after the said J. D. shall have been presented to and accepted said presentation, then" A. P. was to be presented. The fact was, that, under the will of A., J. D. was only entitled to the presentation on a certain contingency, which had not happened. The question then arose, whether the expressions in the will of B. raised a gift in him by implication,

(c) Moore, 31.

(d) Wright v. Hammond (Right v. Hamond), 1 Stra. 427, 1 Com. Rep. 231, 8 Vin. Abr. 110, Devise, L. 2, pl. 32, 2 Eq. Ab. 338, pl. 11.

(e) Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 27; and see Doe d. Vessey v. Wilkinson, 2 T. R. 209, stated Chap. XXXVII.; Lane v. Wilkins, 10 East, 241. See also Smith v. Maitland, 1 Ves. jun. 362; Langslow v. Langslow, 21 Beav. 552; Circuit v. Perry, 23 Beav. 275; Box v.

Barrett, L. R., 3 Eq. 244; Clibborn v. Clibborn, 9 Ir. Jur. 381; Harris v. Harris, Ir. R., 3 Eq. 610; Haverty v. Curtis, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 23. But see also Poulson v. Wellington, 2 P. W. 533; Wilson v. Piggott, 2 Ves. jun. 351; both which, however, arose on dispositions by deed. Circuit v. Perry, and the later case of Re Bagot, [1893] 3 Ch. 348, are referred to in Chap. XXIX. in connection with the question of residuary bequests.

so as to put the persons actually entitled under the will of A., who took benefits under the will of B., to their election. Lord Eldon decided in the negative, observing that he found no authority for holding mere recital, without more, to amount to gift, or demonstration or intention to give.

And in Adams v. Adams (f), a devise and bequest to trustees of real and personal estate, subject to the dower and thirds at common law of the testator's wife in and out of his real estates, (the testator's interest therein being an equity of redemption and not liable to dower,) upon trust to receive the income, and pay the same or the overplus thereof after deducting the dower or thirds of his said wife for the maintenance of his children, was held not to give the wife by implication a rentcharge equal to what dower out of the whole estate would have amounted to.

Adams v. Adams.

Nor, it seems, will a mistaken belief by a testator as to the ownership of property enlarge the operation of an express gift (g).

"It seems, however, that if a testator unequivocally refer to a disposition as made in that his will, which, in fact, he has not made, the intention to make such a disposition, at all events, will be considered as sufficiently indicated" (h). In such cases "the Court has taken the recital as conclusive evidence of an intention to give by the will, and, fastening upon it, has given to the erroneous recital the effect of an actual gift," differing, in this respect, from the cases in which "the testator says that only which amounts to a declaration that he supposes that a party who is referred to has an interest independent of the will, and in which the recital is no evidence of an intention to give by the will, and cannot be treated as a gift by implication" (i).

Reference by testator to a disposition made in that his will.

Thus, where (j) a testator bequeathed one moiety of certain leasehold estates to E.; and if she should die before twenty-one, to G.; and if he should die before a certain event, to another person; and after her death, to A.; and provided that in case A. should die without issue, and E. or G. should be then living, (f) 1 Hare, 537; see also Doolan v. Smith, 3 J. & Lat. 547; Ralph v. Watson, 9 L. J. Ch. 328; cf. Westcott v. Culliford, 3 Hare, 265, where the words were more properly words of original charge than of recital.

(g) Hounsell v. Dunning, [1902] 1 Ch. 512. Sed quære, whether the dictum of Joyce, J., in this case is consistent with the decision in Re Bagot, [1893] 3 Ch. 348.

(h) Mr. Jarman, in the first edition of this work, p. 462.

(i) Per Wigram, V.-C., Adams v. Adams, 1 Hare, 540, and per Lord Brougham, Yates v. Thomson, 3 Cl. & Fin. 572. The difference appears to have been overlooked in Hall v. Lietch, L. R., 9 Eq. 376.

(j) Bibin v. Walker, Amb. 661. As to Frederick v. Hall, 1 Ves. jun. 396, qu. See also Furniss v. Phear, 36 W. R. 521, where the obliterated name of a legatee was supplied by a subsequent reference in the will; ante, p. 160.

CHAPTER XIX. or either of them, the said moiety of his leasehold messuages, before given to the said A., should go to E. and G. Sir T. Sewell, M.R., thought it quite clear that the second devise related to the other moiety not before devised, as the manner in which it was given was inconsistent with the disposition of the first moiety, which A. was not to take until after the death of E. and G. He further held, that the Court would imply a gift of the second moiety to A. and her issue, (the issue taking, since there was no gift over except on the death of A. without issue,) with contingent limitations over. There could, he said, be no doubt of the intention, and the words of gift being omitted by mistake, the Court would supply them.

Implication of bounty from direction to pay debt.

A mere direction to pay a debt which the testator supposes to be due from him, does not involve any intention of bounty, and therefore, if a testator directs his executors to pay "a debt of 300*l.* due by me to A.," and he only owes A. 200*l.*, this is not an implied legacy to A. of 100*l.* (k). But an intention of bounty may appear from the terms of the will. Thus, in Re Rowe (l), a testatrix who was executrix and residuary legatee of her deceased husband's will, bequeathed to her grandniece "the sum of 300*l.* in addition to the sums owing to her from my late husband's estate," and it was held that this amounted to a bequest to the grandniece of two sums of 500*l.* each, for which the husband had given her an I O U and promissory note, which were not enforceable for want of consideration (m).

Assumption
by testator that his will contains a devise.

"Implication," said Lord Westbury in Parker v. Tootal (n), "may either arise from an elliptical form of expression, which involves and implies something else as contemplated by the person using the expression, or the implication may be founded upon the form of gift, or upon a direction to do something which cannot be carried into effect without of necessity involving something else in order to give effect to that direction, or something else which is a consequence necessarily resulting from that direction." The case in which this was said affords an example of the former kind of implication, a devise "to the first son of T. severally and successively in tail male" being read as a devise "to the first and every other son"; otherwise the phrase "severally and successively" would have been without meaning.

(k) Wilson v. Morley, 5 Ch. D. 776.

(l) [1898] 1 Ch. 153. See Whitfield v. Clement, 1 Mer. 402, not so clear a case.

(m) Compare Re Hodgson, [1899]

1 Ch. 666. These cases may be treated as illustrations of the rule falsa demonstratio non nocet; see Chap. XXXV.

(n) 11 H. L. Ca. 143, 161.

Implication of the latter kind described by Lord Westbury is seen when from a direction that certain persons shall deal with the rents of an estate in a particular manner, a devise of the estate to those persons has been implied (o); or when from a direction to invest real and personal estate is implied a trust to sell the real estate (p).

But a gift which is confined by unambiguous terms to a specific part of a testator's property, as a bequest of "all his capital in ready money and bank billets," will not be extended so as to include the entire personalty by a mere introductory clause declaring the testator's intention to dispose of all his property. It would be different if the testator himself referred to the bequest as including all his property (q).

An example of an erroneous reference in a codicil to a disposition made by the will operating as a gift occurs in Jordan v. Fortescue (r): under a gift by codicil of "500l., in addition to 1,500l. before bequeathed" to the same person, there having, in fact, been only two legacies of 500l. each bequeathed to him by will and first codicil, it was held that there was a gift by implication of 2,000l. But it must be remembered that though words such as those used in the last case may by implication effect an increase in the amount of the first gift, yet the rule that a clear gift is not to be cut down by subsequent words of doubtful import prevents them from having any operation where their effect would be by implication to diminish the first gift (s).

And where a testator expresses an intention to make up a person's existing fortune, derived either under his own will or from other sources, to a certain sum, and for that purpose gives Intention to give what will make up a certain sum.

(o) See Ex parte Wynch, 5 D. M. & G. 188, and cases there cited. See also Newburgh v. Newburgh, Sug. Law of Prop. 367; a devise of the estates in the omitted county (see above, p. 486) was implied from the name and arms clause, the leasing power, and other parts of the context. And see Langston v. Langston, 2 Cl. & Fin. 194, and other cases, ante, pp. 586 et seq.

(p) Affleck v. James, 17 Sim. 121.

(q) Wylie v. Wylie, 1 D. F. & J. 410. Compare Hounsell v. Dunning, supra, p. 623, note (g). See also cases cited Chap. XLV. showing the inefficacy of the word "estate," occurring in the introductory clause of a will made before 1838, to pass the fee-simple.

(r) 10 Beav. 259; see also Hayes d.

Foorde v. Foorde, 2 W. Bl. 698; Edmunds v. Waugh, 4 Drew. 275; Farrer v. St. Catharine's College, L. R., 16 Eq. 19. In Morgan v. Middlemiss, 35 Bea. 278, Romilly, M.R., refused to follow Jordan v. Fortescue, although the intention was clear.

(s) Mann v. Fuller, Kay, 624; Gordon v. Hoffmann, 7 Sim. 29, ante, p. 188. As to recitals in wills as to amounts of advances made by testators to their children, see Re Aird's Estate, 12 Ch. D. 291; Re Taylor's Estate, 22 Ch. D. 495; Re Wood, 32 Ch. D. 517; Re Kelsey, [1905] 2 Ch. 465. The statement in the text was referred to with approval by Joyce, J., in Re Segelcke, infra, p. 626, note.

CHAPTER XIX.

a legacy which proves to be insufficient, the legatee shall, nevertheless, have the sum specified and intended for him. Thus, in Ouseley v. Anstruther (t), where a testator, reciting that under a settlement his wife would have an income of 1,560*l.*, directed his trustees to add an annuity of 440*l.*, so as to raise his wife's jointure to 2,000*l.*; the income under the settlement being less than was supposed, the wife was, nevertheless, held entitled to have it made up to 2,000*l.* It does not follow, however, that in the converse case of the income being more than the testator supposed, the wife would have been entitled only to the 2,000*l.*, for a clear gift will not be cut down by subsequent words of doubtful import (u).

And in Ives v. Dodgson (v), a testatrix, upon a contingency which (as she showed by her will) she expected not to be (and which was not) ascertained until after her own death, bequeathed a life annuity of 40*l.* to A.; she then bequeathed to A. 30*l.* free of duty, and afterwards by codicil said, "I increase the immediate annuity of 30*l.* left by my will to A. to an annuity of 50*l.* duty free." It was held by Sir W. James, V.-C., that the plain meaning of the words of the codicil was that A. was to have an annuity of 50*l.* in addition to the contingent annuity of 40*l.*

In these cases, it will be noticed, there were words of gift as well as of recital.

Mr. Jarman continues (w): "And even where the testator has evidently mistaken the law respecting the devolution of his property, yet, if he has by his will shewn very clearly an intention that it shall devolve according to such mistaken notion, the intention will prevail. An early case (x) presents a very nice question of this nature.

Reference to a person as heir held to create a devise by implication.

"A testator having issue by C. three daughters, S., A., and E., devised to C. for life all his freehold wherever, until S. his heir came to twenty-one, paying to the heir 10*s.* during the term, and to the rest, after fifteen years old, 20*s.* a-piece, and the heir to pay to A. and E. 100*l.* a-piece, 40*l.* at the decease of the wife, &c.; and if S. his heir died without heir before twenty-one, so that the lands descended and fell to A., then A. to pay to E., &c. It was argued that S. took nothing under the will by implication, (t) 10 Beav. 453. Compare Thompson v. Whitelock, 5 Jur. N. S. 991. See also East v. Cook, 2 Ves. sen. 30.

(u) Re Segelcke, [1906] 2 Ch. 301, dissenting from Lord Hardwicke's dictum in Milner v. Milner, 1 Ves. sen.

106, which, however, was repeated by Leach, M.R., in Trevor v. Trevor, 5 Russ. 24.

(v) L. R., 9 Eq. 401.

(w) First ed. p. 463.

(x) Tilly v. Collyer, 3 Keb. 589.

there being no express devise to her. But, on the other side, it was contended that S. was sole heir; for, it was all one to devise to her as to make a stranger heir of his land; and here the daughter S. was not sole heir unless made so by the intent of the will, which six times called the eldest daughter his heir; otherwise A., the younger daughter, would have equal share in the land and also the legacies. Lord C. J. Hale—"The testator was mistaken in his intent that the eldest daughter was his heir, but intended his lands should go according to that mistake; also she that is called heir is to pay the portions to the younger daughters, and no provision is made for her. Therefore, albeit there is no express devise to S., yet, she being named his heir, this is sufficient to exclude the rest, and to make her sole heir" (y).

But in Gould v. Gould (z) Romilly, M.R., declined to infer from the testator describing his nephew as his heir-at-law that he meant him to take under a devise to "my customary heir," although that construction was supported by another part of the will.

An erroneous recital or statement as to the devolution of property will not operate to prevent it from being included in a residuary gift. These cases are considered elsewhere (a).

It is explained in Chap. XXX., sect. iv., that a clear bequest made in consequence of a mistake on the part of the testator is, nevertheless, as a general rule, effective.

The dispositions of a will may be modified by a codicil shewing a clear indication of the testator's intention to make some disposition inconsistent with the dispositions of the will, even if the disposition in the codicil is preceded by an erroneous recital of the dispositions of the will. Thus in Re Margitson (b) a testator by his will gave to his daughter an estate tail in his real property, and an absolute interest in his personal property. By a codicil, after reciting that his daughter would take an estate for life in his property with remainder to her issue, he directed that the life estate should be for her separate use, that she should have a power of appointing a life estate to a husband, and that if she should have more than one son, and her eldest son should inherit certain property, then her second son should succeed to the property, given by the will; it was held that the estates given by the will were modified by the codicil.

Misrecital of will by codicil.

(y) See Tayler v. Web, Sty. 301, ante, p. 455, note (l); Parker v. Nickson, 1 D. J. & S. 177. Compare Jackson v. Craig, 15 Jur. 811.

(z) 32 Bea. 391.

(a) Chaps. XXV. and XXIX.

(b) 48 L. T. 172.

CHAPTER XIX.

"But the disposition of a will," as Mr. Jarman points out (c), "will not be disturbed by an erroneous recital of its contents in a codicil, unless a design to revoke or modify the disposition in the will can be fairly collected from the whole instrument.

Erroneous reference in codicil to the disposition of the will.

"Thus, where (d) a testator, after bequeathing certain legacies to his wife, devised to her for her life certain leasehold premises at Northwood, and he gave his leasehold estate at Wrentnall, and his estate at Northwood, after his wife's death, and the residue of his estate, to other persons. In a codicil, executed on the same day, he directed that the bequest to his wife in his will should be in full of all her claims on his estate, except the estate for life of his 'wife and her assigns, in the premises at Wrentnall, anything in the foregoing will to the contrary notwithstanding.' It was contended, that the widow was entitled to the Wrentnall estate, under her husband's codicil, it being manifest by the concluding clause that he intended to give her something to which she had no right by the will; but the Court decided against the widow's claim. Lord Kenyon said, that the intention must be collected from the will and codicil taken together, and it was impossible not to see that the word 'Wrentnall' was written in the codicil instead of the word 'Northwood.'"

So in Vaughan v. Foakes (e), where a testatrix bequeathed the residue of her estate to A., and by a codicil, reciting that gift, and that A. might die before her, she in that case appointed B. and C. her residuary legatees; and afterwards the testatrix made a second codicil to her former one, as follows:—"As the death of Mrs. W. [the mother of B. and C.] has taken place, and as her two children will ultimately become my residuary legatees, the 15*l.* she was to have I give to D." It was held by Lord Langdale, M.R., that the first codicil was not disturbed by the second. "There is a misrecital," he said, "of what she had previously given; she recites that as an absolute which is only a contingent gift; if the word may had been used, instead of will, the recital would have been in exact conformity with the prior gift."

Misrecital of disposition in the same instrument.

But this principle of construction is not confined to the case of a will and codicil; it has also been applied to a misrecital occurring in the same instrument as the disposition sought to be disturbed.

(c) First ed. p. 464.

(d) Skerratt v. Oakley, 7 T. R. 492.

(e) 1 Kce. 58; see also Bamfield v. Popham, 1 P. W. 54, 2nd point; Re Smith, 2 J. & H. 594; Re Arnold's Estate, 33 Beav. 163; Richardson v.

Power, 19 C. B. N. S. 780 (on same will); Mackenzie v. Bradbury, 35 Beav. 617; Cosby v. Millington, 38 L. J. C. P. 373; Nugent v. Nugent, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 78. Compare the cases of additional legacies given by codicil, ante, p. 625.

Thus, in Smith v. Fitzgerald (f), where a testator bequeathed several legacies to be paid out of the debt owing to him from the Nabob of A., and if any of the legatees died before him he gave their legacies to S., and “after all the legacies are paid (except those mentioned from the Nabob’s debt, as they may require time) all such balance as shall remain overplus (exclusive of the Nabob’s, willed to S.) to be equally divided among the trustees,” it was held by Sir W. Grant, M. R., that the residue of the debt not exhausted by the legacies was not given to S. by implication. He said: “The language refers to something as already done, something that he had given or supposed he had given to S. If in the preceding part there was nothing that could in any way answer the description of what he here says he had willed to S., there would then be room for the application of the doctrine, that a declaration by a testator that he had given something is sufficient evidence of an intention to give it, and amounts to a gift; but the question here is, whether he did not mean to describe, however inaccurately, that which he had before actually given. Without denying that the recital of a gift as antecedently made may amount to a gift, the Court ought to see very clearly that there is nothing in the will to which the recital can refer, before it is turned into a distinct bequest.”

Where, however, the terms of the prior disposition are themselves ambiguous, their construction may properly be guided by a recital, couched in more precise language, in a codicil. Thus, in Darley v. Martin (g), where a testator bequeathed leaseholds to A. for life, and after her death to her issue, and “in default of such issue,” to B.; and, by a codicil, recited that he had bequeathed the leaseholds to B. after the death of A. and “in default of her leaving lawful issue”; it was held, that the gift over in the will being capable of importing a bequest over if no issue were living at the death, it ought to be inferred that the testator employed it in that sense, because in the codicil he referred to it as if it were a gift over in default of A.’s leaving issue.

Ambiguity in will controlled by recital in codicil.

II.—Implication from Devices and Bequests on Death of a Person simply.—1. As to Real Estate.—“It is a well-known maxim,” says Mr. Jarman (h), “that an heir-at-law can only be disinherited

1. Doctrine of implication as to real estate.

(f) 3 V. & B. 2; see also Phillips v. Chamberlaine, 4 Ves. 51.

[1904] 2 Ch. 52.

(g) 13 C. B. 683; see also per Lord Brougham, 10 Cl. & Fin. 17; Grover v. Raper, 5 W. R. 134; Re Venn, (h) First ed. p. 465. The leading case on the doctrine in question is Gardner v. Sheldon, Vaughan, 259; Tudor, L. C. (4th ed.), p. 388.

CHAPTER XIX.

by express devise or necessary implication, and that implication has been defined to be such a strong probability that an intention to the contrary cannot be supposed (i). In the application of this principle one chief topic of controversy has been, how far a devise to any person, in the event of the non-existence or on the decease of another, indicates an intention to make the last-named person a prior object of the testator's bounty. In such cases it is probable that the person, whose non-existence is made the contingency on which the devise over is to fall into possession, is placed in this position for the purpose of taking the property in the first instance; and this probability is, of course, greatly strengthened, if the devisee is the person on whom the law, in the absence of disposition, would cast the property. Hence it has become a settled distinction, that a devise to the testator's heir after the death of A., will confer on A. an estate for life by implication; but that, under a devise to B., a stranger, after the death of A., no estate will arise to A. by implication (j). This is an exact illustration of the difference between necessary implication and conjecture. In the former case, the inference that the testator intends to give an estate for life to A. is irresistible, as he cannot, without the grossest absurdity, be supposed to mean to devise real estate to his heir at the death of A., and yet that the heir should have it in the meantime, which would be to render the devise nugatory. On the contrary, where the devisee is not the heir, however plausible may be the conjecture, that by fixing the death of A. as the period when the devise to B. was to take effect in possession, the testator intended A. to be the prior tenant for life, yet it is possible to suppose that, intending the land to go to the heir during the life of A., he left it for that period undisposed of. In some cases, indeed, we find it laid down without any qualification, that a devise to B. upon the death of A., raises an implied estate in A.; but such dicta, even if accurately reported (which is often doubtful), cannot weigh against the current of authorities, grounded on acknowledged principles of law (k).

Devise to the heir after the death of A. gives A. an estate by implication.

(i) 1 V. & B. 466; "necessary implication is that which leaves no room to doubt," per Lord Mansfield, in Jones v. Morgan, Fearn, C. R. App. No. III.; and see 3 Ves. 113. "There is hardly any case where implication is of necessity, but it is called necessary, because the Court finds it so to answer the intention of the devisor," per Lord Hardwicke, Conynton v. Helyar, 2 Cox, 348, cited by Knight Bruce, L.J., 6 D. M. G. 554.

(j) Year Book, 13 Hen. 7. fol. 17;

Bro. Ab. Dev. pl. 521; 8 Vin. 214, pl. 5; 2 Freem. 270; T. Jon. 98; Vaugh. 263; 1 Eq. Ab. 197, pl. 6; 1 Vern. 22; 2 Vern. 572; 5 Ves. 804; 18 Ves. 40; 1 Mer. 414; 1 S. & St. 544; 5 B. & Ald. 722; 9 B. & Cr. 218; but see contra, 1 P. W. 472; 2 Eq. Ab. 343, pl. 5, 363, pl. 14, which seems inconsistent with, and is overborne by, the mass of authorities. The point, indeed, was not definitely disposed of.

(k) Ex parte Rogers, 2 Mad. 449. See also Den d. Franklin v. Trout, 15 East,

CHAPTER XIX.

Devisee need not be described as heir.

Whether devisee must be heir at the death.

To one of several coheirs.

“Of course, it is not essential to the doctrine that the will should describe the devisee as the heir apparent or heir presumptive of the testator. Thus, a devise ‘to my eldest son B. after the death of A.’ would raise an implied estate for life in A., the fact being that B. is the heir apparent, though not designated as such. The authorities do not distinctly inform us, however, whether, in order to raise the implication, the devise must be to the person who, according to the state of events at the making of the will, would be the testator’s heir, or the person who eventually becomes such. The former seems to be the preferable doctrine; for to treat it as applying to the eventual heir, would be to construe the will according to subsequent events, in opposition to a fundamental principle of construction. If, therefore, a testator having two sons, A. and B., devise real estate to B. (the younger son) after the decease of his (the testator’s) wife, this would not, it is conceived, give to the wife an estate for life by implication, though it should happen that, by the decease of A., the elder son, without issue in the testator’s lifetime, the younger son (i.e. the devisee) had become his heir. On the other hand, if a testator, whose issue was an only daughter, devised real estate to such daughter after the death of his wife, and it happened that he had a son afterwards born, who survived him, the sound conclusion would seem to be, that the wife would take an implied estate for life, though the ulterior devisee was not in event the testator’s heir; the result, in short, being that the implication occurs wherever the express devise is to the person who is the testator’s heir apparent or presumptive at the date of the will, and not otherwise (l). Perhaps, when the distinction between a devise to the heir and to a stranger was originally established, the difficulty attending the application of the doctrine to an heir or heiress presumptive, who is liable to be superseded by the birth of a son of the testator, was not sufficiently considered.

“It has been said that the implication arises in the case of a devise as well to one of several coheirs, as to a sole heir; and, therefore, that where a man devises to one of his two daughters (his coheirresses), after the death of his wife, she (the wife) takes an estate for life by implication (m). This, it must be admitted, is a considerable extension of the doctrine, and carries it beyond the 394, where, however, the person in whose favour it was said the implied gift would have been raised, was himself heir, and the point, therefore, could not have arisen.

(l) See acc. per cur. Ralph v. Carrick, infra.

(m) Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 723; s. c. nom. Simpson v. Hornsby, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 115.

CHAPTER XIX.

principle on which it is founded, since there seems to be not the same absurdity in supposing a testator to give to one of his coheirresses after the death of another person, intending it to descend to all in the meantime, as where the devisee is the same and the only individual upon whom the intermediate interest would have descended. The point, too, rests rather on dictum than decision, for the case in which Lord Cowper advanced this position was decided upon another point, and it is not to be found in the contemporary reports of the same case; but it was referred to arguendo as a settled rule of law in another case" (n).

Hutton v. Simpson, however, is not really an authority on the point, for it appears from the fuller report in Gilbert that some of the lands were expressly devised to the wife for life, and that after her death all the lands were devised to the daughters successively; the distributive construction was therefore adopted (o).

In Re Willatts, the testator gave his wife power "to sell all property and land belonging to me, and at her death what is left to be divided between my two daughters by my second wife." He had five daughters, who were his coheirresses. It was held by Farwell, J. (p), that the gift being to two only of the coheirresses, the wife did not take an estate for life by implication, or any other interest, but the Court of Appeal (q) held that on the true construction of the will the wife took an estate for life, with power to expend any part of the capital as she might think fit, what was left at her death going to the two daughters.

Devise to heir and others after the death of A.

In cases which are the converse of the last, viz., where there is a devise to the heir and other persons after the decease of A., the implication does not arise, because, as Mr. Jarman points out (r), "there is no incongruity in the supposition that the testator intended the heir to take a share at the period in question, and the entirety in the meantime." Thus in Ralph v. Carrick (s), a

*Ralph v.
Carrick.*

(n) Willis v. Lucas, 1 P. W. 472.

(o) Post, pp. 633 seq. See Dyer v. Dyer, 1 Mer. 414. The point was decided as to personal estate in Re Springfield, [1894] 3 Ch. 603, following the principle laid down in Ralph v. Carrick, infra.

(p) [1905] 1 Ch. 378.

(q) [1905] 2 Ch. 135. The order was made by consent.

(r) First ed. 468.

(s) 5 Ch. D. 984; 11 Ch. D. 873. The earlier cases of Blackwell v. Bull, 1 Keen, 176 (referred to with implied disapprobation by Mr. Jarman, 1st ed. 468); Bird v. Hunsdon, 2 Sw. 342, and Humphreys v. Humphreys, L. R., 4 Eq. 475, some of which related to personal estate, or a mixed fund of real and personal estate, are referred to in the judgment of Hall, V.-C.; in so far as they profess to lay down a doctrine inconsistent with the decision in Ralph v. Carrick, they may be considered as overruled. As to Blackwell v. Bull, Cockshott v. Cockshott, 2 Coll. 432, and Barnet v. Barnet, 29 Bea. 239, see post, p. 648.

testator gave all his real and personal property to his executors, with full power to sell and convert, and upon trust out of the proceeds to pay debts and legacies, and directed that in the event (which happened) of his death without lawful issue, and after the death of his wife and payment of debts and legacies, the whole residue of his property real and personal should be divided in specified proportions among the children of his late aunts (naming them), the descendants of any child then dead taking the share of its deceased parent; and he directed the surplus proceeds of his real estate to be invested to provide for the jointure payable to his wife under their marriage settlement. It was held that, although the testator's coheirs and next of kin were included among the children of his aunts, the wife did not take a life estate by implication. Sir C. Hall, V.-C., relied on the circumstance of the gift being to an unascertained class, and also on the clause expressly providing for payment of the wife's jointure out of the very fund in which she claimed a life estate, as repelling the implication. But the L.JJ. (affirming the decision of the V.-C.) proceeded entirely on the general principle that a devise to the heir and another after the death of A. will not raise a life estate by implication in A.: for as heir he takes the whole, while as devisee he takes a share only. The same principle must, it should seem, govern the case of a devise after the death of A. to one of several coheirs.

Mr. Jarman next proceeds to deal with a number of cases which were decided by the rule of construction known as reddendo singula singulis, and in some of which the question of implication did not really arise. "Where," he says (t), "there is an anterior express devise for life of part of the lands to the person on whose decease the devise in question is to take effect, the implication has been sometimes avoided by having recourse to what may, for convenience of distinction, be called the distributive construction, by which the words after the death are applied exclusively to the lands devised expressly for life; and the words of devise, without these expressions of postponement, are applied to the rest of the property, which, therefore, passes immediately to the devisees: a construction which, doubtless, was adopted in the first instance on account of the improbability that a testator should intend a person Distinction where there is an express anterior devise of part to the person on whose death devise is to take effect.

(t) First ed. p. 469. It will be noticed that in Cook v. Gerrard and Doe v. Brazier no question arose as to whether the person on whose decease the devise was to take effect took an estate by implication: these cases merely illustrate the doctrine of distributive construction.

CHAPTER XIX.

to whom he had expressly given part, to take the rest by implication. But the rule seems not to have been restricted (as this reasoning would imply) to cases in which the devise over is to the heir, but has obtained where such devise was to a stranger, and in which, as the estate would, if the devise were postponed, devolve to the heir in the meantime, and not belong to the devisee for life by implication, there would seem to be no reason for denying to the words of postponement their full effect, in regard to all the subjects of devise.

Cook v.
Gerrard.

“ Thus, in Cook v. Gerrard (u), where the testator, Sir R. Kempe, being seised of demesne lands in fee, and also of the reversion of other lands expectant on the death of A., directed that his wife should have the demesne lands for one year after his death; and then, after stating that he was desirous to continue the capital messuage in the name and blood of the Kempes, he devised the demesnes and the reversion to B., habendum immediately from the expiration of one year next after his decease, and the decease of A., for the life of B., he doing no waste. The testator further directed that B. should, after the death of A., pay three annuities of 20*l.* each by half-yearly payments. The testator died, and the year expired. It was contended that, in order to effect the intention of the testator, the words must be taken distributively: First, because if the lands descended to the testator’s daughter and heir, she might change her name by marriage, and then his intention that the demesne lands should remain in the name of the Kempes would be defeated. Secondly, if A. died within the year after the testator, the annuities given by the will could not be paid, unless B. took the land immediately after the death of A. notwithstanding the year was not expired (v). And, thirdly, if the demesne lands should descend to the heir in the meantime, until the death of A., then he might commit what waste he pleased, and there would be no means to prevent it, which would be directly against the true meaning of the testator. The Court of K. B. held that the words of the will should be taken distributively, and that B. had good title to the demesne lands after the expiration of the year, and before the death of A.

Simpson v.
Hornsby.

“ So, in Simpson v. Hornsby (w), where a testator devised to his (u) 1 Saund. 183, cited 9 B. & Cr. 225.

(v) This argument supposes, that if both were postponed for the life of A., then both would be postponed for the year.

(w) Gilb. Eq. R. 115, 120, s.c.

Simpson v. Hornsby, 1 Pre. Ch. 439, 452, s.c. Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 722; stated from R. L., 9 B. & Cr. 228; see also Boon v. Cornforth, 2 Ves. sen. 276, where, however, the construction was aided by the context.

wife for life all his lands in J., and after the death of his wife, he devised all his lands in J., and certain other lands, and all other his real estate whatsoever, to his daughter B. and the heirs of her body, with remainder to his daughter J. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail. Lord Cowper was of opinion that the wife took nothing by implication, and that she was entitled to a life estate in only those lands which were expressly devised to her; and that the rest of the real estate was intended to pass by the will immediately to B.

“Again, in Doe d. Annandale v. Brazier (x), where the testator gave to B. the rents of a messuage situate in A., for his life, and after the decease of the said B., he gave the same rents, together with the rents of all his other houses and lands in A. aforesaid, unto certain persons for their lives and the life of the survivor, with remainder over. The question was, whether these devisees were entitled to the other lands at A. immediately on the testator’s decease, or not until after the death of B.; and it was decided that the words ‘from and after the decease of the said B.’ were to be confined to the lands devised to B. for his life, and did not postpone the interest of the devisees in question in the rest until that period (y).

“A different construction, however, prevailed in Aspinall v. Petvin (z), where a testator devised his real estate to trustees, in trust to pay one moiety of the rents to his wife E. for life, and the other moiety to his son W. (who was his heir at law), and after the death of his said wife, upon trust to convey the said hereditaments unto W. in fee; but if he died without issue in the lifetime of the wife, then, upon trust, after the death of the wife, to convey the same to testator’s nephew J. in fee. W. died without issue in the lifetime of the wife; and the question was, whether J. was entitled immediately to the moiety of the rents not expressly devised to the wife, and, if not, whether she did not take it by

(x) 5 B. & Ald. 64.

(y) See also Dyer v. Dyer, 1 Mer. 414; Drew v. Killick, 1 De G. & S. 266, (where the words of the will seemed to point to the distributive construction); Simmons v. Rudall, 1 Sim. N. S. 115, (devise in fee with executory gift over to strangers of that “together with” the residue).

(z) 1 S. & St. 544. “It was ingeniously argued in this case that, as J. was heir, as well to the testator as to W., in the events on which the estate was given to him, namely, the death to

W. without issue, it came within the principle of the case of an estate given to the heir after the death of the widow; but the answer to this reasoning is, that in those events the vacant interest did not necessarily devolve upon J., as W. in his lifetime might have devised or otherwise aliened it, and, consequently, the argument founded on the absurdity of his taking both did not apply.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.) But see Doe d. Driver v. Bowling, 5 B. & Ald. 722.

CHAPTER XIX.

implication (a). Sir J. Leach, V.-C., after very clearly laying down the general rule as before stated, considered this to be the common case of a devise to a stranger after the death of A.; and that, accordingly, no estate was raised in E. by implication, but the moiety in question for her life descended to the testator's heir at law.

Remarks on Aspinall v.
Petwin.

"It is remarkable that the point suggested by the class of cases under consideration was not presented to the view of the Court in this case, namely, that the words referring to the death of the wife applied exclusively to the moiety before devised to her, and did not prevent W. (aa) from taking the other moiety immediately; but, perhaps the frame of the will scarcely admitted of such a construction. The words 'after the death of my wife' had been just before used in reference to both moieties in the devise to the son, and the terms of the executory trust seemed to import that no conveyance was to be made to J. until the death of the wife.

Distributive construction not the general rule.

"This decision, therefore, appears not to clash or interfere with the preceding cases, which might seem to have established the distributive construction as the ordinary rule; but we are taught not so to consider them by a decision, in which all the cases in favour of this construction were treated as standing on special grounds, and as constituting an exception to the general rule.

King v.
Ringstead.

"The case here alluded to is King v. Inhabitants of Ringstead (b), where a testator devised to the widow of his late son T. M. part of a messuage, to hold to her and her assigns for the term of her natural life, if she should so long continue a widow; and from and after her decease, or day of marriage, he gave the same and other real property therein mentioned, unto the four children of his late son T. M., deceased, their heirs and assigns for ever. It was contended, on the authority of the preceding cases, that the words were to be construed distributively, and, consequently, that the children took an immediate estate in possession in the property not devised to the wife; but the Court, after taking an elaborate view of those cases, and showing that in each of them the intention of the testator, as collected from the context of the will, required such a construction, considered that they did not apply to the will under discussion, where the words must be construed in their ordinary grammatical sense. It was held, therefore, that, until the death or marriage of the son's widow,

(a) "No arguments appear to have been advanced in favour of the hypothesis, that if the widow did not take, it descended to the heir."

(aa) Thus in Mr. Jarman's text; but "W." seems to be a misprint for "J."

(b) 9 B. & Cr. 218. See Rhodes v. Rhodes, 7 App. Ca. 192.

the estate not devised to her descended to the testator's heir at law. CHAPTER XIX.

"It will be perceived that, as in this case the widow took no implied estate, (the express devise on her decease or marriage not being to the heir of the testator,) the construction adopted by the Court did not involve the difficulty of giving by implication to a person, in the lands not expressly devised to her, an estate corresponding to that which she derived in the lands so devised, in opposition to the maxim, expressio unius est exclusio alterius. Had it been attended with this result, the conclusion of the Court might have been different. Possibly the distributive construction will, in future, be (as it ought originally to have been) restricted to such cases; but, considering how extremely slight is the difference of language in the will which was the subject of adjudication in King v. Ringstead, and in some of the preceding cases, particularly Simpson v. Hornsby, it must be confessed that King v. Ringstead does not place the doctrine on such a footing as to exclude future controversy."

Remarks upon King
v. Ringstead.

In Attwater v. Attwater (c) a testator gave to his cousins A. and B. his freehold house and premises, for their use during the life of each; and at the decease of both gave the same to C., together with his copyhold and leasehold property at N. Sir J. Romilly, M.R., said that although there was considerable conflict between the authorities, he considered that the case was governed by the rule laid down and settled by King v. Ringstead; that C. therefore took nothing in the copyholds and leaseholds until after the decease of both A. and B., and that the customary heir (who was also sole next of kin) took the intermediate interest.

King v. Ring-
stead followed.

However, a few years later, in Lill v. Lill (d), where after gifts to A. B. and C. for their several lives, there was a gift "after their decease" of the same property, together with all the residue of the testator's estate, to the children of X., Romilly, M.R. applied the distributive construction, holding that "after their decease" merely meant that the gift to the children of X. was subject as to the specifically devised property to the life interests of A., B. and C. The learned judge pointed out that "it would be a very strained and inconvenient construction to arrive at the other conclusion" (e).

King v. Ring-stead not followed.

(c) 18 Beav. 330. See also Davenport v. Coltman, 9 M. & W. 481, 12 Sim. 588, where, however, the distributive construction was not suggested, and the income during the wife's life was not claimed by the daughters.

(d) 23 Bea. 446, distinguished in Jennings v. Hanna, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 540.

(e) Attwater v. Attwater was apparently not cited, so that the implied condemnation by the M.R. of his decision in that case was unconscious.

CHAPTER XIX. And in Rhodes v. Rhodes (f), the Privy Council, in applying the distributive construction to the will before them, referred to Rex v. Ringstead in terms of covert disapprobation.

Effect of residuary devise in excluding the implication arising from devise to heir. Mr. Jarman continues (g): "The position that a devise to the heir after the death of A. creates in A. an implied estate for life, supposes that the will does not contain a residuary devise; for a clause of this nature would, by disposing of such intermediate estate, and thereby intercepting the descent to the heir, clearly exclude all ground for the implication. Thus, if a testator devises Whiteacre to his heir apparent or heir presumptive after the death of his wife, and in the same will devises the residue of his real estate to A., (a stranger,) since the estate for life, not included in the devise to the heir, would, if no implied gift were raised, pass to A. as real estate not otherwise disposed of, which might possibly be intended, the residuary devisee, and not the wife, would, it is conceived, take the estate during her life (h).

Application of doctrine to residuary devises. "Another remark is, that where the will contains a residuary disposition of real estate, a devise of particular lands to the residuary devisee, to take effect in possession on the decease of another person, supplies exactly the same argument for implying an estate for life in that person, as a similar devise, in the cases already discussed, to the heir; for to suppose that the testator intends lands, which he has specifically devised to the residuary devisee at the death of A., to go to him in the meantime under the residuary clause, involves precisely the same absurdity as to suppose that an heir is intended to take immediately what is expressly given to him at a future period; and therefore, in the case supposed, A. would, undoubtedly, have an estate for life by implication."

Doctrine of implication in regard to personal estate. 2. Doctrine of implication in regard to personal estate.—Mr. Jarman continues (i)—"The general principles before stated, as governing the doctrine of implication in regard to real estate, it is conceived, are applicable to bequests of personal estate, including terms for years; although certainly the reason on which the doctrine is professedly founded, namely, that the heir is not to be disinherited by any implication other than a necessary one, applies exclusively to real estate (ii).

(f) 7 A. C. 192.

(g) First ed. p. 474.

(h) Stevens v. Hale, 2 Dr. & Sm. 22; James v. Shannon, Ir. R., 2 Eq. 118.

See Re Rawlins's Trusts (Scalé v. Rawlins), post, p. 677.

(i) First ed. p. 477.

(ii) It may be doubted whether there

"In an early case (g), it was held by three justices, that if a man gave a term to his son after the death of the wife of the testator, this shall not raise any estate in the wife, because it does not appear that his intent was so, inasmuch as the son ought not to have it by the law by the death of the testator without any devise, but the executor.

"But in Doe d. Bendale v. Summerset (k), where A possessed of a term of ninety-nine years, determinable on the lives of his daughter B. and J. S., bequeathed the premises to his daughter M. after the death of his daughter B., during the life of J. S.; Willes and Blackstone, JJ., held that B. took an estate for life by implication. A strong probable implication was, they said, sufficient: it need not be a necessary implication. Willes, J., it is said, spoke slightly of the case in Moore; and Blackstone, J., still more slightly of the case in Croke James, which, he observed, was not determined, but was only upon a collateral point.

"If Doe v. Summerset is to be considered as identified with a proposition that the bequest of a term of years to B. after the death of A. gives a life interest to A. by implication, it is as difficult to reconcile it with Horton v. Horton as with sound principle."

Observations upon Doe v. Summerset.

It was indeed followed by Stuart, V.-C., in Humphreys v. Humphreys (l) but both cases were in effect overruled by Ralph v. Carrick (m), which shews that the analogy between a devise of real estate to the heir, and a gift of personal estate to the next of kin, after the death of A., is complete. If, therefore, a testator bequeaths personalty after the death of A. to his (the testator's) next of kin, A. takes a life interest by implication (n). But if the gift after A.'s death is to strangers (o), or is to the testator's next of kin along with other persons, or to persons who happen to be is now any difference in this respect between real and personal estate, for the true reason of the doctrine above stated by Mr. Jarman is that no person's interest should be displaced by conjecture, and this applies equally to next of kin: Pickering v. Stamford, 3 Ves. 492; ante, p. 550.

(j) Horton v. Horton, Cro. Jac. 74; s. c. nom. Burton v. Horton, 8 Vin. Ab. 214, Dev. (Pa.) pl. 3 (a case before the Executors Act, 1830; see Chap. XXI.). See also Rayman v. Gold, Moore, 635, where, however, the point did not arise, as the wife, at whose death the property was devised, was appointed executrix, and became entitled quâ-cunque viâ.

(k) 5 Burr. 2608. The correct name of the case is Roe d. Bendale v. Summerset.

(l) L. R., 4 Eq. 475.

(m) 5 Ch. D. 984, 11 Ch. D. 873, stated ante, p. 632.

(n) Stevens v. Hale, 2 Dr. & Sm. 22. The cases of Cock v. Cock, 21 W. R. 807, and Davies v. Hopkins, 2 Bea. 276, appear to have been decided on this principle.

(o) See Cranley v. Dixon, 23 Bea. 512.

CHAPTER XIX. some (but not all) of his next of kin, this does not give A. a life estate by implication (p).

In James v. Shannon (q) a testator gave all his real estate, including chattels real, in trust for B. and her heirs; if B. died under the age of twenty-one years and unmarried, he gave all his property to A.; he bequeathed a legacy of 500*l.* to A.; it was contended that B. took an absolute interest in the pure personal estate by implication, defeasible on her death under twenty-one and unmarried, but it was held that there was nothing to give her any interest in the personalty by implication, and that in any case any presumption in her favour was excluded by the provision made for her by the will.

Bird v.
Hunsdon.

Mr. Jarman appears (r) not to have approved of the decision in Bird v. Hunsdon (s), where a testator directed, after payment of debts and legacies, the residue of his money to be put into government security, and the interest to be paid to bring up and educate M., adding, "the said M. to have the interest so long as she continues single and no child; and when it shall please God to call her, that money shall come to my brother's and sister's children, all share alike." M. married and had a child; nevertheless, she was held to be entitled to the income during the remainder of her life. Sir T. Plumer, M.R., observed, that the testator contemplated three periods: "First, he gives the interest for maintenance, that is, during minority; and, again, for maintenance after minority, while she lives single and has no child. To the third period, the interval between her marriage and her death, there are no words expressly applicable; but the interest being first given to a favoured object, and the capital not given over till the death of that person, the Court is driven to the necessity of saying either that there is intestacy during the remainder of her life, or that she is to take during her whole life. The latter seems the more reasonable alternative."

The decision has been frequently cited in support of claims to a life interest by implication, but does not appear to have been followed in any modern case of authority (t).

3. Implication may be rebutted.—No implication of a life estate,

(p) Ralph v. Carrick, supra; Re Springfield, [1894] 3 Ch. 603; Woodhouse v. Spurgeon, 52 L. J. Ch. 825; Greene v. Flood, 15 L. R. Ir. 450.
(q) Ir. R., 2 Eq. 118, approved in Harris v. Du Pasquier, 26 L. T. 689.

(r) First ed. p. 479.
(s) 2 Sw. 342. See Blackwell v. Bull, 1 Kee. 176.
(t) Sarel v. Sarel, 23 Bea. 87; Brown v. Jarvis, 2 D. F. & J. 168; Ralph v. Carrick, supra.

in the cases above referred to, arises where the gift after the death of the cestui que vie is to the testator's heir (or next of kin) and there is a residuary devise (or bequest) to some other person (u), or where the gift takes the form of an appointment under a power, and the instrument creating the power contains a gift over in default of appointment (v). In a clear case, such as that of a devise of land to the testator's heir after the death of A., the fact that the testator gives other property to A. does not prevent A. from taking an estate for life in the land by implication (vv). But in a doubtful case, the fact that the will makes an express provision for the person on whose death the gift is to take effect (w) tends to rebut any implication of a life interest. The implication does not arise if the will, after a direct gift to a class of persons, directs that no division shall take place until the death of A. (x).

As to devises in the first instance to survivors.

4. Gifts to Survivors.—Mr. Jarman continues (y): “As a devise to a stranger after the death of A. creates no estate in A. by implication in the meantime, it might seem to follow that a devise to the survivor of several persons would not raise an estate by implication in the whole during their joint lives; but, in the actual state of the authorities, it would be hazardous to advance any such proposition, seeing that, in one instance at least, a different construction prevailed, though certainly not without some aid from the context. A testator (z) devised lands at T. to trustees, in trust to receive the rents and profits during the lives of his four daughters and the survivor of them; and ‘afterwards to pay such rents and profits to and among such survivor, and the child or children of such my daughters who shall first happen to die; and from and immediately after the decease of my said four daughters, my will is, that they do sell the premises, and pay the monies arising therefrom, in four equal parts’ to the children of his daughters. By a subsequent clause, he bequeathed his chattels among his children, except his daughter (u) Stevens v. Hale, 2 Dr. & Sm. 22. Compare Cranley v. Dixon, 23 Bea. 512.

(v) Henderson v. Constable, 5 Bea. 297.

(vv) Per Vaughan, C.J., in Gardner v. Sheldon, Vaughan, 259, citing 13 Hen. VII.

(w) Stevens v. Hale, Cranley v. Dixon, supra; James v. Shannon, Ir. R., 2 Eq. 118, supra. Compare Cockshott v. Cockshott, 2 Coll. 432, post, p. 648.

(x) Barnet v. Barnet, 29 Bea. 239.

The M.R. seems to have treated the direction as meaningless and nugatory.

(y) First ed. p. 475.

(z) Saunders v. Lowe, 2 W. Bl. 1014. For other cases in which the implication arising from the whole will was held to be equivalent to, and to supply the place of a direct gift, see White v. Barber, 5 Burr. 2703; Browne v. De Laet, 4 Bro. C. C. 527; Crowder v. Clowes, 2 Ves. jun. 449; Wainwright v. Wainwright, 3 Ves. 558.

CHAPTER XIX.

H., who was only to receive three shillings a week during her life, or 'until her distributory share were exhausted,' out of his estate at T., for her separate use. The Court was clearly of opinion that the testator never intended to leave all his daughters without any provision until three of them were dead; and with reference to the subsequent clause, which showed that his daughter H. was in his opinion entitled for life, they held all the daughters to take.

As to implication of devise to survivors.

"Cases the converse of the preceding have sometimes occurred, namely, where the income is expressly disposed of during the joint lives of several co-devisees or co-legatees only, with a gift over on the decease of the survivor, thus leaving unprovided for the destination of the intermediate interest accruing in the interval between the determination of the joint lives and the death of the survivor. In several such cases (a), the interest in question has been held to belong to the survivors, either under an implied gift to them, or in virtue of the right of survivorship incident to a joint tenancy; and the latter seems to have been the chosen ground of determination, though this result was only attainable by the rejection of words which, unless controlled by the context, would have had the effect of making the co-devisees or co-legatees tenants in common.

"In Townley v. Bolton (b), the bequest was in these words: 'I give to my sister M. T. and her husband G. S. T. 50*l.* per annum Long Annuities for their joint lives, and after their decease, to go to my own nephew, C. P.' Sir J. Leach, M.R., held, that the gift over being after the decease of the husband and wife, it was plain that the testator intended that the survivor should be entitled.

"Here, too, it is doubtful whether the survivor became entitled by the effect of the implication of a gift in remainder for life, expectant on the determination of the joint lives, or as surviving joint tenant for life, the words 'for their joint lives' (which otherwise would have determined the interest of both on the death of either) being rejected. The latter appears to have been the ground taken in the arguments at the bar" (c).

(a) Tuckerman v. Jeffries, 4 Bac. Abr. Gwillim's ed. 467; Armstrong v. Eldridge, 3 Br. C. C. 215; Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246; all stated post, Chap. XLIV.; Cranswick v. Pearson, 31 Beav. 624; Kelsey v. Ellis, 38 L. T. 471; Chatfield v. Berchtoldt, 18 W. R. 887. But see Re Drakeley's Estate, 19 Beav. 395; Stevens v. Pyle, 28 Beav.

388; and other cases cited, Chap. XLIV.

(b) 1 My. & K. 148; see also McDermott v. Wallace, 5 Beav. 142; Moffatt v. Burnie, 23 L. J. Ch. 591; Draycott v. Wood, 8 L. T. 304; Day v. Day, Kay, 703; Jennings v. Hanna, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 540.

(c) As to gifts to two persons for their joint lives, see Chap. XLIV.

So in Re Buller (d) a gift of income to A., B. and C. in equal sums for life and "on their deaths" over, was held to make the income payable to the survivors and survivor. And in Re Telfair (e) where there was a gift of income to A. and B. "in equal parts, that is to say, that they shall each receive the half amount of the interest during their natural lives," with a gift over after "their deaths," was held to entitle the survivor by implication to the whole income during her life.

A narrower construction prevailed in Rownd v. Pickett (f) where a testator gave A. and B. "each a moiety" of certain income "and at the death of the last survivor" gave the property over: it was held by Bacon, V.-C., that on the death of A. there was an intestacy as to one moiety of the income.

In Armstrong v. Eldridge, and some other cases (g) in which a gift of the whole income to the survivors and survivor of two or more tenants for life was implied, the gift over after the death of the tenants for life was to their children, and this did not affect the construction. But in other cases the Court has laid hold of slight indications of an intention in favour of the children, and has held that on the death of each tenant for life his share goes to his children (h).

In Jones v. Randall (i), a testator bequeathed an annuity, upon trust for A. for life, and after her death to pay and divide the same amongst the children of A. who should happen to survive her, in equal shares if more than one child, and if but one child, then to such only child; such annuity to be paid during the lives of such children, and the life of the survivor of them. It was contended that the survivors were entitled by implication; but Sir T. Plumer, M.R., held that the argument, that because the annuity was for the life of the survivors, therefore the survivors were to take, amounted only to conjecture; the words in question only described how long the annuity was to last; they determined the subject-matter of the bequest, regulating the duration, but not the persons to participate in it: and the children took as tenants in common an annuity for their lives and for the life of the survivor.

Annuity to several for lives of them and survivor.

So in Bryan v. Twigg (j), a bequest of an annuity to the children

(d) 74 L. T. 406.

(e) 86 L. T. 496.

(f) 47 L. J. Ch. 631.

(g) Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246; Alt v. Gregory, 8 D. M. & G. 221; Begley v. Cook, 3 Dr. 662, and other cases cited post, Chap. XLII.

(h) Hawkins v. Hamerton, 16 Sim. 410; Doe d. Patrick v. Royle, 13 Q. B. 100.

(i) 1 Jac. & W. 100.

(j) L. R., 3 Ch. 183. See also L. R., 3 Eq. 433 (similar bequest in the same will): Eales v. Earl of Cardigan, 9 of J. B. equally share and share alike, for and during the term of their joint natural lives or the life of the survivor of them, was held by Sir J. Rolt, L.J., to make the children tenants in common of an annuity which was to endure until the death of the survivor; so that on the death of one his share went to his representatives. With reference to Armstrong v. Eldridge and similar cases (k), he said that where the duration of the annuity was not clearly defined, a gift over on the death of the survivor was material, but was immaterial where the duration of the annuity had already been distinctly marked out as extending till the death of the survivor; and that it was important to observe that in none of those cases were the representatives of the deceased annuitants parties to the suit.

CHAPTER XIX.

Implication
from express gift on death combined with some contingency.

III.—Implication from Gift on Death combined with some Contingency, &c.—Mr. Jarman continues (l): “Hitherto the doctrine of implication has been viewed chiefly in its application to the simple case of devise or bequest on the decease of some person or persons; but it is obvious that the principle may come under consideration in a somewhat more complex form, as where the event, upon which the express devise is to take effect, is the death of a person, combined with some other contingency. For instance, in the case of a devise to B. in the event of A. dying under age; in which case, as there is no devise to A. in the alternative event of his attaining his majority, the question arises, whether he can take the fee (m) by implication in such event. If B. were the testator’s heir apparent or presumptive, there would be no difficulty in arriving at the affirmative conclusion; the case then being evidently analogous to that of a devise to the heir, to take effect in possession on A.’s decease, which, we have seen, raises an estate for life in A. By parity of reason, it would seem that a devise to a stranger, in the event of A. dying under age, supplies no more valid ground for holding A. to take an estate in fee by implication, than is afforded for the implication of an estate for life to a person on whose decease the lands are devised to a stranger: for a testator may intend the fee to descend to the heir on the alternative contingency of A. attaining his majority. And, perhaps, the authorities rightly considered, do not militate against this hypothesis, for though an

Sim. 384; Kelsey v. Ellis, 38 L. T. 471; and Chaps. XXXI. and XLIV.

(k) Vide ante, n. (g).

(l) First ed. p. 480.

(m) As to the old law, see Doe v. Cundall, 9 East, 400, and other cases referred to in Chap. XLV.

estate in fee was held, in one instance, to arise by implication under such a devise to a person who was not the testator's heir (n), yet the construction was founded on reasoning partly derived from the context.

"Thus, in Goodright d. Hoskins v. Hoskins (o), a testator bequeathed unto his son Richard certain leasehold premises called S., to hold the same unto his said son Richard until his (R.'s) son Thomas should attain the age of twenty-one years, and no longer; but in case his said son Thomas should die in his minority, then the testator gave the said leasehold premises unto John and Richard, sons of the said Richard, or either of them, attaining the age of twenty-one years as aforesaid; and he desired that his premises at S. might be quitted and delivered up as aforesaid by his said son Richard; and the testator, in a certain event, revoked, but otherwise confirmed, the said bequest of S. and the other legacies given to his son Richard's family. Thomas attained twenty-one, and was held to be entitled: Lord Ellenborough relying much upon the direction that the premises should be quitted and delivered up as aforesaid by the testator's son Richard, that is, when Richard's son Thomas came of age, to Thomas; 'for to whom else' (said his Lordship) 'could Richard deliver up the possession in that event?' (p).

Gift implied from limitation over if the object died under twenty-one.

"But might not these words (which merely imported by whom the premises were to be delivered up) have been satisfied by their delivery up to any person entitled under or dehors the will? Unless Thomas were to become entitled at twenty-one, the limitation over, in case he died under that age, was certainly very absurd, and the case may be considered as somewhat analogous in principle to those in which a devise has been enlarged to a fee by such a devise over (q).

Remark upon Goodright v. Hoskins.

"This case was much relied on in Davis v. Davis (r), in support of the argument for raising an implied gift to the testator's daughter, from the following words:—'It is my wish that my brother S. be my executor, to arrange, dispose of, and settle all my affairs; and I appoint him guardian to my daughter.' Sir J. Leach, M.R., decided in favour of the implication. He said that it was plain it was not the intention of the testator that his brother should take a beneficial interest, but that he should only arrange and

Davis v. Davis.

(n) Mr. Jarman's description of the case, it will be seen, is not quite accurate, as the property in question was leasehold.

(o) 9 East, 306.

(p) Lord Ellenborough also relied on Roe v. Summerset, which is clearly bad law; see ante, p. 639.

(q) Vide Chap. XLV.

(r) 1 R. & M'y. 645.

CHAPTER XIX. settle his affairs ; and, from his appointment as guardian to the daughter, it was to be implied that the arrangement and settlement was to be for her benefit ; but Lord Brougham, on appeal, reversed this decree, his Lordship conceiving that there was nothing in the language or provisions of the will from which a bequest to the daughter could be safely and reasonably implied. He observed that the cases of Newland v. Shephard (s) and Goodright v. Hoskins (the former of which had been often questioned (t) and the latter had been rested by Lord Ellenborough on special grounds), fell far short of this."

Absolute gift at twenty-one implied from limitation until twenty-one and gift over on death under that age.

The analogy suggested above is closer where there is in the first place an estate devised to be enlarged. Thus in Cropton v. Davies (u), where a testator devised three houses to trustees upon trust, as to the first, for his daughter A., her heirs and assigns ; as to the second, for his daughter B., her heirs and assigns ; and, as to the third, to apply the rents for the advancement and benefit of his granddaughter C. until she attained twenty-one, but in case she should die under that age, then he devised the same to A. and B. and their heirs as tenants in common : all the residue of his real and personal estate he devised to X., Y., and Z. C. attained twenty-one, and the Court of C. P., without saying that the devise alone would have raised a fee by implication, thought that, looking to it and to the other provisions together, the intention was clear to give C. the whole interest in the third house, to go over to A. and B. only in an event which had not happened. If this were not so, the strange consequence would follow that if C. died under twenty-one the house would go over to A. and B., whereas if she attained twenty-one it would go over to the residuary legatees, who were other persons. Such an intent the Court thought could not be presumed from the structure and language of the will.

In Tomkins v. Tomkins (v) there was nothing but a bare devise "to his brother in trust for his eldest son B. till he should attain twenty-one, and, if he should die before twenty-one, then a devise over"; yet it was held that on attaining twenty-one B. took

(s) 2 P. W. 194. In this case (which is often cited), a testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust to apply the income for the maintenance of his grandchildren during minority, but went no further. Lord Macclesfield—"The intention is most plain, that the grandchildren should have the surplus, both of the real and personal estate, after their age of twenty-one."

(t) 3 Atk. 316. "I say nothing as to whether it was rightly decided," per Wood, V.-C., 2 J. & H. 128.

(u) L. R., 4 C. P. 159.

(v) As cited by Lord Mansfield, 1 Burr. 234.

the whole by implication. So, in Gardiner v. Stevens (w), where leaseholds were bequeathed "in trust for A. and B. till B. is twenty-five years old, and in case they, A. and B., should die before B. attains twenty-five," then over, it was held by Wood, V.-C., that, on B. attaining twenty-five, A. and B. became absolutely entitled in equal moieties. And in Wilks v. Williams (x) the same judge treated it as clear that upon a devise or bequest of real or personal estate, upon trust for the child or children of any person until they attain twenty-one, followed by a gift over to a third person in case the children do not live to attain twenty-one, the children, if they live to attain twenty-one, take absolutely. The case itself went somewhat further. The testatrix desired her trustees to invest the residue, and gave the interest to A. and B. equally, and at their decease the dividends were "to be continued to their children till they come to the age of twenty-one." There was no gift over, but the testatrix added, "I constitute and appoint C. and D. trustees for the said A. and B. and their children." The children were held to take absolutely on attaining twenty-one; for the trust during minority was complete without the last clause, which therefore must be looked upon as indicating that, after the children attained twenty-one, the trust for their benefit was still to continue.

But, of course, the children will not take an absolute interest by implication, if in the same event there is an express gift to them of a less interest (a). And it has been held that the event upon which the gift over is to take effect must exactly correspond with that upon which the limited trust is to cease. If the gift over depends on a further collateral event, as on death under twenty-one and unmarried, the implication does not arise (b). And where (c) the trust during minority was for the minor and his mother, with a gift over to her if he died under twenty-one, Sir R. Kindersley, V.-C., held that there was not enough to shew that the minor, if he attained twenty-one, was to be benefited exclusively of his mother.

Other examples of estates by implication arising from a testator having provided for only one of two contingencies will be found in Re Betty Smith's Trusts (d) and Re Blake's Trust (e). In the latter case a testator gave personalty in trust for a married woman for

When this implication fails.

Other examples of contingency, expressly provided for, not occurring.

(w) 30 L. J. Ch. 199.

(x) 2 J. & H. 125. In Paylor v. Pegg, 24 Bea. 105, it was held that the son took by descent.

(a) Savage v. Tyers, L. R., 7 Ch. 356.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Fitzhenry v. Bonner, 2 Drew. 36.

(d) L. R., 1 Eq. 79.

(e) L. R., 3 Eq. 799.

CHAPTER XIX. life, and after her decease, if she left children, in trust for her husband for life, and after his decease upon trust to divide it among the children, but if no child, then upon trust, after the decease of the husband and wife, for other persons absolutely: it was held that the husband took a life estate by implication after the death of the wife, although there were no children.

In Isaacson v. Van Goor (f), there was a gift of income to A., one of the testator's three daughters, with a direction that if either or both of the other two should become widows she or they should participate equally with A. in the income, so that the same should be enjoyed by his said daughters and the survivors or survivor of them during their or her lives or life, with a gift over of the capital upon the death of the last survivor: A. died leaving her two sisters and their husbands surviving her, and Bacon, V.-C., refused to imply a life interest in them.

Implication of life estate from scheme of whole will.

It is hardly necessary to say that if the scheme of a testator's will shews a clear intention to give A. a life estate in his property, effect will be given to that intention, even in the absence of express words. Thus, in Cockshott v. Cockshott (g), the testator disposed of the various portions of his property among his children, without making any express provision for his wife, except that in the event of her ceasing to occupy a certain farm belonging to the testator, his sons should pay her 25*l.* a year during widowhood; all the provisions in favour of the children were expressly directed not to take effect so long as she remained a widow, and it was held by Knight Bruce, V.-C., that she took an interest during widowhood in all the testator's estate.

Hall, V.-C., seems to have approved of this decision in Ralph v. Carrick (h). He also seems to have thought that the decision in Blackwell v. Bull (i) and similar cases might be supported on the ground that "the interest of the widow was more or less connected with the carrying on of a business and supporting a family, which seems to have been a sort of indication as to how the property was to be enjoyed during her life."

In Acheson v. Fair (j), personal property was given "in trust to the use of A. to be disposed of by him" by deed or will among certain persons: it was held that A. took a life estate by implication, chiefly on the ground that an express estate for life in other property had previously been given to him.

(f) 42 L. J. Ch. 193.

(g) 2 Coll. 432.

(h) 5 Ch. D. at p. 995. See also Barnet v. Barnet, 29 Bea. 239, where Romilly, M.R., refused to apply the principle of Cockshott v. Cockshott.

(i) 1 Keen, 176; ante, p. 632.

(j) 3 Dr. & W. 512.

In Re Willatts (k) a testator appointed his wife A. and X. executors of his will, and after giving his wife all his household effects absolutely proceeded: "and at my death A. to have power to sell all property and land belonging to me, and at her death what is left to be divided between M. and N": it was held by the Court of Appeal (reversing Farwell, J.) that this gave A. a life interest, with power to expend any part of the capital as she might think fit, and that M. and N. were entitled to what might remain at A.'s death.

CHAPTER XIX.

Gift of "what is left" at the death of A.

IV.—Implication of Trust.—"Where a testator gives several distinct subjects of disposition to trustees, and then proceeds to dispose of the equitable or beneficial interest in terms applicable to one of those subjects only, there is no necessary implication that he intended the legal and equitable disposition to be co-extensive, though it may be highly probable that he did so, and more especially when the omitted subject is convenient (though not essential) to the enjoyment of the other (l).

No implication that equitable is to be co-extensive with legal disposition.

"As in Stubbs v. Sargon (m), where a testatrix devised to trustees and their heirs her copyhold dwelling-house, (wherein she principally resided,) garden and ground, together with the furniture and effects therein, and the coach-house and stable thereto belonging, and also the ten cottages, and two new cottages built by her, with their appurtenances, at L., upon trust, that the trustees and the survivors, &c., and the heirs or assigns of the survivor, should pay the rents of the said hereditaments to her niece S. S., the wife of G. S., or permit and suffer her to use and occupy the said hereditaments during her life, to the intent that the same hereditaments, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, might be for her separate use; and after her decease to G. S. for his life; and after his decease, upon trust, that the trustees and the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs or assigns of such survivor, should be possessed of and interested in the said hereditaments, in trust for such of the testatrix's nephews and nieces, or grand-nephews and grand-nieces, as S. S. should appoint; and in default of appointment, upon trust that the said trustees and the survivors and survivor of them, or the heirs or assigns of such survivor, should sell and dispose of the said hereditaments and premises (n). And the testatrix directed that the produce of such (k) [1905] 1 Ch. 378; 2 Ch. 135, and see the case cited on another point, ante, p. 632. The order was made by consent.

(l) Mr. Jarman, first ed. p. 483.

(m) 2 Kee. 255, 3 My. & Cr. 507; compare this case with Ackers v. Phipps, 9 Bli. N. S. 430, 3 Cl. & Fin. 665.

(n) "The addition of the word 'premises,' in this instance, afforded ground

CHAPTER XIX.

sale should constitute part of her residuary personal estate. The will contained a general residuary clause (o). Lord Langdale, M.R., held that the furniture and effects did not pass to S. S., but belonged to the residuary legatees, the testatrix having, in the statement of the trusts, employed words only applicable to the real estate; and Lord Cottenham, on appeal, was of the same opinion, observing that it was probable the testatrix intended that the furniture and effects should accompany the copyholds, but she had omitted to declare such to be her intention.

Omission to dispose of equitable interest not cured by implication.

“So, in Jackson v. Noble (p), where a testator gave certain freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates (particularly describing them) and 1,000*l.* Three per cent. stock, to trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, to hold the last-mentioned freehold and leasehold estates and stock unto the trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, in trust for his daughter A. for life, for her separate use; and after her decease, upon trust, to convey and assign the several last-mentioned freehold and leasehold estates and 1,000*l.* stock unto the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of A. And the testator empowered his daughter to grant leases of the freehold and leasehold estates so given to her. Lord Langdale held that as the testator had omitted all mention of the copyhold estates after the devise to the trustees, he could not consider them as comprised in the trust.”

Implication from discretionary trust.

In many cases where property is given to trustees with power to apply it for the benefit of A., in terms which imply that the exercise of the power is left to the discretion of the trustees, it has been held that a trust is created for the benefit of A., whether the trustees exercise the power or not. These cases are considered in another chapter (q).

Gifts implied from powers of selection or distribution.

V.—Implication from Powers. (1) Powers of Selection or Distribution. “Implied gifts may be and often are created by powers of selection or distribution in favour of a defined class of objects; for, where property is given (r) to a person for life, and after his or her decease to such children, relations, or other defined objects as he or she shall appoint, or among them in such shares as the donee for extending the ultimate trust, unless restricted by the preceding trusts to the furniture; but as the proceeds under this trust were to form part of the residuary personal estate, the point was immaterial.”

(o) “This fact is to be assumed, but is not stated in the report.”

(p) 2 Kee. 590.

(q) Chap. XXIV.

(r) The same rule applies where the power of selection or distribution is created by the exercise by the testator of a general power vested in him: White v. Wilson, 1 Drew. 298.

shall appoint, and there is no express gift over to these objects in default of appointment, such a gift will be implied; the presumption being, that the testator could not have intended the objects of the power to be disappointed of his bounty, by the neglect of the donee to exercise such power in their favour" (s).

But the implication only arises where there is some indication that the testator intends the class (or some of the class) to take: in other words, where the power is in the nature of a trust (t); it does not arise from a mere power of appointment. Thus in Re Weekes' Settlement (u) a testatrix bequeathed to her husband a life interest in certain real property, and give him "power to dispose of all such property by will amongst our children"; the will contained no gift over in default of appointment; there were children, but the husband died intestate without having exercised the power, and it was held that there was no gift to the children by implication. It follows that the implication does not arise where the donee of the power has a discretion whether he shall exercise it or not (v). Nor does it arise where the objects of the power are vague and uncertain (w), or where the testator expressly says that he does not intend to provide for them by his will (x), or where the whole beneficial interest in the property is given to a person in the first instance, with a superadded power to appoint to certain objects (y). But the fact that the property is given to the donee of the power for her sole and separate use does not prevent the implication (z).

Power must be in the nature of a trust.

Where implication does not arise.

The leading authorities usually cited for the proposition stated by Mr. Jarman are Brown v. Higgs (a), and Harding v. Glyn (b).

(s) Mr. Jarman, first ed. p. 485. The early cases of Crossling v. Crossling, 2 Cox, 396, and Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. sen. 61, which are opposed to this construction, would probably be decided differently at the present day; see Sugd. Pow. 8th ed. 592.

(t) See Wilson v. Duguid, 24 Ch. D. 244; Moore v. Ffolliot, 19 L. R. Ir. 499.

(u) [1897] 1 Ch. 289, following Healy v. Donnelly, 3 Ir. C. L. Rep. 213. See also Ahearne v. Aherne, 9 L. R. Ir. 144; Re Hall, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 308.

(v) Re Eddowes, 1 Dr. & Sm. 395. Some passages in the judgment of Wood, V.-C., in Joel v. Mills, 3 K. & J. 458, seem to be not quite consistent with principle. See Chap. XXIV.

(w) Bernard v. Minshull, Johns. 276.

(x) Carberry v. M'Carthy, 7 L. R. Ir. 328.

(y) Brook v. Brook, 3 Sm. & G. 280. See Re Brierley, 43 W. R. 36, where a testator gave property to his wife for life, with a power of appointing part of it among his relatives or next of kin, and made her residuary legatee, and it was held that this did not amount to an absolute gift to her with a super-added power of appointment. In Gray v. Gray, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 218, the decision did not turn wholly on the words of the will.

(z) Re Haly's Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 130.

(a) 4 Ves. 708; 5 Ves. 495; 8 Ves. 561.

(b) 1 Atk. 469. See also Doyley v. A.-G., 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 195; Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124; Birch v. Wade, 3 V. & B. 198; Cruweys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 319; Forbes v. Ball, 3 Mer. 437; Witts v. Boddington, 3 B. C. C. 95; Walsh v.

CHAPTER XIX. In Brown v. Higgs the bequest was, "to such children of my nephew S., as my nephew I. shall think most deserving, and that will make the best use of it, or to the children of my nephew W., if any such there are, or shall be." I. died in the lifetime of the testator. Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., and subsequently Lord Eldon, after great consideration, held the children to be entitled under the implied trust. And this decision was affirmed in D. P.

Implied gift in one, not precluded by express gift in another, event.

"And the implication, it seems (c), is not repelled by the circumstance that the testator has expressly given the property to the persons who are objects of the power, in the event of the donee dying before him (d); which event, it is to be observed, would have prevented the power from arising; so that the express gift and the implied one are alternative and not inconsistent.

Implication precluded by express gift in same event.

"An express gift over in default of appointment, in favour of either the objects of the power or any other person, of course precludes all implication" (e), even if the gift over is void for remoteness (f). But a residuary gift is not a gift over for the purposes of the foregoing proposition (g). And a gift over in default of objects of the power does not prevent an implication in their favour from arising (h).

Objects of power and implied gift must be identical.

"A gift arising by implication from a power of selection or distribution," as Mr. Jarman points out (i), "applies to the persons who are objects of the power, and to them only; and consequently, if the appointment is to be testamentary, the gift takes effect in favour of the objects living at the decease of the donee, to the exclusion of any who may have died in his lifetime, and who of Wallinger, 2 R. & My. 78; Grievson v. Kirsopp, 2 Kee. 653; Jones v. Torin, 6 Sim. 255 (as to which see ante, p. 613, n. (z)); Martin v. Swannell, 2 Beav. 249; Fenwick v. Greenwell, 10 ib. 412; Fordyce v. Bridges, 10 Beav. 90, 2 Phil. 497; Burrough v. Philcox, 5 My & Cr. 72; Faulkner v. Lord Wynford, 15 L. J. Ch. 8, s.c., Falkner v. Lord Wynford, 9 Jur. 1006; Penny v. Turner, 15 Sim. 368, 2 Phil. 493; Alloway v. Alloway, 4 D. & War. 380; Salisbury v. Denton, 3 K. & J. 535; Joel v. Mills, ib. 474; Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469; Izod v. Izod, 32 Beav. 242; Re Caplin's Will, 2 Dr. & Sm. 527; Re Haly's Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 130; Acheson v. Fair, 3 Dr. & W. 512.

(c) Mr. Jarman, first ed. p. 485.

(d) Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 J. & W. 431.

(e) Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Beav. 638; Roddy v. Fitzgerald, 6 H. L. Ca. 823; Goldring v. Inwood, 3 Gif. 139; Re Lyons and Carroll, [1896] 1 Ir. R.

383. In Re Jeffery's Trusts, L. R., 14 Eq. 136, Malins, V.-C., is reported as having laid down a different rule of construction in such cases, viz., that the words "in default of such appointment" must be read as "in default of children" notwithstanding that there is an express gift over; but the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, if correctly reported, and intended to be of general application, is overruled by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Richardson v. Harrison, 16 Q. B. D. 85; see the observations of Lord Esher, M.R., at p. 103, where the passage in the text is cited by his lordship as rightly laying down the law on this point.

(f) Re Sprague, 43 L. T. 236.

(g) Re Brierley, 43 W. R. 36; where the general doctrine was much discussed; Re Hall, supra.

(h) Butler v. Gray, L. R., 5 Ch. 26.

(i) First ed. p. 486.

course could not have been made objects of an appointment by will" (j). Consequently if all the objects die in the donee's lifetime, no gift at all can be implied (l). On the other hand, if the power is exercisable by any writing, the objects of the power will take even if they predecease the donee (k), unless upon the true construction of the instrument creating the power the objects of it are required to be living at a deferred period, in which case the implied gift in default will also be to those persons only (l).

"And it should seem," Mr. Jarman continues (m), "that a gift arising by implication from a power of selection or distribution in favour of relations, will apply exclusively to the relations living at the death of the donee, even though the power is not in terms confined to an appointment by will" (n). But whether this principle applies except where the donee of the power is also tenant for life, is not clear (o).

In Carthew v. Enraght (p) the testator directed his trustees after the death of A. to divide 1,000*l.* equally between such ten of the descendants of a certain person as the trustees should think fit; there were only six descendants living at A.'s death: it was held that the 1,000*l.* was divisible among them equally.

Lord St. Leonards doubted who would be the proper person to take by implication, in the case of a power to appoint to one only of a class (q), and previous editors of this work have drawn from his remarks the conclusion that in such a case, "if any gift

Power to appoint to one person only of a class.

(j) Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 R. & My. 78; as to Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 J. & W. 431, and Freeland v. Pearson, L. R., 3 Eq. 658, see 13 Ch. D. 189. In Falkner (or Faulkner) v. Wynford, 15 L. J. Ch. 8, the power was to appoint by deed or will, and, consequently, the gift by implication was not restricted to the objects living at the decease of the donee. See also Wilson v. Duguid, 24 Ch. D. 244. As to what words create a testamentary power of appointment, see Chap. XXIII. An express gift in default of appointment applies to the same class of persons as a simple gift unconnected with any power, Pattison v. Pattison, 19 Beav. 638; Richards v. Davies, 13 C. B. N. S. 69, 861.

(k) Wilson v. Duguid, 24 Ch. D. 244; Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27.

(l) Halfhead v. Shepherd, 28 L. J. Q. B. 248; Re White's Trusts, Johns. 656; Re Phene's Trusts, L. R., 5 Eq. 346; Winn v. Fenwick, 11 Beav. 438; Stothworthy v. Sancroft, 33 L. J. Ch. 708; Lambert v. Thwaites, L. R., 2

Eq. 151; Re Veale's Trusts, 4 Ch. D. 61; Moore v. Ffolliot, 19 L. R. Ir. 499.

(m) First ed. p. 486.

(n) Att.-Gen. v. Doyley, 4 Vin. Abr. 485; and see the observations of Chitty, J., on this case, in Wilson v. Duguid, 24 Ch. D. 251. See also Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469, cited 5 Ves. 501; Birch v. Wade, 3 V. & B. 198. The case of Pope v. Whitcombe, as reported, 3 Mer. 689, is contra, in regard to a power of distribution; but as corrected from R. L., Sugd. Pow. 8th ed. pp. 663, 953, is an authority on the same side. Finch v. Hollingsworth, 21 Beav. 112, and Re Patterson, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 324, are to the same effect.

(o) The question is considered more in detail post, Chap. XLI.

(p) 20 W. R. 743.

(q) Sugden on Powers, 8th ed. 593. In this edition the last sentence of the paragraph as printed is unintelligible. In the 6th ed. it runs as follows: "Which one would be the proper cestui que trust, or the person in whose favour the implied gift was made?"

CHAPTER XIX. could be implied in default of appointment, it ought to be to one person only of the class; but as no gift can be implied to one more than another, it seems that none of the class can take by implication" (r).

But the Court would no doubt avoid this construction if possible. In Sinnott v. Walsh (s) a testator gave freeholds to his two sons, and directed that if either of his sons should die without issue, his part of the property should fall "to whatever existing member of my family he may be disposed to will it to." This term was held to be nomen collectivum, authorizing a testamentary appointment to one or more persons, and the power not having been exercised, the property went to the testator's three children living at the date of his will.

Mode of division.

The persons in whose favour a gift by implication takes effect take as tenants in common in equal shares (t). In the absence of a trust for conversion out and out, they take the property as they find it (u).

Where a person has a power to direct part of a fund to be applied to charitable purposes and to divide the remainder among the testator's relatives, and the donee of the power dies without having exercised it, the bequest is not void for uncertainty, but the Court will divide the fund in equal moieties, and give half to charitable purposes and half to the testator's relatives (v).

If the subject of the implied gift resulting from a power of selection or distribution be real estate of inheritance, the implication confers an estate in fee, if the power authorizes the limitation of estates in fee (w).

Life interest not implied in donee from power of distribution.

Although a power of selection or distribution is usually preceded by the reservation of a life interest to the donee, yet such a gift, where omitted, will not be implied. Thus, it was decided that where a testatrix, after bequeathing her property to her mother, requested her to leave 500*l.* to each of her (the testatrix's) sister A.'s children, (and some legacies to other persons,) and the remainder to her sister B., "to dispose of among her children as she may think proper," B. herself took no interest (x).

Distinction
where there is a direct gift.

But a gift arising by implication must be distinguished from

(r) Messrs. Wolstenholme and Vincent in the 3rd ed. of this work, p. 516.

(s) 5 L. R. Ir. 27.

(t) Re White's Trusts, Johns. 656; Wilson v. Duguid, supra.

(u) Walter v. Maunde, 19 Ves. 424.

(v) Salisbury v. Denton, 3 K. & J. 529.

(w) Bradley v. Cartwright, L. R., 2 C.

P. 511. And see Casterton v. Sutherland, 9 Ves. 445; Crozier v. Crozier, 3 D. & War. 383; Whitelaw v. Whitelaw, 5 L. R. Ir. 120.

(x) Blakeney v. Blakeney, 6 Sim. 52. See Hudleston v. Gouldsburg, 10 Bea. 547; Ramsden v. Hassard, 3 Br. C. C. 236.

those cases where there is a direct gift to a class, coupled with a power of selection or distribution : in such a case the property vests in all the members of the class, subject to being divested by an exercise of the power, and therefore the gift is not restricted to those members who are living at the decease of the donee. Thus, in Lambert v. Thwaites (y) real estate was settled upon trust for the children of W. in such shares as he should by will appoint : there were seven children living at the date of the settlement, one of whom died before W., who died without having executed the power ; it was held that the representatives of the deceased child were entitled to his share.

(2) Other Powers.—A gift is sometimes implied from a power of transferring property to a certain person, or of settling or applying it for his benefit. Thus, in Wheeler v. Warner (z), a testator bequeathed a fund to trustees upon trust for his daughter while she remained single, and he declared that if she married with the consent of the trustees, they should transfer to the husband for his sole use such part of the fund, not exceeding one-third, as they thought proper ; the daughter married during the testator's lifetime, and it was held by Leach, M.R., that the husband was entitled to one-third of the fund.

Discretionary power.

But a mere power does not give rise to any gift by implication. Thus, in Bull v. Vardy (a), a testator empowered his wife "to give away at her death 1,000*l.* ; to A. and B., 100*l.* each, the rest to be disposed of by her will." It was held that in the absence of a disposition by the wife, A. and B. were not entitled to anything.

Power of disposition.

The distinction stated above with reference to powers of selection or distribution, applies also to the kind of powers now under consideration. Thus, in Lancashire v. Lancashire (b), the testator devised real estates to two persons upon trust in either of two events to settle the same or such part thereof as they should think proper upon S. L. and her children, with remainder to the use of A. L. and her heirs, and as to such parts as the trustees should not think fit so to settle, with respect to which the testator gave them absolute discretion, upon trust to convey the same to S. L., her heirs, &c., absolutely. S. L. died after the happening of one of the events, but before any settlement was made : it was held Absolute interest subject to discretionary power.

(y) L. R., 2 Eq. 151. Compare Carthew v. Enraght, 20 W. R. 743, ante, p. 653.

7 Ch. D. 633.

(a) 1 Ves. jun., 270.

(z) 1 S. & S. 304. Followed by Malins, V.-C., in Tweeddale v. Tweeddale,

(b) 1 De G. & Sm. 288, on appeal, 2 Ph. 657.

CHAPTER XIX. that the will contained an absolute gift to S. L., subject to being intercepted by an exercise of the discretion vested in the trustees, and that this not having been exercised, the heir at law of S. L. was entitled.

Implication
of estates tail.

VI.—Implication of Estates Tail.—Mr. Jarman continues (c): “It remains to consider the implication of estates tail. According to the doctrine which has been the subject of discussion in the second section, it is not to be doubted, that if lands were devised to the testator’s heir apparent or heir presumptive in fee in case A. should die without issue, (which, if the will were made before 1838, would import a general failure of issue (d),) this would make A. tenant in tail, with reversion in fee to the testator’s heir—the event described being precisely that which would involve the extinction of an estate tail; and it being impossible to suppose that the testator could intend to make a devise to take effect at a future period, to the very person who would in the absence of disposition take the property by act of law, without intending that it should in the meantime devolve to some other person. The reports, however, do not present exactly such a case.

“It has been long settled, however, that a devise in a will which is regulated by the old law, to a person indefinitely, or to a person and his heirs, with a limitation over in case he die without issue, confers an estate tail, on the ground that the testator has, by postponing the ulterior devise until the failure of the issue of the prior devisee, afforded an irresistible inference that he intended that the estate to be taken by the prior devisee under the indefinite devise, should be of such a measure and duration as to fill up the chasm in the disposition, and prevent the failure of the ulterior devise, which, as an executory devise to take effect on a general failure of issue, would, of course, be void for remoteness. According to some early cases, however, an express estate for life cannot be so enlarged into an estate tail by implication, on the ground that implication can only be admitted in the absence of, and never in contradiction to, an express limitation.” But the contrary was

Whether an express estate for life can be enlarged to an estate tail by implication.

(c) First ed. p. 487. I have not thought it desirable to interfere with Mr. Jarman’s treatment of this subject, but it will be obvious to the reader that it is closely connected with the questions dealt with in Chaps. XLVII. and LII., and that in some ways it would have been more convenient if the whole subject had been treated of in one chapter.

(d) Under the old law before the Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, words referring to death without issue were generally held to import an indefinite failure of issue. What force of context was requisite to explain them to be used in any other than this their ordinary sense was a subject of much intricacy from the accumulation of authorities. See post, Chap. LII.

well established in Mr. Jarman's time by numerous decisions (e). CHAPTER XIX.
Mr. Jarman continues (ee):

"A devise, in a will which is governed by the old law, to a person and his heirs, followed by a limitation over in case of his dying without issue, confers an estate tail, on the ground that the testator has, by the words introducing the limitation over, explained himself to have used the word 'heirs' in the preceding devise in the qualified and restricted sense of heirs of the body.

Devise to A. and his heirs, and if he die without issue, over.

"And it is to be observed, that where the person, on whose general failure of issue a devise is expressly made expectant, is the heir-at-law of the testator, he becomes, by the application of the rule under consideration, tenant in tail by implication, in precisely the same manner as if there had been a prior devise to him and his heirs in the will.

Rule where person whose issue is referred to is heir-at-law of testator.

"If, however, the person, in default of whose issue the estate is given over (or the person to whom it is so given), be not the heir-at-law of the testator, and if the former take no prior estate under the will susceptible of enlargement or modification from these words, an estate will not accrue to him by implication; and consequently the devise, to take effect on the contingency in question, is void for remoteness, as an executory devise limited to arise after an indefinite failure of issue (f). It follows, that if lands, by a will made before 1838, be devised to A. and his heirs, and in case A. and another person die without issue, then over, A. takes an estate in fee simple absolute, the devise over being, for the reason just assigned, incapable of taking effect (ff).

(e) Per Parker, L.C., Blackborn v. Edgley, 1 P. W. 605; Langley v. Baldwin, 1 P. W. 759; Stanley v. Lennard, 1 Ed. 87; Att.-Gen. v. Sutton, 1 P. W. 754; 3 B. P. C. 75; Doe d. Bean v. Halley, 8 T. R. 5; Machell v. Weeding, 8 Sim. 4; Parr v. Swindels, 4 Russ. 283; Key v. Key, 4 D. M. & G. 73; Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Ch. D. 410; Re Bird and Barnard's Contract, 59 L. T. 166. The following cases, which bear on the doctrine of the old law stated in the text, will be found referred to in the 4th edition of this work; Bamfield v. Popham, 1 P. W. 54; Goodright v. Goodridge, Willes, 369, 7 Mod. 453; Daintry v. Daintry, 6 T. R. 307. See Doe d. Cape v. Walker, 2 M. & Gr. 113; Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. C. 143.

(ee) First ed. p. 490. Mr. Jarman does not cite any authority for the proposition that, under the old law, a devise to A. and his heirs, with a limitation over in the event of his dying without issue, gave A. an estate tail, but the doctrine is recognized in the cases cited in note (e). On the same principle, a devise to two men or two women, and their heirs, with a limitation over in the event of their death without issue, made them, under the old law, joint tenants for life with several inheritances in tail: Forrest v. Whiteway, 3 Exch. 367; Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 17 Jur. 157.

(f) Ante, p. 321.

(ff) It has not been thought necessary in this edition to reprint Mr. Jarman's remarks on the cases of Scrape v. Rhodes, Com. Rep. 542; Gardner v. Sheldon, Vaugh. 259; Tenny v. Agar, 12 East, 252; Romilly v. James, 6 Taunt. 263, and Doe v. Lucraft, 1 Moore & Sc. 573, which relate to this branch of the subject: they will be found in the 4th and earlier editions of this work.

CHAPTER XIX.

Effect of stat.
1 Vict. c. 26,
upon the implication of estates tail.

“No implication of an estate tail can arise from words importing a failure of issue, in a will made or republished since the year 1837, unless an intention to use the phrase as denoting an indefinite failure of issue be very distinctly marked (g), as the stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 29, provides, that such words shall be held to mean a failure of issue in the lifetime or at the death of the person referred to, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, by reason of such person having a prior estate tail, or of a preceding gift being, without any implication arising from such words, a limitation of an estate tail to such person or issue, or otherwise; and it is also provided, that the act shall not apply to cases where the words import, if no issue described in a preceding gift shall be born, or if there shall be no issue who shall live to attain the age or otherwise answer the description required for obtaining a vested estate by a preceding gift to such issue (h).

Distinction
where prior devise is in fee or indefinite,
and where expressly for life.

“Under this clause, coupled with the preceding section, which makes a devise confer an estate in fee without words of inheritance, it will generally happen, in cases in which, according to the old law, the prior devisee would have been tenant in tail, by the effect of words devising over the property on the failure of his issue, that he will, under the new rule of construction, take an estate in fee simple, subject to an executory devise in the event of his dying without leaving issue at his death; and this, no doubt was the effect contemplated and designed by the legislature. A different and less desirable result, however, will occur where the prior devise being expressly for life, will not be enlarged by the statute to a fee simple; while, on the other hand, the words importing a failure of issue will nevertheless be restricted.

“Thus, if by a will subsequent to 1837, real estate be devised to A. for life, and in case he should die without issue, to B., A. will take an estate for life only, with a contingent remainder to B., to take effect in the event of A.’s dying without leaving issue at his decease; whether in such case the issue, if any, living at the decease of A., would take the fee by implication, will remain to be decided (i).

Effect where there is no prior gift.

“If, in a will which is subject to the new law, property, real

(g) In Crumpe v. Crumpe, [1900] A. C. 127, where there was a gift over in the event of S. M. dying without male issue him surviving, the Court held that S. M. took an estate tail, not by implication from these words, but because upon the true construction of the whole will the testator’s intention to give S. M. an estate tail was clear.

(h) See this section of the statute further observed upon, post, Chap. LII.

(i) This point is referred to post, p. 674, where the continuation of Mr. Jarman’s remarks is given.

or personal, is given in the event of the death without issue of a person to whom no preceding interest is given, the effect is simply to create a contingent gift to take effect on this event (j), leaving the property in the alternative event undisposed of; for, in such cases there is, of course, the same difficulty in raising an implied gift to the issue living at the death, as where the gift in question is preceded by a life interest in the person whose failure of issue is made the contingency on which such gift is to take effect.

“ If, however, the devisee on the contingency of the failure of issue of another, were the heir apparent or the heir presumptive of the testator, an argument would arise for implying a fee simple in the parent or ancestor of the issue, in order to avoid the supposition (so stultifying to a testator) that he intends to give to a person at a future time, that which will intermediately devolve to him by act of law, without providing for its destination in the meantime.

“ The chief advantages attending the newly enacted mode of construing words importing a failure of issue are, 1st, that it brings all executory limitations depending on such a contingency within the limit prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, (supposing, of course, that the person referred to is existing at or before the death of the testator, or necessarily comes in esse within twenty-one years afterwards,) which limitations otherwise were, we have seen, void for remoteness; and this was the inevitable result whenever there was not sufficient ground for implying an estate tail in the first taker; in other words, when the person whose issue was referred to took no estate under the will, and neither he nor the express devisee was the heir-at-law of the testator; and, 2ndly, that by excluding the implication of an estate tail in the person whose issue is so referred to where he takes an estate under the will, or where he or the express devisee happens to be the heir-at-law of the testator, the new construction has the effect of exempting the interest of the ulterior devisee from its liability to be defeated or destroyed by the act of the prior devisee; the result being, that instead of the ulterior devisee having (as formerly) a remainder in fee expectant on an estate tail in such prior devisee (which of course the latter might have barred by a disentailing assurance), he takes by executory devise engrafted on a preceding fee simple, to arise on the event of the first devisee

Advantages and disadvantages of the new enactment.

(j) The reader will of course bear in mind the provisions of s. 10 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882.

CHAPTER XIX.

dying without leaving issue at his death, the estate of such prior devisee being absolute in the alternative event.

"Against these advantages must be set the inconvenience which is consequent on the rejection of the implication of an estate tail in the first taker, where he takes an estate, expressly restricted to life, and therefore not capable of being enlarged by the recent act to a fee simple; in which case, the existence of issue at his death produces, as already shewn, a vacancy in the disposition."

Example of estate tail being implied since the Wills Act.

In Neville v. Thacker (k), there was a devise to the testator's son T. "during his life, and to his eldest son, and his heirs in tail male; and in default of issue male," then to the testator's other sons for life and their issue in tail male "and in default of male issue," over: it was held that the words "in default of male issue" meant an indefinite failure of male issue, and that T. took an estate for life, with remainder to his eldest son in tail male, with remainder to T. in tail male.

Introductory remarks.

VII.—Implication of Cross-Remainders.—(1) Among Devisees in Tail or for Life.—Mr. Jarman remarks (l): "Where lands are devised to several persons as tenants in common in tail, with remainder over, the question arises, whether, upon the determination of the entail in each share, such share devolves upon the other co-devisees in tail, or immediately goes over to the remainder-man of the entirety. Such reciprocal limitations to the tenants in common in tail, inter se, are, in professional language, denominated cross-remainders. It is settled that in wills, as distinguished from deeds (m), they need not be limited expressly (though in correctly drawn wills they are never omitted), but may be implied from the context. To shew what expressions have been held, in judicial construction, sufficient to raise such implication, is the object of the present chapter.

General principle of the cases.

"The principle has been long admitted, that wherever real estate is devised to several persons in tail as tenants in common, and it appears to be the testator's intention that not any part is to go over until the failure of the issue of all the tenants in common, they take cross-remainders in tail among themselves. The great (k) 23 L. R. Ir. 344.

(l) First ed. vol. II. p. 457. This section formed Chap. XLII. in the original work.

(m) Edwards v. Alliston, 4 Russ. 78; Doe v. Birkhead, 4 Exch. 110. The latter case, though not impugning the principle stated in the text, overrules the former on another ground. And see Doe v. Wainwright, 5 T. R. 427; Doe v. Dorvell, ib. 518. As to marriage articles see Duke of Richmond's Case, 2 Coll. Jur. 347.

struggle has been to determine when the words in default of such issue, or other expression, used to connect the devise in tail with the succeeding limitation, may be construed to demonstrate such an intention. In order to place this subject fully before the reader, it will be convenient briefly to trace the steps by which the rule has been gradually placed on, or rather restored to, its present enlarged and liberal footing; and then to state the general conclusions which the cases warrant."

Mr. Jarman then proceeds to state and discuss critically an anonymous case in Dyer (n), Holmes v. Meynel (o), Wright v. Holford (p), Phipard v. Mansfield (q), Atherton v. Pye (r), Watson v. Foxon (s), Roe d. Wren v. Clayton (t), Doe d. Gorges v. Webb (u), Green v. Stephens (v), Doe d. Southouse v. Jenkins (w), Livesey v. Harding (x), which clearly establish the general principle that if land is devised to two or more persons as tenants in common in tail, "and if they happen to die without issue," or "in default of such issue," then over, cross-remainders between them will be implied. The same authorities have also settled that the construction is not affected by the number of the devisees, or by the fact that the limitation is to the devisees and the heirs of their "respective" bodies (y).

Mr. Jarman continues (z): "Here closes the long line of cases establishing the operation of the words 'in default of such issue,' and other similar expressions, to raise cross-remainders among devisees in tail. It may seem to be extraordinary that so large an assemblage of decisions should have grown up in relation to a

CHAPTER XIX.

What expressions raise cross-remainders.

General observations upon the cases.

(n) 303 b, 13 Eliz., sometimes erroneously referred to as Clache's Case, as to which see below, p. 664 (devise over if all the devisees died without issue).

(o) Raym. 452, 2 Show. 136 (in case the devisees died without issue).

(p) Cowp. 31, 2 Ed. 239 nom. Wright v. Lord Cadogan; Amb. 468 nom. Wright v. Englefield (to daughters in tail, and for default of such issue).

(q) Cowp. 797 (to three in tail, and in default of such issue).

(r) 4 T. R. 710 (class gift to daughters in tail and in default of such issue).

(s) 2 East, 36 (class gift to children, and the heirs of their respective bodies, and for default of such issue). See also Staunton v. Peck, 2 Cox, 8, where Lord Kenyon, then M.R., had made a similar decision in regard to the word "respective," but without the same explicit denial of the doctrine respecting it.

(t) 6 East, 628; affirmed in D. P. 1 Dow. 384, Sug. Prop. 283 (several stocks of issue).

(u) 1 Taun. 234 (devise to three in tail respectively, and in default, &c.).

(v) 12 Ves. 419, 17 Ves. 64 (to B., C. and D. and their several and respective heirs for ever, and in default of such issue over).

(w) 3 M. & Pay. 59, 5 Bing. 469 (for want of issue males).

(x) 1 R. & My. 636 (and for default of such issue).

(y) More recent cases to the same effect are Powell v. Howells, L. R., 3 Q. B. 655; Hannaford v. Hannaford, L. R., 7 Q. B. 116; Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 17 Jur. 157. And see the general principle stated in Re Hudson, post p. 672.

(z) First ed. vol. II. p. 474. It has not been thought necessary in this edition to set out the cases referred to by Mr. Jarman, as the principles are now well established. The reader is referred to the former editions of this work.

CHAPTER XIX. point which appeared to have been determined more than two centuries ago (a); but the reluctance evinced by some of the Judges of an early day to admit the implication between more devisees than two, the pertinacious retention, in terms at least, of the distinction in regard to that number, by several of their successors until a much later period, and more particularly the exception to the implication-doctrine, founded on the words 'several' and 'respective,' introduced by Comber v. Hill (b), Williams v. Browne (c), and Davenport v. Oldis (d) (which was too absurd to be submitted to even with such reiterated adjudication in its favour), are the sources from which the controversies have sprung that have rendered one of the simplest doctrines of testamentary construction in our books one of the most voluminous.

"Lord Kenyon's attack upon Comber v. Hill and that line of cases, in Watson v. Foxon, was certainly bold, recognized as they had repeatedly been by his immediate predecessor; but as his Lordship's decision has been since, after much consideration, confirmed in Doe v. Webb (f) and Green v. Stephens (g), we may confidently hope that the argument founded on the words 'several' or 'respective,' (h), or the exploded distinction in regard to the number of the devisees (which is equally untenable upon principle and authority), will never more be seriously advanced in a court of justice."

Cross-remainders implied from gift over on failure of issue at death.

Cross-remainders have also been implied where the gift over was on failure of issue at a particular period. Thus, in Maden v. Taylor (i), where a testator devised freehold property in trust for his nieces A., B., C., and D., as tenants in common for life, and after the death of any of them, in trust as to her part for her children and the heirs of their bodies; and in case any of the nieces should die without leaving issue living at her death, then for the survivors or survivor of the nieces, and the heirs of her and their body and bodies; and in case all the nieces but one should die without leaving lawful issue, then for such only or surviving niece and the

(a) See Anon. Dyer, 303 b; Holmes v. Meynell, Raym. 452, 2 Show. 136; and Taafe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. C. at pp. 80-81 (per Lord Westbury, C.).

(b) 2 Stra. 969; Lee's Cas. t. Hardwicke, 22.

(c) 2 Stra. 996.

(d) 1 Atk. 579.

(f) Ante, p. 661.

(g) Ibid.

(h) But although the mere fact that the original limitation is to two or more persons and the heirs of their respective bodies, does not prevent the implication of cross-remainders, it must not be inferred that the use of the word "respective" in the gift over would be without effect: see Turner v. Frederick, post, p. 671.

(i) 45 L. J. Ch. 569.

heirs of her body; and in case of a total failure of issue of the nieces (which was held still to mean at the death), then for testator's right heirs. Sir G. Jessel, M.R., said that the true rule was laid down in Doe v. Webb (j), that you must ascertain whether the testator intended the whole estate to go over together. If you once found that to be intended, you were not to let a fraction of it descend to the heir at law in the meantime. You were to assume that what was to go over together, being the entire estate, was to remain subject to the prior limitations until the period when it was to go over arrived. He thought that principle applied to a case like that before him, where it was plain in one event the whole estate was to go over together, although it was possible that another event might happen in which that intention might be disappointed. He therefore held that cross-remainders must be implied between the children of each niece; otherwise, while the particular event was still in suspense, a fraction might, by the death of one child without issue, descend to the heir at law.

In Doe d. Burden v. Burville (k), cross-remainders were implied from a devise to several persons as tenants in common in tail, "with remainder" over. In Pery v. White (l), on the other hand, the same judge (Lord Mansfield) held that cross-remainders were not raised by a limitation of the reversion following a devise to several for life as tenants in common, with remainder to their sons "successively" in tail male, &c. The learned judge thought that "successively" was synonymous with "respectively," and the decision therefore seems to have turned on the exploded doctrine as to the effect of the word "respective" (m), and not on any distinction between the words "remainder" and "reversion." Mr. Jarman remarks (n), "So far as the case of Pery v. White rests upon the force of the word respective, it is now clearly overruled."

Cross-remainders, raised by the words "remainder" or "reversion."

Cross-remainders may also be implied among devisees for life. Thus, in Ashley v. Ashley (o), a testator devised real estate to the use of his daughter A. for her life, and after the determination of that estate, to the use of trustees to preserve, and after her decease, Cross-remainders implied among devisees for life.

(j) 1 Taunt. 234.

(k) 2 East, 47n, 13 Geo. 3.

(l) Cowp. 777, 18 Geo. 3.

(m) See Doe d. Georges v. Webb, 1 Taunt. 234; Green v. Stephens, 12 Ves. 419; 17 Ves. 64.

(n) First ed. vol. II. p. 477.

(o) 6 Sim. 358, as to which see ante, p. 348 n. (p). See also Pearce v. Edmeades, 3 Y. & C. 246; Walmsley v. Foxhall, 1 D. J. & S. 451, 605, as to the share of the child that died without issue.

CHAPTER XIX.

to the use of all and every the child or children lawfully begotten and to be begotten on the body of A., to take as tenants in common and not as joint tenants; and for want of such issue of A., then to the use of another daughter and her children in like manner. The Master reported that the children of A. took life estates only, without cross-remainders between them; but on the latter point, Shadwell, V.-C., expressed a strong opinion against the finding of the Master. He observed that but one subject was given throughout; the expression "for want of such issue" meant want of issue whenever that event might happen, either by there being no children originally, or by the children ceasing to exist. Accordingly he declared that the children of A. took estates for life as tenants in common, with cross-remainders between them for life.

Executory
trusts.

Cross-remainders are more readily implied in executory trusts than in direct devises. It may be further remarked, in regard to such trusts, that in Horne v. Barton (p), where a testator devised his real estate to trustees and their heirs, upon trust for the use and benefit of all and every his children who should live to attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, which should first happen, in equal shares or proportions undivided, for their respective lives, with remainder to their issue severally and respectively in tail general, with cross-remainders, and the testator directed his trustees to execute a settlement accordingly; Sir W. Grant, M.R., held that cross-remainders were to be inserted, not only as between the children respectively, but also as between the families.

Whether express cross-limitation excludes implication.

It was held in Clache's Case (q), that cross-remainders could not be implied where there were express cross-limitations among the devisees in tail in certain events. A testator devised a messuage to his daughter A. and her heirs for ever, and his principal messuage he gave to T. his youngest daughter and her heirs, and if she died before the age of sixteen, A. then living, he willed that A. should enjoy the principal messuage to her and her heirs for ever; and, if A. should die having no issue, T. living, then he willed that T. should enjoy the share of A. to her and her heirs for ever; and if both his daughters should die having no issue, then the testator devised all his said messuages over to the two daughters of H. C. T. died having attained sixteen, without issue, which raised the question whether cross-remainders could be implied

(p) Coop. 257, 19 Ves. 398. But see same double implication in case of a direct devise, Roe v. Clayton, 6 East, 628.

(q) Dy. 330 b.

between the daughters; and the Court held that they could not; for the testator never intended that the principal house should go to A., unless T. had died within the age of sixteen years; and no implication of cross-remainders could arise when an express and special gift and limitation was made by the deviser himself. Dyer thought there was no entail, but a fee simple conditional: but the other three Judges were of a contrary opinion.

The doctrine of Clache's Case was much canvassed in Vanderplank v. King (r), in which Sir J. Wigram, V.-C., decided, after much consideration, that the introduction of an express limitation of cross-remainders among another class of devisees in the same will did not repel the implication; observing, that an express gift of cross-remainders in one event did not preclude the Court from giving cross-remainders by implication in another, where either case was clearly within the scope of all the reasoning upon which Courts have proceeded in implying cross-remainders.

Vanderplank v. King is clearly distinguishable from Clache's Case (s). The latter case was followed in Rabbeth v. Squire (t), where a testator devised real and personal estate in trust to pay the rents of one-fifth part to each of his five sons and daughters for life, and after the death of each, to his or her children whom he or she should leave at his or her death, in equal shares (for life, as it was held), but if he or she should leave none, then in trust for the other sons and daughters for their lives and the issue of such as should be dead, as before directed, and when all his children should be dead the testator gave the whole property in trust for all the children of his five children equally in fee. A daughter of the testator died leaving a son, who died before the last survivor of the testator's five children. The share of the deceased daughter not being expressly disposed of in the interval after the death of her son, it was contended that cross-remainders to the other children of the testator and their children must be implied; but it was held otherwise by Sir J. Romilly, and on appeal by Lord Chelmsford, the testator having himself expressed the event in which such remainders should take effect in favour of those objects; viz. on the death of a child without leaving a child living at his or her death.

(r) 3 Hare, 1. See also Atkinson v. Holtby, 10 H. L. Ca. 313, and Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 12 Ir. C. L. R. 551.

(s) See per Sir E. Kay, J., in Re Hudson, L. R., 20 Ch. D. at p. 412, infra

p. 671.

(t) 19 Beav. 77, 4 De. G. & J. 406. As to implying cross-remainders among tenants for life, see ante, p. 663.

CHAPTER XIX.

Again, in Atkinson v. Barton (u) the M.R. said the rule in Clache's Case was that cross-remainders cannot be implied between objects where there are express cross-remainders between the same objects in different events; and he applied the rule to the case before him, refusing to imply cross-remainders between several stocks or branches of issue on the ground that there were express cross-remainders between the individuals of each stock or branch. But this was going beyond Clache's Case, and involved a denial of Vanderplank v. King, which in Rabbeth v. Squire the M.R. had clearly distinguished: and his decision was reversed by the L.JJ., K. Bruce and Turner.

Turner, L.J., on Clache's
Case.

Sir G. Turner, indeed, went further: he denied that Clache's Case (v) had laid down the supposed rule, and he thus stated the result of the cases: "Cross-remainders are to be implied or not to be implied according to the intention. The circumstance of such remainders having been created between the same parties in particular events is a circumstance to be weighed in determining the intention, but is not decisive upon it" (w).

Implication not excluded by partial express limitation, on the context.

There is, perhaps, no great practical difference between the rule thus stated and the rule deduced from Clache's Case; for no rule of construction is decisive, the intention as shewn by the context being in every case the ultimate test. Thus, in Coates v. Hart (x), where a testator gave the income of one-fourth of his residuary estate to each of four individuals for life, and if either of them should die under twenty-one and without issue, his share of income to go to the survivors for life; and from and after the death

(u) 31 Beav. 277, 3 D. F. & J. 339. The decision of the L.JJ. was varied in D. P., Atkinson v. Holby, 10 H. L. Ca. 313, but the particular question here discussed in the text was not affected by such variation.

(v) He said, that the decision in that case proceeded upon an express limitation over (not stated above), in case T. should die having no children, and not upon a cross-remainder having been before created in a different event, and that it decided "that a cross-remainder could not be implied against an express limitation." Now, the limitation here alluded to is contained in the following clause, which follows the statement in the text: "Provided always that if A. do marry I. H., then testator wills all her part to T. and to her heirs for ever; provided also that if T. die having no children then he willeth all the premises to the said two daughters of H. C.," i.e., if the first proviso took effect, whereby

T. would get "all the premises" (both houses), then both houses were to go over if she died having no children. But A. "refused I. H. and took to husband G.," so that (it is submitted) the L. J.'s "express limitation" did not come into operation. Hence, doubtless, its omission from the text, and (it may be added) from the statement of Clache's Case by Vaughan, C.J., Vaugh. 259.

To prevent a misconception which some of Sir G. Turner's remarks are calculated to produce, it should be added that Mr. Jarman was himself the author of the whole of vol. II. of "Powell on Devises," and that the present treatise was published by him twelve years before Rabbeth v. Squire was heard.

(w) See also per Wood, V.-C., Re Clark's Trusts, 32 L. J. Ch. 525; and per Kay, J., Re Hudson, 20 Ch. D. at pp. 414, 415.

(x) 3 D. J. & S. 504.

of either of the four leaving issue, the principal, to the income whereof their deceased parent had been entitled, was given to such issue; and the testator also gave to such issue the share of the principal to the income whereof their deceased parent would have been entitled if he had survived any other of the four who should afterwards die without issue (not repeating "and under twenty-one"); and if all the four should die without either of them leaving issue, the whole residue was given to other persons. One of the four attained twenty-one and died without ever having a child. It was held that her share of the income belonged to the others by implication for their lives. The clause immediately preceding the ultimate gift over, followed as it was by the gift over only in the event of all four dying without leaving issue, appeared to Sir G. Turner, L.J., to furnish a necessary inference that the survivors were to take during their lives the income of the share to the income of which any of the four dying without leaving issue had been entitled. Sir J. K. Bruce, L.J., thought the age which the deceased legatee attained was immaterial, and that whether she died before or after twenty-one the ulterior enjoyment of the income was intended to be the same.

Whichever way the rule is stated, the result in this case must on the context have been the same.

It has been long settled that, in regard to executory trusts (y), an express direction to insert cross-remainders among another class of objects, or even an express cross-limitation among the same objects, does not exclude the implication.

In the case of executory trusts, express limitation not exclusive of implication.

Thus, in Burnaby v. Griffin (z), where a testatrix devised her real estate to trustees, upon trust to pay one moiety of the rents to her sister E. for life, and after her decease, the testatrix directed the trustees to convey and settle the said moiety unto and upon the daughters of E. as tenants in common in tail general, "with cross-remainders for the benefit of such daughters," remainder to the younger sons of E. successively in tail male, remainder to the eldest son in tail general; and as to the other moiety, upon trust for the testatrix's niece C. for life, "with the same limitations to her daughters and sons as to the children of E."; and if C. should depart this life without leaving any issue of her body living at her decease, the testatrix directed that her sister E. should receive all the rents for life; and in case E. and C. should die without issue of

(y) As to such trusts, see post, Chap. XXIV.

(z) 3 Ves. 266, 268, 274; that is, an express limitation to E. in default of C's issue did not exclude an implied reciprocal limitation to C. in default of E.'s issue.

CHAPTER XIX. their respective bodies, or all such issue should die without issue, she then gave her real estate to four cousins. Lord Hardwicke decreed that, in the settlement to be executed under this trust, cross-remainders were to be inserted not only between the children of E. and C. inter se, but between the two families.

Conclusions from the cases.

Mr. Jarman states the conclusions from the cases as follows (a):—

“1st. That under a devise to several persons in tail, being tenants in common, with a limitation over for want or in default of such issue, cross-remainders are to be implied among the devisees in tail.

“2ndly. That this rule applies whether the devise to be two persons or a larger number, though it be made to them ‘respectively,’ and though in the devise over the testator have not used the words ‘the said premises,’ or ‘all the premises,’ or ‘the same,’ or any other expression denoting that the ulterior devise was to comprise the entire property, and not undivided shares (b).

“3rdly. That the rule applies, in regard to executory trusts at least, though there be an express direction to insert cross-remainders among another class of objects, or a limitation over among some of the same objects; and even in direct devises an express limitation of cross-remainders among another class of objects has been held not to repel the implication.

“4thly. That the word ‘remainder,’ following a devise to several in tail, will raise cross-remainders among them (c).

“5thly. That it is no objection to the implication of cross-remainders that there is an inequality among the devisees whose issue is referred to; some of them being tenants in tail, and others tenants for life, with remainder to their issue in tail (d).

“6thly. That a devise to the children of A. for life and for want and in default of such issue then over, creates cross-remainders by implication for life among such devisees” (e).

(a) First ed. vol. II., p. 479.

(b) See the author's first and second conclusion adopted, Taaffe v. Conmee, 10 H. L. Ca. 81, 85; Hannaford v. Hannaford, L. R., 7 Q. B. 116.

(c) As to “reversion,” see ante, p. 663.

(d) Vanderplank v. King, 3 Hare, 1. “In this case the inequality was produced by the application of the cy-près doctrine in regard to the member of a class who was born after the death of the testator, and is therefore an important case in reference to that doctrine, as to which vide ante, vol. I. p. [293]. See also Lewis on the Law of Perpetuity, 426.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

* (e) “The reader will probably have inferred, from the absence throughout the present chapter of any allusion to the failure of issue clause in the recent Statute of Wills, that the writer conceives that the enactment does not affect the implication of cross-remainders from expressions of this nature [that is, such expressions as those referred to in the first five

* Implication of crossremainders not affected by Wills Act.

It may be added that the first rule applies, though the ulterior devise is on failure of issue at a particular period (f).

(2) Among Devisees in Fee of Realty or Legatees of Personality.—Mr. Jarman remarks (g):—"The question whether cross-executory limitations can be implied among devisees in fee, arises when real estate is devised to several persons in fee, with a limitation over in case they all die under a given age, or under any other prescribed circumstances; in which case it is by no means to be taken as a necessary consequence of the doctrine respecting the implication of cross-remainders among devisees in tail, discussed in the last chapter, that reciprocal executory limitations will be implied among such devisees in fee. The principal difference between the two cases seems to be this:—In the case of a devise to several persons in tail, assuming the intention to be clear that the estate is not to go over to the remainder-man until all the devisees shall have died without issue, the effect of not implying cross-remainders among the tenants in tail would be to produce a chasm in the limitations, inasmuch as some of the estates tail might be spent, while the ulterior devise could not take effect until the failure of all (h). On the other hand, in the case of limitations in fee of the realty, and of absolute interests in personality (both which are clearly governed by the same principle), as the primary gift includes the testator's whole estate or interest, and that interest remains in the objects in every event upon which it is not divested, a partial intestacy can never arise for want of a limitation over.

Cross-executory limitations not to be implied.

"To introduce cross-limitations among the devisees in such a case would be to divest a clear absolute gift upon reasoning merely conjectural; for the argument, that the testator could not intend the retention of the property by the respective devisees to depend upon the prescribed event not happening to the whole, however plausible, scarcely amounts to more than conjecture. He may conclusions above stated]. Such undoubtedly is his opinion; in support of which it will be sufficient to observe, that s. 29 expressly excepts out of the statutory rule of construction, cases in which a contrary intention appears by the will, by reason of a preceding gift being, without any implication arising from such words, a limitation of an estate tail to such person or issue, or otherwise. Here an express estate tail is, by the prior devise, given to the person whose issue is referred to by the words, 'in default of such issue,' &c., from which the cross-remainders are implied; and hence it is clear that this point of construction remains wholly untouched by the enacted doctrine."

(Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(f) See Maden v. Taylor, supra, p. 662.

(g) First ed. vol. II. p. 481.

(h) "Indeed, it should seem that the doctrine against perpetuities would have presented an obstacle to its taking effect at all." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

CHAPTER XIX. have such an intention; and if not, the answer is, voluit sed non dixit.

"If, therefore, a gift is made to several persons in fee-simple as tenants in common, with a limitation over in case they all die under age, the share of one of the devisees dying during minority will devolve upon his representatives, unless and until the whole die under age."

Where interests are vested.

The general principle therefore is, that if a testator gives the whole of his interest in land or personalty to several persons as tenants in common, in such a way that they take vested interests, with a gift over upon the death of all in certain events, cross-limitations will not be implied, because in no case can there be a partial intestacy (i).

Class gift.

So in the case of a contingent gift to a class—as where property is given to such of the children of A. as attain twenty-one, with a gift over in the event of A. not having any child who attains twenty-one—the property either goes to those who acquire vested interests, or it passes under the gift over, and no question of implying cross-limitations can arise (j).

Contingent gift to several nominatim.

But if the gift is to two or more named persons as tenants in common, and the interests given are contingent, with a gift over in the event of all dying before their interests become vested, the event of one dying before attaining a vested interest is not provided for, and this affords a ground for implying cross-limitations to supply the gap (k).

Gift to several for life, with remainder to issue.

Again, where property is given to several named persons as tenants in common during their respective lives, with separate remainders to their issue, and if they all die without leaving issue, then over, cross-limitations will be implied between the primary legatees (or devisees) and their families (l).

(i) Skey v. Barnes, 3 Mer. 335; Templeman v. Warrington, 13 Sim. 267; Cohen v. Waley, 15 Sim. 318; Baxter v. Losh, 14 Bea. 612; Bromhead v. Hunt, 2 J. & W. 459; Edwards v. Truck, 23 Bea. 268; Beaver v. Nowell, 25 Bea. 551; Re Rubbings, 78 L. T. 218; 79 L. T. 313. The decision in Beauman v. Stock, 2 Ba. & Be. 406, is contrary to principle. Most of the cases above cited are stated and commented on at length in previous editions of this work.

(j) Mair v. Quilter, 2 Y. & C. C. 465.

(k) Scott v. Bargeman, 2 P. W. 68; Graves v. Waters, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 234. In Mackell v. Winter, 3 Ves. 236, 536, where there was an express clause of accruer in certain events, but not in all, there was a difference of opinion between Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., and Lord Loughborough on the question whether the shares were vested or not. The M.R. adhered to his opinion in Booth v. Booth, 4 Ves. 402. Mr. Jarman appears to have disapproved of the decision in Scott v. Bargeman, and to have considered it inconsistent with Schenck v. Legh, 5 Ves. 452, 9 Ves. 300; Bayard v. Smith, 14 Ves. 470; and Skey v. Barnes, supra, but his views have not been adopted by the Courts. See Vize v. Stoney, 1 Dr. & W. 348; Graves v. Waters, supra.

(l) Re Clark's Trusts, 32 L. J. Ch. 525; Re Ridge's Trusts, L. R., 7 Ch. 665. As to the cases where a gift of income

But cross-limitations will not be implied so as to divest a vested interest (m). CHAPTER XIX.

In Turner v. Frederick (n) a testator gave two shares of his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for his two daughters A. and L. "respectively" for their lives, and after the decease of his said daughters "respectively" in trust for the maintenance of their "respective" children until such children should "respectively" attain the age of twenty-one, and then to divide the principal amongst such children "respectively" as should attain that age, but if all the children of his said daughters "respectively" or both of them, should die under the age of twenty-one, then "the said trust money" was to be held upon the trusts therein mentioned. A. survived the testator and died leaving children who attained twenty-one; then L. died without issue; it was held that cross limitations were not to be implied, and that as the ultimate trust failed for uncertainty, there was an intestacy as to L.'s share. In this case the repeated use of the words "respective" and "respectively" shewed that the testator intended the shares to devolve independently of one another, while the partial intestacy was not caused by any gap in the limitations, but by the failure of the testator to describe the ultimate legatees with sufficient clearness.

Vested interest not divested.
Separate gifts over.

In Sutton v. Sutton (o) land held for a long term of years was appointed to three persons in severalty, with express cross-remainders in the event of any of them dying without leaving issue living at the time of his decease, and a gift over providing that if all of them should die without leaving issue living at the death of the survivor, then the lands appointed to them, and also the part or portions of the said lands which should come to the survivors or survivor by reason of any of them dying without leaving issue living at his death, should go to certain persons therein named. It was held that cross-remainders were not to be implied with reference to the accrued shares.

Accrued shares.

In Re Hudson (p) the principle on which cross executory limitations are implied was fully considered. In that case a testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon certain trusts for the benefit of his wife, and, subject thereto, upon trust during the lives of his five children and the survivors to divide the income to A. and B. in equal shares for their lives creates a joint tenancy, see Chap. XLIV.

Re Hudson.

(m) Re Clark's Trusts, supra.

(n) 5 Sim. 466.

(o) 30 L. R. Ir. 251.

(p) 20 Ch. D. 406. See also Re Robbins, 78 L. T. 218; 79 L. T. 313, referred to in Chaps. XLII., XLIV.

CHAPTER XIX.

into five equal parts, and to pay one-fifth to each, if living, or, if dead, to their respective children or issue, the latter taking equally between them in classes the fifth share which their parent if living would have taken ; and if any of the testator's children died without leaving children or issue, or such issue should fail during the period aforesaid, the share of such children or issue should belong to the others of the testator's children and their issue in the same way as their original shares, and this clause was to apply to accruing as well as original shares ; and upon the death of the last surviving child upon trust to divide the whole property among the testator's grandchildren per stirpes. The five children were living at the testator's death in 1862 ; one of them died in 1863, leaving seven children, one of whom died in 1871, leaving one child only, a daughter, who died unmarried during the period. Kay, J., after reviewing the cases, said :—

Rules as to the implication of cross-limitations.

“ I deduce from these authorities the following rules :—

“ 1. Cross executory limitations in the case of personal estate, like cross-remainders of real estate, are only implied to fill up a hiatus in the limitations, which seems from the context to have been unintentional.

“ 2. They cannot be implied—as of course cross-remainders could not—to divest an interest given by the will.

“ 3. The existence of other cross-limitations between different persons does not prevent the implication.

“ 4. But where such express cross-limitations are in favour of the very persons to whom the implied cross-limitations would convey the property, that circumstance is of weight in determining the intention.

“ Instances in which such a gap occurs are :—

“ (a.) Where there is a gift to several named persons for their respective lives as tenants in common, and a gift over after the death of the survivor (q) :

“ (b.) Where in a similar gift there are limitations over of the shares of the tenant for life to their respective children or issue for limited interests, as for life or in tail, and then a gift over on failure of issue of them all :

“ (c.) And generally where, there being such a gift over, the preceding limitations do not provide for every event except that contemplated by the gift over, but leave some gap which would occasion an intestacy as to part of the estate.

“ In this case there is a cross-limitation upon failure of any stirps to the other stirpes, but there is no cross-limitation between the individuals of the same stirps, where the Court is asked to imply one. Therefore the difficulty which arose in Clache's Case and Rabbeth v. Squire does not exist here." And his Lordship, after observing that where there is an ambiguity it is proper to look at the consequences of either construction, and pointing out that it was hardly possible to believe that it was intended that any part of the income should go to the legal personal representatives of deceased grandchildren, held that the great granddaughter took only a life interest, and that the intention was, in the event which had happened of her death leaving no issue, that her share should go equally among her uncles and aunts, and the issue of deceased uncles and aunts per stirpes, and that the necessary cross-limitations to effect this must be implied.

(q) Draycott v. Wood, 8 L. T. N. S. 304.

VIII.—Implication of Gifts to Children and Issue.—Even under the old law, where land was devised to a person for life, with a devise over to take effect in the event of his dying without issue living at his death, this had no effect in enlarging his estate for life into an estate tail (r), because, as Mr. Jarman points out (s), "the event described is not that by which an estate tail is necessarily extinguished, for such an estate determines on the failure of issue at any time. The only question, in such a case, would be, whether the words would raise an estate by implication in the issue living at the death. Lord Hardwicke suggested a point of this nature in Lethieullier v. Tracy (t), but the case did not require its determination. It is clear that, where the estate previously devised is in fee, no such implication arises; but this is not quite conclusive, inasmuch as the motive to imply an estate tail in such cases is much less cogent, since the alternative construction gives the prior devisee an estate in fee simple in the event of his leaving issue; whereby he is enabled to make a provision for such issue, if he leaves any: so that the scheme of disposition which is thus imputed to the testator is reasonable, and wholly free from the inconvenience and objection which attach to a similar construction where the devise is for life only, in which the effect of rejecting the implication is, that, in the event of the first taker leaving issue, the property is undisposed of, as it cannot go to either himself, his issue, or the ulterior devisee."

Estate tail not implied from words referring to issue at death.

(r) See Lethieullier v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 774, 793; Jenkins v. Hughes, 8 H. L. C. at p. 593; Coltsmann v. Coltsmann, L. R., 3 H. L. 121.

(s) First ed. vol. I. p. 490.

(t) 3 Atk. 796.

CHAPTER XIX.

Astoimplying
an estate in the issue.

The effect of sect. 29 of the Wills Act, as already mentioned (u) is that if real estate is devised to A. for life and in case he should die without issue, to B., A. will take an estate for life only, with a contingent remainder to B., to take effect in the event of A.'s dying without leaving issue at his decease. "Whether in such case," says Mr. Jarman (v), "the issue, if any, living at the decease of A. would take the fee by implication, will remain to be decided. Such a construction would certainly be convenient, as avoiding the palpable absurdity of making the estate of the ulterior devisee depend on the contingency of there not being issue; and yet, in the alternative event, giving the property neither to A. himself, nor to such issue, but leaving it to devolve to the heir-at-law or residuary devisee (as the case may be) of the testator. There is, however, no authority for implying an estate in the issue living at the death (vv), and the contrary conclusion seems rather more consistent with principle." This view is supported by Monypenny v. Dering (w), where it was argued that a devise over in default of issue of A., a tenant for life, to some only of whose issue an estate was expressly given, shewed that the intention must have been that not some only but all the issue should take; but Sir J. Wigram, V.-C., said, that, admitting such to be the intention, it furnished no sufficient ground for supplying estates by purchase to the omitted issue. He had asked for but did not get any authority for such a proposition. It seems quite clear that no implication in favour of the issue would be made at the present day (x).

Personal
estate.

It has long been settled that "if a sum of money is bequeathed to A. B. for life, and if he dies leaving no issue, then to another, that not does raise any implication in favour of the issue of A. B.; though, if he dies leaving issue, the gift over does not take effect" (a). Accordingly in Ranelagh v. Ranelagh (b), where legacies were given to several persons during their lives, with a gift over in case of the demise of any of them without issue, it was held by Lord Langdale, M.R., that the issue took nothing by implication.

The same rule applies where an absolute interest, and not merely an estate for life, is given. Thus in Dowling v. Dowling (c) a testator

(u) Ante, p. 658.

(v) First ed. vol. I., p. 497.

(vv) Supra, p. 673.

(w) 7 Hare, 588.

(x) See Scalé v. Rawlins, post.

(a) Per Lord Gifford in Greene v. Ward, 1 Russ. 262.

(b) 12 Bea. 200; Webster v. Parr,

26 Bea. 236; Neighbour v. Thurlow, 28 Bea. 33; Re Hayton's Trusts, 4 N.R. 54; Seymour v. Kilbee, 3 L. R. Ir. 33.

(c) L. R., 1 Eq. 442; 1 Ch. 612. The interest of each son was held to be absolute, subject to being divested in the event of his dying without leaving issue.

gave his residuary personal estate upon trust for his four sons, "at the decease of either without lawful issue, such share to revert to the remainder then living, or their child or children": it was held by the Court of Appeal that there was no gift by implication to the children of any who might die leaving issue.

CHAPTER XIX.

The rule also applies even where the testator obviously intends to guard against lapse. Thus in Cooper v. Pitcher (d) a testator bequeathed a legacy to A., and by a codicil provided that if A. should die in his (the testator's) lifetime without issue, his legacy should go to other persons. A. died in the testator's lifetime leaving a child: it was held that the child was not entitled to the legacy. So in Re Coleman and Jarrom (e) a testator devised freehold property "to all and every the children of my late brother J. C., who shall be living at my decease or who shall have died in my lifetime leaving issue living at my death"; one child of J. C. died in the testator's lifetime leaving issue living at the testator's death; it was held by Jessel, M. R., that they took nothing by implication.

Lapse.

Mr. Jarman continues (f):—"As no implied estate [to the issue] arises (as we have seen) from a limitation over in case of the prior devisee or legatee dying without leaving issue at his decease, it should seem that there is the same absence of authorized ground for implying a gift to children from a similar limitation over in default of these objects.

As to implying gifts to children from devise over in default of them.

"Accordingly, in several cases (g), it has been considered that a bequest to a person, and if he shall die without having children, or without leaving children, (which means without having had a child born, or without leaving a child living at his decease) (h), (d) 4 Ha. 485.

(e) 4 Ch. D. 165.

(f) First ed. vol. I., p. 499.

(g) Weakley d. Knight v. Rugg, 7 T. R. 322; Doe d. Barnfield v. Wetton, 2 B. & P. 324. "In Weakley d. Knight v. Rugg, leasehold property was bequeathed to A., and in case she died without having children, then over; and it was held that A., on the birth of a child, was absolutely entitled, the only question discussed being, whether the words meant 'without having a child born,' or 'without leaving a child living at the death.' In Doe v. Wetton, the devise was to A., her heirs and assigns for ever: but if she should die leaving no child, lawful issue of her body, living at the time of her death, then over. Here the only contested point was, whether the first taker had an estate tail, or an estate in fee defeasible on her dying without issue living at her decease; and the Court decided in favour of the latter construction. Lord Eldon, C.J., observed, 'if she had any children living at the time of her death, the estate being given to her in fee, she would have abundant power to provide both for children and grandchildren. Nothing, however, is given to them by this will: they are merely named in the description of the contingency on which the estate is to go over.'" (Note by Mr. Jarman.) See also Abram v. Ward, 6 Hare, 165, and post, Chap. LI., as to gifts over on death without leaving issue.

(h) Some such words as "then over," seem to have been accidentally omitted by Mr. Jarman here.

CHAPTER XIX.

does not raise an implied gift in the children; but the parent takes an absolute interest, defeasible on his dying without having had, or without leaving a child, as the case may be. The rejection of the implication in such a case is not (as already pointed out) productive of any absurdity; for it supposes the testator, by making the interest of the legatee indefeasible on his having or leaving a child, to intend that if there are children, he shall have the means of providing for them.

Where the prior gift to the parent is expressly for life.

“ But it seems that where the language of the will necessarily confines the interest of the parent to his life, the Courts will lay hold of slight circumstances to raise a gift in the children, and thereby avoid imputing to the testator so extraordinary an intention as that the devisee or legatee over is to become entitled if the first taker have no child, but that the property is not to go to the child, if there be one, or its parent.

“ Thus, where (i) a testator having by his will bequeathed 1,000*l.* to his niece A., by a codicil, reciting that she had married indiscreetly, and that he intended to withdraw the legacy out of her power to dispose of it, and out of the power of her husband so to do, did therefore direct his executors to secure his said niece the interest of the said 1,000*l.* independently of her husband, by placing out that sum in trust for his niece, she to enjoy the interest or dividends during her life, and at her decease, without child or children, the principal and interest to be divided among such of her sisters as should be then living. Sir T. Plumer, M.R., was of opinion that by the combined effect of the will and codicil, he was justified in saying that the children took the legacy by necessary implication.

Remark on Ex parte
Rogers.

“ Here, the implication was evidently aided by the testator’s prefatory expressions in the codicil, which showed that he did not intend to deprive his niece of the legacy bequeathed by the will, but merely to qualify it in a manner suited to her altered condition.”

Ex parte
Rogers
followed.

Again, in Kinsella v. Caffrey (j), where a testator gave 50*l.* a year each to L. and T. for their lives, and on the death of either leaving issue (construed children) his annuity to go to such issue; but if L. or T. should die leaving no issue at his death, his annuity was to go to the survivor for his life, and if both should die leaving

(i) Ex parte Rogers, 2 Mad. 449. “ Some of the positions advanced in the judgment in this case must be received with an implied qualification.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.) See the remarks on Ex parte Rogers in Lee v. Busk, 2 D. M. & G. 810, and Webster v. Parr, 26 Bea. 236.

(j) 11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 164. See Champ v. Champ, 30 L. R. Ir. 72 (deed).

no issue, or leaving such and such issue should die under twenty-one, both annuities were to sink into the residue. T. died unmarried, and afterwards L. died, leaving children. It was held by C. Smith, M.R. Ir., that L.'s children were entitled by implication to T.'s annuity. He stated the general rule thus: "First, where there is an indefinite bequest to the parent, and if he die without having or leaving children, to B. In that case it is clear that the children do not take any interest by implication. Secondly, if there is a bequest to the parent for life, and if he die without having or leaving children, to B: if the parent dies leaving children, they are not entitled by implication (k). Thirdly, if, however, in a case such as I have last mentioned, there are matters on the face of the will to raise an inference in favour of the children, the Court is at liberty to consider these circumstances in connection with the bequest over, in the event of the parent dying without having or leaving children, although such bequest over, by itself, is not sufficient to justify the Court inferring a gift in favour of the children."

Accordingly, in Scalé v. Rawlins (l), where a testator gave freehold property upon trust for his niece for life, and after her decease, "she leaving no child or children," he gave it to other persons, it was held that there was no gift by implication to her two children who survived her.

It follows from the general rule as above stated, that if a testator bequeaths property to A., "but if he shall die in my lifetime without leaving children," then to B., and A. dies in the testator's lifetime leaving children, they take nothing by implication (m).

In M'Clean v. Simpson (n), there was a bequest to A., with a direction that if he died before the will took effect, "without leaving any children lawfully to inherit," his share should fall into residue; he died before the testator, leaving children, and it was held that they took the bequest by implication.

It was decided in one case, that a devise by a testator, "in case his wife should be enceinte with one or more children at the time of his death, to such child or children," implied a gift to any children born after the date of the will though before the testator's death, on the ground that it was impossible to suppose the father

Whether a gift to all after-born children is implied in a gift to posthumous children.

(k) See Sparkes v. Restal, 24 Bea. 218. In Wetherell v. Wetherell, 4 Giff. 51, 1 D. J. & S. 134, the grandchildren appear to have taken by express gift, and not by implication.

(l) [1892] A. C. 342, affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal in Re

Rawlins' Trusts, 45 Ch. D. 299. See also Re Hayton's Trusts, 4 N. R. 54.

(m) Addison v. Busk, Lee v. Busk, 14 Bea. 459; 2 D. M. & G. 810; Cooper v. Pitcher, 4 Ha. 483.

(n) 19 L. R. Ir. 528.

CHAPTER XIX.

would provide for a posthumous child, leaving children in esse unprovided for (o). But in Doe v. Blakiston v. Haslewood (p), the Court of C. P. unanimously overruled that decision, thinking that in such a case the testator never contemplated the birth of children in his lifetime, and never intended to provide for them by his will: the will was made in contemplation of a particular combination of circumstances, which not having happened, the will failed. However, in a subsequent case (q), Blackburne (L.C. Ir.); though not called upon to decide the point, expressed a preference for the elder authority.

Trust for infants during minority.

IX.—Miscellaneous Cases.—In Newland v. Shephard (r), an absolute gift of real and personal estate to the testator's grandchildren was implied from a direction to the trustees to apply the "produce" and interest for their maintenance and benefit during minority. But the decision has been questioned (s). In Atkinson v. Paice (t), Peat v. Powell (u), and Hale v. Beck (v), absolute interests were implied from gifts to trustees in trust for A. until he should attain twenty-one (w). But these cases seem to be of doubtful authority. In Re Hedley's Trusts (x) a testatrix gave her residue to a trustee upon trust for her daughter till she should attain the age of twenty-one or marry, and it was held by Hall, V.-C., that there was no implied gift of the capital to her.

Implication arising from a series of limitations.

Where a will contains a series of limitations, or trusts, in favour of a class of persons, such as the testator's own children (y), or the children of another person, or even in favour of persons who are strangers in blood to one another (z), from which it appears that the testator intended the limitations or trusts to be similar, words may be supplied to produce this result. The cases have been already considered (a).

Beneficial gift to executor.

The cases in which executors take the residue of their testator's estate for their own benefit, without any gift to them, are considered elsewhere (b).

If a testatrix gives her residue to her executors beneficially, and

(o) White v. Barber, 5 Burr. 2703.
 (p) 10 C. B. 544.
 (q) Re Lindsay, 5 Irish Jurist, 97; see also Alleyne v. Alleyne, 2 Jo. & Lat. 544; Goodfellow v. Goodfellow, 18 Bea. 356; Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 495. Post, Chap. XLII.
 (r) 2 P. W. 194.
 (s) Ante, p. 646.
 (t) 1 Br. C. C. 91.
 (u) 1 Ed. 479.

(v) 2 Ed. 229.
 (w) See also Tumaley v. Roch, 3 Dr. 720.
 (x) 25 W. R. 529.
 (y) As in Sweeting v. Prideaux, ante, p. 589.
 (z) As in Mellor v. Daintree, 33 Ch. D. 198.
 (a) Ante, pp. 588 seq. See also Davies v. Hopkins, 2 Bea. 276.
 (b) Chap. XXI., and ante, p. 498.

by codicil appoints an additional executor, this will not entitle him to share in the residue (c). CHAPTER XIX.

Before the Land Transfer Act, 1897, if a testator directed (expressly or impliedly) that his land should be sold, and appointed executors to act in carrying out the intentions of his will, this gave them the legal estate, and they could make a good title on a sale (d). Devise to executors implied from trust for sale.

Where a testator gives property upon trust for sale, and directs the proceeds of sale to be invested, and the proceeds to be paid to A. for life, with power to postpone conversion, the general rule is that, until conversion, A. is by implication entitled to the income of the unconverted property (e). Trust for conversion not executed.

A gift of property to A. absolutely, followed by a direction that on any sale of it A. shall pay B. 1,000*l.* out of the proceeds, does not create any implied trust or obligation to sell (f). Trust for sale not implied.

A testator devised land to his son A. contingently on his attaining twenty-six, the rents to be applied for his maintenance in the meantime; if A. died before attaining twenty-six, the land was to go to another son, B., and the testator appointed his daughter residuary devisee. By a codicil the testator revoked all gifts in favour of A., and in lieu thereof gave him a rent-charge: A. attained twenty-six: it was held that B. did not take any interest in the land, and that it went to the residuary devisee (g). Revocation.

Except in those cases in which a definite rule of construction has been established (h), a gift will not be implied from mere conjecture, however probable it may be that if the contingency had been brought to the testator's mind he would have provided for it (i). Conjecture not sufficient.

If a testator declares that his heir-at-law shall not take any part of his real estate, or that none of his next-of-kin shall take any part of his personal estate, this is nugatory and void (k), and cannot operate by implication so as to give the crown a right to the real or personal estate (kk). But a declaration excluding one or some only of the next-of-kin, if made in clear and appropriate language (l), is Implication of gift to next-of-kin, &c.

(c) Hillarsdon v. Grove, 21 Bea. 518, referred to ante, p. 178, n. (l), and post, p. 684.

(d) Davies to Jones and Evans, 24 Ch. D. 190, following principle laid down in Oates v. Cook, Burr. 1684; Bush v. Allen, 5 Mod. 63; Doe v. Gillard, 5 B. & Ald. 785; Anthony v. Rees, 2 Cr. & J. 75.

(e) See Chap. XXII.

(f) Re Elliot, 12 Times L. R. 497.

(g) McKay v. McKay, [1901] 1 Ir. R. 109.

(h) Such as the rules discussed in the earlier sections of this chapter.

(i) Morrison v. Morrison, 2 Y. & C. C. 652.

(k) The general principle is stated in Pickering v. Lord Stamford, 3 Ves. 492, ante, p. 550. See also Chap. XXI.

(kk) Per Stuart, V.-C., Lett v. Randall, 3 Sm. & G. at p. 89, citing A. G. v. Henchman, 3 Myl. & K. 485.

(l) In Sykes v. Sykes, L. R., 3 Ch. 301; Ramsay v. Sheldermine, L. R., 1 Eq. 129; Gould v. Gould, 32 Bea. 391; and Re Holmes, 62 L. T. 383, the respective testators did not express their intention with sufficient clearness.

CHAPTER XIX.

valid, and operates as a gift by implication to the rest of the share of those who are excluded (m). The question whether the widow of a testator is excluded from participation in undisposed-of personalty by a provision being made for her in satisfaction of all claims on the testator's estate, is discussed elsewhere (n).

Devise of easement by implication.

There may be an implied gift of an easement by a devise of land, corresponding to an implied grant by deed. Thus, if the owner of land devises part of it to A. and part to B., and B. can only reach his part by going over A.'s part, he is entitled, by implication, to use a way used by the testator for the purpose of access to the land during his lifetime (o). So where a testator being the owner of a house and an adjoining field devises the house to A. and the field to B., B. is not entitled to obstruct the light coming to the windows of the house over the field (p).

Exclusion by implication.

Where there is a gift to persons as a class, the question sometimes arises whether a particular person is excluded from the class, by implication from the context. In Hanna v. Bell (q) an eldest son was held to be excluded from a gift of residue to "all my children who shall attain twenty-one," the gift over being supposed to shew that he was not included in the class: the wording of the will was special. In Reay v. Rawlinson (r) the testator made a very informal will, by which in effect he devised the D. estate to his sister's eldest son, and directed the rest of the estate to be sold and divided equally among his sister's family (meaning her children); it was held that the eldest son was not excluded.

(m) Vachell v. Breton, 5 Br. P. C. 51; Lett v. Randall, supra; Bund v. Green, 12 Ch. D. 819; Re Taylor, 52 L. T. 839. The case of Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Bea. 318 (if it decided the point) may be considered overruled. Vachell v. Breton was a strong decision and its principle would probably not be extended at the present day.

(n) Ante, p. 550.

(o) Pearson v. Spencer, 3 B. & S. 761. As to the rights of the parties where there are several ways, or no way, see Bolton v. Bolton, 11 Ch. D. 968.

(p) Phillips v. Low, [1892] 1 Ch. 47.

(q) 7 Ir. Ch. 208.

(r) 29 Bea. 88.

CHAPTER XX.

GIFTS BY REFERENCE.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Construction of Gifts by Reference	681	III. Effect of Limitations in Strict Settlement upon Personal Property	692
II. Meaning of "in the same manner" and other referential Expressions	687

I. — Construction of Gifts by Reference.—The effect of referential expressions of certain kinds will be discussed in subsequent chapters of this treatise. Executory trusts are part of the subject of Chapters XXIV. and XL. Additional and substituted legacies (which sometimes take the form of gifts by reference) are discussed in Chapter XXX., and the effect of accruer clauses in Chapter LV.

Referential expressions

Leaseholds or chattels personal are sometimes bequeathed to or in trust for "such person or persons as shall be entitled to" certain real estate, either under the same will, or under some other settlement. The most important cases of this description occur where the real estate is limited by way of strict settlement, and in such cases the only question which usually arises is as to the time when and the person in whom the leaseholds or chattels absolutely vest. This question is discussed later (a). Cases also happen where the real estate is not devised in strict settlement, but is subject to simpler limitations, as where it is settled on a person for life, with remainder to his children absolutely. In such cases the question arises how far the rules governing the real estate apply to the leaseholds or chattels. Thus, in Holmes v. Prescott (b), a testator devised freeholds, as to one-fifth to J. H. for life, with remainder to all and every her child and children who, being a son or sons, should attain twenty-one, and bequeathed leaseholds upon trust for such person or persons as from time to time should be entitled to the freeholds, and to go in the same manner, or as near thereto as the rules of law and equity would permit. J. H. died, Personal estate bequeathed so as to follow real estate.

(a) Post, p. 692.

(b) 33 L. J. Ch. 264.

CHAPTER XX. leaving one child, W. H., a son, who was then under twenty-one, but subsequently attained that age. The will having been made before the Contingent Remainders Act, 1877, the devise of the freeholds failed as to W. H., but two questions arose as to the leaseholds, namely: (1) Whether W. H. took a share of the corpus of the leaseholds, and (2) whether he took a share of the intermediate rents of the leaseholds. Wood, V.-C., answered the former question in the affirmative, and the latter in the negative. It was argued that as the leaseholds were given to the person entitled to the freeholds, it followed that if W. H. did not take the freeholds he could not take the leaseholds, but the V.-C. said that the freeholds and leaseholds were given to the same person, and although there was a rule of law which prevented the gift of the freeholds taking effect, there was no such rule as to the leaseholds. With regard to the intermediate rents, on the other hand, the V.-C. held that this reasoning did not apply: "it is one thing to say that when, by operation of law, limitations fail in taking their complete effect as to real estate, it is not necessary that they should so fail as to personal estate; and it is another thing to say that when the legal construction would give a certain interest in the real estate, you can, under a limitation like this, adopt a different construction as to the leaseholds, or hand them over to any other person than to him who, by construction, would take the real estate. It appears to me that there is a substantial difference between the two points as to whether or not the limitations would fail as to the corpus, and whether or not the interim income would be taken by the persons actually entitled to the real estates under these limitations, in the event of my considering that the gift of the freeholds is contingent." The V.-C. came to the conclusion that the gift of the freeholds was contingent, and it followed that W. H. was not entitled to any share of the interim rents of the leaseholds, although if the trusts of the leaseholds had been declared directly, and not by reference, he would have been entitled to his share of the rents (c).

Distinction between corpus and income.

Interim income of leaseholds bequeathed so as to follow real estate.

Where leaseholds are bequeathed to follow real estate, and there is a gap in the limitations, so that the vesting of the real estate is suspended, the interim income of the leaseholds, in accordance with the general rule stated elsewhere (d), falls into residue. Thus, in Hodgson v. Bective (e), real estate was devised to the second son of A. for life, with remainder to his issue in tail male, and in default of such issue to B. the leaseholds were bequeathed upon trust to

(c) See Chap. XLII.

(d) Chaps. XXV., XXIX.

(e) 1 H. & M. 376. The report in 32 L. J. Ch. 489 is better.

correspond to the limitations of the real estate: A. having no second son, the vesting was suspended during A.'s lifetime: it was held by Wood, V.-C., that the interim income of the chattels real fell into the general residue of the testator's personal estate (f).

CHAPTER XX.

Personal property is sometimes given by will to a person described by reference to the limitations of a settlement of land; if the limitations of the settlement are subsequently altered, the question who is entitled to the legacy may be a difficult one (g).

Legatee described by reference.

Personal property is sometimes given to a class of persons, with the exception of any member who becomes entitled to certain specified property. It seems that as a general rule such a clause will be construed in the same way as if it were a shifting clause, or clause of forfeiture; that is to say, the words will be construed according to their primary and natural meaning (h). Thus, if there is a gift to the children of the person who at the death of the testator shall be tenant for life of a certain estate, "other than an eldest or only son for the time being entitled in tail in remainder expectant on the death of his parent," this exception does not exclude an only son who, by reason of a forfeiture committed by his father, has never become tenant in tail in remainder (i). But a different principle of construction applies in the case of portions under a settlement, for if the portions are limited by a person in loco parentis, in favour of children, except an eldest son, becoming entitled to the estate under the settlement, the doctrine of Chadwick v. Doleman applies (j). It follows that if a younger son succeeds to the estate, not under the settlement, but by descent, the ordinary principle of construction applies (k).

Exception from gift of person "entitled" to other property.

"Entitled" primâ facie means "entitled in possession" (l). But in a case where the personalty was reversionary, the exception of a child "entitled on his father's decease" was held to exclude a son who became entitled in possession to the realty before the reversion fell in, although on his father's death he was only entitled in remainder (m).

Meaning of "entitled."

Residuary gifts are sometimes made by way of reference, as in Re Lindo (n). There a testatrix was entitled to a settled fund

Gifts of residue by reference.

(f) The decree is stated in 10 H. L. C. 659; this part of the decree was not appealed against.

(g) Re Croker, Ir. R., 2 Eq. 58.

(h) See Chap. XXXVIII, sec. i. Shuttleworth v. Murray, [1901] 1 Ch. 819; s.c., sub nom. Law Union v. Hill, [1902] A. C. 263.

(i) Johnson v. Foulds, L. R., 5 Eq. 268.

(j) This is discussed in Chap. XLII.

(k) Sing v. Leslie, 2 H. & M. 68.

(l) Chorley v. Loveband, 33 Bea. 189; Umbers v. Jaggard, L. R., 9 Eq. 200.

(m) Re Grylls' Trusts, L. R., 6 Eq. 589.

(n) 59 L. T. 462. See also Re Donald, 53 Sol. J. 673.

CHAPTER XX. subject to the life interest of A. ; by her will she bequeathed her reversionary interest upon certain trusts for A.'s issue, and declared that A. might, by deed or will, appoint the income of the fund to any future wife for life : by a codicil the testatrix gave her residue upon the like trusts in favour of A. and his issue as were contained in her will with reference to the settled fund. A. married, and by deed appointed the income to his wife. It was held (1) that A. did not take a life interest in the residue ; and (2) that the appointment of the income to his wife, being in the nature of a jointure, did not take effect until after his death.

In Re Courtauld's Estate (o), a testator gave various legacies, and then gave his residuary personal estate in trust for the legatees in proportion to the amounts of their legacies. By a codicil he revoked two of the legacies, and in substitution for them gave increased sums upon the same trusts as those declared concerning the revoked legacies : it was held that the residue was divisible among the legatees in the same way as if the substituted legacies had been given by the will.

Beneficial gift to executor.

In Hillersdon v. Grove (p), a testatrix appointed A. and B. her executors, and gave all the residue of her property "to my executors A. and B.": by a codicil she appointed C. an additional executor and trustee, and directed that her will should take effect in the same manner as if his name had originally been inserted therein as a third trustee and executor ; she bequeathed to him a legacy for his trouble : it was held that he took no interest in the residue.

Construction of gift by reference.

As a general rule, it seems that the Court must follow strictly the terms of a gift by reference, if they are explicit, although the result may be contrary to the testator's probable intention ; but if the gift is by way of executory trust, the Court may vary the limitations (q).

Gift by reference does not have the effect of duplicating
charges—

Testators frequently devise real property to the uses upon the trusts and subject to the powers and limitations of an existing settlement. Such a devise, when carefully drawn, will contain the words "but not so as to increase or multiply charges or powers of charging" ; but without these, or similar words, it is reasonably evident that this is the intention of the testator, and it may be laid down as a general rule (applicable not only to devises of realty, but also to gifts of personalty upon the trusts of an existing settlement) that such referential expressions will not in general be construed so as to give them the general effect of multiplying charges upon the trust estate or trusts in the nature of charges. "Of course, such may be the intention or effect of a particular will. But in the absence of anything in the will to shew such an intention, the rule is that the Court will not impute it to the testator. In the case of Hindle v. Taylor (r), Lord Cranworth held that in almost all cases it is not a reasonable way of reading a trust created by reference to other trusts to consider everything as there repeated and so to make a duplication, as it were, of trusts in the nature of charges. This opinion has been recognised as sound in subsequent cases" (s).

(o) [1882] W. N. 185.

(p) 21 Bea. 518. On the question whether under such a gift executors take beneficially or as trustees, see Chap. XXI.

(q) See Lord Kenlis v. Earl of Bective, 34 Bea. 587, referred to in Chap. XXXVIII; Miles v. Harford, 12 Ch. D. 691, referred to ante, p. 309, and post, p. 696.

But it is clear that this rule does not apply where the charge or power of charging is not limited to a fixed amount, but is limited to a certain proportion of the value of the capital or income of the property. Thus, in Cooper v. Macdonald (t), where the original power was to appoint an annuity not exceeding one third part of the yearly income, Lord Selborne, L.C., said: "If the annuity which a tenant for life was empowered to charge upon the specifically devised estates had been one of (or not exceeding) a fixed annual amount, I should have been of opinion that the general rule stated by Lord Cranworth in Hindle v. Taylor (u), against multiplication of charges under a trust created by reference to other trusts, would have applied, and that it would not have been competent for any child of the testator to charge one annuity of that amount on the property specifically devised, and a further annuity on the share of the residuary estate, though both the residuary estate and the property specifically devised might have been made a security for a single annuity. I think, however, that the case is different when the power is to appoint an annuity not exceeding a certain proportion of the income of the property charged therewith. In such a case, by the addition of other property to be held on the same trusts, 'and subject to the same or like powers,' &c., so as to 'correspond with' those before expressed as to the property specifically devised as nearly as the difference in the nature of the property will admit, the testator has (in effect) increased the total amount of income, of which the maximum annual charge is not to exceed a certain aliquot part. The rule of proportion —unless charge is proportional to value.

(r) 5 D. M. & G. 577.

(s) Per Lord Hobhouse in Trew v. Perpetual Trustee Company, [1895] A. C. 264; Boyd v. Boyd, 9 L. T. N. S. 166, 2 N. R. 486; Basket v. Lodge, 23 B. 138; Sambourne v. Barry, Ir. R., 11 Eq.

140. But see Re Marquis of Bristol, [1897] 1 Ch. 946 (settlement, hotchpot clause).

(t) L. R., 16 Eq. 258.

(u) 5 D. M. & G. 577, 594.

CHAPTER XX.

“Capable of taking effect.”

still holds, but the intention is that the power limited by that rule shall be applicable to the added as much as to the original property” (v).

Where a testator devises or appoints property upon the uses of an existing settlement, or such of them as are “capable of taking effect,” and some of the uses or trusts of the existing settlement have failed by reason of their infringing the rule against perpetuities, or for some other reason founded in law and not in the actual facts which have happened, it is seen that the phrase “capable of taking effect” is prima facie open to two constructions: (1) as meaning what the law allows to take effect, or (2) as referring to the trust which by reason of the deaths of parties and other intervening circumstances are still, in fact, existing, or capable of coming into existence. Until recently, in spite of the fact that the phrase has been in use for generations, the only authority on the point was an interlocutory observation of Sir G. Jessel (w), but the question came before Kekewich, J., in the case of Re Finch and Chew's Contract (x), where the learned judge held that on a literal and grammatical construction the phrase was used not merely to comprehend what is existing or possible in fact, but also what is allowable in law, so that the question may now be treated as settled.

Where personalty is bequeathed to trustees upon trust to purchase lands to be settled to such of the uses, &c., of an existing settlement as “at the time of my decease shall be subsisting or capable of taking effect, but not so as to increase or multiply charges or powers of charging,” the purchased lands are not subject to charges created before the testator's death (y).

Power of
appointment.

Where personalty is given upon such trusts as will best correspond with the trusts declared of certain real estate, and there is a power of appointment over the real estate exercisable by A., this does not operate to give A. two powers of appointment, one over the personalty and one over the realty, but upon A. making an appointment of the real estate the personalty goes to the person who gets the real estate (z).

If personal property is given by reference to a gift of real estate which fails, the gift of personal estate is valid (a).

If realty is settled upon the same uses as some other real property,

(v) L. R., 16 Eq., at p. 266.

(w) In Line v. Hall, 43 L. J. Ch. 107.

(x) [1903] 2 Ch. 486.

(y) Re Berners, 67 L. T. 849. The question sometimes arises whether there is an accretion to the funds originally settled or a new settlement with similar trusts. See Re Walpole's Settlement, [1903] 1 Ch. 928; Re North, 76 L. T. 186; Eustace v. Robinson, 7 L. R. Ir. 83.

(z) Liddell v. Liddell, 74 L. T. 105.

(a) Per Wood, V.-C., 10 Jurist N. S. 508. See Holmes v. Prescott, supra, p. 681.

the words "the same uses" will include powers to appoint uses (b). CHAPTER XX.

In Whiteway v. Fisher (bb) the testatrix bequeathed 200*l.* to trustees on trust to accumulate for twenty-one years, and then to lay out the accumulated fund in repairing certain property, and to pay the surplus to the same persons to whom the property was devised; and then devised the property in strict settlement. She afterwards sold it, and by a codicil bequeathed the purchase money to the original devisee for life absolutely. The codicil did not refer to the 200*l.*; it was held that the legacy of 200*l.* failed.

Failure of a gift by reference by ademption of primary gift.

As to revocation of gifts by reference, see Chap. VII., pp. 183 et seq.

Revocation of gift by reference.

II.—Meaning of "in the same manner," &c.—Where there is an absolute gift, coupled with referential expressions, such as "in the same manner," such expressions, in general, determine not who shall take a legacy, but how the legatee shall take. For instance, where a legacy is given to such of a class as are living at the death of the testator equally as tenants in common, and then follows a gift to the children of A. "in the same manner," all the children of A. take, whether living at that time or born afterwards (c); otherwise if the words be "at the same time and in the same manner" (d).

Gifts "in the same manner," &c.

In Bessant v. Noble (e), the testator bequeathed leaseholds after the failure of previous limitations in favour of A. and his issue in trust for such persons as at the time of such failure of issue should be his (the testator's) next of kin according to the statute, and as if the testator had survived A., and in the like shares as they would be entitled to the same under the same statute. He afterwards bequeathed a legacy in trust for M. for life, and after her decease without issue in trust for his own "next of kin in manner aforesaid." It was held that the persons entitled to the legacy would be the persons who would be the next of kin of the testator living at the death of M., and not the next of kin at his own death.

On the other hand, where the principal gift is to A. for life, with remainder, another gift to A. or to B. or to the remainder-man, "in

(b) Minton v. Kirwood, L. R., 3 Ch. 614 (settlement by deed).

(bb) 9 W. R. 433.

(c) Yardley v. Yardley, 26 B. 38; Pigott v. Wilder, 26 Bea. 90; Re Wilder's Trusts, 27 Bea. 418; Archer v. Legg, 31 Bea. 187 ("agreeably to the instructions contained in my will"); Milsom v. Awdry, 5 Ves. 465 ("in manner aforesaid").

(d) Swift v. Swift, 32 L. J. Ch. 479, 11 W. R. 334.

(e) 26 L. J. Ch. 236.

CHAPTER XX. the same manner" (or the like), will generally import the same (or corresponding) limitations and remainders (f).

In Doughty v. Saltwell (g), the testator bequeathed certain houses in trust for M. for her life, and on her decease for her children, and in case M. should die without issue, "to divide the produce [of sale] among such of the testator's grandchildren, thereafter named, as should be living at her decease; and the testator bequeathed certain other houses in trust for his granddaughters C., S., and H., for their separate use for their lives, and "after her decease in trust for the issue of her body in the same manner and subject to the same conditions and limitations as hereinbefore expressed in the bequest to my granddaughter M.": Sir L. Shadwell, V.-C., held that "issue" meant "children," and "limitations" meant "limitations over."

"In like manner."

In Emes v. Anstee (h), a testatrix directed trustees to make an investment, and out of the dividends to pay annuities of 100*l.* each to her two nieces and her nephew for life, and the capital to their children respectively, and to apply 100*l.* a year in the maintenance of the children of Daniel, a deceased nephew, until twenty-one, when she gave them the capital fund producing this annuity, and then bequeathed her residue in trust for her two nieces and nephew and the children of Daniel "in equal shares in like manner as thereinbefore mentioned with respect to the annual sums of 100*l.* bequeathed to them respectively," and after the decease of the two nieces and nephew the testatrix gave the capital fund out of which their respective shares of dividends were derived equally amongst their children respectively. Romilly, M.R., held that the words "in equal shares" applied only to the children of Daniel, and that the expression "in like manner as is hereinbefore mentioned" merely referred to and repeated what the testatrix had previously said, so that on the death of one of the nieces without issue, the children of Daniel took one-fourth (and not four-sevenths) of her fund between them.

A gift of residue in trust for A. and B., "to be divided between

(f) Ross v. Ross, 2 Coll. 269 ("under the same conditions and restrictions"); Davies v. Hopkins, 2 Bea. 276 (implication); Re Colshead's Will, 2 De G. & J. 690; Re Palmer, 3 H. & N. 26; Sweeting v. Prideaux, 2 Ch. D. 413 (implication); Heasman v. Pearse, L. R., 11 Eq. 522; Giles v. Melsom, L. R., 6 C. P. 532, 6 H. L. 24 ("so specifically devised"); Longdon v. Simpson, 12 V. 295 (where "on the same conditions" was held to mean "in the same manner"); Milsom v. Awdry, 5 V. 465 ("in manner aforesaid"); Smith v. Greenhill, 14 W. R. 912; Re Smith, 45 L. T. 246; and see Re Shirley's Trusts, 32 B. 394 (settlement, "child, children, or otherwise").

(g) 15 Sim. 640.

(h) 33 B. 264. See also Tyndale v. Wilkinson, 23 B. 74 ("to be settled in like manner").

them share and share alike, and to be paid and applied in like manner for their use and benefit as I have directed, the rents and profits of my leasehold premises hereinbefore settled upon them," was held not to settle the residue, but only to give the residue for the separate use of A. and B. (i).

And in Lumley v. Robbins (j), the words "in manner aforesaid" were referred to the mode of enjoyment of the interest, and to be satisfied by making them refer to a tenancy in common and a separate use. "In manner aforesaid."

In Surtees v. Hopkinson (k), the testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees as to one-fourth to A. for life, and after her decease in trust for her children, and in default of children in trust for B., C., and D. and their issue in the same manner as thereafter directed respecting their original shares; as to one other fourth to B. for life, and after his decease in trust for A., C., and D. and their issue in the same manner as directed respecting their original shares; as to one other fourth part upon trust for C. and her children "upon and for the trusts and purposes and with and subject to the powers and authorities and with the like remainder over in default of issue similar to and in all respects corresponding with the trusts, purposes, powers and authorities expressed and declared concerning the one-fourth share hereby bequeathed in trust for A. and her children as effectually as if the same trusts were here repeated," and as to the remaining fourth share in trust for D. and his children with the same referential expressions as are quoted above in the case of C.'s share. D. died unmarried. Sir R. Malins, V.-C., pointed out that the words were not "to go over with the same limitations," but "with the like remainder," and that the words "like" and "corresponding," but not the word "identical," were used, and consequently held that D.'s share went in equal thirds to A., B., and C. for life.

A devise to persons "upon the same conditions" as they hold property has been held to mean upon the trusts of their marriage settlement (l).

Where a testator directed a transfer of 3 per cent. Consols three months after his decease, and gave other legacies of stock "as aforesaid," it was held by Lord Eldon, L.C., that "as aforesaid" merely meant 3 per cent. Consols, and did not refer to the time of transfer (m). "As aforesaid."

(i) Shanley v. Baker, 4 Ves. 732.

(j) 10 H. 621.

(k) L. R., 4 Eq. 98.

(l) Ord v. Ord, L. R., 2 Eq. 393.

(m) Sibley v. Perry, 7 Ves. 522.

CHAPTER XX.

In Meredith v. Meredith (n), there was a devise for the benefit of S. and A. and their children in a certain event, followed by a proviso that on the happening of a certain event the testator gave the said estates to S. and A. and to the issue of their bodies lawfully begotten or to be begotten, and their heirs as tenants in common "as aforesaid." It was held that the words "as aforesaid" implied that the limitations in the first case were to take effect in the second case.

"As stated above."

Where a testator used the words, "I declare again that I leave everything I die possessed of to my dearest mother, for her entire and sole use and benefit as stated above," the words "as stated above" were held not to limit the subject of the bequest, but to mean that the gift was for the sole use, so that the words were superfluous (o).

"So."

In Dillon v. Harris (p), the meaning of the word "so" in a provision to take effect "in case both my said sons should 'so' die unmarried and without leaving lawful issue," was held upon the context to refer to "marrying with the consent of the trustees or executors, or the majority of them."

"Such."

The word "such" is sometimes used as a referential expression meaning "as aforesaid," sometimes to refer to what follows after (q).

It frequently happens that the word "such" is inaccurately used, and must be either rejected or modified, in order to carry out the intention of the testator. Thus, in Howgrave v. Cartier (r), there was a limitation to children who attained twenty-one, with a gift over if there should be no "such" children or they should die before any of them attained twenty-one; the word "such" was rejected as senseless. So in Dowglass v. Waddell (s), the testator used the expression "such issue male or female," although no female issue had previously been mentioned. The word "such" was rejected on the authority of Howgrave v. Cartier (r). In Re Hutchinson (t), the testatrix, after giving life interests to her children, directed that in case of the death of any of her children, the issue of such child should take their parent's share in such shares and proportions as their parent should by will appoint, "in default of such appointment such issue to take equally as tenants in common": Kay, J., held (n) 10 East, 503. See also Davis v. Norton, 2 P. W. 390 ("die without issue as aforesaid," i.e. in lifetime of testator's widow); Walsh v. Peterson, 3 Atk. 194 ("die before the age of twenty-one or without issue as aforesaid"); and Weddell v. Mundy, 6 Ves. 341 ("under age as aforesaid," i.e. without leaving a husband).

(o) Re Kendall's Trusts, 14 Bea. 608.

(p) Dillon v. Harris, 4 Bli. N. S. 321.

See also Bell v. Phym, 6 Ves. at p. 458.

(q) See the observations of Kindersley, V.-C., in Stolworthy v. Sancroft, 12 W. R. 635. As to the effect of the word "such" in a gift over in shewing the meaning of the primary gift, see Idle v. Cook, 1 P. W. 70, cited post, Chap. XLVII.

(r) 3 V. & B. 79.

(s) 17 L. R. Ir. 384.

(t) 55 L. J. Ch. 574.

that the expression "such issue" could not be limited to the grandchildren who could take under an appointment. CHAPTER XX.

In Parker v. Tootal (u) R., the testator's eldest son, was dead at the date of the will, leaving a son T.; the testator had a younger son J.; he devised land to T. for life with remainder to the first son of the body of the said T. in tail male, and for want of such issue "either by my said grandson T. or my said son J.," then over; there was no devise to the issue of J.; it was held that "such issue" meant "issue male." This construction, which is contrary to the referential principle of construction usually applied to gifts over in default of "such issue," is explained elsewhere (v).

In one case (in 1810) (w) a testator devised his estate at S. to various limitations in succession, concluding with one to the first and other sons of B. in tail male, and in default of such issue [of B.] "to such person and persons and for such estate and estates as should at that time and from time to time afterwards be entitled to the rest of his real estate by virtue of and under his said will." The devise of the other real estate included an ultimate remainder to the testator's own right heirs: it was held that the ultimate remainder in fee of the estate at S. vested by descent in the person who was the testator's heir at the time of his death, the ground being that the ultimate reversion was undisposed of by the will. But since stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 3, the heir would take by purchase and not by descent, so that should a similar case arise on a modern will, it will be possible to argue that the words "at that time" operate to give a contingent remainder to the person who is heir at law at the time of the failure of issue. "At that time."

Where a testator devises specific realty to the uses of an existing settlement which contains an ultimate limitation to the testator and his heirs, the specific devise does not include this ultimate limitation; if the uses of the settlement fail, the real estate specifically devised by the testator reverts to him and passes under his residuary devise (x). Ultimate limitation.

If lands be devised to the same uses and trusts and with the same powers, &c., as other lands already settled, the powers will be exercisable by the trustees of the settlement, not by the trustees of the will (y). Powers.

(u) 11 H. L. C. 143.

(v) Chap. LII. The case is also referred to in Chap. L. on another point: ante, p. 588.

(w) Doe d. Cholmondeley v. Masey,

12 East, 589.

(x) Jacob v. Jacob, 78 L. T. 451; 82 L. T. 270.

(y) Taylor v. Miles, 28 Bea. 411.

CHAPTER XX.

Conversion,
investment,
&c.

Various cases.

As to annexing personal to real estate, devised in strict settlement.

In Auldjo v. Wallace (z), a bequest of "200*l.* a year to be invested in the same manner as " a sum of Consols previously given, was held to mean a fund producing that income. In Murton v. Markbey (a), a bequest of leaseholds upon the same trusts, &c., as those declared of the moneys to arise by sale of property previously given upon trust for sale, was held to subject the leaseholds to the trust for sale.

Other cases in which the effect of referential expressions is considered are collected in the footnote (b).

A bequest to persons "hereinbefore named" does not necessarily refer to persons who have been described by their Christian name or surname (c).

A gift of residue to "all the beforementioned pecuniary legatees" is not a gift to them as a class (d).

III.—Effect of Limitations in strict Settlement upon Personal Property, &c.—Mr. Jarman thus states the practice which was usual in his time (e): "When it is intended that leasehold estates, or personal chattels in the nature of heir-looms, shall go with lands devised in strict settlement, they should not be simply subjected to the same limitations; the effect of that being to vest the personal property absolutely in the first tenant in tail, though he should happen to die within an hour after his birth (f); and as the freehold lands in that event pass over to the next remainder-man, a (z) 31 Bea. 193.

(a) 18 Bea. 196.

(b) "As before," Macnamara v. Lord Whitworth, Cooper, 241. "In like manner," Roe d. Aistrop v. Aistrop, 2 Bl. 1228; Lewis v. Puzley, 16 M. & W. 733. "In manner aforesaid," Doe d. Woodall v. Woodall, 3 C. B. 349; Mountain v. Young, 18 Jur. 769, Co. Lit. 20 b. "Under the trusts aforesaid," Re Bowles, [1905] 1 Ch. 371. "On the same terms," Goodtitle d. Cross v. Woodhull, Willes, 592. "Subject to the same restrictions," Barber v. Barber, 1 Jur. 915. "Upon the like trusts and with the like powers," Re Lindo, 59 L. T. 462. "Conditions therein mentioned," Stretton v. Fitzgerald, 23 L. R. Ir. 310, 466 (will with subsequent codicil). "In as ample a manner," Younge v. Coombe, 4 Ves. 101; and see Hare v. Hare, 24 W. R. 575 (settlement). "As also," Macnamara v. Dillon, 11 L. R. Ir. 29. "Her part aforesaid," Doe d. Gibson v. Gell, 2 B. & Cr. 680; Doe v. Stopford, 5 East. 501, and other cases cited post, Chap. XXVII. s. vi. How much of what precedes shall be held affected by referential expressions is a frequently recurring question. See e.g. Baker v. Baker, 6 Hare, 269; Fisher v. Brierley, 30 Beav. 265; Makings v. Makings, 1 D. F. & J. 355 (question whether charge affected life estate as well as remainder). See also Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 19, 26; Leader v. Duffey, 13 App. Ca. 294.

(c) Seale Hayne v. Jodrell, [1891] A. C. 304; In re Holmes, 1 Dr. 321 ("specially named"); Bromley v. Wright, 7 Ha. 334.

(d) Re Gibson's Trusts, 2 J. & H. 656; Nicholson v. Patricksen, 3 Giff. 209.

(e) First ed. vol. ii. p. 507.

(f) Foley v. Burnell, 1 Br. C. C. 274; 4 Br. P. C. 319; Pelham v. Gregory, 3 Br. P. C. 204; Scarsdale v. Curzon, 1 J. & H. 40. But where a junior branch, quoad the estate, has issue before the senior, the chattels do not vest indefeasibly in such issue; they will not so vest until the senior branches are extinct: Pelham v. Gregory, 3 Br. P. C. 204; Re Cresswell, 24 Ch. D. 102, where Hogg v. Jones, 32 Beav. 45, is distinguished.

separation between them and the chattels takes place; but the personal property should be limited over, in case any such tenants in tail (being the sons of persons in esse) should die under twenty-one and without inheritable issue, to the person upon whom the freehold lands will devolve in that event; or, which is the more usual mode, the personalty should be subjected to the same limitations as the freeholds, with a declaration that it shall not vest absolutely in the tenant in tail until twenty-one, or death under that age, leaving issue inheritable under the entail."

Notwithstanding these provisions, a separation of the chattels from the lands will nevertheless occur (whichever form is used), if the tenant in tail should die under twenty-one leaving inheritable issue; for in that case he would take the chattels absolutely, while the lands would descend to the issue. To prevent this separation, the declaration should be that the chattels shall not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail by purchase who may die under twenty-one, but shall at his death devolve as nearly as possible in the same manner as the lands (g). Under this (which is now the ordinary) declaration, the issue will take the whole of the chattels by purchase, instead of such share or interest only as he may be entitled to as of kin to the ancestor.

Modern form of trust for annexing chattels to settled realty.

That the words "by purchase" are necessary in this form of declaration, in order to avoid a breach of the Rule against Perpetuities, has already been noticed (h). But the trust may be so expressed as to be by implication confined to tenants in tail by purchase, as in Christie v. Gosling (i), where freeholds were devised in strict settlement, and chattels were then given on the same trusts and for the same estates as the freeholds, or as near thereto as the rules of law and equity would permit, with a proviso that the chattels should not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail unless he attained twenty-one (without more). These trusts were impugned as constituting in effect a gift to the first tenant in tail who should attain twenty-one,

When not void for remoteness.

(g) Davidson's Prec., vol. iii. pt. ii. p. 1180; vol. i. (5th edition), p. 379; Byth. & Jarm. Conv. (4th edition, by Robbins), vol. vii. p. 966; Key and Elphinstone, 8th ed. vol. ii. p. 666; (in the 9th ed. a more elaborate form is recommended); Wolstenholme, 5th ed. p. 148. The older forms are referred to in Scarsdale v. Curzon, supra, and Harrington v. Harrington, L. R., 5 H. L., at p. 93. In recent years some new forms have come into use, designed to postpone vesting until the tenant in tail comes into possession, without preventing a resettlement. See also s. 24 (3) of the Settled Land Act, 1882; Re Walker, [1908] 2 Ch. 705.

(h) Ante, p. 347.

(i) L. R., 1 H. L. 279; 32 Beav. 58, 1 D. J. & S. 1 (Gosling v. Gosling). See also Martelli v. Holloway, L. R., 5 H. L. 532; Wells v. Wells, W. N., 1890, p. 29.

CHAPTER XX.

and as therefore being too remote, as upon that construction they clearly were (j); and Sir J. Romilly, M.R., adopting that construction, held the gift void. But Lord Westbury differed on the point of construction and reversed the decision. Applying the limitations of the freeholds to the personal estate (as far as the difference of tenure would admit), the effect was (he said) to give the absolute interest to the first tenant in tail by purchase; then came the proviso, in which the words "tenant in tail" must mean tenant in tail by purchase, for it referred to one in whom the personalty would, but for the proviso, have vested absolutely instead of defeasibly. The L.C. therefore held that the gift vested in the infant tenant in tail liable to be divested on his death under twenty-one. And this decision was affirmed in the House of Lords (k).

Lord Westbury observed, "If the will had provided for the event of a tenant in tail by purchase dying under twenty-one leaving a son, by declaring an express trust for such son of the personal estate, the case would have existed of a tenant in tail of the real estates by descent taking the personal estate by purchase; and if in that case the proviso were held to apply to and include such tenant in tail, the whole disposition of the principal of the personal estate would be void for remoteness." In the case before him, he thought, no such trust was either expressed or implied (l). But this is, in effect, what the ordinary declaration does express. Hence the necessity for the words "by purchase." The trust in Christie v. Gosling was saved from remoteness only because it led to the very separation which the ordinary declaration is designed to prevent; it being considered by Lord Westbury (m) that if the infant tenant in tail should die under twenty-one leaving issue, the chattels would devolve under the prior trust to the next purchaser in the series of limitations, not to the issue.

Harrington v. Harrington.

In Harrington v. Harrington (n), personal chattels were bequeathed in trust for the person for the time being in the actual possession of settled lands, to the intent that they should be deemed heir-looms, to be enjoyed with the estates, so far as the rules of law or equity would permit, but so that they should not vest absolutely in any person who by virtue of any settlement

(j) See ante, p. 343.

(k) See the explanation of the decision given by Lord Cairns in Harrington v. Harrington, L. R., 3 Ch. p. 571, 5 H. L. 103.

(l) 1 D. J. & S. 16.

(m) Ib. This point was not noticed in D. P.

(n) L. R., 5 H. L. 87. Lord Westbury's statement of the law is inaccurate. The head-note is also inaccurate in stating that the first tenant in tail was in by descent.

should become entitled to the estates for an estate of inheritance, unless he attained twenty-one, or, dying under that age, should leave issue inheritable under the settlement. The first tenant in tail by purchase died under twenty-one and without issue, and his successor (who was born within a life in being and twenty-one years after the death of the testator) was residuary legatee under the testator's will; consequently he became entitled to the chattels, whether the trust was void, or whether it was valid to the point of vesting them in the first tenant in tail and divesting them without carrying them over to his successor, or whether it was valid to the point of so carrying them over. The claim by the administratrix of the first tenant in tail therefore failed. Lord Cairns seems to have been of opinion that the chattels vested in the first tenant in tail, and were divested on his death under age, but were not carried over to his successor, so that they fell into the testator's residue.

As Mr. Jarman points out (o), the construction of a direction that chattels shall go with settled lands "so long as may be, or so long as the rules of law will permit, has been vexata quæstio." Lord Hardwicke, in Gower v. Grosvenor (p), expressed an opinion that such a direction made the trust executory, and that the Court might make a proper settlement of the chattels; but in Foley v. Burnell (q) and Vaughan v. Burslem (r), Lord Thurlow held that the property vested absolutely in the tenant in tail on his birth; in other words, that the direction did not make the trust executory; and this, though often regretted, is now the settled doctrine (s). It was much canvassed in the House of Lords in Duke of Newcastle v. Countess of Lincoln (t), which arose on marriage articles containing a covenant to assign leaseholds upon the same trusts as freeholds so far as the law would allow, and the trusts being executory, it was decided that the Court had power to modify the limitations so far as to suspend the absolute vesting until twenty-one. Lord Eldon did not concur in this decision, considering that the question was concluded by Vaughan

"So long as the rules of law will permit."

(o) First ed., vol. ii., p. 507.

(p) Barnard. 54. See also Trafford v. Trafford, 3 Atk. 347.

(q) 1 B. C. C. 274.

(r) 3 B. C. C. 101.

(s) Fordyce v. Ford, 2 Ves. jun. 536; Carr v. Lord Errol, 14 ib. 478; Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ba. & Be. 1; Rowland v. Morgan, 6 Hare, 463, 2 Phil. 764; Doncaster v. Doncaster, 3 K. & J. 26.

See the cases reviewed by Wood, V.-C., Lord Scarsdale v. Curzon, 1 J. & H. 40; per Lords Westbury and Cairns, L. R., 5 H. L. 101, 107. See also Re Cresswell, 24 Ch. D. 102; Re Johnston, 26 Ch. D. 538 ("to be enjoyed and go with the title"); Miller v. Stanley, 12 W. R. 780.

(t) 3 Ves. 387, (Lincoln v. Newcastle) 12 Ves. 218.

CHAPTER XX.

v. Burslem. But in Shelley v. Shelley (u), where a testatrix, without reference to any real estate, bequeathed jewels to her nephew to be held as heir-looms by him and by his eldest son on his decease, and so on from eldest son to eldest son, as far as the rules of law would permit, and requested her nephew by his will or otherwise to give effect to her wishes, Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., held this to be a good executory trust, and directed a settlement to be made of the jewels to the nephew for life, remainder to his eldest son E. (who was born in the testatrix's lifetime) for life, remainder to E.'s eldest son if living at E.'s death (v), to vest at twenty-one, with a gift over on death under twenty-one or in E.'s lifetime.

In a recent case (w), chattels were bequeathed to trustees upon trust to permit the same from time to time to go and be held and enjoyed with the mansion house (which was devised in strict settlement), so far as the rules of law and equity would permit, by the person or persons who for the time being should be entitled to the possession of the said mansion house by virtue of his will, "yet so that the said chattels shall not vest absolutely in a son or any person hereby made tenant for life of the said mansion house unless such son or other person shall attain the age of twenty-one years." The Court held that "or" must be read "of," so that the declaration was to the effect that "the said chattels shall not vest absolutely in a son of any person hereby made tenant for life of the said mansion house unless such son shall attain the age of twenty-one years"; the operation of the will therefore was to carry on the chattels to the next person entitled to the real estate under the limitations until a tenant in tail by purchase was reached who attained twenty-one.

How far remoteness obviated by words "so long as the law permits."

The words "so long as the rules of law will permit," though ineffectual to make the trust executory, or to correct a gift which in terms infringes the Rule against Perpetuities (x), may, it seems, fairly be referred to where the terms are ambiguous, in aid of a construction which will not be obnoxious to that rule (y). And even without these words, if the trust is on other grounds executory, it may be moulded to avoid remoteness. Thus, in Miles v. Harford (z), where freeholds were devised to A. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with a shifting clause which provided that if (u) L. R., 6 Eq. 540. The point does not appear to have been previously decided: See opinion of Sir L. Shadwell, Boydell v. Golightly, 14 Sim. 346.

(v) "Living at E.'s death" seems to be due to the words of the will "on his decease, and so on."

(w) Re Dayrell, [1904] 2 Ch. 496.

(x) See Tollemache v. Earl of Coventry, 2 Cl. & Fin. 611, 8 Bl. (N.S.) 547, ante, p. 343. See Ker v. Dungannon, 1 Dr. & W. at p. 536.

(y) See Harrington v. Harrington, L. R., 3 Ch. 574, 5 H. L. 102, 107.

(z) 12 Ch. D. 691.

A. or his issue male should become entitled to a certain other estate, the devised estate should go over; and leaseholds were given upon such trusts, &c., as, regard being had to the difference of tenure, would most nearly correspond with the uses, &c., of the freeholds. It was held by Sir G. Jessel, M.R., that this was an executory trust; for the testator "knew that something would not work, and has said you are to make them correspond having regard to the effect of the tenure on the limitations." If the shifting clause were repeated literally for the leaseholds, it would fail to a great extent for remoteness. It must therefore be modified so as to shift the leaseholds in every case (covered by the clause) in which it could lawfully be made to shift (a).

If chattels are bequeathed to or in trust for the persons for the time being entitled to the possession of settled real estate, they do not vest absolutely in the tenant for life, but in the first tenant in tail on his birth, although he may be only tenant in tail in remainder. And a direction that they shall be treated as heirlooms and annexed to the real estate, makes no difference (b).

Meaning of
"possession."

The same principle applies where the testator adds a proviso that the chattels shall not vest absolutely in a tenant in tail by purchase unless he attains twenty-one (c).

The Court of Appeal declined to apply this principle in Re Lord Chesham's Settlement (d). In that case a mansion house and lands were settled to the use of the third Baron Chesham during his life with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, and certain chattels were vested in trustees upon trust, so far as the rules of law and equity would allow, to permit the same to be used, held, and enjoyed by the person who for the time being should be entitled to the mansion house under the limitations of the settlement, "yet so that for the effect of transmission the same shall not vest absolutely in any person hereby made tenant in tail male or in tail by purchase who shall not attain the age of twenty-one years, but who nevertheless shall be entitled to the use and benefit thereof during minority."

(a) As it happened, A. himself had become entitled to the other estate, and the M.R. also held that, as this event was separately expressed from that of his issue becoming so entitled, the shifting clause was good in event, as to the leaseholds, without modification.

(b) Foley v. Burnell, 1 Br. C. C. 274: 4 Br. P. C. 319: Re Fothergill's Estate, [1903] 1 Ch. 149. By "first tenant in tail" is meant the first tenant in tail whose estate is indefeasible, see ante, p. 692, n. (f). As to the effect of a direction that chattels shall devolve as heirlooms, see Vaizey on Settlements, 1333.

(c) Martelli v. Holloway, L. R., 5 H. L. 532 (where the proviso was implied under the doctrine of Christie v. Gosling, ante, p. 693); Re Angerstein, [1895] 2 Ch. 883: note (f), infra.

(d) [1909] 2 Ch. 329.

CHAPTER XX. The second Baron Chesham died in 1882; the third Baron had two sons, the elder of whom died, intestate and unmarried, in 1900, shortly after attaining his majority. The younger son was born in 1894, and on the death of his father, the third Baron, in 1907, became the fourth Baron Chesham and tenant in tail male in possession of the mansion house and estates. Eve, J., held that the chattels vested in the elder son of the third Baron. The Court of Appeal, following the construction placed upon the settlement by Chitty, J. (on a question of election) in Re Lord Chesham (e), held that the testator had shewn an intention that the chattels should be annexed to the house and should not vest in a tenant in tail unless he became tenant in possession; the Court accordingly decided that the heirlooms belonged to the infant tenant in tail, subject to being divested in the event of his dying under age (f).

(e) 31 Ch. D. 466; ante, p. 535.

(f) The decision has caused some surprise, because it runs counter to a doctrine which has hitherto been regarded as clearly established. Where a settlement contains a declaration that chattels are to be held and enjoyed by the persons from time to time entitled to the possession of the settled real estate, they vest in the first tenant in tail on his birth: "otherwise the absurdity must happen of the personal estate being tied up longer than the real" (per Lord Comm. Ashurst in Foley v. Burnell, 1 Br. C. C. at p. 285). And where a proviso is added, that the chattels are not to vest in any tenant in tail by purchase unless he attains twenty-one, then if the tenant in tail attains twenty-one while his estate is in remainder, he becomes absolutely entitled to the chattels, subject to the interest of the tenant for life. If it is desired to postpone the vesting until the tenant in tail comes into possession, clear words to that effect must be used (Potts v. Potts, 3 J. & Lat. 353; 1 H. L. C. 671; Cox v. Sutton, 25 L. J. Ch. 845; Scarsdale v. Curzon, 1 J. & H. 40; Re Fothergill's Estate, [1903] 1 Ch. 149). Both rules are illustrated by Re Angerstein, [1895] 2 Ch. 883: in that case testator A. bequeathed chattels as heirlooms to be used and enjoyed by the person for the time being entitled to "the actual possession" of the settled estates: testator B. bequeathed chattels as heirlooms to be held and enjoyed by the person for the time being "entitled in possession" to a certain mansion house: it was held by Kekewich, J., that a tenant in tail in remainder, who attained twenty-one and died in the lifetime of the tenant for life, became absolutely entitled to the chattels under the will of testator B., but that he did not become entitled to the chattels under the will of testator A. The question under the will of testator B. (not referred to in the headnote) was considered so clear that it was not seriously argued. The view of the Court of Appeal in Re Lord Chesham's Settlement was that the chattels were "in effect" annexed to the house, but there was no such declaration in the settlement, while in Foley v. Burnell the chattels were "to be held and enjoyed by the several persons who from time to time should respectively and successively be entitled to the use and possession of the same houses respectively, as and in the nature of heirlooms, to be annexed and go along with such houses respectively for ever"; yet it was held by the House of Lords that they vested absolutely in a tenant in tail in remainder who died fourteen days after his birth. And in Martelli v. Holloway (L. R., 5 H. L. 532), where no person was to be entitled to the personal estate unless he became entitled to an estate tail in possession in the real estate, all the learned lords thought (though the point had become immaterial, owing to the death of the tenant for life) that the case fell within the doctrine of Foley v. Burnell, and that the personal estate had vested absolutely in the tenant in tail in

Where chattels are bequeathed to trustees upon trust to permit the same to be enjoyed by the person for the time being in the "actual" possession of real estates settled by the will, a tenant in tail who predeceases the tenant for life does not become entitled to the chattels (g); but unless the intention is plain that no person shall take the chattels absolutely who does not live to become entitled to the possession of the real estate, "the Court will not introduce in such cases the restrictions which conveyancers know how to introduce with apt words" (h). Even the words "entitled to an estate tail in possession" are insufficient to displace the rule in Foley v. Burnell (i). Where the entail has been barred by a tenant for life and remainder-man in tail, the words "who shall be in the actual possession" have been held to mean the person who would have come into possession if the original limitations were subsisting (j).

remainder. In the face of these authorities it is difficult to support the decision in Re Lord Chesham's Settlement. In that case, it is true, the settlement was by deed, but this clearly makes no difference (see Scarsdale v. Curzon, supra).

The decision will, it is feared, cause considerable practical inconvenience. The object of the forms in ordinary use for settling chattels as heirlooms is to provide for the case of most frequent occurrence, namely that of the first tenant in tail attaining majority during his father's lifetime, and joining with him in a resettlement of the estate and the chattels. This would be impossible if the chattels were not to vest in the tenant in tail until he came into possession. One of the forms frequently used was approved by the late Mr. Key: it requires the trustees to permit the chattels "to devolve and be enjoyed as heirlooms with the freehold hereditaments hereby settled," and provides in the usual way for the case of a tenant in tail by purchase dying under twenty-one (Key and Elphins. Conv., 4th ed. vol. ii. p. 696). In Re Lord Chesham's Settlement the trust was to permit the chattels "to be used held and enjoyed with the mansion house called L. by the person or persons who for the time being shall be entitled to the said mansion house under the limitations thereof herein contained." Now the chattels which are the subject of a trust of this kind are almost invariably articles of furniture, plate, works of art, &c., which can only be "enjoyed" with a dwelling house, and it is therefore practically impossible to draw any distinction between the form used by Mr. Key, and the form used by the draftsman of Lord Chesham's settlement. If the reasoning of the Court of Appeal is correct, it follows that under a trust in Mr. Key's form the chattels do not vest in a tenant in tail in remainder on his attaining twenty-one. Yet Mr. Key's form was deliberately framed, in reliance on the doctrine of Foley v. Burnell, in order that the chattels might so vest (see Davidson's Prec. vol. iii. pt. i. pp. 600, 626; Mr. Key was one of the editors of this volume), and the form has been largely used. See Addenda.

(g) Re Fothergill's Estate, [1903] 1 Ch. 149; Re Angerstein, [1895] 2 Ch. 883, 44 W. R. 152; Lord Scarsdale v. Curzon, 1 J. & H. 40.

(h) Per Sugden, L.C., in Potts v. Potts, 3 J. & Lat. at p. 368; Re Fothergill's Estate, supra.

(i) Supra, p. 697; Martelli v. Holloway, L. R., 5 H. L. 532; Potts v. Potts, 3 J. & Lat. 353, 1 H. L. C. 671 ("become seised"); Re Johnson's Trusts, L. R., 2 Eq. 716. See also Cox v. Sutton, 25 L. J. Ch. 845, 2 Jur. N. S. 733 (repairing fund to be applied at request of person in possession). As to the meaning of "entitled in possession" in a shifting clause, see Leslie v. Earl of Rothes, [1894] 2 Ch. 499.

(j) Hogg v. Jones, 32 B. 45. See Re Cornwallis, 32 Ch. D. 388.

CHAPTER XX.

In Re Marquess of Bute (k), the testator bequeathed certain chattels “upon trust to hold the same as heirlooms from time to time so long as the rules of law and equity will allow, and to permit and suffer the same from time to time to be used and enjoyed by the person or persons who for the time being under the limitations and dispositions made by a certain deed of entail bearing date the day of shall be entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of my capital messuage or mansion house called Mount Stuart House.” The deed of entail could not be found, and the plaintiff became entitled to Mount Stuart House as heir at law of the testator: it was held that these chattels belonged to the plaintiff.

Settlement of chattels to go with a title.

Testators sometimes wish to settle chattels to go with a title, but their intention is frequently frustrated, unless they create an executory trust. The following rules may be deduced from the cases:

(1) A gift of chattels to the Earl of E. and his successors, and to be enjoyed with and go with the title, is an absolute gift to the Earl of E., since the words “to be enjoyed with, &c.” are not sufficient to create an executory trust, nor any executed trust sufficient to cut down the Earl’s interest to a life estate (l).

(2) A gift of chattels to trustees for the Earl of E. and his successors, to be held and settled as heirlooms, and to go with the title, create an executory trust (m); in making the settlement, the Court will give the first taker an estate for life only, and will so frame and mould the limitations as not to infringe the law against perpetuities, whether or no the testator has added the words “so far as the rules of law and equity will permit.”

(3) A mere gift of a chattel to Lord S. and his heirs, “for an heirloom,” is not enough to create an executory trust, so that if the person who was Lord S. at the date of the will dies before the testator, the gift lapses (n).

(k) 27 Ch. D. 196.

(l) Re Johnston, 26 Ch. D. 538, following Rowland v. Morgan, 6 Ha. 463, 2 Ph. 764 (where the bequest was to the testator’s son “and his heirs, Earls of A., to be held as heirlooms”); In re Viscount Exmouth, 23 Ch. D. 158, (where the clause intended to postpone the vesting was held void for uncertainty); Re Hill, [1902] 1 Ch. 537, 807 (where the words “so far as the rules of law and equity will permit” were added).

(m) Sackville-West v. Holmesdale,

L. R., 4 H. L. 543; Re Johnston, supra; and see Harrington v. Harrington, L. R., 5 H. L. 87, and Chap. XXXVIII. As to the decision in Re Gerard, [1901] W. N. 21, quære.

(n) Re Whorwood, 34 Ch. D. 446. In Montagu v. Lord Inchiquin, 23 W. R. 592, where chattels were bequeathed to A., who was then the holder of the title, to be deemed heirlooms and held and enjoyed by the person for the time bearing the title, it was held that the gift did not lapse by the death of A. before the testator.

CHAPTER XXI.

PARTIAL INTESTACY AND RESULTING TRUSTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Partial Intestacy	701	(3) Devises after Trusts
II. Resulting Trust for Heir.	704	which fail	722
III. Resulting Trust for Next		(4) Devises subject to
of Kin	714	Trusts which fail	723
IV. Acceleration of Future		(5) Appointments under
Interests :		Powers	725
(1) As to Realty	718	(6) Devises during
(2) As to Personalty	720	Minority where the
		Minor dies	726

I.—Partial Intestacy.—Total intestacy is generally the result of a person dying without leaving a valid will, but it may also occur if a person makes a will which is properly executed but becomes wholly inoperative ; as where the sole legatee and executor predeceases the testator (a). If all the persons to whom beneficial interests are given by the will die in the testator's lifetime, but the executor survives and proves the will, there is no intestacy as to the legal estate, but there is a total intestacy as to the beneficial interest (b). Where a will effectually disposes of the beneficial interest in part of the testator's property, but contains no express or implied gift of the residue (c), or where the testator excepts certain property from the residuary gift (d), or the residuary gift fails to take effect, wholly or partially, by revocation, lapse (e), or otherwise (f), there is a partial intestacy. Intestacy, how caused.

As will be pointed out later, there is a difference between real and personal estate as regards the operation of a residuary Intermediate income.

(a) Re Ford, [1902] 1 Ch. 218; [1902] 2 Ch. 605; Re Cuffe, [1908] 2 Ch. 500.

(b) Ibid.

(c) As in Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 19; post, p. 707, note (g). As to implied gifts of residue by the appointment of an heir or executor, see ante, p. 82, post, p. 715.

(d) Post, Chap. XXIX.

(e) Oresswell v. Cheslyn, 2 Ed. 123; Bagwell v. Dry, 1 P. W. 700; Page v. Page, 2 P. W. 489; Re Mary Wood's

Will, 29 Bea. 236; Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Sw. 566; Sykes v. Sykes, L. R., 4 Eq. 200. In Great v. Great, 26 Bea. 621, there was a double lapse or failure, see post. As to the effect of a direction that a certain share of residue shall sink or fall into the residue, see Chap. XXIX.

(f) As where a trust for accumulation is void under the Thellusson Act: Talbot v. Jevors, L. R., 20 Eq. 255; Re Travis, [1900] 2 Ch. 541

CHAPTER XXI.

Intestacy resulting from nugatory disposition :

—from cross
bequests.

Effect of declaration without disposition.

gift, for if a residuary devise is contingent or future, the intermediate rents do not pass by the devise, but go to the heir. But a contingent or future gift of residuary personalty, or of a mixed residue of realty and personalty, carries the intermediate income (g).

In Brown v. Burdett (h) a testatrix devised a freehold house to trustees upon trust to block up the windows, doors, &c., and keep them blocked up for twenty years, after which she devised the property to B. It was held that these trusts were ineffectual, and that there was an intestacy for twenty years from the testatrix's death.

In Re Valdez's Trusts (i) a testator gave his residuary estate to M. and J., and in case of their decease bequeathed what he had bequeathed to them to their executors or administrators. M. and J., both predeceased the testator, J. having by her will bequeathed to the testator the residue of her property. It was held that the personal representatives of M. and J. took as tenants in common in equal shares, and that J.'s share came back to the estate of the testator, but was undisposed of by his will and devolved as if he had died intestate.

The general rule is that a testator cannot by a mere declaration alter the mode of devolution prescribed by law in case of intestacy (j) : "You cannot exclude an heir at law or next of kin but by giving to somebody else" (k). As in Re Holmes (l), where a testator declared that all his relatives except two nieces should be excluded from all advantages and benefit under his will : it was held that the undisposed of residue went to the statutory next of kin. So in Fitch v. Weber (m) a testatrix devised her real estate, upon trust for sale, and declared that the proceeds of sale should be held as personal and not real estate, and that they should not in any event lapse or result for the benefit of her heir at law ; she made no further disposition of them, or of her residuary personal estate, and it was held that the heir at law was entitled to the proceeds of sale by way of resulting trust (n). Of course if

(g) Post, Chap. XXIX.

(h) 21 Ch. D. 667. Compare Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 19.

(i) 40 Ch. D. 159.

(j) See the principle stated ante, p. 425.

(k) Pickering v. Stamford, 3 Ves. 492, ante, p. 550 ; Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Bea. 318.

(l) 62 L. T. 383.

(m) 6 Ha. 145.

(n) In Countess of Bristol v. Hungerford (2 Vern. 645) there was a devise of real estate to be sold for payment of debts, the surplus, if any, to be deemed personal estate and to go to the testator's executors, to whom he gave 20*l.* apiece : it seems to have been held that the executors took as trustees for the next of kin ; see 3 P. W. 194 n. ; Fitch v. Weber, supra ; Gordon v. Atkinson, 1 De G. & S. p. 482 ; post, Chap. XXII.

the testatrix had made a disposition of her residuary personal estate, it might have been held that she intended it to include the proceeds of sale of the real estate, without any express direction to that effect (o). CHAPTER XXI.

A declaration by a testator that A. shall not take any share of the testator's property, may operate as a gift by implication of the share which A. would otherwise have taken, to the other persons entitled to the testator's undisposed of property, if the intention is clear (p). Exclusion of individual.

The Statute of Distribution, 1670 (sect. 5) does not apply to a partial intestacy arising from a failure of the trusts declared concerning part of a testator's residuary estate (q). Statute of Distribution.

The Intestates' Estates Act, 1890, does not apply to cases of partial intestacy (r), but it applies to cases where a man leaves a valid will which becomes wholly inoperative owing to the death of the executors and legatees, &c., during the testator's lifetime (s). Intestates' Estates Act, 1890.

The Dower Act, 1833, provides by sect. 4, that no widow shall be entitled to dower out of any land which shall have been absolutely disposed of by her husband in his lifetime or by his will, and by sect. 9, that where a husband shall devise any land out of which his widow would be entitled to dower if the same were not so devised, or any estate or interest therein, to or for the benefit of his widow, she shall not be entitled to dower out of any land of her husband unless a contrary intention shall be declared by his will. Dower Act.

As to the effect of testamentary dispositions in barring the widow's right to dower under these sections, the following points have been decided. In Rowland v. Cuthbertson (t), a testator in 1864 devised his real and personal estate, subject to payment of his debts, upon trust as to one-sixth share for his wife for life; it was held by Romilly, M.R., that the land was so devised "for the benefit of" the widow within the meaning of sect. 9 of the act, as to deprive her of her right to dower. And in Lacey v. Hill (u), where a testator by his will made in 1861, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate upon trust for sale and conversion, and directed his trustees to invest the proceeds, and out of the income of such investments to pay an annuity to his widow, and Operation of the Dower Act.

(o) As in Court v. Buckland, 1 Ch. D. 579.
605.

(p) Ante, p. 679.

(q) Re Roby, [1907] 2 Ch. 84.

(r) Re Twigg's Estate, [1892] 1 Ch.

(s) Re Cuffe, [1908] 2 Ch. 500.

(t) L. R., 8 Eq. 466.

(u) L. R., 19 Eq. 346.

CHAPTER XXI. subject thereto to hold the investments for the benefit of his children: it was held by Jessel, M.R., that the widow's right to dower out of the freehold realty was barred because the devise on trust for sale was a disposition of the land within the meaning of sect. 4 of the act, and also amounted to a gift of an estate or interest in the land for the benefit of the widow within the meaning of sect. 9. So in Re Thomas (v), Sir E. Kay, J., held that a gift to a widow of the income of part of the proceeds of sale of real estate is a gift to her of an interest in land within sect. 9 of the act, so as to bar her claim to dower out of any part of her husband's estate.

Effect when will leaves property partially undisposed of.

Trust results to the heir, when.

II.—Resulting Trust for the Heir.—Mr. Jarman states the general rule thus (w): “If a will fails to make an effectual and complete disposition of the whole of the testator's real and personal estate, of course the undisposed-of interest, whether legal or equitable, devolves to the person or persons on whom the law, in the absence of disposition, casts that species of property (x). It is clear, therefore, that where real estate is devised in fee, upon trust for a person incapable of taking, or who is not sufficiently defined, or who dies in the testator's lifetime, or who disclaims the estate, the beneficial interest in the estate so devised results to the heir at law (y).”

“So, in a case (z) where the Earl of Harborough devised his manors, advowsons, &c., to trustees, in trust, to pay his son 1,000*l.* a year for his life, and the rest of the profits to be laid out in land, to be settled to certain uses; Lord Hardwicke held, that the right of presentation arising from the advowsons during the son's life was a fruit undisposed of, and devolved to the heir; no other profits being given than such as might be accumulated; though, he said, if the testator had devised all the surplus rents and profits, it would have carried the right of presentation” (a).

(v) 34 Ch. D. 166.

(w) First ed. p. 502.

(x) As to apportionment between heir and next of kin, see Re Cameron, infra, p. 705, note (g).

(y) Hartop's Case, 1 Leon. 253, Cro. El. 243; and other cases infra. In cases where land is devised upon trust, and the devise of the legal estate fails, the lands formerly descended to the heir charged with the trust. In the case of a testator dying since 1897, the effect of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, is that his real estate devised upon trust passes, in the first instance, to his personal representatives as trustees for the persons by law beneficially entitled thereto, but the ultimate result is the same.

(z) Sherrard v. Lord Harborough, Amb. 165; see also Kellett v. Kellett, 3 Dow, 248. The paragraph to which this note belongs has been transferred from p. 505 of Mr. Jarman's text, where it seems to be out of place.

(a) “With this dictum agrees Earl of Albemarle v. Rogers, 2 Ves. jun. 477, 7 Br. P. C. Toml. 522, where a testator devised all his manors, messuages, lands, and hereditaments to A. for eleven years from his death; and from the end, expiration, or sooner determination of

If land is devised to A. subject to a charge or a term of years, and the charge or term fails, A. takes the benefit of the failure (b). But if land is devised to A., subject to an exception out of it of some interest in favour of B., and the gift to B. fails, then the excepted interest goes by way of resulting trust to the heir or residuary devisee (c). If it is a chattel interest, the heir takes it as personalty (d).

The doctrine established by the case of Ackroyd v. Smithson (e)—namely, that where land has been converted into money in accordance with the provisions of a will, and part of the proceeds remains undisposed of, it goes to the heir—is an illustration of the general rule stated by Mr. Jarman. This subject is discussed in the next chapter.

Doctrine of Ackroyd v.
Smithson.

Mr. Jarman continues (f), “On the same principle, where lands are devised upon trust for particular purposes, as for payment of debts, or with a direction to pay the rents to A. for life, and no further trust is declared, all the unexhausted beneficial interest results to the heir, as real estate undisposed of (g).

the said term, and in the meantime subject thereto, to B. and his issue in strict settlement. The term was declared to be bequeathed to A., upon trust, to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the premises, and thereout to pay certain charges therein mentioned, paying the overplus of such monies to the testator's daughter E. During the eleven years an avoidance occurred in an advowson forming part of the property, and the next presentation was claimed by B., as the devisee of the estates subject to the term, the trusts of which, it was said, did not comprise an interest of this description; and also as E., either as the cestui que trust of the residuary rents, issues, and profits, during the term, or as heir at law; and it was held to belong to her in the former character, the entire beneficial interest during the term, not absorbed by the charges, being given to her.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.) See also Johnstone v. Baber, 6 D. M. & G. 439; but see Martin v. Martin, 12 Sim. 579.

(b) Where a testator is entitled to a sum of money charged on land and raisable for his benefit in any event, a different rule applies; see Simmons v. Pitt, L. R., 8 Ch. 978: ante, p. 389, n. (s).

(c) The cases as to charges have been already considered (ante, p. 441), with reference to the distinction between an exception and a charge. The cases in which land is devised to one person charged with a legacy, or the like, for the benefit of another, and the legacy fails by lapse or otherwise, are not generally treated as cases of resulting trusts; the legacy is said to sink for the benefit of the devisee. As to devises subject to terms, see infra, p. 724.

(d) Infra, p. 708.

(e) 1 Br. C. C. 503, stated post, Chap. XXII.

(f) First ed. p. 502.

(g) Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Ca. 115, 223; Roper v. Ratcliffe, 9 Mod. 171, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 508; Re Sanderson's Trust, 3 K. & J. 497. In both the above propositions, however, it is assumed that the subject of disposition is the testator's general or residuary real estate, or that the will does not contain a residuary devise, the effect of which to pass the undisposed-of interest in particular lands is considered in Chap. XXV.

It is not, of course, necessary that there should be an express devise: thus in Re Cameron (26 Ch. D. 19) a testator gave some legacies and authorized his executors to realize any part of his estate to pay them; he also directed his business to be carried on until his son attained the age of thirty, but did not dispose of the profits or make any other disposition of his property, except by devising a particular house: it was

CHAPTER XXI.

Question
whether devisees take beneficially,
or not.

Lord Eldon's statement of the principle.

" This doctrine is so well settled, that if the character of trustee be plainly and unequivocally affixed to the devisee, no question can at this day be raised respecting its application ; but the difficulty in these cases generally is, to determine whether it is intended that the interest in the land, ultra the purpose to which it is devoted, shall belong to the devisees in a fiduciary character, or for their own benefit.

" The distinction between the two classes of cases was, in King v. Denison (h), thus stated by Lord Eldon :— ' If I give to A. and his heirs all my real estate, charged with my debts, that is a devise for a particular purpose, but not for that purpose only ; if the devise is upon trust to pay my debts, that is a devise for a particular purpose, and nothing more. And the effect of these two modes admits just this difference : the former is a devise of an estate of inheritance, for the purpose of giving the devisee the beneficial interest, subject to a particular purpose ; the latter is a devise for a particular purpose, with no intention to give him any beneficial interest. Where, therefore, the whole legal estate is given for the purpose of satisfying trusts expressed, and those trusts do not, in their execution, exhaust the whole, so much of the beneficial interest as is not exhausted belongs to the heir. But where the whole legal interest is given for a particular purpose, with an intention to give to the devisee the beneficial interest, if the whole is not exhausted by that particular purpose, the surplus goes to the devisee, as it is intended to be given to him.'

" In illustration of this subject, it is proposed to state a few of the leading cases, showing, first, where a trust has been held to result ; and, secondly, where not.

Cases of resulting trusts.

" In Wyeh v. Packington (i), a testator, after appointing his wife S. sole executrix of his will, devised to his said dear wife, his executrix, a rent-charge of 200*l.* per annum, out of certain lands, upon trust that she, her executors, &c., should be supplied with monies out of the rents and profits for the discharging his debts, legacies, and payments ; to which end, he gave and bequeathed to her a lease for thirteen years of the said rent-charge, to commence six months after his decease. And the testator devised to his held that the executors might continue to carry on the business with the real and personal estate which the testator had employed in it until the legacies were paid out of the profits, and that any surplus profits must be apportioned between the heir at law and next of kin.

(h) 1 V. & B. 272. This " classical " statement of the rule was cited with approval by the Court of Appeal in Croome v. Croome, 59 L. T. 582, post, p. 712.

(i) 3 Br. P. C. Toml. 44. See also Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 H. & M. 60.

wife certain lands for life, in augmentation of her jointure ; and the residue of his lands to his daughter (who was his heir-at-law) in tail. The personal estate being found sufficient to satisfy the debts and legacies, it was not necessary to resort to this fund. The House of Lords, in affirmance of a decree of the Court of Exchequer, held that the rent-charge resulted to the heir.

“ So, in a case which arose on the will of Serjeant Maynard (j), who devised his lands to three persons, to the use of them and their heirs, upon the trusts after mentioned ; and then directed the trustees, upon the death of the countess, his wife, to convey the estate to certain persons for life ; but without disposing of the remainder in fee. It was contended that the devise, being to them and their heirs, upon the trusts after mentioned, imported that they should be trustees only for those purposes ; and when those estates were spent, the land was to remain to them to their own use. But the L.C. held, that the remainder in fee resulted to the heir, his Lordship adverting to the circumstance that the devise was to three persons, and one of them no relation to the testator.

“ It is clear that where lands are devised upon trust for sale, the resulting trust in favour of the heir is not repelled by a mere bequest to him of a sum of money payable out of the proceeds.

“ Thus (k), where a testator devised lands to his executors and their heirs, in trust, to be sold by them, and the survivor of them, for the best price, and with the money to pay his debts, legacies, and funeral, and among the legacies were two to his co-heirs : it was contended, on the authority of North v. Crompton (l), that, there being legacies to the heirs, and none to the executors, the latter must take for their own benefit ; but Lord Cowper, C., held, that the trust resulted to the co-heirs, adverting to the direction to the executors to sell for the best price, which need not have been inserted if they were intended to be owners (m) ; and also the devising the estate to the survivor, which, he observed, was a further argument of its being rather a trust than an ownership.

“ Indeed, where the property is devised in trust to be sold, the point is so clear against the trustees, that a claim by them is seldom Legacy to the heir does not exclude him.

Resulting trust in lands devised to be sold.

(j) Hobart v. Countess of Suffolk, 2 Vern. 644, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 272, pl. 7 ; see also Collis v. Robins, 1 De G. & S. 131 ; Wills v. Wills, 1 D. & War. 439 ; Bird v. Harris, L. R., 9 Eq. 204.

(k) Starkey v. Brooks, 1 P. W. 390 ; see Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425.

(l) “ 1 Ch. Ca. 196 ; see also Halliday

v. Hudson, 3 Ves. 210 ; and Countess of Bristol v. Hungerford, 2 Vern. 645, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 272, pl. 7, stated post.” As to Mr. Jarman’s statement of this case, see post, Chap. XXII.

(m) “ Why not, as there was a trust for creditors, which might have absorbed all ? ” (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

CHAPTER XXI. advanced (n); but the contest in such cases generally lies between the heir-at-law and the residuary legatee, or next of kin, whose respective claims are discussed in the next chapter."

But the fact that there is a trust for sale is not conclusive. In Re West (o) a testatrix gave all her real and personal property to four persons upon trust for sale, and upon trust out of the proceeds of sale to pay debts and legacies, &c.; the will contained clauses for the indemnity and reimbursement of the "said trustees," and appointed the same four persons executors, but it contained no residuary gift; Kekewich, J., said: "There is a general devise and bequest to certain persons on trust for sale. Those words alone do not settle the question, as I might still find the trustees were entitled to take beneficially. . . . But I cannot look on that trust as mere machinery. It affords a strong indication that they are to hold the proceeds as trustees generally"; and the learned judge held that the frame of the whole will shewed that the donees were not intended to take the surplus beneficially, and that there was a resulting trust.

In Barrs v. Fewkes (p) a testator appointed A. to be his executor, and after making various bequests gave the rest and residue of all his real and personal estates to A. "to enable him to carry into effect the purposes of" the will: it was held that there was a resulting trust for the heir of the real estate.

As to chattel interest devolving upon the heir.

"And here it may be observed," continues Mr. Jarman (q), "that where the portion of real estate left undisposed of is a chattel interest, it devolves upon the heir as personalty, and is transmissible to his personal representative (r).

Cases in which devisees held to take beneficially.

Effect of direction to sell to certain persons.

"We now proceed to the cases in which a trust has been held not to result, there being an apparent intention to give the devisee as well the beneficial interest as the legal estate.

"In Hill v. Bishop of London (s) a testator devised his perpetual advowson of B., in the county of H., to his honoured mother-in-law G. S., willing and desiring her to sell and dispose thereof to certain colleges. Upon the refusal of one, the offer was to be made to another, in a prescribed order. Item, he gave to his said mother-in-law his freehold lands in the parish of (n) See for example Watson v. Hayes, 5 My. & Cr. 125.

(o) [1900] 1 Ch. 84.

(p) 2 H. & M. 60.

(q) First ed. p. 506.

(r) Levet v. Needham, 2 Vern. 138; see also Wych v. Packington, 3 Br. P. C.

Toml. 44, stated ante, p. 706; Hewitt v. Wright, 1 Br. C. C. 86; Sewell v. Denny, 10 Beav. 315; Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 290; Whitehead v. Bennett, 18 Jur. 140.

(s) 1 Atk. 618.

O., and to her heirs and assigns for ever. It was held, that the beneficial interest in the lands (ss) included in the first devise did not result to the heir. 'The general rule,' said Lord Hardwicke, 'that, where lands are devised for a particular purpose, what remains after that purpose is satisfied, results, admits of several exceptions. If J. S. devise lands to H., to sell them to B. for the particular advantage of B., that advantage is the only purpose to be served, according to the intent of the testator, and to be satisfied by the mere act of selling, let the money go where it will; yet there is no precedent for a resulting trust in such a case. Nor is there any warrant, from the words or intent of the testator, to say that this devise severs the beneficial interest: it is only an injunction on the devisee to enjoy the thing devised in a particular manner. If A. devises lands to J. S., to sell for the best price to B., or to lease for three years at such a fine, there is no resulting trust.' There were in this case, his Lordship observed, two objects of the testator's benevolence, G. S. and the colleges.

"Lord Hardwicke adverted also to the circumstance that the word trust was not made use of; but this, though not immaterial, is by no means conclusive; for a trust may be created without that word, if such an intention can be collected from the whole will (t).

Word "trust" not necessary in creating one.

"His Lordship's statement of the general rule may seem to clash with Lord Eldon's, before cited. He appears to have confounded the distinction, so clearly marked by Lord Eldon, between a devise for (u), and a devise subject to, a particular purpose; but, as the case before Lord Hardwicke seems to belong to the latter class, it is in accordance with that distinction. The frame of the devise and the context (for it was immediately followed by a devise, clearly beneficial, to the same person) certainly favoured the construction adopted. The case suggested by his Lordship, of a devise to A. to sell, for the best price, to B., perhaps, is more open to doubt. He admitted, however, that, under a devise of lands to be sold for payment of debts, there was a clear resulting trust.

Distinction between a devise for, and subject to, a particular purpose.

(ss) Thus in Mr. Jarman's text; but "lands" is clearly a misprint for "advowson."

(t) Halliday v. Hudson, 3 Ves. 210; and see King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 273; Saltmarsh v. Barrett, 29 Beav. 474, 3 D. F. & J. 279 (on the word "charged"); Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 H. & M. 60 ("to enable"); Bird v. Harris, L. R., 9 Eq. 204 ("in consideration").

And a trust will not be created by the word "trust," if an intention not to do so appears by the whole will: Hughes v. Evans, Williams v. Roberts, and Clarke v. Hilton, all referred to post, pp. 710-1, 716-7.

(u) See Abrams v. Winshup, 3 Russ. 350, where the word "for" was read as "charged with."

CHAPTER XXI.

Effect of expressions importing benefit to the devisee.

"The resulting trust for the heir, in lands devised for a particular purpose, is excluded, where the devise contains expressions importing an intention to confer on the devisee a benefit.

Of expressions of kindness.

"Thus (v), where a testator, having given 5*l.* to his brother, (who was his heir,) made and constituted his dearly-beloved wife his sole executrix and heiress of all his lands and real and personal estate, to sell and dispose thereof at pleasure, and to pay his debts and legacies, L. C. King held, she was not, after payment of debts, a trustee for the heir. He said that the devise that the wife should be sole heiress of the real estate, did, in every respect, place her in the stead of the heir, and not as a trustee for him. His Lordship observed, that it was plainer by reason of the language of tenderness, his 'dearly-beloved wife,' which must have intended something beneficial to her, and not what would be a trouble only; and what made it still stronger was, that the heir had a legacy.

"That these two circumstances alone are not sufficient, is quite clear. The former occurred in Wyeh v. Packington (w), where the expression was 'my dear wife,' and yet the trust was held to result; and the latter, in Randall v. Bookey (x), where a legacy to the heir was decided not to rebut the inference of a resulting trust.

Of describing devisee by relationship.

"Where the devisee is merely described by the relationship, as 'my cousin,' 'my brother,' unaccompanied by any particular expression of kindness, the argument is still less strong, the designation being merely part of his description; though certainly, in Cunningham v. Mellish (y), the fact of the devisee being described as 'my cousin,' and that of his being as nearly related to the testator as the heir, seem to have formed the grounds of the determination. In the cases of that period, however, the doctrine of resulting trusts was not so invariably and steadily maintained as it now is; and many positions to be found in them are inconsistent with the rules at present established. Such a description of the devisee is certainly a circumstance to be attended to, and was so referred to in a case by Lord Eldon, in reference to Cunningham v. Mellish (z); but that it would now be allowed the weight which was given it in that case, is not probable."

(v) Rogers v. Rogers, 3 P. W. 193, Cas. t. Talb. 268.

(w) Stated supra, p. 706.

(x) 2 Vern. 425, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 272, pl. 4; and see Hughes v. Evans, 13 Sim. 504.

(y) Pre. Ch. 31, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 273, pl. 8, 2 Vern. 247 (Cunningham v. Mellish).

(z) See King v. Denison, 1 V. & B. 274. See also per Wood, V.-C., Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 H. & M. 67.

CHAPTER XXI.

No trust, though word "trust" used.

As to the expressed purpose of the devise being beneficial or not to the devisee.

Lord Langdale's remark on Dawson v. Clarke.

A devise subject to certain annuities.

Where the gift to the devisee was in the first instance expressly upon trust, and the trust afterwards declared did not absorb the whole property, yet, on the whole, the testator having described the devisee as his most dutiful and respectful nephew, and having expressly declared that the heir should take nothing except a provision made for him by the will, it was held that the devisee took beneficially subject to the trusts declared (a).

"In Rogers v. Rogers," continues Mr. Jarman (b), "the purpose expressed, namely, the payment of debts and legacies, was not beneficial to the devisee; and, therefore, unless she had taken the surplus, she would have derived no benefit from the devise. It has been truly said 'that where the purpose expressed is something in favour of the party to whom the bequest is made, the presumption is rather stronger that the benefit specified is the only benefit which he is intended to derive from the bequest' (c).

"In Dawson v. Clarke (d), a testator gave to his friends A. and B. all his real and personal estate, to hold to them, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust in the first place to pay, and charged and chargeable with all his just debts and funeral expenses and the legacies thereafter bequeathed. The testator, after bequeathing several legacies, appointed A. and B. executors. Lord Eldon, C.:—"The question is, whether, upon the whole will, this is to be taken as a devise and bequest to these executors, with reference to their office, upon a trust to pay; or as giving them the absolute property, subject only to a charge; and I think the latter was the intention."

"Of this case Lord Langdale, M.R. (e), has observed that Lord Eldon gave effect to the words 'charged and chargeable' (which he had placed in opposition to the words 'upon trust'), on some ground which does not appear in the report. It might be that he considered the last words in the will as explanatory of the first.

"The general doctrine was much discussed in King v. Denison (f), where a testatrix devised her real estate to her cousin Mary A., wife of R. A., and to her cousin Arabella J., and their heirs and assigns for ever; subject, nevertheless, to, and chargeable with, the payment of the annuities thereafter mentioned; and she bequeathed her personal estate to three other persons, subject to, and chargeable with, her debts and legacies; and gave such three

(a) Hughes v. Evans, 13 Sim. 496.

(b) First ed. p. 509.

(c) Per Sir W. Grant, in Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 322.

(d) 15 Ves. 409, 18 Ves. 247. This case was decided at the Rolls, in reference exclusively to the personal estate.

(e) 1 Kee. 324.

(f) 1 V. & B. 260.

CHAPTER XXI.

persons equal legacies. Lord Eldon held, that the devisees of the real estate were not trustees, after paying the annuities, for the heir at law; his Lordship considering the intention to be (according to the distinction stated by him, already quoted), that they should not take merely for the purpose of paying those annuities, but beneficially, subject to them.

“The Court of King’s Bench had made a similar decision upon the same will (g).

Circumstance of devisees being a married woman and an infant;

—and not testator’s nearest relatives.

Of their being trustees of the personal estate.

“It happened in this case that one of the devisees was a married woman, and the other an infant of fifteen: persons, therefore, ill adapted to be trustees. But, though Lord Eldon admitted these were circumstances to be attended to (h), yet, he observed, that, if they were trustees upon the whole context, he could not say that they were not so on that ground; and upon the singularity that the testatrix had given to these cousins in preference to nearer relations, a sister and aunt, his Lordship observed, that the answer was, she had made the disposition.

“Another circumstance in the case was, that the testatrix had used the same expression, ‘subject and chargeable,’ in the bequest of the personal estate [to her executors], of which it was contended they were trustees, in consequence of having equal legacies given them; but Lord Eldon observed, that, admitting this construction as to the personalty, which he thought doubtful upon the cases, it did not follow that the same words, in different parts of the will, applied to a different subject, were to receive the same construction. It was only the same as if she had said that the executors should not take the personalty beneficially, but had made no such declaration as to the real estate (i).

Croome v. Croome.

The rule laid down by Lord Eldon in King v. Denison was approved and applied by the Court of Appeal in Croome v. Croome (j). There a testator gave to E. all his real estate, “upon trust nevertheless to pay thereout” certain specified sums; the will contained a bequest of the personal estate to E. and other persons, and appointed E. executor: it was held that E. took the real estate beneficially, subject to the payment of the specified sums.

As to resulting trust in lands given to charity.

“It should be noticed,” says Mr. Jarman (jj), “that an exception to the doctrine of resulting trusts exists in regard to gifts to charity;

(g) Smith d. Dennison v. King, 16 East, 283. See also the cases as to personalty, discussed in the next section.

(h) See Blinkhorn v. Feast, 2 Ves. sen. 27.

(i) As to the case of Countess of Bristol v. Hungerford, 2 Vern. 645; see ante, p. 702, n. (n).

(j) 59 L. T. 582; affirmed in D. P., 61 L. T. 814, as a matter of the construction of the particular will.

(jj) First ed. p. 512.

the rule being, that where lands, or the rents of lands, are given to charitable purposes, which at the time exhaust, or are represented to exhaust, the whole rents, and those rents increase in amount, the excess arising from such augmentation shall be appropriated to charity, and not go, by way of resulting trust, to the heir-at-law (k).

"It has been observed by Lord Hardwicke (l) and Lord Eldon (m), that, at the time this doctrine was established, the right of the heir-at-law under a resulting trust was not sufficiently understood, or it never could have been adopted. Both these great Judges, however, acknowledged it to be a principle not now to be shaken.

"But, if a man give an estate to trustees, and take notice that the payments are less than the amount of the rents, no case has gone so far as to say that the cestui que trust, even in the case of a charity, is entitled to the surplus. There would either be a resulting trust, or it would belong to the person who takes the estate" (n).

If the original rents were divisible among several objects, the general principle is that any increase will be apportioned among them, but this is a matter for the discretion of the Court (o).

Apportionment.

And if a testator gives property to a corporation, as to a specific part of the income upon charitable trusts, and as to the residue of the income (specifying the amount) for the benefit of the corporation, and the income afterwards increases, the increase will be apportioned (p). But the gift may be so expressed that the corporation takes the whole income, subject to the payment thereof of certain definite sums for charity, and in that case any increase in the income goes to the corporation (q).

(k) Thetford School Case, 8 Co. 130; Duke's Ch. Uses, 71; Sutton Colefield's Case, 10 Rep. 31; Duke, 68; Att.-Gen. v. Johnson, Amb. 190; Att.-Gen. v. Sparks, Amb. 201; Att.-Gen. v. Haberdashers' Company, 4 Br. C. C. 103; s. c. nom. Att.-Gen. v. Tonna, 2 Ves. jun. 1; Att.-Gen. v. Coventry, 2 Vern. 397, 713; 3 Madd. 353; 2 J. & W. 305 n.; see also Re Jortin, 7 Ves. 340; Att.-Gen. v. Wansay, 15 ib. 231; Re Ashton's Charity, 27 Bea. 115; Att.-Gen. v. Wax Chandlers' Company, L. R., 6 H. L. 1; Merchant Taylor's Co. v. Att.-Gen., L. R., 6 Ch. 512; Aberdeen University v. Irvine, L. R., 1 H. L. Sc. 289, and the cases on charitable trusts of personality, post, p. 718.

(l) Amb. 190.

(m) 2 J. & W. 307.

(n) Lord Eldon, in Att.-Gen. v. Mayor of Bristol, 2 J. & W. 307; and Att.-Gen. v. Skinners' Company, 2 Russ. 443;

Att.-Gen. v. Cordwainers' Co., 3 My. & K. 534. See also Mayor of Beverley v. Att.-Gen. 6 H. L. Ca. 310. "But as charitable dispositions of lands by will are prohibited by the statute of 9 Geo. 2, c. 36 (ante, p. 247), unless in favour of certain objects, this question rarely occurs, except under wills which are prior to the statute." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(o) Att.-Gen. v. Jesus College, 29 Bea. 163; Att.-Gen. v. Marchant, L. R., 3 Eq. 424; Re Campden Charities, 18 Ch. D. 310.

(p) Att.-Gen. v. Coopers' Co., 3 Bea. 29; Att.-Gen. v. Drapers' Co., 4 Bea. 67.

(q) Mercers' Company v. Att.-Gen., 2 Bli. N. S. 165; Att.-Gen. v. Smythies, 2 R. & M. 717; Att.-Gen. v. Bristol Corp., 2 J. & W. 294; Att.-Gen. v. Brazen Nose Coll., 2 Cl. & F. 295; Att.-Gen. v. Cordwainers' Co., 3 My. & K. 534; Att.-Gen. v. Grocers' Co., 6 Bea.

CHAPTER XXI.

Two sets of trustees.

Where there are two sets of trustees and all the beneficial trusts fail, the question may arise which set of trustees is entitled to the legal estate, and the advantages accruing from it. In Onslow v. Wallis (r) land was held under a deed in trust for L. S. in fee. L. S. by her will devised the land to trustees upon trust for sale and out of the proceeds to pay debts and legacies, the legacies being specified in a certain paper marked A. This paper was not forthcoming. The trustee under the deed claimed to be entitled to retain the land for his own benefit, subject to the testatrix's debts, which he offered to pay, but it was held that he was bound to convey the land to the trustees of the will. In Re Lashmar (s), however, B. was entitled, subject to certain life interests, to an equitable reversion in fee, in land vested in the trustees of A.'s will; B. devised his real estate to trustees upon trusts which failed before the reversion fell into possession: it was held that the trustees of B.'s will were not entitled to call for a conveyance from the trustees of A.'s will. The Court of Appeal said that the decision in Onslow v. Wallis turned on the fact that in that case the trustee had duties to perform. In neither case did the Intestates Estates Act, 1884, apply.

III.—Resulting Trust for Next of Kin.—The general principle has been already stated by Mr. Jarman, that “if a will fails to make an effectual and complete disposition of the whole of the testator's real and personal estate, of course the undisposed-of interest, whether legal or equitable, devolves to the person or persons on whom the law, in the absence of disposition, casts that species of property” (t). Thus where a testator gives his real and personal estate upon trust for conversion, and only partially disposes of the beneficial interest, there is a resulting trust for the next of kin of the undisposed of residue, so far as it arises from the personal estate (u). The same rule applies where there is a trust for the conversion of money into land, and the objects for which conversion is directed partly fail (v).

Charge on real estate.

Where a testator is entitled to a sum of money charged on real estate, and raisable for his benefit in any event, it is personal estate, and if part of it is undisposed of, it goes to his next of kin and does not sink for the benefit of the estate (w). But if the testator is 526; Att.-Gen. v. Trinity Coll., 24 Bea. 383; Southmolton Corp. v. Att.-Gen., 5 H. L. C. 1; Beverley Corp. v. Att.-Gen., 6 H. L. C. 310; Att.-Gen. v. Dean, &c., of Windsor, 8 H. L. C. 369.

(r) 1 Mac. & G. 506.

(s) [1891] 1 Ch. 258.

(t) Ante, p. 704.

(u) Robinson v. Taylor, 2 Br. C.C. 589.

(v) Post, Chap. XXII.

(w) Simmons v. Pitt, L. R., 8 Ch. 978, ante, p. 389, n. (s).

entitled both to the estate and to the charge, and makes a disposition of the estate, it is a question of intention whether the charge merges in the estate, or is kept alive for the benefit of the testator's personal estate (x).

When executor trustee of undisposed of residue for next of kin.

Before the passing of the Executors Act, 1830, the presumption was that if a testator appointed an executor, he meant him to take beneficially all personal property not disposed of by the will. Since the act, an executor is a trustee for the next of kin of any residue not expressly disposed of by the will (y), unless it appears by the will that he was intended to take the residue beneficially (z). If, however, there are no next of kin, the presumption in favour of the executor arises as under the old law, but it may be rebutted, in which case the executor is trustee for the crown (a). Primâ facie, therefore, an executor is not beneficially entitled to any property not expressly disposed of by the will, even if the terms of the will shew that the testator considered that it disposed of all his property (b). But an intention that the executor shall take beneficially may appear from the general scheme of the will (c).

Where residue expressly bequeathed.

If a testator expressly bequeaths the residue of his personal estate, the question whether the residuary legatee is to take beneficially or not is a question of construction, to be decided on the language of the testator. The question generally arises where the residuary legatee is also appointed executor (d). In the case of Dawson v. Clarke (e), referred to above by Mr. Jarman, the personal estate was bequeathed to two persons upon certain trusts, (x) Johnson v. Webster, 4 D. M. & G. 474 (dced); Re Duke of Somerset, 55 L. T. 753; Price v. John, [1905] 1 Ch. 744. See also Re Hole, [1906] 1 Ch. 673; Re Gibbon, [1909] 1 Ch. 367. These cases are also referred to post, Chap. XXVI.

(y) The executor does not, under this doctrine, take the whole of what is commonly called "residue," for he does not take lapsed legacies or property ineffectually disposed of; see the cases cited ante, p. 498.

(z) Sometimes an apportionment between heir and next of kin is necessary, as in Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 19, ante, p. 705, n. (g).

(a) Middleton v. Spicer, 1 Br. C. C. 201; Johnstone v. Hamilton, 11 Jur. N. S. 777; Cradock v. Owen, 2 Sm. & G. 241; Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Sim. 8; Re Knowles, 28 W. R. 975 and other cases cited ante, pp. 498 seq. Primâ facie

the presumption is rebutted if the testator bequeaths a legacy to a sole executor or equal legacies to several executors; and this counter presumption may in its turn be rebutted by parol evidence. The cases are referred to in Chap. XV., ante, pp. 498 seq.

(b) Juler v. Juler, 29 Bea. 34; Travers v. Travers, L. R., 14 Eq. 275.

(c) Harrison v. Harrison, 2 H. & M. 237; Hillersdon v. Grove, 21 Bea. 518; Fuge v. Fuge, 27 L. R. Ir. 59; Williams v. Arkle, L. R., 7 H. L. 606.

(d) In Hillersdon v. Grove, 21 Bea. 518, the residue was given "to my executors, A. and B."; their right to take beneficially does not appear to have been questioned. In Parsons v. Saffery, 9 Fr. 578, where a similar construction prevailed, the wording of the will was very special.

(e) 18 Ves. 247.

CHAPTER XXI.

which did not exhaust the beneficial interest, and they were afterwards appointed executors: it was held that they took the residue beneficially (f). Wood v. Cox (g), Romans v. Mitchell (h), Re Henshaw (i), and Williams v. Roberts (j), were similarly decided. So in Williams v. Arkle (k), a testator appointed his friend G. A. executor and trustee, and bequeathed to him a legacy of 1,000*l.*; he also bequeathed various legacies and annuities to his wife and near relatives and other persons, and gave all his real estate and the residue of his personal estate to G. A.: it was held from the general scheme of the will that an intention appeared that G. A. should take the real and residuary personal estate beneficially. But in Mapp v. Elcock (l) the House of Lords, while approving the reasoning of Lord Eldon in Dawson v. Clarke, held, on the construction of the will in the case before them, that the executors were trustees for the next of kin. A similar construction prevailed in Mullen v. Bowman (m).

“Use and benefit.”

In Wood v. Cox (supra), the construction was aided by the fact that the gift was to the residuary legatees “for their own use and benefit” (n). But in the case of a gift to a married woman “for her sole use and benefit, independent of her husband,” these words may be held to indicate that she is to take as if she were a feme sole, and not necessarily for her own benefit (o).

Provisions inconsistent with executors taking beneficially.

Although the fact that a testator has bequeathed legacies to his executors is generally sufficient to prevent them from taking the residue beneficially by virtue of their office, this rule does not, it seems, apply where the residue is expressly bequeathed to them (p). In Saltmarsh v. Barrett (q), however, Turner, L.J., in deciding against the executors, laid considerable stress on the bequest of the legacies, and also on a provision contained in the will for the trustees' indemnity (r).

(f) See further as to gifts to executors beneficially, Chap. XLI.

(g) 2 My. & Cr. 684.

(h) 15 W. R. 552.

(i) 34 L. J. Ch. 98.

(j) 27 L. J. Ch. 177; followed in Morrison v. M'Ferran, [1901] 1 Ir. 360. As to the effect of expressions of kindness, see ante, p. 710.

(k) 1 L. R., 7 H. L. 606.

(l) 2 Ph. 793, (Ellcock v. Mapp); 3 H. L. C. 492.

(m) 1 Coll. 197. See also Southouse v. Bate, 2 V. & B. 396; Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. 686; Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 H. & M. 60, ante, p. 708; Briggs v. Penny, 3 Mac. & G. 546; Read v. Stedman, 26 Bea. 495; and Dacre v.

Patrickson, 1 Dr. & Sm. 182, where the Crown took in default of next of kin. Re Roby, [1907] 2 Ch. 84; [1908] 1 Ch. 71, was a clear case.

(n) Compare Irvine v. Sullivan, and Gray v. Gray, post, p. 717.

(o) Stubbs v. Sargon, 3 My. & Cr. 507; Re Haly's Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 130. This construction may be affected by the Married Women's Property Acts in cases falling within them.

(p) Re Henshaw, 34 L. J. Ch. 98; Hillerson v. Grove, 21 Bea. 518. As to Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 V. & B. 294, see ante, p. 482.

(q) 3 D. F. & J. 279.

(r) Compare Romans v. Mitchell, 15 W. R. 552.

If a testator gives the residue to his executors for such purposes as they think fit, they hold it as trustees for the next of kin (s). CHAPTER XXI.

After the passing of the Executors Act, 1830, a doubt existed for some time, whether the act had introduced any new principle of construction in cases where residuary personal estate is bequeathed to executors for purposes which do not exhaust the beneficial interest (t); but it has been settled that the act has no application in such cases (u). An executor who is a trustee for the next of kin by virtue of the act is not an express trustee (v). Executors Act, 1830.

Where a testator bequeaths his residuary personal estate to a person who is not an executor, or is only one of two or more executors, for specified purposes, which do not exhaust the beneficial interest, the question may arise whether the legatee is intended to take the surplus for his own benefit, or whether he holds it subject to a resulting trust for the next of kin. The principle above stated as applicable to devises of real estate (w), seems to apply to bequests of personalty (x). In Clarke v. Hilton (y) a testator gave all his personal estate to his grandson, J. C. H., his executors, administrators and assigns, "subject to the payment of debts, legacies, and personal expenses, and to the trusts hereinafter contained," upon trust to convert and "to stand possessed of the said trust moneys," upon trusts which did not exhaust the funds; it was held that the grandson took the residue beneficially (z). Again, in Irvine v. Sullivan (a), the residue was given to the executors upon trust to convert and after payment of debts, &c., to pay the net residue to D. "to whom I give and bequeath the same absolutely, trusting that she will carry out my wishes": subject to the payments directed by the testator, it was held that D. took the residue beneficially. Much stress was laid on the word "absolutely." So in Morrison v. M'Ferran (b), where the residuary legatee was one of two executors. On the other hand, in Re West (c), the Where residuary legatee is not executor, or not sole executor.

(s) Vezev v. Jamson, 1 S. & St. 69; Fowler v. Garlike, 1 R. & My. 232; Buckle v. Bristow, 10 Jur. N. S. 1095; Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo, L. R., 6 P.C. 381; Fenton v. Nevin, 31 L. R. Ir. 478; Balfe v. Halpenny, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 486. As to Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 V. & B. 294, see Ellis v. Selby, 1 M. & Cr. 286; Buckle v. Bristow, supra.

(t) Love v. Gaze, 8 Bea. 472; Saltmarsh v. Barrett, 3 D. F. & J. 279; Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. 686.

(u) Williams v. Arkle, L. R., 7 H. L. 606; Re Roby, [1907] 2 Ch. 84, [1908] 1 Ch. 71.

(v) Re Lacy, [1899] 2 Ch. 149; Re

M'Causland's Trusts, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 327.

(w) Ante, pp. 706 seq.

(x) Fenton v. Hawkins, 9 W. R. 300; Cary v. Cary, 2 Sch. & L. 173

(y) L. R., 2 Eq. 810.

(z) The testator appointed four persons, including the grandson, to be his executors, but this fact does not appear to have affected the construction.

(a) L. R., 8 Eq. 673. Compare Gray v. Gray, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 218.

(b) [1901] 1 Ir. R. 360.

(c) [1900] 1 Ch. 84, stated ante, p. 708. Compare Stubbs v. Sargon, 3 My. & Cr. 507, ante, p. 481.

CHAPTER XXI. residuary legatees were held to be trustees of the surplus personal estate for the testator's next of kin. In this case, however, the property was given to them upon trust for sale, and they were also executors.

The distinction is between a gift for a particular purpose only, and a gift subject to the performance of a particular purpose.

Charity. The general principle stated above with reference to real estate devised for charitable purposes (d), applies also to personalty. Accordingly, where a testator bequeathed a sum of money for charitable purposes to be applied in a manner which did not exhaust the whole fund, it was held that the surplus was nevertheless dedicated to the general purposes indicated by the testator (e).

Where whole trust is indefinite. In addition to the cases above mentioned, reference may here be made to that class of cases in which the question arises whether the testator intends to create a trust at all; if he does, a further question may arise whether he has indicated the objects of the trust with sufficient clearness, or whether they are so indefinite that the trust fails to take effect, and there is a resulting trust for the residuary legatee or next of kin. These questions are discussed in Chapter XXIV., in connection with the doctrine of precatory trusts.

Destination of particular estates void in their creation.

IV.—Acceleration of Future Interests.—(1) As to Realty.—“Another question,” continues Mr. Jarman (f), “which has been agitated between the heir and devisee is, whether if, in a series of consecutive limitations, a particular estate be void in its creation from being limited to a person incapable by law or refusing to take, the remainders immediately expectant on such estate are accelerated, or the interest in question descends to the testator's heir at law as real estate undisposed of.

Ulterior estate held to be accelerated.

“The early authorities are clearly in favour of the acceleration. Thus, it is laid down in Perkins (g), that, ‘if a man, seised of land devisable in fee, devise it to a monk for life, the remainder to a stranger in fee, and the devisor dies, the monk being alive, in this case the remainder shall take effect presently.’

(d) Ante, p. 712.

(e) Att.-Gen. v. Drapers' Co., 2 Bea. 508; Bishop of Hereford v. Adams, 7 Ves. 324; Att.-Gen. v. Earl of Winchel- sea, 3 Br. C. C. 374.

(f) First ed. p. 513.

(g) Sec. 567. See also ss. 567, 569; and Shepp. Touchst. 435, 451.

“So it was held by Gawdy, in Fuller v. Fuller (h), (though the case did not raise the point,) that if the devisee of an estate tail refuse, the devisee in remainder shall take immediately. And the same point, in regard to a devisee for life, was maintained arguendo in Archbishop Cranmer's Case” (i).

And if land be devised to A. for life with remainder over, and the devise to A. is void under sect. 15 of the Wills Act, the remainder takes effect at once (j). The same rule applies if a devise of a life estate is revoked by the testator (k).

Where devise of life estate is void or revoked.

“The doctrine,” as Mr. Jarman points out (l), “evidently proceeds upon the supposition that, though the ulterior devise is in terms not to take effect in possession until the decease of the prior devisee, if tenant for life, or his decease without issue, if tenant in tail, yet that, in point of fact, it is to be read as a limitation of a remainder, to take effect in every event which removes the prior estate out of the way. Such a principle is familiar in its application to the case of an estate for life being determined by forfeiture.” In Craven v. Brady (m) real estate was devised to A. for life, with a proviso that if she made any voluntary or involuntary alienation of the income, her life estate should determine as if she were dead; she forfeited her estate, and it was held that the remainder was accelerated.

Forfeiture.

Where, however, the particular estate which fails is followed by a contingent interest, and that by a vested interest, the ultimate interest will not be accelerated by the failure of the particular estate, but there will be an intestacy until it is ascertained whether the contingent interest will take effect or not (n). Thus in Re Townsend's Estate (o) real estate was devised upon trust to convert and pay the income of the proceeds to A. for life and after his death upon trust for his children in equal shares, with a gift over in case A. should die without leaving issue; the will had been attested by A.'s wife, so that the gift of his life interest was void; A. had no children; it was held that until A. had a child, the Particular estate followed by contingent interest.

(h) Cro. El. 422. So where the devisee in tail died, though he left issue, Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 723; but see now 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 32.

(i) Dy. 310 a.

(j) Jull v. Jacobs, 3 Ch. D. 703.

(k) Lainson v. Lainson, 18 Bea. 1; 5 D. M. & G. 754; Re Johnson, 68 L. T. 20.

(l) First ed. p. 513.

(m) L. R., 4 Eq. 209; 4 Ch. 296. Part of the property belonged to the testator, and as to the rest he had a power of appointment. As regards the part which belonged to him, it seems that the remainder would have been accelerated irrespectively of the special terms of the proviso. See post, p. 725.

(n) Carrick v. Errington, 5 Br. P. C. 391. In this case the settlement was of an equitable fee simple by deed; see Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 597.

(o) 34 Ch. D. 357.

CHAPTER XXI. interests subsequent to A.'s life estate could not be accelerated, and during the life of A., so long as he had no children, the income belonged to the heir at law of the testatrix (p).

In Lomas v. Wright (q) land was limited to an after-born illegitimate son in fee, and if he should die before he attained twenty-one, then to A. an infant, in fee; A. died under age and without issue; the after-born illegitimate son attained twenty-one: it was held by Leach, M.R., that the contingent limitation to A. failed to take effect, the event on which it was limited not having happened, and that there could consequently be no acceleration by reason of the limitation to the after-born illegitimate son being void; the land therefore resulted to the heir of the grantor.

Where the remainder is limited to a class, the effect of acceleration may be to alter the period at which the class is to be ascertained (r).

Whether same rules apply to personalty.

(2) As to Personalty.—It seems to be now settled that the same principles are applicable to quasi-remainders of personalty. In Eavestaff v. Austin (s) Romilly, M.R., expressed an opinion that the rules which relate to real estate do not apply to personalty, though in the case before him he held that there were special circumstances strong enough to create an exception. In Lainson v. Lainson (t), where a remainder in freeholds was held to be accelerated by the revocation of the life estate, the remainder in leaseholds bequeathed on corresponding trusts was held by the same judge to be also accelerated. And a similar decision was made by Sir R. Malins, V.-C., in Jull v. Jacobs (u). In Re Clark (v) a testator gave his real and personal estate to his wife for life and after her death to

(p) See also Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. 375; Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Ch. D. 410. Lord Westbury's decision in Sidney v. Wilmer (4 D. J. & S. 84), must be considered as overruled by Hodgson v. Earl of Bective (1 H. & M. 376); see Wade-Gery v. Handley, 3 Ch. D. 374. Shifting clauses usually provide expressly or by implication for the destination of the rents in the meantime. Turton v. Lambarde, 1 D. F. & J. 516; D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 34 Beav. 36.

(q) 2 Myl. & K. 769. In this case the settlement was by deed, but the rule as laid down by the M.R. applies to devises.

(r) Re Johnson, 68 L. T. 20. Compare Re Clark, stated in the text, infra.

(s) 19 Beav. 591.

(t) 23 L. J. Ch. 170; Alt v. Gregory 8 D. M. & G. 221; Re Love, 47 L. J. Ch. 783 (referred to ante, p. 182, s. n. Green v. Tribe); Stephenson v. Stephenson, 52 L. T. 576; Re Whitehorne, [1906] 2 Ch. 121. Compare David v. Rees, 1 R. & My. 687, where stock was bequeathed in trust for A. for life, remainder to B. for life: by codicil an annuity to A. was substituted for his life estate, and B.'s interest was held not accelerated. And see Re Colson's Trusts, Kay, 133, where the enjoyment of an accumulation fund was accelerated, the devisees in tail of the estate for whose benefit it was created having barred the entail.

(u) 3 Ch. D. 703.

(v) 31 Ch. D. 72.

be equally divided between such of his children as should be living at her death, and in case of any of his children dying before his wife leaving children, such children were to take their parent's share. At the death of the testator's widow one of the testator's daughters was living and had several children, but her husband was an attesting witness to the will, and the gift to her was therefore void; it was held by Bacon, V.-C., that the children of the daughter were entitled to her share. This construction was no doubt benignant, but it seems contrary to the principle laid down in Lomas v. Wright (w).

In Re Vernon (x), where a legatee elected to give up her life interest in a settled share of residue, it was held by Kekewich, J., that the interests of her husband and children were not accelerated.

There can of course be no acceleration if the persons to take in remainder are not in existence (y).

It may, apparently, be laid down as a general rule that where personal property is given to A. absolutely with remainder to B. absolutely, and A. dies in the testator's lifetime, the gift to B. is accelerated, and takes effect (yy).

Successive absolute interests in personalty.

It may here be noted that where a fund is given to A. contingently on a certain woman not having children, and the woman has passed the age of child-bearing without having had any children, the Court has jurisdiction to direct the fund to be paid over to A. (z). But if B. is entitled to property contingently on a certain woman having a child, the Court will not enter into the question of her being past child-bearing for the purpose of depriving B. of the chance of becoming entitled to the property (a).

Woman past child-bearing.

In Re Travis (b), a testator directed the surplus income of his property to be accumulated until the death of A., and subject thereto he gave his property upon trusts which, stated shortly, were for the issue of A. who should attain twenty-one or be living at her death, and in default of issue for certain named beneficiaries; when the period of twenty-one years from the testator's death expired, and the trust for accumulation was stopped by the Thellusson Act, A. was past the age of child-bearing and had never had any children, but it was held that as to the surplus income from that time to the death of A. there was an intestacy.

(w) Ante, p. 720.

(x) 95 L. T. 48.

(y) Re Townsend's Estate, 34 Ch. D. 357.

(yy) Re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348; ante, p. 452.

(z) Ibid. In Re White, [1901] 1 Ch.

570, the rule was extended to the case of a widow over fifty-six, who had had only one child, then thirty-four years of age.

(a) Re Hocking, [1898] 2 Ch. 567.

(b) [1900] 2 Ch. 541.

CHAPTER XXI.

Tregonwell v. Sydenham.

(3) Devises after Trusts which fail.—The doctrine of acceleration underwent much discussion in Tregonwell v. Sydenham (c), where a testator devised certain estates at S. and D. in strict settlement, and devised certain estates at E. in like manner as the D. estates, except that there was interposed between the limitations of the E. estates a devise to trustees for a term of sixty years, upon trust to receive the rents until the trustees should have received certain sums which they were from time to time to lay out in the purchase of land, to be settled upon the persons for the time being in the possession of the S. estates. On a bill filed by the persons entitled to the estate for life in possession and the immediate estate in remainder in the S. estates, to have the trusts of the term declared void as tending to a perpetuity, and that the residue should be assigned for their benefit, the Court of Exchequer declared the trusts to be void, and the term to attend the inheritance. But the House of Lords, on appeal, reversed the decree; declaring, first, that the trusts of the term were not void in their creation, but became so in event, the trusts for raising the money being valid; but that of settling the lands to uses being void as too remote, in consequence of its happening that the person then in possession, and to whom, therefore, an estate for life was to be limited with remainder to his issue, was one who was not in existence at the testator's death (d). Secondly, (and this is the point material to the present discussion,) that the trusts of the term resulted for the benefit of the heir at law of the testator (e).

The argument of Lord Redesdale and Lord Eldon, upon which this part of their decision turned, was, that the land, not being given over until "from and after" the raising of the money, the intermediate interest was evidently not included in the devise, and, therefore, went to the heir. The interest given to the devisee was exclusive of, and with a deduction of, that sum. "The testator, then," observed Lord Eldon, "has said that the devisees shall not take it. The policy of the law will not permit the uses for which the testator intended it to take effect; and in such a case, in the absence of any expression of intention on the part of a testator with respect to a purpose which the law will allow, the doctrine of law is, that he shall take the interest who takes independently of all

(c) 3 Dow, 194. Only the short effect of the limitations is stated above: the provisions of the will are given in detail in the previous editions of this work. See the remarks on the case ("a case of extraordinary difficulty") in Gray on Perpetuities, §§ 419, seq.

(d) On this point, vide ante, pp. 284, seq.

(e) Lord St. Leonards in Law of Prop. p. 362, says, "I prefer the decision of the Exchequer."

intention, and on whom the law casts it. On these grounds, I agree that the money must be raised and applied for the benefit of the heir, and not of the devisees" (f).

"It is evident," says Mr. Jarman (g), "that the two points adjudicated by the House of Lords had no necessary connection; or, in other words, that the deciding the heir to be entitled was not a consequence of holding the trusts of the term to be void in event only, and not in their creation; for Lord Eldon expressly laid it down, that, if the trusts had been to raise 20,000*l.* for charities, (in which case they would have been clearly void ab initio,) and after the sum had been raised, then to the devisees, as the intention would not have been in their favour, the heir would have been let in" (h).

CHAPTER XXI.

Remark on Tregonwell v.
Sydenham.

Term for years, trust
being satisfied, or not arising, attends inheritance for the benefit of devisee.

(4) Devises subject to Trusts which fail.—Mr. Jarman continues (i): "It is clear, however, that where a term of years is created for particular purposes, and the land subject thereto is devised over, the term, after the purposes of its creation are satisfied, or immediately, if those purposes do not arise, attends the inheritance for the benefit of the devisee. And such was the decision in one case, where the nature of the trust and the expressions of the testator afforded an argument in favour of a contrary construction.

"The case here alluded to is Davidson v. Foley (j), where a testator devised lands to trustees, their executors, &c., for ninety-nine years, upon the trusts after mentioned, and, after the expiration or other determination thereof, and subject thereto, to A., testator's son, for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. Another term was created, in the same manner, of property similarly given to B., another son, and his sons in tail male. The trusts of the respective terms were for the trustees, in their discretion, to pay testator's two sons an annual allowance, not exceeding a given sum, but so as that they should have no estate or interest in the rents of the property for their lives, other than the trustees, in their discretion, should think proper; and then to pay off a certain mortgage; and then to pay certain

(f) "And with this doctrine the cases on the statute restraining accumulation of income (ante, p. [389]) seem to agree." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(g) First ed. p. 517.

(h) "His Lordship seems to have forgotten that in the case put by him, not only the gift of the 20,000*l.*, but also the term would have been void ab initio (ante, p. [255]), and the reversioner, and not the heir, would then have become entitled in possession. See Williams v. Goodtitle, 5 M. & Ry. 757, post, p. [725]." (Note by Messrs. Wolstenholme and Vincent in the 3rd edition of this work.)

(i) First ed. p. 517.

(j) 2 Br. C. C. 203. See Lord Eldon's judgment in Sidney v. Shelley, 19 Ves. 364.

CHAPTER XXI. debts of his sons, but so that the testator's sons' creditors should have no lien upon the land; and, after the decease of his sons, and the payment of the mortgage-money and debts before mentioned, and the costs, the terms were to attend the inheritance. Lord Thurlow was of opinion, that, as the purposes for which the terms were created were exhausted, the terms attended the inheritance for the benefit of the tenants for life. It had been ingeniously argued, he said, that these were trusts extending beyond the lives of the sons, and that, if those trusts were sufficient, the sons were to have no interest for their lives. But the nature of a resulting trust was, that it was such as had escaped the attention of the testator, and that here the intention of raising a trust beyond the payment of debts was totally unexpressed. No trust could be raised upon the terms used.

“ Lord Thurlow's reasoning evidently assumes that the devise, subject to the term, comprised all the interest not actually absorbed by the trusts of such term; and this may serve to reconcile some expressions in his judgment, which might otherwise seem to warrant a conclusion more favourable to the heir than to the devisees.

Case in which term was created, but no trusts were declared.

“ The same principle has been applied to a case in which a term for years was devised, upon trusts to be thereafter declared, (but which were not declared,) with devise over on the ‘ expiration or sooner determination ’ of the term, the words ‘ subject thereto,’ though not actually occurring in the will, being by force of the intention appearing upon the general context, supplied.

“ As in the case of Sidney v. Shelley (k), where A. devised lands to trustees and their heirs, to the use of them, their executors, &c., for ninety-nine years, ‘ upon the trusts hereinafter expressed and declared concerning the same, and from and after the expiration or other sooner determination of the said term of ninety-nine years,’ he gave the said lands to several persons for life and in tail; and the will contained no declaration of the trusts of the term. It was strongly contended that the trusts resulted to the heir, chiefly on the authority of a dictum of Lord Hardwicke (l), in a case wherein a term of ninety-nine years having been created by settlement, without any declaration of trust, his Lordship is made to say, upon the question whether there was a resulting trust for the settlor, ‘ It has been determined so in the case of voluntary settlements and wills ’; his Lordship distinguishing a settlement

(k) 19 Ves. 352.

(l) In Brown v. Jones, 1 Atk. 191.

A note of this dictum, found among Lord Northington's papers, coincided.

for valuable consideration. But Lord Eldon, in the principal case, decided that the testator, having created a term for ninety-nine years, upon trusts to be afterwards declared, and, at the expiration or sooner determination of that term, having devised those estates in such a manner as that the actual enjoyment of them was clearly intended; the termors having nothing for their own use, and he not having declared any trust, the result was exactly the same as if some trust had been declared, which it became unnecessary to satisfy, or which was satisfied after his death. His Lordship considered that the will was to be read as if the words 'subject to the trusts thereof' were in it.

"Lord Eldon observed, that, if the limitation had been simply to the trustees, without reference to any trusts, however monstrous the supposition with reference to the intention, the subsequent devisees must have taken subject to the term."

As to terms not upon trusts.

If the limitation of the term itself is void, as where (under the old law) trusts are declared in favour of a charity, the devisee of the freehold is, of course, immediately entitled in possession (m).

Reversion accelerated where term is void.

(5) As to Appointments under Powers.—The doctrine of acceleration does not extend to estates limited under powers of appointment; where, if the particular estate fails, the remainder continues such, and the estate, during the life of the intended taker, goes as in default of appointment (n).

The foregoing paragraph, with the note, is taken from the 3rd edition of this work, by Messrs. Wolstenholme and Vincent. It is to be observed that the case in which Sugden, C., laid down this doctrine was the case of a special power, and in his work on Powers he states the rule as if it applied only to special powers (o). If, however, the reason of the rule is that where the donor of a power has designated persons to take in default of appointment, he means them to take whatever is not validly appointed, then there seems no reason why it should not apply to general powers.

In any case it is clear that whether the appointment is general or special, the testator may shew an intention that if the particular interest fails, or is determined, the interests in remainder shall be accelerated (p).

(m) Williams v. Goodtitle, 5 M. & Ry. 757.

(n) Per Sugden, C., Crozier v. Crozier, 3 D. & War. 365, 366; 2 Sugd. Pow. 67, 7th ed. And distinguish the cases there cited, and Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469, in which the remainder as well as the particular estate fails.

(o) Eighth ed. p. 515.

(p) Craven v. Brady, L. R., 4 Eq. 209, 4 Ch. 296; Line v. Hall, 43 L. J. Ch. 107; Re Finch and Chew's Contract, [1903] 2 Ch. 486. In Craven v. Brady, Romilly, M.R., cites as applicable to CHAPTER XXI.

Whether,
under devise to A. during minority of B.,
A.'s estate determines on B.'s decease during minority.

(6) Devises during Minority where the Minor dies.—Mr. Jarman continues (q) : “ Sometimes an estate is made to determine at the majority of a minor ; and it happens that he dies under age : whence arises the question, whether the devisee is entitled to hold the estate until the minor would, if living, have attained the prescribed age ; or whether the devise over (for it has generally, though not necessarily, happened that there is such a devise) is accelerated. The authorities upon this point are not to be reconciled (if at all) without resorting to some very fine-spun distinctions, as will be seen by the following brief statement.

“ In Carter v. Church (r), A. devised lands to his daughter in fee, and declared that his executors should receive the profits until she attained twenty-one, towards payment of his debts and legacies. The daughter died when five years old. The Lord Keeper was of opinion that the charging the profits until the daughter attained twenty-one, amounted to a term until she would, if living, have attained that age.

“ So, in [Coates] v. Needham (s), where A. devised lands to C. and D. and their heirs, upon trust, to receive the rents until his son W. should attain the age of twenty-one years ; and pay one-third to the testator's wife in lieu of dower ; and out of the other two-thirds to raise portions for his daughters ; and devised all to W., when twenty-one, in tail ; and, in default of such issue, then over. W. died under the age of twenty-one, without issue ; the widow afterwards died before W. would, if living, have attained that age ; and it was held, [according to the first report of the case (t), which is probably the correct one (u), that the wife's administrator was entitled during the term for which the minority would have lasted ; but in a subsequent case on the same will, it was held] that the wife's third for such period was an interest undisposed of, and went to the testator's heir, on the ground that nothing was given to the devisees until W. attained the general question of accelerating an appointed remainder some observations of Sir E. Sugden in Crozier v. Crozier, which appear to refer only to the question whether under an appointment the failure of the particular estate involved also the failure of the remainder ; and stops just short of the passage cited above in the text.

(q) First ed. p. 520.

(r) 1 Ch. Ca. 115.

(s) 2 Vern. 65, Levet v. Needham, ib. 138, which states the decision in Coates v. Needham wrongly.

(t) 2 Vern. 65.

(u) The decree is given in Mr. Raithby's edition from Reg. Lib., but he states that he could not find any decree in Levet v. Needham. Mr. Jarman adds : “ The most singular feature in this case is, the holding the interest of the wife to have ceased at her death. If, as the Court assumed, a term was absolutely carved out of the inheritance, clearly words of limitation were not necessary to vest it in the wife with the transmissible quality of personal estate.”

(or, rather, would have attained) his majority, and died without issue.

“ On the other hand, in the case of Manfield v. Dugard (v), where A. devised lands to his wife until B., his eldest son, should attain twenty-one; and, when he should attain that age, to him in fee. B. died at the age of thirteen; whereupon his heir-at-law claimed the rents from his death. The L.C. held, that the heir was entitled, for that the wife’s estate determined at the death of the son, whose estate in fee, which was vested at the testator’s death, took effect in possession on that event.”

One of the reasons assigned for this adjudication was, that the land was not devised to the wife for the payment of debts; and this agrees with Boraston’s Case (w), where a testator devised lands to his executors until such time as his grandson, Hugh, should accomplish his full age of twenty-one years, and the mean profits to be employed by his executors towards the performance of his will. Hugh died at the age of nine years; and it was argued by Coke, that the term of the executors did not thereby cease, because it was to be intended that the testator had computed that the profits to be taken of his lands by his executors, during the minority of his grandson, would suffice to pay his debts and perform his will, and that he did not intend that it should determine by the death of his grandson, for then his debts would remain unsatisfied and his will unperformed, which was granted by the whole court (x).

This argument was adopted by Sir J. Jekyll, M.R., in Lomax v. Holmedon (y), in which he distinguished the cases where such an interest was created for a particular purpose, as for a fund for payment of debts (which he said was Boraston’s Case), from the cases where no such intention appeared: in these latter he said the interest would absolutely determine by the death of the party under the age specified in the will. It is plain that here the existence of the minority supplies the sole occasion and motive for the creation of the estate in question (z). The principle of (v) 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 195, pl. 4.

(w) 3 Co. 19 a. See further as to this case, Chap. XXXVII.

(x) 3 Co. 21 a.

(y) 3 P. W. 176. See also Sweet v. Beal, Lane, 56, where the term was held to endure beyond the death of the minor under age, for the termor’s own benefit, which was therefore the “particular purpose” in that case. In Goodright d. Revell v. Parker, 1 M. & S.

692, the property was leasehold.

(z) See Castle v. Eate, 7 Beav. 296. If the person to whom the intermediate interest is given should die during the minority, the same reasons (i.e., “the existence of the minority”) will give the interest to his representatives during the remainder of the term: see Laxton v. Eedle, 19 Beav. 321. Where it is a class during whose minority the income of property is given, the estate will these authorities is clearly unaffected by the circumstance of the specified purpose being insufficient to exhaust the whole proceeds of the term. The construction is that the testator has made his own computation, so that the estate must endure until the regular expiration of the term, and if any part of the beneficial interest is undisposed of, it must result to the heir-at-law.

CHAPTER XXI.

Postponement during minority, not extended to devisees over.

"Sometimes it happens," as Mr. Jarman points out (a), "that real estate is devised to a minor contingently on his attaining twenty-one, with a devise over in the event of his dying under that age; in which case, though, under the original devise, if construed to be contingent, the property would, during the minority, have devolved to the heir-at-law of the testator as real estate undisposed of; yet, on the minor dying under age, the devise over, not being subject to the postponement affecting the original devise, takes effect in possession immediately" (b).

continue while there is a chance of any persons becoming members of the class, though none may for the time being be actually in existence, e.g., during the life of a parent whose children's minority is contemplated, semb. Conduitt

v. Soane, 4 Jur. N. S. 502. (Note by Messrs. Wolstenholme and Vincent in the 3rd edition of this work.)

(a) First ed. p. 522.

(b) Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. 368.

CHAPTER XXII.

CONVERSION (a).

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Effect of Conversion de- hors the Will :		VI. Destination of undisposed- of Interests in Property directed to be converted :
A. As to Conversion of Land into Money	729	A. Doctrine of Conversion as between Claimants under Will, and Real and Personal Representatives of Testator	764
B. As to Conversion of Money into Land	734	B. As between Persons claiming under Heir or Next of Kin	774
II. Rights of Beneficiaries affected by Trustees' Option to Convert	740	VII. Effect of Failure by Lapse, or otherwise, of Pecuniary Gifts out of Proceeds of Land	777
III. Doctrine of Constructive Conversion	743
IV. What Words will work a Constructive Conversion	745
V. Election to take Property in its actual State	758

I.—Effect of Conversion dehors the Will.—A. As to Conversion of Land into Money.—It has been already pointed out, that if a testator devises land to A., and afterwards sells it, or contracts to sell it (b), to B., this operates as a revocation or ademption of the devise and a conversion of the land into money. Consequently A. has no claim to the purchase money, which forms part of the testator's personal estate (c). In order that a contract of sale may have this effect, it seems that the contract must be enforceable by the

Revocation or ademption by conversion.

(a) This chapter has been re-arranged and to a considerable extent re-written. A portion of the first section originally formed part of Chap. IV., while the sections dealing with the rights of tenant for life and remainderman have been transferred to Chap. XXXIV.

(b) Watts v. Watts, L. R., 17 Eq. 217. Compare Townley v. Bedwell, post.

(c) Ante, pp. 162 seq. But A. is entitled to the rents between the testator's death and the completion of the purchase: Watts v. Watts, L. R., 17 Eq. 217. In Re Bago's Settlement, 31

L. J. Ch. 772, the proceeds of sale were subject to re-investment in land, but the only effect of this was that they passed as realty not specifically devised. See also Manton v. Tabois, 30 Ch. D. 92. A contract by a railway company, in the event of its requiring part of A.'s land, to pay a certain price per acre for it, does not operate as a conversion: Ex parte Walker, 1 Dr. 508, post, p. 734. As to ademption in the case of powers of appointment, see Chap. XXIII.

CHAP. XXII.

Rescission of contract.

testator: if it is not enforceable against the purchaser by reason of its not complying with the Statute of Frauds, or because the title shewn is not in accordance with the contract, and has not been accepted by the purchaser, the contract does not operate as a conversion (d). If, however, there is a binding contract at the testator's death, and it is afterwards rescinded for non-payment of the purchase money, or for any cause other than a defect in the title, the land is still treated as having been converted (e).

Adoption of verbal contract by devisee.

If a testator enters into a verbal contract of sale, which is not enforceable against him, and after his death the devisee sells the land to the same purchaser for the same price, this does not operate as a retrospective conversion, unless the devisee expressly adopts the testator's contract (f).

Option of purchase.

An anomalous rule (known as the rule in Lawes v. Bennett (g)) applies to cases where the testator has entered into a contract under which a person has an option of purchasing land belonging to the testator, and exercises the option after the testator's death (gg). In such a case, although constructive conversion only takes place as from the exercise of the option (h), yet the proceeds of sale devolve as part of the testator's personalty. The rule applies although the purchase money is payable to the testator "his heirs or assigns" (i).

(d) Lacon v. Mertins, 3 Atk. 1; Re Thomas, 34 Ch. D. 166. There are dicta to the effect that a contract of sale does not operate as a conversion unless, at the death of the testator, it is enforceable by both parties: per Jessel, M.R., in Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. 506 seq., per Fry, J., in Edwards v. West, 7 Ch. D. 862. The subject is discussed in Crowe v. Menton, 28 L. R. Ir. 519. Where at the death of a person there is a contract for sale of the fee or other freehold interest in land enforceable against the heir or devisee, the personal representatives of the deceased can now convey the land; see the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 4.

(e) Bennett v. Earl of Tankerville, 19 Ves. 170; Curre v. Bowyer, 5 Bea. 6, n.; Lysaght v. Edwards; Crowe v. Menton; Re Thomas, supra. In Ryder v. Ryder, Ir. R., 8 Eq. 86, the sale was set aside in proceedings by the heir on the terms of the purchase money being repaid; it was held that the heir must repay the money himself: see Stump v.

Gaby, 2 D. M. & G. 623.

(f) Re Harrison, 34 Ch. D. 214. If an heir voluntarily adopts a contract of sale which is not enforceable, this operates as a retrospective conversion: Frayne v. Taylor, 33 L. J. Ch. 228.

(g) 1 Cox, 167. See Townley v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. 591; Collingwood v. Row, 26 L. J. Ch. 649. It applies to cases of intestacy: Re Isaacs, [1894] 3 Ch. 506. The rule applies only as between the real and personal representatives of the testator and will not be extended: Edwards v. West, 7 Ch. D. 858, and see Re Adams and Kensington Vestry, 27 Ch. D. 394, as to the devolution of an option contained in a lease on the death of the lessee.

(gg) As to the effect of an option of purchase given by will, see ante, p. 79.

(h) So that the heir or devisee is entitled to the intermediate rents, but the interest on the purchase money is part of the testator's personal estate: Townley v. Bedwell, supra.

(i) Townley v. Bedwell, supra; Weeding v. Weeding, 1 J. & H. 424.

It also applies where the option does not arise until after the testator's death (ii). CHAP. XXII.

If the devise is general, it is immaterial whether the will is executed before or after the contract giving the option (j); and if the devise is specific, the rule applies in all cases where the contract giving the option is entered into after the date of the will (k), unless of course the testator has contemplated the possibility of his entering into such a contract and has provided for it by his will.

But a testator who has entered into a contract of sale, or given an option of purchase, in respect of land, and afterwards or simultaneously makes a will specifically devising it, may shew that he wishes the devisee of the land to have the benefit of the sale. In Knollys v. Shepherd (l) (a case of contract), a specific devise to the testator's "dear wife" of the estate "which he had lately contracted to sell," was held not to shew such an intention, but to give the wife only the legal estate, the purchase-money passing by the residuary bequest. But in the case of an option, a will made or re-published after the date of or simultaneously with the creation of the option, and specifically devising the property in strict settlement, has been held to take the case out of the rule in Lawes v. Bennett, and, upon the option being exercised after the testator's death, to carry the purchase-money to the devisees (m).

How contrary intention may appear.

Where a testator specifically bequeaths leaseholds, and after his death the term is put an end to under a condition contained in the lease, the legatee is entitled to the compensation payable under the condition (n).

If mortgaged land is sold by the mortgagee under his power of sale, the destination of the surplus proceeds of sale is, as a general rule, governed by the condition of the property at the mortgagor's death. Consequently if the sale takes place after the mortgagor's death, the surplus proceeds devolve as realty, while if it takes place during his lifetime, they devolve as personalty: and the fact that the mortgage deed provides that they are to be paid to the Sale by mortgagee.

(ii) Re Isaacs, supra.

(j) Lawes v. Bennett, supra; Goold v. Teague, 5 Jur. N. S. 116 (leaseholds).

(k) Weeding v. Weeding, supra.

(l) 1 J. & W. 499, cit., affirmed in D. P., Sug. Law of Prop. 223. As to whether a devise includes land which the testator has contracted to sell, see post, Chap. XXXV.

(m) Drant v. Vause, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 580; Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S. 722; Re Pyle, [1895] 1 Ch. 724; Duffield v. M'Master, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 370. See Re Isaacs, [1894] 3 Ch. 506 (intestacy).

(n) Coyne v. Coyne, Ir. R., 10 Eq. 496; post, p. 739.

CHAP. XXII.

Trustee in bankruptcy.

Sale by Court.

Whether order effects
conversion
out and out.

Excessive sale; so-called "equity of reconversion."

mortgagor "his heirs or assigns" makes no difference, these words not being sufficient to effect a constructive re-conversion (o).

A similar rule seems to prevail in the case of a sale by a trustee in bankruptcy (p).

Where land is sold under an absolute order, made within the jurisdiction of the Court, the proceeds are personalty; in fact the order itself operates as a conversion from its date, and before any sale has taken place (q). But where a conditional order is first made, and is afterwards made absolute, it only takes effect from the latter date (r).

If the order for sale is made in an administration action, for payment of debts and legacies, it would seem, on principle, that it operates as a conversion for all purposes, so that any surplus is personal estate. The contrary was indeed decided by Romilly, M.R. (s), but the decision has been disapproved (t). And it is clear that if the order is made by consent, for the convenience or benefit of the parties, it operates as a conversion out and out, whatever the nature of the action may be (u).

It was until recently supposed that the general principle did not apply if the order directed a sale to be made for raising a specific sum; and that in such a case, if more land was sold than was required, the surplus proceeds of sale retained the character of realty (v). Accordingly, where a sale was directed in a mortgagee's suit, and the surplus was invested by the Court at his request, it was held to devolve as realty on his death (w). And in a recent case (x), where land belonging to an infant was sold for the purpose of paying costs, and the infant died intestate after attaining twenty-one, it was held by Eve, J., that the surplus proceeds of sale (which had been invested in consols) devolved as realty. But this decision

(o) Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Ves. 227; Bourne v. Bourne, 2 Ha. 35; Wright v. Rose, 2 S. & S. 323; Re Smith, 7 Jur. N. S. 903; Re Grange, [1907] 1 Ch. 313, referred to in Burgess v. Booth, [1908] 2 Ch. 648.

(p) Banks v. Scott, 5 Madd. 493.

(q) Arnold v. Dixon, L. R., 19 Eq. 113. Hyett v. Meekin, 25 Ch. D. 735 (following dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Wallace v. Greenwood, 16 Ch. D. 362); Hartley v. Pendarves, [1901] 2 Ch. 498 (disapproving Field v. Brown, 27 Bea. 90); Re Dodson, [1908] 2 Ch. 638.

(r) Re Beamish's Estate, 27 L. R. Ir. 326; Re Henry's Estate, 31 L. R. Ir. 158.

(s) Cooke v. Dealey, 22 Bea. 196.

(t) By Jessel, M.R., in Steed v. Preece, L. R., 18 Eq. 197. See also Hartley v. Pendarves, supra; Ferguson v. Benyon, 17 L. R. Ir. 212. In Fellow v. Jermyn, [1877] Week. N. 95, Jessel, M.R., held that the Court has jurisdiction to direct that if there is a surplus it shall be re-invested in land, so as to preserve its character as realty.

(u) Steed v. Preece, supra; Ferguson v. Benyon, 17 L. R. Ir. 212.

(v) Jermyn v. Preston, 13 Sim. 356. But see the criticisms of Jessel, M.R., in Steed v. Preece, supra.

(w) Scott v. Scott, 9 L. R. Ir. 367.

(x) Burgess v. Booth, [1908] 1 Ch. 880.

was reversed by the Court of Appeal (y), and the general principle laid down in Steed v. Preece now applies in all cases.

CHAP. XXII.

If land is sold in a partition action under the Partition Act, 1868, s. 8, the proceeds of sale are to be treated as realty (z), unless the person entitled is sui juris and elects to take them as personalty (a), or unless they are paid out to trustees who had a power of sale (b). If the person entitled is a married woman, she may elect by examination in Court to take the fund as personal estate (c). In Wallace v. Greenwood (d), Jessel, M.R., seems to have thought that an order for sale made with the consent or at the request of a married woman under sect. 6 of the Partition Act, 1876, operates as a conversion of her share, but the accuracy of this view was doubted by Byrne, J., who held in Re Norton (e) that a consent or request on behalf of an infant does not operate as a conversion of his share.

Sale in partition action.

Where purchase money is paid into Court by a railway company under sect. 69 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (f), the general rule is that it remains impressed with the character of real estate (g). In a case before Lord Cranworth, V.-C. (h), an owner of land had made a will containing a residuary devise and afterwards became a lunatic not so found; part of the land was taken by a railway company, and the purchase money was paid into Court under the 76th section of the Lands Clauses Act: it was held that this operated as a conversion. But this decision is generally considered erroneous (i).

Lands Clauses Act.

In any case, however, where land is vested in trustees subject to a trust for sale, or a power of sale, and it is sold by order of the Court or under the Lands Clauses Act, this operates as a conversion (j).

Where trustees can sell.

(y) [1908] 2 Ch. 648.

(z) The order itself operates a conversion: Re Dodson, [1908] 2 Ch. 638, supra, p. 732.

(a) Foster v. Foster, 1 Ch. D. 588; Mildmay v. Quicke, 6 Ch. D. 553; Re Barker, 17 Ch. D. 241. See Mordaunt v. Bennell, 19 Ch. D. 302, where the beneficiaries died intestate before the fund was paid out, so that it descended to their heir at law; it was held that on his death it formed part of his personal estate.

(b) Re Morgan, [1900] 2 Ch. 474.

(c) Standering v. Hall, 11 Ch. D. 652. The examination may be dispensed with if the fund is under 200*l.*; 16 Ch. D. 362.

(d) 16 Ch. D. 362.

(e) [1900] 1 Ch. 101, approving.

Howard v. Jalland, [1891] Week. N. 210.

(f) Or under the Union and Parish Property Act, 1835: Re Horner, 5 De G. & S. 483.

(g) Ex parte Walker, 1 Drew. 508; Kelland v. Fulford, 6 Ch. D. 491. Compare Re Harrop, 3 Drew. 726; Midland Railway v. Oswin, 1 Coll. 74; Re Taylor, 9 Ha. 596; Re Stewart, 1 Sm. & G. 32.

(h) Re East Lincolnshire Railway, Ex parte Flamank, 1 Sim. N. S. 260.

(i) Re Tugwell, 27 Ch. D. 309. Compare Re Bagot's Settlement, 31 L. J. Ch. 772, ante, p. 729.

(j) Re Hobson's Trusts, 7 Ch. D. 708; Re Smith, 40 Ch. D. 386; Re Morgan, [1900] 2 Ch. 474; Re Sheffield Corporation, [1903] 1 Ch. 208.

CHAP. XXII.

Notice to treat.

A notice to treat under the Lands Clauses Act does not effect a conversion (k), even if it is followed by an offer by the landowner to accept a certain price for the land (l); but if the price is agreed upon this constitutes a valid contract, and operates as a conversion (m). An agreement as to the price per acre, without defining the land, does not effect a conversion (n).

Compulsory sale after testator's
death.

In Ex parte Hardy (o), a testator gave to his children in succession the option of purchasing his real estate. Before the option had been exercised, and while some of the children were still infants, part of the property was purchased under compulsory powers: it was held that this did not effect a conversion.

Sale in lunacy.

It has been already mentioned that a sale, by proper authority, of land belonging to a lunatic does not, as a general rule, affect the rights of his devisees, &c., in the proceeds of sale (p).

Conversion directly by statute.

Conversion may also be produced by act of parliament: as where a statute abolishes a particular kind of real property, and substitutes for it a right to compensation, or other personal property (q).

Contract of purchase by testator.

B. As to Conversion of Money into Land.—In the case of a person entering into a contract for the purchase of land, the rule formerly was, that if the contract was binding on the purchaser at the time of his death, his heir or devisee was entitled to the benefit of it: in other words, was entitled to consider the contract as having converted the personal estate, quoad the purchase-money, into real estate (r). But as regards the estates of persons dying after 1877, the Real Estates Charges Act, 1877, enacts that where a testator or intestate dies entitled to land of whatever tenure, which is at his death charged by way of lien for unpaid purchase-money, the devisee or legatee or heir shall not be entitled to have the money discharged out of any other estate of the testator or intestate, unless, in the case of a testator, a contrary intention appears from the will (s).

(k) Haynes v. Haynes, 1 Dr. & Sm. 426.

(l) Re Battersea Park Acts, Ex parte Arnold, 32 Bea. 591.

(m) Ex parte Hawkins, 13 Sim. 569; Re Manchester & Southport Railway, 19 Bea. 365; Harding v. Metropolitan Railway, L. R., 7 Ch. 154; Watts v. Watts, L. R., 17 Eq. 217.

(n) Ex parte Walker, 1 Dr. 508.

(o) 30 Bea. 206.

(p) Ante, p. 163. As to a purchase of land in lunacy, see post, p.

737.

(q) Frewen v. Frewen, L. R., 10 Ch. 610; Richards v. Att.-Gen. for Jamaica, 6 Moo. P. C. C. 381; Cadman v. Cadman, L. R., 13 Eq. 470.

(r) Garnett v. Acton, 28 Bea. 333. As to the effect of a voidable contract of purchase entered into by a trustee for his own benefit, see Ingle v. Richards, 28 Bea. 361.

(s) See further on this subject, post, Chap. LIV.

In such a case, therefore, all that the devisee or heir is entitled to is the land charged with the purchase-money (t).

In cases not within the act, the old rule above stated applies even if the contract is rescinded, by or at the suit of the vendor, after the testator's death (u), for as Mr. Jarman points out (v): "The true principle is, that where the contract is such as could have been enforced against the purchaser at the time of his decease, the estate which is the subject matter of the contract, or, failing that, the purchase-money, belongs to his heir or devisee; but if, from a defect of title or any other cause, the contract was not obligatory on the purchaser at his death, his heir or devisee is not entitled to say he will take the estate with its defects, or have the purchase-money laid out in the purchase of another. Such is the doctrine of the case of Broome v. Monk" (w). In that case Lord Eldon observed of Whittaker v. Whittaker (x) that it was very difficult to maintain the doctrine in it, which went beyond what was necessary for the decision. His Lordship said: "As between the heir and the personal representatives, Lacon v. Mertins (xx), Buckmaster v. Harrop (y) and other cases, establish the general principle, that whatever is the state of liability of the party himself to take at his death, must be the state of liability to be considered upon questions between those representing him after his death (z); and if at his death he could not be compelled to take, clearly the heir could not say to the executor, 'I will have the estate; and you shall pay for it.' I have not met with any case that has induced me to suppose, that if this were between the heir and the personal representative, it would be possible for the heir to say, though the title was doubtful, yet being the real representative, he is entitled to take it, as it is; though the ancestor never meant so to take it; or intimated any purpose of retiring from that situation, in which he had a right either to insist upon a good title, or to refuse the estate; and though there is no proof that the ancestor would have paid for the estate with a bad title, yet the heir can insist that the personal estate shall pay for it out of the assets. None of the cases

CHAP. XXII.

Contract enforceable at death, subsequently rendered incapable of completion.

State of liability of the party himself at his death, governs the question between those claiming under him (t) Re Cockroft, 24 Ch. D. 94; Re Kidd, [1894] 3 Ch. 558. In Re Cockroft there had been a compromise which would in any case have defeated the plaintiff's claim.

(u) Whittaker v. Whittaker, 4 Br. C. C. 31; Hudson v. Cook, L. R., 13 Eq. 417.

(v) First ed. p. 46.

(w) 10 Ves. 597. See also 1 Ves. sen.

218.

(x) Ante, p. 77.

(xx) 3 Atk. 1.

(y) 7 Ves. 341.

(z) See acc. Curre v. Bowyer, 5 Bea. 6, n.; Ingle v. Richards, 28 Bea. 365; Haynes v. Haynes, 1 Dr. & Sm. 451, 452; Hudson v. Cook, L. R., 13 Eq. 417; Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. 516.

CHAP. XXII.

What evidence of intention by devisee to accept title necessary.

Question where the deceased purchaser was bound, but the vendor was not.

give any colour for that; Green v. Smith (a), indeed, seems to state a doctrine quite inconsistent with that." He therefore held that, as no title could be made, the devisees were not entitled to take this estate, or to have another estate bought for them.

"It will be observed," says Mr. Jarman (b), "that Lord Eldon adverted to the circumstance of the purchasing deviser not having himself shewn an intention to take the estate with a bad title. It is conceived his Lordship here alluded to such evidence of intention as would have amounted to an acceptance of the title. Nothing short of this, it is presumed, could have any effect; for, to admit parol evidence of intention as such would be liable to the objection attaching to the reception of extrinsic evidence in aid of, or in opposition to, a written will (c). It is true that, under the doctrine in question, the devise is incidentally affected by this evidence, since, as already observed, the inquiry whether the contract was obligatory on the testator at his decease, lets in any evidence which would be admissible, in a suit between the vendor and vendee, of circumstances discharging the vendee, as a difference in the estate from that contracted for, not capable of being the subject of compensation, or the like. Of course the vendor could not take advantage of the waiver by the heir or devisee of objections to the title which his ancestor or deviser might have advanced, he (i.e. the heir or devisee) having in that event no interest in the estate.

"In the cases of Whittaker v. Whittaker, and Broome v. Monck, the contract seems to have been binding on the vendor, and therefore, those cases do not decide what would be the effect, where the deceased purchaser was bound at his decease, but the vendor was not, a case which clearly may and often does arise; as where a written contract has been entered into, which is duly signed by one party and not by the other, and the signing party dies before there has been any act of part performance, which would render the contract obligatory on the other. It is clear, that in such a case, the surviving (d) party may choose or not to enforce the performance of the contract against the representatives of the deceased: should he decline, of course the contract is at an end, and the property remains unconverted as between the real and personal representatives of the deceased party. If, on the other hand, the surviving

(a) 1 Atk. 572.

(b) First ed. p. 48.

(c) See Rose v. Cunynghame, 11 Ves. 550.

(d) "The fact of survivorship is introduced merely for the convenience of distinction; it would, of course, be immaterial whether the party represented as the survivor were living or not." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

party choose to compel performance, the question arises between the respective representatives of the deceased, whether such conversion has taken place. For instance, suppose the deceased party to be the vendor; if the surviving party, i.e. the purchaser, should (as he may) call upon the heir or devisee of the deceased vendor, to convey to him the property in pursuance of his ancestor's or testator's contract—upon the doctrine in question would depend the destination of the purchase-money, which, if the contract is to be considered as effecting an absolute conversion of the property, would belong to the personal representatives (e); if not, to the heir or devisee of the deceased vendor. The writer is not aware of any direct authority on the point; but, perhaps it would be considered as governed by the cases (which seem to be analogous in principle), in which, there being in a lease of a freehold estate a clause entitling the lessee pending the term to purchase the demised property, and the lessor having died before the option of the lessee has been declared, the latter has subsequently elected to purchase the property. Under such circumstances, it was held by Lord Eldon, in the case of Townley v. Bedwell (f), on the authority of a previous decision of Sir William Grant (g), (but without, it should seem, approving the principle), that the rents, until an election to purchase be made, belong to the heir or devisee; but that when it is made, the purchase-money goes to the personal representative of the vendor."

Cases where there is an option to purchase.

If a person of unsound mind enters into a contract to purchase real estate, and the purchase is afterwards completed by direction of the lunacy authorities, this operates as a conversion of the purchase moneys into realty (h).

Voidable purchase by lunatic.

In Att.-Gen. v. Marquis of Ailesbury (i), the money of a lunatic was invested by his committees in the purchase of lands which, pursuant to orders made in the lunacy proceedings, were conveyed upon trust for the lunatic "his executors administrators and assigns," and directed to be considered as part of his personal estate: it was held that on his death the value of the lands was part of his personal estate. But if money is expended by leave of the judge in lunacy for the permanent improvement of the lunatic's real estate, in the course of the ordinary management of the property, it will Investment of lunatic's money in real estate.

(e) See ante p. 162.

(f) 14 Ves. 591. See also Collingwood v. Row, 26 L. J. Ch. 649.

(g) Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox, 167. The case was decided by Lord Kenyon. Compare Wright v. Rose, 2 S. &

St. 323, and the observations of Wood, V.-C., 1 J. & H. 429.

(h) Baldwyn v. Smith, [1900] 1 Ch. 588.

(i) 12 App. Cas. 672.

[CHAP. XXII.] not, as a general rule, be ordered to be charged upon the real estate in favour of the personalty (j).

When money is a "hereditament." Where land has been sold, and the proceeds are subject to a trust for re-investment in land, they will generally come within the description of "hereditaments" (k).

Contract for building. Conversion may also be effected by a testator entering into a contract with a builder for the erection of buildings on the testator's land, and dying before they are completed or paid for: in such a case the devisee is entitled to have the contract performed out of the personal estate (l).

But this rule does not apply where the contract relates to land not belonging to the testator (m).

Operation of law. Conversion may be produced by operation of law. In Re Loveridge (n) a mortgagee, who since 1861 had been in possession of the mortgaged land, died in 1864, having by his will given his residuary real and personal estate to his wife during widowhood, but made no other disposition of his property, so that subject to the widow's interest during widowhood, his widow and brother were entitled to his personal estate under the Statutes of Distribution; after his death his widow entered into possession of the mortgaged land and remained in possession until 1879, when the equity of redemption was barred under the Statute of Limitations; the brother died intestate in 1880, and it was held that his moiety of the mortgage debt was converted into real estate in 1879; consequently on his death one moiety of the land descended to his co-heiresses.

Redemption of rent-charge and conversion of renewable leases. Several cases have been decided in Ireland on the question how money paid for the redemption of a rent-charge ought to devolve (o), and how the rights of parties are affected by Irish statutes relating to renewable leases (p), but they do not seem to lay down any principle of general application.

Conversion of one kind of personal property into another. In the case of personal property, the operation of a will may be affected by the nature of the property being changed by some act

(j) Re Gist, [1904] 1 Ch. 398.

(k) Re Gosselin, [1906] 1 Ch. 120.

(l) Holt v. Holt, 2 Vern. 322; Cooper v. Jarman, L. R., 3 Eq. 98; Re Day, [1898] 2 Ch. 510.

(m) Re Day, supra.

(n) 73 L. J. Ch. 15.

(o) Re Graves, 15 Ir. Ch. 357; Re Crofton, 1 Ir. Eq. 204.

(p) Morris v. Morris, Ir. R., 6 C. L. 73, 7 C. L. 295; Re Dane's Estate, Ir. R., 10 Eq. 207; Batteste v. Maunsell, ib. 314.

dehors the will. Where the testator himself sells property which he has specifically bequeathed, this operates as an ademption of the bequest (q). And the principle of Larves v. Bennett (r) applies to leaseholds (s).

CHAP. XXII.

In Coyne v. Coyne (t) the testator was entitled to a lease which was determinable by the lessors on giving notice and on payment of compensation; notice was given during the testator's lifetime, but the compensation was not ascertained until after his death; he had specifically bequeathed the lease: it was held that the legatee was entitled to the compensation. The question seems to have been whether the lease was still subsisting at the testator's death; if it had been determined by the notice, the legatee would not have been entitled to the compensation.

In Browne v. Groombridge (u), a testator gave his wife all his ready money which he should have about his person or at his residence at his death, and he bequeathed to others his exchequer bills, stock, &c.: he became insane two years before his death, and during that time large sums of ready money belonging to the testator were invested on his behalf in stock and exchequer bills: it was held that this was a due conversion of the money, and that the specific legatees of the stock and exchequer bills were entitled to the investments. But some doubt is thrown on the correctness of this conclusion by the decision of Wood, V.-C., in Taylor v. Taylor (v). In that case a testator made a specific bequest of leaseholds and chattels, and afterwards became insane; no commission in lunacy was taken out, but the persons who managed the testator's affairs entered into an agreement for the sale of the leaseholds and chattels, and after his death the agreement was approved by the Court: nevertheless it was held that this did not alter the rights of the specific legatees (w).

Unauthorised conversion.

The question whether a bequest of stock or shares is adeemed by the property being converted by act of parliament, or under the powers of a company, is discussed elsewhere (x).

Conversion of stock, &c., by act of parliament.

In Jones v. Green (y), a testator specifically bequeathed certain Conversion in lunacy.

(q) The cases are referred to in Chap. XXX.

(r) 1 Cox, 167, ante, p. 730.

(s) Goold v. Teague, 5 Jur. N. S. 116.

(t) Ir. R., 10 Eq. 496.

(u) 4 Madd. 495.

(v) 10 Hare, 475.

(w) Compare Domville v. Taylor, 32 Bea. 604; Re Larking, 37 Ch. D. 310; Re Douglas and Powell's Contract, [1902] 2 Ch. 296. The decisions in Drink- water v. Falconer, 2 Ves. sen. 623, and Basan v. Brandon, 8 Sim. 171, also seem inconsistent with Browne v. Groombridge. The difficulty is that ademption is not a question of intention but of fact: Ashburner v. Maguire, cited in Chap. XXX.

(x) Chap. XXX.

(y) L. R., 5 Eq. 555; Re Freer, 22 Ch. D. 622.

CHAP. XXII.

shares, and was afterwards found a lunatic: the shares were sold by order of the Court and the proceeds invested in consols: it was held that the bequest was adeemed. But this result would probably not follow if the sale took place under the Lunacy Act, 1890 (z).

II.—Rights of Beneficiaries affected by Trustees' Option to Convert.—Where trustees have a discretionary power to convert, they ought not to exercise it in such a way as unnecessarily to alter the rights of the parties. Thus, if wasting securities are bequeathed by a testator upon trust for A. for life, with a discretionary power of conversion, the trustees ought not to convert unless the investment become hazardous (a).

Result of actual conversion
under will.

Where property is given to trustees with power to convert it into realty or personalty at their option (b), the general rule is that it devolves according to the state of investment in which it happens to be. Thus in Rich v. Whitfield (c) a testator directed his trustees to sell land and to invest the proceeds in the purchase of other lands or in government securities; they invested them in government securities, and it was held that these devolved as personal estate.

An investment in personalty under a power of interim investment does not affect the devolution of the property (d).

Trustees' option to sell may affect destination of
property.

Where trustees have a power or discretion to convert land into money, or vice versâ, it may happen, as Mr. Jarman points out (e), that "the exercise of [the] trustees' option to convert, regulates not merely the devolution of property as between the real and personal representatives respectively of the beneficial objects, but also determines its destination under the will itself; i.e. until conversion, it belongs to one, and when actually converted, to another. Large and inconvenient as such a discretion is, yet, if the intention to confer it be clearly manifested, the construction must prevail, (z) Section 123. See Chap. XXX.

(a) Lord v. Godfrey, 4 Madd. 455. The case of Baud v. Fardell, 7 D. M. & G. 628, in which it was seriously argued that a trustee with power to invest in government securities ought to sell out a government security bearing interest at 5 per cent., and invest in 3 per cent. securities, savours of Lord Eldon's days.

(b) As to the cases in which an option is given in form but not in substance; Grievson v. Kirsopp, 2 Kee. 653;

Minors v. Battison, 1 App. Cas. 428, and other cases cited post, p. 755.

(c) L. R., 2 Eq. 583; Polley v. Seymour, 2 Y. & C. 708, post, p. 755. Compare Re Bird, [1892] 1 Ch. 279; Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. jun. 170; Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102.

(d) Re Bird, supra.

(e) First ed. p. 538. The effect of the exercise of an option of purchase given to a stranger has been already considered, ante, p. 730.

in spite of any suspicion that the testator misapprehended the effect of the terms he has employed.

"As in Brown v. Bigg (f), where a testator ordered and empowered his wife (in case she chose so to do) with the advice of W. G., to sell all his G. estates, stating that she would probably not choose to live there, with the crop, stock, and effects, with all convenient speed; and the money arising from such sale, to be placed out on security, the yearly interest of which, as well as the interest due to the testator on notes, bonds, mortgages or otherwise (except what was in the public funds), he gave to his wife for life, determinable as to one moiety on marriage again. And the testator gave the whole of his personal estate, principal and interest, of every kind, both on public and private security, before undisposed of, to several persons. The wife sold part of the G. estate, and died; and Sir W. Grant, M.R., held, that the proceeds of such part belonged to the residuary legatees, and that the unsold part of the estate remained the property of the testator's heir.

"So, if the fund arising from the sale be disposed of in such terms as unequivocally and explicitly to make the vesting depend on the period of actual sale, the vesting will be postponed accordingly.

Vesting of fund postponed until actual sale.

"Thus, where (g) a testator devised certain real estates to his wife for life, and directed that A. should, as soon after her decease, or her refusing to release her dower, as conveniently might be, sell the estate; and as to the monies arising from the sale, together with the rents till sold, he gave the same to be equally divided between his five nephews (naming them), at such time as the sale should be completed, in case they should be then living; but, in case any of them should die in his lifetime, or before the sale of his said estate should be completed, leaving issue, his part should be paid to his children; but in case any of them should die in his lifetime, or before the sale should be completed, without leaving issue, to the survivors. Sir W. Grant held, that the share of a nephew surviving the testator, but dying before the sale, did not vest; observing, that to adopt the contrary construction would deny to the testator the power, by any express form of words, or clear manifestation of intention, to make the vesting depend on the actual sale.

(f) 7 Ves. 279; and see Walter v. Maunde, 19 Ves. 424; Harding v. Trotter, 21 L. T. 279, V.-C. S.; and Re Perkins, [1909] 53 Sol. J. 698.

(g) Elwin v. Elwin, 8 Ves. 547. See also Faulkener v. Hollingsworth, cit. 8 Ves. 558.

CHAP. XXII.

Doctrine as to enjoyment of property which is subject to a trust for conversion.

"In all such cases, however, the courts, ever anxious to avoid imputing to a testator a mode of disposition at variance with what is usual and convenient, will diligently seek in the context of the will for means of escape; and in one class of cases, of very frequent occurrence, the literal force of the language of the will has, even without any such aid from the context, been moulded into conformity with probable intention. The cases here alluded to are those in which a will, creating a trust for conversion, is so framed as that the enjoyment of the cestui que trust is apparently made to wait until actual conversion. The inconvenience of such a postponement is obvious; it seems hardly supposable that the testator could mean that the actual enjoyment by the object of his bounty should be liable to be deferred for an indefinite period, by difficulties attending the execution of the trust, or the want of activity in the trustees in effecting a conversion. To prevent such consequence, a liberal construction has obtained in these cases, and the legatee, until the execution of the trust, takes an interest in the unconverted property, corresponding to that which he would have been entitled to in the proceeds, if the conversion had taken place (h). Thus, where (i) lands were devised (j) to be sold, and out of the money arising from the sale other lands were to be purchased, to be settled to certain uses, and a person, who would have been tenant in tail under those uses with reversion in fee to himself, levied a fine of the estate devised to be sold; Sir W. Grant held, that though no estate was in terms limited to him in that property, yet he was tenant in tail in equity; and, by the fine, acquired an equitable fee." It follows from this principle, that where land is devised in trust for sale, and the proceeds of sale are to be held in trust for a person for life, with remainder over, the tenant for life is, as a general rule, entitled to the rents of the land until it is sold (k). And the same rule applies where the real and personal estates are devised and bequeathed together (l).

So, where by will trustees were directed to sell an advowson

(h) This statement of the law by Mr. Jarman was cited with approval in Re Searle, [1900] 2 Ch. 829. As to the rights of the tenant for life in such a case, see post, Chap. XXXIV.

(i) Pearson v. Lane, 17 Ves. 101; Waddington v. Yates, 15 L. J. Ch. 223, seems to have been decided on the same principle. In that case the power of sale was exercisable with the consent of the tenant for life.

(j) It was really a conveyance by deed upon trust for sale.

(k) Casamajor v. Strobe, 19 Ves. 390 n.; Re Laing's Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 416; Re Carter, 41 W. R. 140; Hope v. D'Hédouville, [1893] 2 Ch. 361.

(l) Re Searle, [1900] 2 Ch. 829; Re Earl of Darnley, [1907] 1 Ch. 159; Re Oliver, [1908] 2 Ch. 74, referred to in Chap. XXXIV. (Life Estates, &c.) In Yates v. Yates, 28 Bea. 637, there was no trust for sale.

when full, and invest the proceeds for the benefit of A. during her life, and afterwards for other persons, a sale of the advowson not having been effected while the advowson was full, it was held that the right to nominate a clerk was in A. (m).

CHAP. XXII.

And in Prendergast v. Prendergast (n), where trustees were empowered in their uncontrolled discretion to set aside sufficient investments to produce 1,500*l.* a year, and to pay that sum to A., the Court refused to exercise their discretion, but directed an adequate sum in consols to be purchased to meet the annuity.

The doctrine above stated must not, of course, be confused with the rules governing the rights of tenant for life and remainder-man in respect of a residuary personal estate, whether there is a trust for conversion or not; these are discussed in Chapter XXXIV.

Residuary
personalty.

III.—Doctrine of Constructive Conversion.—The general rule is thus stated by Mr. Jarman (o): “On the principle that equity considers that as done which ought to have been done, it is well established that ‘money directed to be employed in the purchase of land, and land directed to be sold and turned into money, are to be considered as that species of property into which they are directed to be converted; and this in whatever manner the direction is given: whether by will, by way of contract, marriage articles, settlement, or otherwise; and whether the money is actually deposited, or only covenanted to be paid; whether the land is actually conveyed, or only agreed to be conveyed. The owner of the fund, or the contracting parties, may make land money, or money land’ (p). It follows, therefore, that every person claiming property under a will or settlement directing its conversion, must take it in the character which such instrument has impressed upon it; and its subsequent devolution and disposition will be governed by the rules applicable to property of this character. This doctrine is founded in justice and good sense: since it would be obviously unreasonable that the condition of the property, as between the representatives of the parties beneficially interested, should depend on the acts of persons through whom, instrumentally, the conversion

Money to be laid out in land considered as land and vice versa.

(m) Briggs v. Sharp, L. R., 20 Eq. 317. And see Hawkins v. Chappel, 1 Atk. 621; Johnstone v. Baber, 6 D. M. & G. 439; O’Shea v. Howley, 1 J. & Lat. 391.

(n) 3 H. L. C. 195.

(o) First ed. p. 523. As to trusts for conversion, see Chap. XXIV.

(p) “Vide Sir Thomas Sewell’s judgment in Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Br. C. C.

499, whose statement of the doctrine in these terms was commended for its accuracy by Lord Alvanley, in Wheldale v. Partridge, 5 Ves. 396.” (Note by Mr. Jarman. His citation of the judgment is not quite accurate: for “the owner of the fund,” he substitutes “the owner of the land [qu. property ?].” No doubt “fund” is a misprint for “land.”)

CHAP. XXII.

Cases illustrative of the doctrine.

is to be effected, and in whom no such discretion is expressed to be reposed. The principle is, besides, too well supported by numerous authorities (q) to be called in question at this day."

Thus, money directed to be laid out in land, and settled on A. in fee, is, though not actually laid out, descendible as real estate to the heir: is subject to tenancy by the curtesy (r): is not liable (otherwise than real estate is liable) to simple contract debts (s): and will not pass under a general bequest purporting to include personal estate only (t), unless the testator had power to change its character, and shewed an intention to do so (u).

As a general rule, money so constructively converted into land passes under a devise of lands, tenements, and hereditaments (v). But if a testator devises all his lands in Staffordshire to A., this will not pass moneys arising from the sale of lands in Staffordshire, and subject to a trust for re-investment in lands in any part of England; being, however, in the nature of realty, they would pass under a residuary devise of real estate (w).

So, in the case of real estate, whether freehold or copyhold, being directed to be sold, and the proceeds bequeathed to A., who, after surviving the testator, happens to die before the sale, the property devolves to his personal representative, with all the incidental qualities of personal estate, or passes by a residuary bequest contained in his will (x). The question whether it is subject to the lex loci is discussed in the next chapter.

(q) 2 Keb. 841; 2 Vern. 55; Pre. Ch. 543, cited 2 Vern. 58; 1 Vern. 345; 2 Vern. 20; 1 Eq. Ab. 273, pl. 5; 1 Eq. Ab. 274, pl. 6; 2 Vern. 101; ib. 295; ib. 506; 1 P. W. 172; Pre. Ch. 400; 1 Eq. Ab. 175, pl. 5; 3 P. W. 212; Ca. t. Talb. 80; 1 P. W. 204; ib. 483; 1 B. P. C. Toml. 207; 3 ib. 1; ib. 148; 2 Atk. 452; 3 Atk. 111; 3 ib. 254; 1 B. C. C. 224; 7 B. P. C. Toml. 530; 1 B. C. C. 497; ib. 505; 2 Kee. 653.

(r) Sweetapple v. Bindon, 2 Vern. 536; Cunningham v. Moody, 1 Ves. sen. 174; Dodson v. Hay, 3 B. C. C. 404.

(s) Laurence v. Beverly, 2 Keb. 841; see Chaps. LII., LIV.

(t) Gillies v. Longlands, 4 De G. & S. 372; and see Richards v. Att.-Gen. for Jamaica, 13 Jur. 197; Re Pedder's Settlement, 5 D. M. & G. 890; Re Skeggs, 2 D. J. & S. 533; Re Greaves, 23 Ch. D. 313.

(u) Chandler v. Pocock, 16 Ch. D. 648; Re Harman, [1894] 3 Ch. 607. Compare Re Greaves, supra.

(v) Lingay v. Sowray, 1 P. W. 172;

Shorer v. Shorer, 10 Mod. 39; Harvey v. Aston, 1 Atk. 364; Guidot v. Guidot, 3 ib. 254; Rashleigh v. Master, 1 Ves. jun. 201, 3 B. C. C. 99; Hickman v. Bacon, 4 B. C. C. 333; Green v. Stephens, 12 Ves. 419, 17 ib. 64.

(w) Re Duke of Cleveland, [1893] 3 Ch. 244; Basset v. St. Levan, 43 W. R. 165.

(x) Elliott v. Fisher, 12 Sim. 505. See, as to a devise under the old law of lands contracted to be purchased but not conveyed at the date of the will, Lord Cowper's judgment in Lingen v. Sowray, as reported 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 175, pl. 5; Wheldale v. Partridge, 5 Ves. 388, 8 Ves. 227; Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. 129; Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 161; Green v. Stephens, ib. 419, 17 Ves. 64; Kirkman v. Miles, 13 Ves. 338; Triquet v. Thornton, ib. 345; Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102; Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Mer. 296, and stated post; Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Mer. 521. The dictum contra of Lord Loughborough, Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. jun. 170, is completely overruled.

The doctrine, of course, applies where the ultimate destination of the property is to be reached by several gradations. Thus, land directed to be sold, and the proceeds to be invested in land, will, though neither conversion has been actually effected, be regarded as real estate (y). But where the first conversion is out and out, and the second qualified only, the property will be impressed with the character which the first conversion stamps upon it, namely, that of personalty (z).

It is hardly necessary to add that in order to effect a constructive conversion, the trust for sale must be valid; if it is void (e.g., by reason of its transgressing the Rule against Perpetuities) no conversion is effected (a).

CHAP. XXII.

Double conversion.

Where trust for sale is invalid.

IV.—What Words will work a Constructive Conversion.—

In order to work a constructive conversion, "the new character must be decisively and absolutely fixed upon the property" (f). In other words, an actual sale or purchase, either immediately or in future, must be directed positively and absolutely, and not conditionally or contingently (g). The direction may be express or implied. It has been already mentioned that the direction must be free from objection on the score of remoteness (h).

No conversion unless a sale directed.

A direction that real estate shall be considered as personal, or vice versâ, is insufficient to effect a conversion, since the law does not allow property to be retained in one shape, and yet to devolve as if it were in another. But where a testator gives a power of investing money in the purchase of land and directs that until so invested it shall devolve as land, or, conversely, gives a power of selling land and directs that until sold it shall devolve as personalty, this is effective for the purposes of the trusts contained in the will; so that in the one case the money follows the trusts declared concerning land which is subject to the will, and in the other case the land follows the trusts declared concerning personalty which is subject to the will. In other words, the trusts are declared by reference. But the direction cannot affect the devolution of the Effect of direction that money shall devolve as land, or vice versâ.

(y) Sperling v. Toll, 1 Ves. sen. 70; Pearson v. Lane, 17 Ves. 101. In such a case, where part of the land has been sold and the money not yet re-invested, the money will not pass under a devise of all the testator's interest in the land, if there is any part unsold to answer the description: Re Pedder's Settlement, 5 D. M. & G. 890.

(z) Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102, stated post, p. 748.

(a) Goodier v. Edmunds, [1893] 3 Ch.

455; Re Wood, [1894] 3 Ch. 381; Re Appleby, [1903] 1 Ch. 565.

(f) Mr. Jarman, first ed. p. 526.

(g) Tily v. Smith, 1 Coll. 434; Wall v. Colshead, 2 De G. & J. 683. As to the effect of giving the trustees a discretion in respect of the time of sale, or of making the sale conditional on the consent or request of a certain person, see infra, pp. 751 seq.

(h) Supra.

CHAP. XXII.

property by the rules of law, so that if the trusts fail, the direction is inoperative, for there is no true conversion (i).

Cases where money has been held converted.

Earlom v. Saunders.

And first as to the cases where money has been held to be converted. In Earlom v. Saunders (j), lands were devised to trustees to the use of the testator's wife for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to his daughters in tail, with remainder to two persons as tenants in common in fee; and money was bequeathed to trustees to be laid out in the purchase of lands or any other security or securities as they should think proper and convenient; and the testator directed that the lands and securities should be made to and settled on the trustees, their heirs and assigns, in trust and to the use of his wife for life, and after her decease to such uses and under such provisions, conditions, and limitations, as his lands before devised were limited; Lord Hardwicke, on the ground that if the money was laid out on securities which were personal, all the limitations might not take place, considered the money to be constructively converted.

Cowley v. Hartstonge.

In Cowley v. Hartstonge (k), the point was much considered. The trust was to lay out money "either in the purchase of lands of inheritance, or at interest, as my trustees shall think most fit and proper, and then upon this further trust, to pay the rents of the said lands of inheritance, or the interest of the money, &c., to H. for his life," and then followed a series of limitations of estates for life and in tail to the sons and daughters of H., and to other persons in strict settlement. It was held in D. P. that taking the whole will together, the testator contemplated an investment in land at some time or other, and there was therefore a constructive conversion. There was an ultimate limitation to the testator's right heirs, executors and administrators; but Lord Redesdale said the meaning of that was merely that if all the previous limitations failed before the death of H., there was no further cause for investing in land, and the personal estate might

(i) Att.-Gen. v. Mangles, 5 M. & Wels. 120; De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 3 H. L. Ca. 524; Edwards v. Tuck, 23 Bea. 268. As to De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, see Chap. XL.

In Re Walker, [1908] 2 Ch. 705, the testator devised his real estate by way of settlement, and directed that his trustees should hold and apply the proceeds of his personal estate as if they had arisen from a sale of the real estate under the Settled Land Act, 1882:

it was held by Parker, J., that this was not an imperative trust for conversion into realty, because under the Settled Land Act, capital moneys may be invested in the purchase of leaseholds. Compare Att.-Gen. v. Ailesbury, 12 A. C. 672; Re Grange, [1907] 2 Ch. 20.

(j) Amb. 241; see also Johnson v. Arnold, 1 Ves. sen. 169; Meure v. Meure, 2 Atk. 265.

(k) 1 Dow, 361.

be left to go to the testator's next of kin, and the real estate to the heir.

CHAP. XXII.

In Hereford v. Ravenhill (l), fee-simple estates were devised in strict settlement, and money was bequeathed upon trust with consent to be invested in the purchase of freehold, leasehold, or copyhold messuages, lands or hereditaments, which were to be conveyed, settled, or assured to the like uses, &c., as the hereditaments thereinbefore devised stood limited. There was, also, a power to invest at interest till a purchase could be made. Lord Langdale, M.R., decided that this was a trust for conversion, and observed that the case before him differed from Walker v. Denne (presently noticed), in that the leaseholds to be purchased in that case were to be for very long terms of years. This difference is not very apparent; but the limitations in the several cases were such as easily to lead to different conclusions.

Hereford v. Ravenhill.

In Cookson v. Reay (m), the testator directed a sum of money to be invested in land or other securities for his son John, the interest of such money or produce of such lands to be paid to him for his life, and if he married with consent, and made a proper settlement on his wife, that the remainder should go to such child or children as he might have lawfully begotten, and on failure of these to the testator's son Isaac and his heirs for ever. Lord Langdale, without deciding the point, said that, upon the authorities of Earlom v. Saunders and Cowley v. Hartstonge, he was inclined to consider the money as directed to be laid out in the purchase of land, and that the direction to invest on some other securities had reference only to the time which might elapse before a purchase of land could be procured. On appeal to the House of Lords (n), Lord Brougham inclined to the same opinion by reason of the words "remainder" and "heirs" in the limitations to the children and Isaac. It would seem that "heirs" alone would not have supported this conclusion (o). However,

Cookson v. Reay.

(l) 5 Beav. 51.

(m) 5 Beav. 22.

(n) Cookson v. Cookson, 12 Cl. & Fin. 121.

(o) Atwell v. Atwell, L. R., 13 Eq. 23; Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. jun. 170. In Atwell v. Atwell (also reported 41 L. J. Ch. 23), land was settled by deed to trustees to the use of the children of J. A., equally and their heirs and assigns, and the settlement contained a power of sale and also of re-investment of the proceeds in land; the land was sold but the proceeds were invested on mortgage. Some of the beneficiaries had died before the sale took place, and others died afterwards. The order of Lord Romilly, M.R., as to the devolution of the respective interests in the settled property was as follows:—"that the shares therein of C. A. and Joseph A., two of the children of the settlor J. A., who died in early infancy before such conversion descended to their brother and heir at law J. B. A., and that the said

CHAP. XXII.

*Simpson v.
Ashworth.*

assuming that the will had converted the money, the decision was that the beneficiaries had reconverted it.

In Simpson v. Ashworth (p), the testator gave to his daughter C. 4,000*l.* out of his personal estate, and directed his executors to pay her the interest of 2,000*l.* till she attained the age of twenty-one years. He also directed his executors or the survivor of them, as soon as convenient after his decease, to purchase an estate, not to exceed 2,000*l.*, for her use and her lawful heirs, the daughter to come into possession, with the accumulations, at her age of twenty-one years. If the land was not bought before she attained that age, she was to receive the 4,000*l.*, and to give security for 2,000*l.*, to be returned, if she died without lawful heirs, to the testator's son and daughters that should have heirs, share and share alike, and provided the land be purchased, to be returned in the same manner. Lord Langdale held that the 2,000*l.* was intended to be converted at all events, and that the daughter took an estate tail. Applied to personal estate the gift over on the death of the daughter without heirs (i.e. heirs of her body) would have been void for remoteness; which of itself, according to Earlom v. Saunders, was strong reason for deciding in favour of the conversion.

Cases where money has been held not converted.

*Curling v.
May.*

Next, with respect to the cases in which it was held that there was no conversion.

In Curling v. May (q), the trust was to lay out money in the purchase of lands, or put the same out on good securities, upon trust for the separate use of H., her heirs, executors and administrators. The money never having been laid out, Lord Talbot decreed the administrator of H. to be entitled.

*Van v.
Barnett.*

In Van v. Barnett (r), lands were covenanted to be conveyed to trustees to be sold, and the produce, with the consent of certain persons, was directed to be laid out in the purchase of lands or in government securities, and the latter trust was held not to operate as a reconversion, the trusts declared of the fund in its ultimate

J. B. A., John A., and F. W. A., three of such children, having died subsequently to such conversion as in the chief clerk's certificate mentioned, the interests of the said J. B. A. as well original as accrued, and interests of John A. and F. W. A. were at the times of their respective deaths personal estate, and that the plaintiff, as legal personal representative of the said J. B. A. the settlor, the father and sole next of kin of such children, is entitled accordingly to five shares." See Reg. Lib. A. 3112, 16th November 1871.

(p) 6 Beav. 412.

(q) Cited 3 Atk. 255.

(r) 19 Ves. 102.

state not being such as to shew that a re-investment in land at some time or other was intended (s).

CHAP. XXII.

In Walker v. Denne (t), where money was directed to be laid out in freehold lands, or long terms of years, in trust for A. for life, and afterwards for her children and their heirs, but if there should be no child or heirs of her body living at her death, then for the testator's right heirs, Lord Loughborough held that it was not converted into realty so as to escheat to the Crown on failure of heirs, there being an option in the trustees to have it laid out in either species of property. Indeed he doubted whether, even if there had been no such option, the Crown could have claimed. But his doubt appears to have referred as well to the general doctrine, as to its effect in regard to escheat. There would seem to be considerable difficulty in supporting the claim of the Crown to have the money laid out in such a case, as escheat was a consequence of tenure, and, therefore (it should seem) inapplicable to equitable interests of every description (u).

Walker v. Denne.

Doctrine of conversion in regard to escheat.

Sometimes there is no express trust for conversion, but the accompanying directions are such as lead to an implication that conversion was intended; as, where real and personal estate was devised to trustees in trust to "invest" the same in the funds (v), and again, where leaseholds were given upon the same trusts and subject to the same powers as those declared of the moneys to arise by sale of property previously given in trust for sale (w). But the same inference is not necessarily to be drawn from a trust to divide into several shares, if the trustees have an express power of sale (x); or though they are directed to "invest" some of the shares (y). In Burrell v. Baskerfield (z), Implied trust for conversion.

(s) See also Biggs v. Andrews, 5 Sim. 424; Rich v. Whitfield, L. R., 2 Eq. 583, where however the point was rather assumed than decided.

(t) 2 Ves. jun. 170; see also Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102.

(u) See 3 My. & K. 494; ante, p. 90, n. (f). The law of escheat is now extended to equitable estates and interests; see the Intestates Estates Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 71), s. 4. Some caustic remarks on the act will be found in Challis on Real Property, 2nd ed., pp. 39, 40.

(v) Affleck v. James, 17 Sim. 121; Re Garnett Orme and Hargreaves' Contract, 25 Ch. D. 595 (settlement).

(w) Murton v. Markby, 18 Beav. 196.

The question arose upon a claim by tenant for life to enjoy leaseholds in specie. See also Tait v. Lathbury, L. R., 1 Eq. 174, and per Lord Campbell, 2 D. F. & J. 138.

(x) Greenway v. Greenway, 29 L. J. Ch. 601, 605, 2 D. F. & J. 128; Lucas v. Brandreth, 28 Beav. 273; Re Wintle, 65 L. J. Ch. 863. See Grieverson v. Kirsopp, post, p. 755.

(y) Cornick v. Pearce, 7 Hare, 477.

(z) 11 Bea. 525. In Re Cookes' Contract, 4 Ch. D. 454, the question was whether the trustees could sell after the death of the tenant for life; no question of conversion seems to have arisen.

CHAP. XXII.

however, a power to trustees to collect all the testator's property together, and to sell and convert into money, and to pay certain legacies, followed by a direction to divide the whole of the remainder of his property among certain persons, was held to create a trust for conversion. And in Mower v. Orr (a), where a testator after stating that his property consisted of copyholds, leasehold houses, merchandise in Australia, cash at his bankers and in the public funds, and that as it was so scattered about and not realized he could not state what he should die worth, divided it into twenty shares, sixteen of which he disposed of by giving a certain number to each of his three sons absolutely, and, as to the remaining four, he gave two to his daughter absolutely and two to be invested in the funds for the use of her children; and he appointed two of his sons executors, requesting them to get his property together and divide it according to his intention; it was held that the testator must be understood as directing a conversion of his copyhold estate into personalty. Wigram, V.-C., said that the division of the entire property into a number of shares, and the directions as to the investment and disposition of some of such shares, precluded the supposition that he intended the copyholds to remain unsold.

Option for trustees to invest in realty.

Where a will disposes of personalty only, the fact that the gift is framed with limitations appropriate to realty, some of which must fail of effect when applied to personalty, will not raise an implied trust to convert into realty. A testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees, upon trust in their option to invest part thereof either in the purchase of real estate or in personal securities, and directed that the real estate so purchased or the investments should be held subject to certain limitations declared by the will which were applicable only to real estate; it was held by the House of Lords (b), affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal, that there was no implication of a trust for conversion, so as to control the option of the trustees.

Direction for temporary investment does not prevent conversion.

A provision that, until land be purchased, the money shall be placed out on security at interest, does not prevent its receiving the impression of the real estate instantan (c), this being a mere temporary arrangement; unless it appears, as of course it may, from other parts of the instrument, that the arrangement is not, in fact, intended to be merely temporary; for instance, if by a final disposition of the capital fund, in certain events, as money, it is shewn that the conversion is to take place only in the alternative events (d).

(a) 7 Hare, 473. See Re Wintle, supra; Owen v. Owen, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 580 (settlement).

(b) Evans v. Ball, 47 L. T. 165.

(c) See Edwards v. Countess of Warwick, 2 P. W. 171; Re Bird, [1892] 1 Ch. 279.

CHAP. XXII.

A trust to sell within a specified period converts the property though no sale be made within the period ; the specification of time being directory only (e). In Tily v. Smith (f), the testator directed that his wife should hold one of his houses for her use to bring up his children E. and M., and at their arriving to the age of twenty-one years, then all his estates, real and personal, to be sold and converted into money, and the proceeds to be divided between his wife and as many children as she had at his decease. The wife and M. survived the testator, but E. died in his lifetime under twenty-one, and M. afterwards died under twenty-one, so that, strictly construed, the time for conversion never arrived. However, the V.-C. thought that the words " at their arriving," &c., meant only " subject thereto," or " when there shall be no child alive under twenty-one," and that in the event, which happened, of the wife or one or both of the daughters surviving the testator, he intended that there should positively and absolutely at some time and not conditionally or contingently, be a sale of the real estate. That time, he thought, arrived at or before the widow's death.

Trust to sell at a stated time.

Tily v. Smith.

Again, if the trust is imperative, it is not generally material that the sale or purchase is to be made only when the trustees think fit. Thus, in Doughty v. Bull (g), the trust was to sell as soon as the trustees should see necessary for the benefit of the testator's children, and to apply the money for their benefit ; and it was held that only the time of the sale, and not the question whether there should be any sale, was left to the discretion of the trustees. But a discretionary trust for sale does not effect a conversion (h).

Effect of sale or purchase being only when trustees think fit.

Doughty v. Bull.

If the purchase is to be made with consent or approbation (i), or on or after request or direction, the question whether or not a conversion is intended, must be answered from a consideration of the whole instrument, and especially of the trusts to which the property is subjected, and the persons by whom the request is to be made (j).

Effect where sale or purchase to be made upon request.

(d) Wheldale v. Partridge, 5 Ves. 388, 8 ib. 227.

(e) Pearce v. Gardner, 10 Hare, 287 ; and see Cuff v. Hall, 1 Jur. N. S. 972.

(f) 1 Coll. 434.

(g) 2 P. W. 320. See also Robinson v. Robinson, 19 Beav. 494 ; Biggs v. Peacock, 22 Ch. D. 284 ; Re Raw, 26 Ch. D. 601 ; Re Heathcote, 58 L. T.

43 ; Minors v. Battison, 1 App. Ca. 428.

(h) Post, p. 755.

(i) The person whose approbation is required will not be allowed to delay the sale for his own advantage and to another's prejudice, Lord v. Wightwick, 4 D. M. & G. 803, 6 H. L. Ca. 217.

(j) See Waddington v. Yates, 15

CHAP. XXII.

*Lechmere v.
Carlisle.*

Thus in Lechmere v. Earl of Carlisle (k), L. covenanted within one year to lay out a sum of money in the purchase of lands, with the consent of trustees, and to settle them; and it was held that the money thus agreed to be laid out should be taken as land. To the objection that the trustees must previously give their consent, Sir J. Jekyll, M.R., replied, that in his opinion they were not to do the first act: L. ought to have proposed his purchase and settlement, upon which the trustees were to signify their agreement or disagreement.

*Thornton v.
Hawley.*

Again, in Thornton v. Hawley (l), Sir W. Grant was of opinion, that the circumstance that a sum of stock was to be sold by the trustees after request to them made by the husband and wife, or the survivor, or the executors or administrators of the survivor, and the produce laid out in the purchase of land with the consent of the same persons, did not prevent the fund being immediately impressed with the quality of real estate, because to such property alone were the limitations applicable, and also because it was hardly possible to suppose an intention to give an option to any person who should be an executor or administrator, whether it should be money or land, though it might be intended to give that option to the husband and wife. From these considerations he inferred that this requisition did not exclude the authority of the trustees to convert the property at their own discretion, without request; but only rendered it imperative on them to act on the request, if made. Mr. Jarman remarks (m):—"If the M.R. was right in his construction of the will, the conclusion at which he arrived respecting the nature of the property, was inevitable."

Re Taylor's Settlement.

On the other hand, in Re Taylor's Settlement (n), houses held in fee simple had been vested by marriage settlement in trustees in trust, upon request of the husband and wife, or the survivor, to sell and invest the produce of the sale, and to pay the income of the money, or of the houses till a sale, to W. for life, and after his decease, to his wife for life, and after the decease of the survivor, to convey

L. J. Ch. 223; Batteste v. Maunsell, Ir. R., 10 Eq. 314 (settlement); Mcc Gwire v. Mcc Gwire, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 200 (settlement).

(k) 3 P. W. 211. And see Wrightson v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 497.

(l) 10 Ves. 129; see also Triquet v. Thornton, 13 Ves. 345; Johnson v. Arnold, 1 Ves. sen. 169. But see Lord Eldon's judgment, in Van v. Barnett, 19

Ves. 102; where, however, the direction was alternative to invest in personal security or land.

(m) First ed. p. 527. Mr. Jarman treats the case as if the settlement had been made by will: it was made by deed.

(n) 9 Hare, 596; and see Davies v. Goodhew, 6 Sim. 585; Huskisson v. Lefevre, 26 Beav. 157.

the houses unless sold or to assign the money, to the issue of W. and his wife. The houses had been sold, not under the trust, but under compulsory powers in an act of parliament, which also provided that the purchase-money should be re-invested in land, to be settled to the same uses ; so that the money retained the character which the houses possessed under the settlement (o). Upon the question what that character was, Turner, V.-C., held that the settlement had not worked a conversion of the houses. He remarked that, in Thornton v. Hawley, the sale was, after the death of the husband and wife, to be made at the request of the executors or administrators of the survivor ; but, in the case before him, the sale was to be made only on the request of the husband and wife or the survivor ; so that no sale could be made after their deaths, and that words of request in cases of such nature must be construed as inserted for the purpose either of enforcing obligation or of giving discretion, as the context of the instrument might require. In this case, the general intent that the houses should be sold at some time or other was evidently wanting, the last proviso in the settlement directing that the property, if sold, was to be personal, if not sold, real.

"It seems," says Mr. Jarman (p), "that the converting effect of a trust for sale, in regard to a legatee to whom the proceeds are bequeathed, is not prevented by the fact, that in an alternative event, the testator has devised the property in terms adapted to its original state ; as he may have contemplated the possibility of the contingency happening before a sale could be effected ; besides which, it seems to have been considered that the property might be real estate as to one legatee, and personalty as to another, to whom it was given in an alternative event.

Effect of property directed to be sold being devised in a certain contingency as land.

"Thus, in the case of Ashby v. Palmer (q), where a testatrix devised and bequeathed her real and personal estates to trustees, upon trust, as soon as convenient after her decease, to sell, and with the money thereby raised, and the rents until the sale, to pay

Lands devised to be sold, and proceeds given to A. ;

(o) As to this, vide ante, pp. 733 seq.

(p) First ed. p. 527.

(q) "MS. ; s. c. 1 Mer. 296. The statement of this case is extracted from a note with which the author has been favoured. It supplies a deficiency in Mr. Merivale's report of it, in which, with less than his usual accuracy, he omits, in the statement of the will, the very bequest on which the question arose, and to the particular language of which the M.R. adverted."

(Note by Mr. Jarman.) See also Tily v. Smith, 1 Coll. 434, sup. ; Ward v. Arch, 15 Sim. 389 ; and see Lord Redesdale's remarks in Cowley v. Hartstonge, 1 Dow, 361, cited supra. But the mere fact that conversion is less necessary for distribution in one alternative than in another will not prevent a trust for sale from being imperative in both, Wall v. Colshead, 2 De G. & J. 683. And see Wilson v. Coles, 6 Jur. N. S. 1003.

CHAP. XXII.

—with a limitation over of the monies, or the estate, if unsold, to B.

Held to be personal estate as to A.

her and her late husband's debts, and with the surplus to educate and bring up her daughter ; and when she should attain twenty-one, or marry, ' to pay the monies which should be in the hands of the trustees, by virtue of the will, undisposed of for the uses aforesaid,' to the daughter. And the testatrix went on to direct, that if the daughter died under twenty-one or unmarried, the monies in the hands of the trustees, and such part of the real estate (if any) as should remain unsold at the time of her decease, and not be applied for the payment of her debts or for the education of her daughter, should go to the testatrix's sister, her heirs, executors and assigns. The daughter attained twenty-one, but was a lunatic, and therefore incompetent to elect to take the estate as land or money. The question was, whether it went, at her death, to her heirs at law or next of kin. For the heir, it was contended that the estate was not to be sold at all events, but only to answer a particular purpose ; that the testatrix did not mean it to go as money ; that she contemplated the possibility of its not being sold. For the next of kin, it was argued that the estate was to be sold out and out ; that the testatrix had no objection that her sister should take it as land, if by accident it should remain unsold ; and she might have contemplated the premature death of the daughter before a sale could be effected ; in which event, and in that only, she directs that the trustees shall not proceed in the accomplishment of her purpose. And it was contended that the words ' pay to ' supported this construction ; and it was said that, at all events, the daughter was to take it as money. Sir W. Grant, M.R. : ' I think that the construction of this will admits of no reasonable doubt : it is the settled rule of this Court, that land once impressed with the character of money retains that impression till some act is done, by a person competent to do that act, to restore it to its primary character. The testatrix has directed the estate to be sold ; but the question is, not whether the estate shall be actually sold or not, but whether it is to be treated as personal estate. There is no gift to the daughter in any other shape than that of money. I see nothing inconsistent in the subsequent clause, by which, in the event of the death of the daughter under twenty-one, such part of the estate as should remain unsold is given to the sister (r). She might choose to give it to the daughter as money, and to the sister as land. There is no inconsistency in saying it shall be converted quoad the first taker, not quoad the second. The cases which have arisen between the heir and next of kin of a testator have no application to the present' (s).

(r) As to this, see also Crabtree v. Bramble, 3 Atk. 680.

"And though a mere power of sale or purchase, of course, does not change the nature of the property; yet, the circumstance of the clause respecting the sale or purchase being framed in the language of a power, will not prevent its producing a constructive conversion, if the context of the will shows that it is meant to be imperative, or in the nature of a trust. Thus, in the recent case of Grieverson v. Kirsopp (u), where a testator gave to his widow, for the benefit and advantage of his children, power of selling his Woodfoot estate; and, by a codicil, expressed himself (in effect) thus: 'I do empower my wife to sell all my estates whatsoever, and the money arising from such sale, together with my personal estate, she, my said wife, shall and may divide and proportion among my said children, as she shall think fit and proper, or as she shall direct by will.' The estate was neither sold nor appointed by the widow. It was held that a trust for the children was created by the will, and that they were entitled equally. It was held also, that the direction to sell operated as a conversion of the real estate, and that the shares of those children who were dead devolved on their representatives as personalty.

Mere power does not produce conversion unless by force of the context.

"But although, in general, the presumption is that a testator does not intend the nature of the property to depend upon the option of the person through whom the conversion is to be effected (v); yet, if upon the whole will it appears to have been the intention of the testator to give to such person an absolute discretion to sell or not, the property in the meantime will, as between the real and personal representatives of the persons beneficially entitled, devolve according to its actual state. Thus, in Polley v. Seymour (w),

Nature of property made to depend on trustee's option to sell or not.

(s) "What is the effect of a direction to purchase land in a particular parish, in which it turns out that land cannot be obtained, is not settled. Lord Thurlow thought it could not be laid out elsewhere; Lord Loughborough, that it might. Lord Eldon has alluded to these conflicting opinions without stating his own; see Broome v. Monck, 10 Ves. 610; also Hayes' Intro., 5th ed. p. 95."

(u) 2 Kee. 653. The codicil recited the will, and continued thus: "My will and mind is, that my wife S. C., and I do hereby empower her, by and with the assistance and help of the trustees therein named, to sell and dispose of all my estates, &c." In Johnson v.

Arnold, 1 Ves. sen. 169, there was a power to invest money in the purchase of land, coupled with a direction that until so invested it should be and enure [sic] to such purposes as if lands had been purchased: it was held that this operated as a conversion. See also Nickisson v. Cockill, 3 D. J. & S. 622; and the cases cited ante, p. 749.

(v) See further as to this, ante, p. 745.

(w) 2 Y. & C. 708; see also Re Taylor's Settlement, 9 Hare, 596, sup.; Harding v. Trotter, 21 L. T. 279; Glover v. Heelis, 32 L. T. 534; Greenway v. Greenway, 2 D. F. & J. 128; Lucas v. Brandreth, 28 Beav. 273; Yates v. Yates, 28 Bea. 637; Re

CHAP. XXII.

a testatrix devised the residue of her real and personal estate to W., his heirs, executors and administrators, according to the different qualities thereof, upon trust to retain and keep the same in the state it should be in at the time of her decease, as long as he should think proper, or to sell and dispose of the whole, or such part thereof, as and when he or they should from time to time think expedient, and then, upon trust to invest the proceeds. The testatrix then directed that W., his heirs, executors or administrators, should stand possessed of all such the general residue of her real and personal estate, and after such sale, of the securities whereon the same should have been invested, in trust, out of the rents and profits, interest, dividends and proceeds, to pay several life annuities; and, after payment thereof, the testatrix directed W., his heirs, executors and administrators, to stand possessed of all the said residue of her said real and personal estate, and of the stocks, funds and securities whereon the same or any part thereof should have been invested, and the rents and profits, interest, dividends and produce thereof, in trust for five persons (including W. himself), in equal shares, and for their respective heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, according to the different qualities thereof. It was held, that upon the terms of this will, it was not the intention of the testatrix that the property should be converted out and out; but that W. had a discretion to sell the whole or any part of it, when and as he might think expedient; and that, until he exercised that discretion, the property must be considered to remain in the state it was in at the time of the death of the testatrix."

In short, a trust to sell which is so expressed as to give the trustees a discretion whether they shall sell or not, is equivalent to a power of sale, and therefore does not effect a conversion (x).

Death
duties.

The question whether real estate is absolutely converted by a direction or authority to sell, was formerly of considerable importance with reference to the claim of the Crown to legacy duty and probate duty in respect of money charged on or arising from the sale of land, but its importance has been much diminished by the Succession Duty Act, 1853, the Customs, &c., Act, 1888, and the Ibbitson, L. R., 7 Eq. 226; Re Hamlet, 39 Ch. D. 426, 439. In Minors v. Battison, 1 App. Ca. 428, a direction to trustees to sell was held to work conversion, notwithstanding some equivocal expressions as to their "discretion" and "deciding to sell."

(x) Re Hotchkys, 32 Ch. D. 408; Re Wintle, 65 L. J. Ch. 863. The first trust in Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 564, seems to have been of this character, the second trust for sale being imperative.

Finance Act, 1894. With regard to legacy duty, the question formerly arose on the Stamp Act, 1815, which subjects to the duty "moneys to arise from the sale, mortgage, or other disposition of any real or heritable estate directed to be sold, mortgaged or otherwise disposed of." On this subject, the following points have been decided:—

1st. Where real estate is directed to be sold out and out, the duty attaches, though by reason of the legatee electing to take it as real estate the property is not actually sold (y). Rule on this subject.

2ndly. Where the trustees have an option to continue the property in its actual state or to sell for the purpose of distributing the proceeds according to the will, and in the exercise of this discretion they sell, the legacy duty attaches (z): but not if they do not sell (a). If the power of sale is given only for the purpose of re-investment in land (b), or for the variation of securities (c), or (it seems) for the purpose of raising debts and legacies or other prior charges (d), the duty is not payable, whether the property is sold or not, and although, after a sale, the beneficial owners have elected to take the property as money (e).

3rdly. Where a sale is directed by the Court in order to raise a charge, duty will attach on the amount necessary to satisfy the charge, if the will contains a power of sale which the donees of the power are compelled by the Court to exercise, but not (f) if the Court acts upon its general jurisdiction in such cases.

And it is to be observed, that where trustees are authorised to sell or not, as they think proper, and in virtue of this option they leave the property unconverted, the legacy duty is not attracted by a mere declaration in the will that the property shall be deemed to be personal estate, as it is not in the power of a testator to alter or regulate the nature of the subject of disposition by any such declaration (g).

Mere power of sale does not let in legacy duty.

(y) Att.-Gen. v. Holford, 1 Pri. 426; Adv.-Gen. v. Ramsay's Trustees, 2 C. M. & R. 224, n.; Williamson v. Adv.-Gen., 10 Cl. & Fin. 1.

(z) Att.-Gen. v. Simcox, 1 Ex. 749.

(a) Att.-Gen. v. Mangles, 5 M. & W. 120; Att.-Gen. v. Simcox, 1 Ex. 749.

(b) Miles v. Jennings, 8 Ex. 830.

(c) Re Evans, 2 C. M. & R. 206; Adv.-Gen. v. Smith, 1 Macq. Sc. Ap. 760.

(d) Per Lord Cranworth, Adv.-Gen. v. Smith, sup.

(e) Miles v. Jennings, sup.

(f) Hobson v. Neale, 8 Ex. 368, 17 Beav. 178; Harding v. Harding, 2 Gif. 597.

(g) Att.-Gen. v. Mangles, 5 M. & Wel. 120. As to estate duty, see Re Grimthorpe, [1908] 1 Ch. 666, 2 Ch. 675. The note on legacy and probate duties, which was added by previous editors, has been omitted, as the subject does not fall within the scope of this treatise. As to legacies bequeathed free of duty, see Chap. XXX.

CHAP. XXII.

Person absolutely entitled, may elect to take property in its actual state.

Who competent to make election.

Parol election whether good.

What amounts to an election.

Changing the securities.

V.—Election to take Property in its actual State.—"But although," continues Mr. Jarman (h), "a new character may have been in plain and unequivocal terms impressed upon property by means of a trust for conversion; yet such constructive quality is liable to be determined by the act of the person or persons beneficially entitled, who may, at any time before its conversion de facto, elect to take the property in its actual state. And then comes the inquiry, who are personally competent to make, and what amounts to, such an election. It is clear that an infant (i), or lunatic (j), is incompetent, and also [under the old law] a feme covert (k), unless under a power or trust authorizing her to deal with the property as a feme sole (l); [but a feme covert who was married on or after the 1st of January, 1883, is under no such disability, nor a feme covert who was married before that date, so far as regards property, her title to which accrued after that date (m)]. It was said by Lord Macclesfield in Edwards v. Countess of Warwick (n), that the election might be made by parol. This was denied by Lord Hardwicke, in Bradish v. Gee (o), but the affirmative appears to have been decided at the Rolls (p), in the case of Chaloner v. Butcher.

"The expressions or acts declaratory of such an intention, however, [though it is said they may be slight (q)] must be unequivocal (r). Thus, where (s) a person was, under a settlement, tenant in tail of lands, with a reversion in fee to himself, and was entitled under the same settlement to lands to be purchased with a certain sum of money and settled to the same uses; it was held, that his levying a fine of the land limited by the settlement, to bar the issue, did not demonstrate an intention to take as money the fund not laid out" (t).

And where a person, constructively entitled in fee simple to lands

(h) First ed. p. 533.

(i) Carr v. Ellison, 2 B. C. C. 56; Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102. Except under the direction of the Court, Robinson v. Robinson, 19 Beav. 494.

(j) Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Mer. 296. As to what will amount to an election on behalf of a lunatic, see Re Douglas and Powell, [1902] 2 Ch. 296.

(k) Oldham v. Hughes, 2 Atk. 452; Sisson v. Giles, 3 D. J. & S. 614. As to a married woman electing by examination in Court to take the proceeds of sale in a partition action as personal estate, see Standerling v. Hall, 11 Ch. D. 652, ante, p. 733.

(l) Re Davidson, 11 Ch. D. 341.

(m) See the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 1, 2, 5.

(n) 2 P. W. 173.

(o) Amb. 229.

(p) 8th March, 1736, cited 3 Atk. 685.

(q) Per Lord Eldon, 8 Ves. 236.

(r) Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Mer. 531; Re Pedder's Settlement, 5 D. M. & G. 890.

(s) Edwards v. Countess of Warwick, 2 P. W. 171, 2 Eq. Cas. Ab. 42, pl. 3, 1 Br. P. C. Toml. 207; and see Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 161; Dixon v. Gayfere, 17 Beav. 433; Griesbach v. Fremantle, 17 Beav. 314; Meredith v. Vick, 23 Beav. 559.

(t) As to barring entails in lands to be purchased, see stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, ss. 70, 71; and 1 Hayes's Introd., 5th ed. p. 204.

to be purchased with trust-money, called in part of the money, and placed it out upon a fresh security, in the name of a trustee for himself, his executors and administrators, it was held that he had by these acts elected to take that part as money (u), but that the rest of the money, whether subsisting upon the securities upon which it was originally placed, or on any other securities where no new trusts had been declared, ought to be considered as real estate.

But where (v) the legatee of the proceeds of an estate directed to be sold, entered upon the whole estate and made a lease of part of it, reserving rent to her heirs and assigns, she was held to have elected to take it as land. And letting to a new tenant from year to year has been held to bring the case within the same principle, on the ground that if the tenant were lawfully evicted by a purchaser under the trust for sale, the lessor would be liable to an action by the tenant (w).

Demising the property.

In Re Gordon (x) Jessel, M.R., thought that taking, and for nine years retaining, possession of the estate directed to be sold, was sufficient to prove an intention to re-convert; and Pearson, J., in Re Lewis (y) stated that he also had so decided in another case. But in Re Lewis the tenant of the land had an option of purchase, and Pearson, J., held that this was a sufficient reason why the property had not been sold, and that consequently mere possession for nine years was not evidence of election. And possession for two or three years by tenants in common, without more, has been held insufficient (z). The circumstance that, where several are entitled in common, a sale is required for convenient division of the property, would seem to diminish the probability of their intending to put an end to the trust (a). But where two tenants in common had been in possession for seven years, and it was clearly shewn that one of them, who was also the principal acting trustee, desired to retain the estate for building purposes, slight evidence of the concurrence of the other satisfied the Court that the latter also had elected to keep the estate unsold (b).

Taking possession of it: length of possession.

(u) Lingen v. Sowray, 1 P. W. 172; Chandler v. Pocock, 15 Ch. D. 491; 16 Ch. D. 648.

(v) Crabtree v. Bramble, 3 Atk. 680; and see Mutlow v. Bigg, 1 Ch. D. 385; Re Douglas and Powell, [1902] 2 Ch. 296.

(w) Re Gordon, 6 Ch. D. 531.

(x) Supra. But in Meek v. Devenish, 6 Ch. D. 566, Malins, V.-C., seemed to be of a different opinion.

(y) 30 Ch. D. 654.

(z) Kirkman v. Miles, 13 Ves. 338; Brown v. Brown, 33 Beav. 399.

(a) In Sisson v. Giles, 3 D. J. & S., 614, the question what facts are required to shew an election by tenants in common was considered.

(b) Re Davidson, 11 Ch. D. 341.

CHAP. XXII.

Taking possession of deeds.

Devising the land directed to be sold, as land.

Bequeathing as personalty a fund directed to be invested in land.

Where person bound to lay out money in land becomes himself entitled to it.

Again, in Davies v. Ashford (c), where a person made inquiry as to his interest in lands held upon trust for sale, and on finding that he was absolutely entitled to the money to arise from the sale, took the title deeds into his own possession (from whom or by what means he obtained them being held immaterial), it was held that there was sufficient evidence of his election that the land should not be converted.

A specific devise, to the ordinary uses of a strict settlement of real estate, of the land directed to be sold, is clear evidence of an intention to retain it unsold (d). Even a simple devise might apparently have this effect, if the property is described as land (e). And where (f) a person entitled to the absolute reversion in a fund of this description, who described himself in a memorandum at the foot of an account of the property as being entitled to the fund as residuary legatee of the last owner, which he was, made his will, in which, after devising certain real estate, he bequeathed the residue of his personal estate in possession or reversion, Sir W. Grant decided, that as the testator had described himself as residuary legatee, and had no other personal property to which the expression "in reversion" could be applied, it amounted to a demonstration of intention to bequeath this fund as personal estate. "There seems, however," as Mr. Jarman remarks (g), "to be some difficulty in drawing any such inference from the inaptitude of the terms of the bequest to any other existing property of the testator at the date of the will, seeing that a residuary disposition of this nature comprises after-acquired personalty" (h).

(c) 15 Sim. 42.

(d) Meek v. Devenish, 6 Ch. D. 566.

(e) Sharp v. St. Sauveur, L. R., 7 Ch. 343; Re Grimthorpe, [1908] 1 Ch. 666, where importance was attached to the fact that the devise was "in fee." But the point did not really arise: C. A., [1908] 2 Ch. 675.

(f) Triquet v. Thornton, 13 Ves. 345; compare Re Skeggs, 2 D. J. & S. 533.

(g) First ed. p. 535.

(h) "It seems, that where a person covenants to purchase land, and eventually himself becomes solely entitled to it, so that the obligation to lay out, and the right to call for, the money centre in the same person; the covenant is, without any act on his part, considered as discharged. As in Chichester v. Bickerstaff, 2 Vern. 295, where A. on his marriage covenanted to lay out a sum of money in the purchase of land, to be settled to the use of himself for life; remainder to his intended wife for life; remainder to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail; remainder to the daughters in tail; remainder to his own right heirs. A. did not lay out the money, and survived his wife, who died without issue; and it was decided, that the money, though once bound by the articles, became free again by the death of the wife without issue, and the consequent failure of the objects of the several limitations; and was therefore, at the death of the settlor, his personal estate. This decision, indeed, was questioned by Lord Talbot, in Lechmere v. Lechmere, Cas. t. Talb. 90; and by Sir J. Jekyll, in Lechmere v. Earl of Carlisle, 3 P. W. 221; but Lord Thurlow, in the great case of Pulteney v. Darlington, 1 B. C. C. 238, 7 B. P. C. Toml.

Again, in Cookson v. Reay (i), where a sum of money subject to a trust for investment in land, which ultimately became liable to be settled upon one for life, with remainder to another in fee, was by those two persons, in a deed appointing new trustees, spoken of as moneys which they were then entitled to receive, and trusts for investment in "securities" were declared, it was held that there was sufficient evidence that they had elected that the money should not be converted, and this, although the trusts of the moneys and securities were declared by reference to a prior settlement, the trusts of which were also declared by reference to a former will, under which will it was assumed for the purpose of the decision that the money was constructively converted; this reference was held not sufficient to outweigh the direct words contained in the deed of appointment, as to the parties being entitled to the receipt of the money.

In Harcourt v. Seymour (j) there were several circumstances, from which, taken together, election was presumed; the principal one seems to have been, that the sum of money in question, which was subject to a trust for investment in land, (to which, when purchased, the testator would have been entitled in fee, subject only to a provision for his wife in bar of dower,) was included in a statement of the testator's personal property found among his papers after his death.

Harcourt v. Seymour.

"And here it may be observed," says Mr. Jarman (k), "that in order to amount to an election to take property in its actual, as distinguished from its eventual or destined, state, the act must be such as to absolutely determine and extinguish the converting trust; and hence it would seem to follow, that where two or more persons are interested in the property, it is not in the power of any one co-proprietor to change its character, in regard even to his own share; for, as the act of the whole would be requisite to put an

All persons interested must concur in act of election.

530,† expressed a strong opinion that it was right; which case went, Lord Eldon has said, to this: 'that if the property was at home, in the possession of the person under whom they claimed as heir and executor, the heir could not take it;' and his lordship observed, the question, then, was not upon the equity between the heir and the executor, but whether the property was at home." (Note by Mr. Jarman.) But settled land is not "at home" during the continuance of a jointure under the settlement, Walrond v. Rosslyn, 11 Ch. D. 640.

(i) 5 Beav. 22, nom. Cookson v. Cookson, 12 Cl. & Fin. 121.

(j) 2 Sim. N. S. 12.

(k) First ed. p. 536.

† "The able and elaborate arguments of Sir John Scott (afterwards Lord Eldon), and Mr. Fearne, the counsel for the appellants, display the deepest research into the subject, but they did not succeed in overturning the decree."

CHAP. XXII.

Owner of undivided share of land cannot elect.

Election by contingent owner pending the contingency.

Election by one tenant in common of money to be laid out in land.

Dispositions by partial owner before actual conversion.

end to the trust, nothing less will suffice to impress upon the property a transmissible quality, foreign to that which it had received from the testator. Thus, if lands be devised to trustees upon trust for sale, and to pay the proceeds to A., B., and C., in equal shares, and after the death of the testator, and before the sale is effected, A. grants a lease of his one-third, or does any other act unequivocally dealing with it as real estate, and then dies; his share will, nevertheless, it is conceived, devolve to his personal representatives, as it would still be the duty of the trustees to proceed to a sale, on account of the other shares, the converting trust having been created for the benefit of all" (l).

But if the whole of the proceeds are given to A. on a contingency, and on failure of that contingency to others, the primary donee may, pending the contingency, declare his intention to keep the land unsold, so as upon the happening of the contingency to re-convert the land, if no sale has been (as, of course it may nevertheless have been) previously made (m). And of course, if money be directed to be laid out in land for the benefit of A., B., and C. as tenants in common in fee, any one or more of them may take their shares of the money without the consent of the rest. "For," said Lord Cowper, "it is in vain to lay out this money in land for B. and C. when the next moment they may turn it into money, and equity, like nature, will do nothing in vain" (n). But it would seem that this rule does not apply where the land is directed to be settled on persons in succession (o).

Mr. Jarman also remarks (p) that "although it is not in the power of the owner of an undivided share, or any other partial interest in property which is directed to be converted, by his single act, to change its character, and thereby impart to it a different transmissible quality, it does not follow that every disposition by such partial owner adapted to the property in its actual state, is nugatory. On

(l) See 1 Br. C. C. 500; Elliott v. Fisher, 12 Sim. 505; Holloway v. Radcliffe, 23 Beav. 163; Re Davidson, 11 Ch. D. 341, 348; Biggs v. Peacock, 22 Ch. D. 284. But this rule would not apply where the trust for sale of land was for the purpose of paying debts, legacies, &c.; the devisee (or legatee of the surplus proceeds) subject to the charges, might himself clear them off and retain the land unsold, Griesbach v. Fremantle, 17 Beav. 314. So if the legatees, though not paid, acquiesced in the retention, Mutlow v. Bigg, 1 Ch. D. 385. And after a lapse of time and where no prejudice accrues to them their acquiescence will be easily inferred, ib. As to the respective rights of a jointress and a portioner to insist on a trust for investment of money in land being carried out, see Walrond v. Rosslyn, 11 Ch. D. 640.

(m) Meek v. Devenish, 6 Ch. D. 566, explaining Sisson v. Giles, 3 D. J. & S. 614.

(n) Seeley v. Jago, 1 P. W. 389. And a small sum (A.'s share) might be as advantageously laid out in land for A. as a large sum (the entire fund) for A., B., and C.

(o) See Walrond v. Rosslyn, supra.

(p) First ed. p. 537.

the contrary, it is clear that if a person entitled to a partial interest in money to be laid out in land, shows an intention to dispose thereof by will, or otherwise, as personal estate, it will pass by such disposition (q); though, on the death of the donee [intestate], it would devolve to his real representative (qq). So, if the legatee of the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold devise the land in its character of real estate, the devisee will be entitled to the fund in question, though it would, when acquired, be personal estate in the hands of such devisee" (r).

If a testator is entitled to a share of the proceeds of sale of land subject to a trust for sale, and is not entitled to any real estate in the proper sense of the term, a gift by him of "my real estate" will primâ facie pass his interest in the proceeds of sale (s).

Where property subject to a trust for conversion was settled by the owner on her marriage, and a power to reconvert (or retain the property in its actual state) was reserved to the trustees, to be exercised with the consent of the tenants for life or the survivor, it was held by Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., that the power ceased as soon as the property had vested absolutely in the children, although one of the tenants for life was still living (t).

Delegation of power by beneficiary.

"And here it may be observed," continues Mr. Jarman (tt), "that where (u) real estate was devised upon trust for sale, and the

Husband and wife may convey land

(q) Triquet v. Thornton, 13 Ves. 345.

(qq) In Triquet v. Thornton the interest was reversionary (ante, p. 760), and no question arose as to the ultimate devolution of the fund. Mr. Jarman's statement on this point does not seem to be borne out by the authorities. In Crabtree v. Bramble, 3 Atk. 680, Lord Hardwicke said that a person absolutely entitled to property constructively converted, subject to a prior life interest, could elect to reconvert it, and in Meek v. Devenish, supra, Malins, V.-C., decided that a person contingently entitled could elect. Lord Hardwicke's dictum was cited, apparently with approval, by Jessel, M.R., in Re Gordon, 6 Ch. D. 531. The election is of course liable to be defeated by an actual conversion before the interest falls into possession or becomes absolute, as the case may be. See Addenda.

(r) Re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348. See Hewitt v. Wright, 1 Br. C. C. 86.

(s) Re Glassington, [1906] 2 Ch. 305.

(t) Doncaster v. Doncaster, 3 K. & J. 26. And see Rich v. Whitfield, L. R., 2 Eq. 583. But cf. Re Cookes' Contract, 4 Ch. D. 454; Biggs v. Peacock, 22 Ch. D. 284.

(tt) First ed. p. 537.

(u) May v. Roper, 4 Sim. 360. This doctrine is sometimes made use of (in cases not falling within the Married Women's Reversionary Interests Act, 1857, or the Married Women's Property Acts) where a married woman has a reversionary interest in a fund of this description, which, in its character of personalty, she is incompetent to deal with, so as to bar her contingent right by survivorship; this object may be effected by means of a deed (duly acknowledged as to the wife) assigning the property: Briggs v. Chamberlain, 11 Hare, 69, overruling Hobby v. Collins, 4 De G. & S. 289; and see Tuer v. Turner, 20 Beav. 560; Franks v. Bollans, L. R., 3 Ch. 717; Re Durrant and Stoner, 18 Ch. D. 106. The doctrine applies in the case of a married woman who with her husband is entitled to a debt secured by a mortgage of land: Williams v. Cooke, 4 Giff. 343. Re Newton's Trusts, 23 Ch. D. 181, is overruled: Miller v. Collins, [1896] 1 Ch. 573.

CHAP. XXII.

directed to be sold as real estate.

Election to take personal property in specie.

Destination of undisposed of interests in property directed to be converted.

proceeds were to be divided among several persons, one of whom was a married woman, who (the estate being unsold) joined with her husband in levying a fine of her share therein; it was held, that the wife was, by this means, barred of her equity to a settlement out of the fund. And the same effect, it is conceived, would now be produced by the husband and wife conveying the property by a deed acknowledged by her, according to the statute of 3 & 4 Will. 4, cap. 74, ss. 77, 79."

The doctrine of election, in the ordinary sense of the term, cannot, from the nature of the case, apply to personal property which has been bequeathed upon trust for sale. But in such a case the beneficiaries, if absolutely entitled and sui juris, can elect to take the property in specie, so as to put an end to the trust for sale (v).

VI.—Destination of undisposed-of Interests in Property directed to be Converted.—A. Doctrine of Conversion as between Claimants under Will, and Real and Personal Representatives of Testator.—"It is clear," says Mr. Jarman (w), "that, where a testator directs real estate to be converted into money, for certain purposes, and the trusts of the will directing the application of the money, either as originally created, or as subsisting at the death of the testator, do not exhaust the whole beneficial interest, such unexhausted interest, whether the estate be eventually sold or not (x), belongs to the heir as real estate undisposed of (y). The heir is excluded, not by the direction to convert, but by the disposition of the converted property, and so far only as that disposition extends. Thus, in Wilson v. Major (z), where lands were given by a testator to his wife upon trust to sell and invest the money upon security at interest, and he gave and bequeathed the interest and dividends of the same to the use of his said wife, without making any ulterior disposition of the fund, Sir W. Grant, M.R., held that, there being (v) Re Douglas and Powell's Contract, [1902] 2 Ch. 296.

(w) First ed. p. 553. Compare the doctrine of lapse as applied to charges on land, ante, p. 439.

(x) See Hill v. Cock, 1 V. & B. 173.

(y) 2 Vern. 571; ib. 645; 3 P. W. 20; 2 Dick. 500; 1 Br. C. C. 503; 2 Br. C. C. 589; 3 Br. C. C. 355; 4 B. C. C. 411; 2 Ves. jun. 271; ib. 683; 3 Ves. 210; 4 Ves. 542; ib. 803; 10 Ves. 500; 11 Ves. 87; ib. 205; 12 Ves. 413; 16 Ves. 188; 18 Ves. 156; 1 V. & B. 173; ib. 410; 2 V. & B. 294; 2 Kee. 564;

1 R. & My. 752; 5 My. & Cr. 125; 4 Y. & C. 507. The most important of the cases thus cited by Mr. Jarman, including Ackroyd v. Smithson, are referred to in detail, post, in this section. The case of Ogle v. Cook, cited 1 Br. C. C. 512, had been considered as a solitary exception to this class of cases; but it was afterwards discovered that the very point which was alleged to have made it so was left undecided. See R. L., cited 2 Ves. jun. 686.

(z) 11 Ves. 205; see also Robinson v. Taylor, 2 Br. C. C. 589.

no declaration of the trust of the money beyond the life of the wife, it resulted to the testator's heir. CHAP. XXII.

"And the same principle, it is now settled, applies in the converse case of money being directed to be laid out in land, which is then devised for a limited estate only; the fund ultra that interest, though eventually turned into land, goes as personal estate undisposed of to the residuary legatee or next of kin of the testator, on the ground that the will operates to convert the fund so far only as it disposes of it." Principle same, whether land or money is the object of conversion.

Thus, in Cogan v. Stephens (a), where the testator directed his executors immediately to lay out the sum of 30,000*l.* in the purchase of an estate, the income of which he settled on one for life, with remainder to others in tail, subject to which the estate (which was to be purchased and always run in the testator's name) was given to a charity. The money was not laid out, and the gift to the charity being void under the Statute of Mortmain, and the prior limitations having determined, it was held by Sir C. Pepys, M.R., that the next of kin, and not the heir at law of the testator, was entitled to the fund.

The same principle was followed by Lord Langdale, M.R., in Hereford v. Ravenhill (b).

It sometimes happens that a testator devises his lands by way of executory limitation, so that the vesting is in suspense, and bequeaths personalty upon trust to be invested in the purchase of land to be settled to the same uses. In such a case, so long as the vesting is in suspense, the rents of the devised lands belong to the testator's heir at law, and it was at one time supposed that the same rule applied to the income of the personalty (c), but this error was corrected in accordance with the principles laid down in Ackroyd v. Smithson (d), and it is now settled that in the case supposed the income of the personalty follows the corpus (e).

Interim income of personalty to be laid out in purchase of land.

The general rule above stated also applies, as Mr. Jarman points out (f), "where the testator's disposition of the converted Lapsed share of proceeds of real estate devolves to heir.

(a) 1 Beav. 482, n.; 5 L. J. (N. S.) Ch. 17; Head v. Godlee, Johns. 536; Countess of Bective v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. C. 656.

(b) 1 Beav. 481; Hereford v. Ravenhill, 5 Beav. 51. The decision in Fletcher v. Chazman, 3 Br. P. C. Toml. 1, where, however, no claim appears to have been made by the next of kin, and a dictum of Lord Redesdale, 3 Dow, 207 (see also 4 Br. C. C. 527), are thus virtually overruled.

(c) Hopkins v. Hopkins, Ca. t. Talbot, 44; 1 Atk. 580, Hawkins on Wills, app.

(d) 1 Br. C. C. 503, post, p. 766.

(e) Bective v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. C. 656.

(f) First ed. p. 555.

CHAP. XXII.

property, though originally complete, has partially failed in event by the decease of any one of the objects in the testator's lifetime ; in which case the interest comprised in the lapsed gift devolves to the person who would have been entitled to the entire property, if the testator had died wholly intestate in regard thereto.

" The title of the heir, under such circumstances, to a lapsed share of real estate directed to be sold, was established in Ackroyd v. Smithson (g), well known as containing the celebrated argument of Lord Eldon (then Mr. Scott), which Lord Thurlow admitted to have changed his opinion. The testator devised all his real and personal estate in trust to be sold and converted into money, to pay debts, legacies, and funeral expenses ; and the overplus to be paid to certain persons (to whom he had bequeathed pecuniary legacies), in proportion to their respective legacies. Some of these legatees died in the testator's lifetime ; and, on a question whether their lapsed shares belonged to the heir at law or next of kin of the testator, Lord Thurlow at first inclined to the opinion that the next of kin were entitled, but, upon further argument, his Lordship decided in favour of the heir. He said, that he used to think, when it was necessary for any of the purposes of the testator's disposition, to convert land into money, that the undisposed-of money would be personalty ; but the cases fully proved the contrary. It would be too much, he observed, to say, that if all the legatees had died, the heir could, as he certainly might, prevent a sale ; and yet that, because a sale was necessary, the heir should not take the undisposed part of the produce.

Effect of failure of devise by contingency or illegality.

" So, if the produce of real estate directed to be sold be disposed of in a certain event which does not happen, or for a purpose which is illegal, the beneficial interest comprised in the contingent or illegal gift which thus fails devolves to the heir.

Failure of disposition of real and personal estate respectively.

" And it is, of course, immaterial that the testator has combined his personal estate in the same gift with the proceeds of the real estate ; the effect in such case being that, by the failure of the intended disposition, the real estate descends to the heir, and the personalty devolves to the next of kin of the testator. Thus, in Jessopp v. Watson (h), where a testator directed a mixed fund, composed of the produce of his real and personal estate, to be

(g) 1 Br. C. C. 503. On the question whether, where the Court or a trustee sells more than necessary of the estate of a living owner, there is an equity to reconvert for his heir, see Steed v. Preece, L. R., 18 Eq. 192, and the other cases cited, ante, p. 732.

(h) 1 My. & K. 665 ; see also Roberts v. Walker, 1 R. & My. 752 ; Edwards v. Tuck, 23 Beav. 268 ; Bedford v. Bedford, 35 ib. 584.

applied to certain specified purposes, and the residue to be divided equally among his children or child at twenty-one, if sons, and twenty-one or marriage, if daughters; and if no such child, to such person or persons as he should by his codicil appoint. The testator died without having made a codicil, leaving an only daughter his heir, who died under twenty-one, intestate and unmarried. Sir J. Leach, M.R., held, that so much of the residuary fund as was constituted of real estate, descended to the daughter as heir at law (i), and that so much as was constituted of personalty devolved to and was divisible among the persons entitled under the Statute of Distributions to the personal estate of the testator.

“ So, in the case of Eyre v. Marsden (j), where a testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust, at any time after his decease, to sell and convert the property, and during the lives of his children to accumulate the annual income; and, after the decease of such surviving child, he gave the produce of the real and personal estate (directing such part as had not been previously converted, to be then converted), to his grandchildren. One of the children having survived the testator more than twenty-one years, the trust for accumulation became void for the excess under the statute of 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98 (l), and the income being held to be thenceforth undisposed of during the life of the surviving child, was claimed by the next of kin of the testator, as well of the proceeds of the real as the personal estate, on the ground that there was an absolute conversion. But Lord Langdale, M.R., decided that it belonged to the heir, observing that the sale was directed for the purposes of the will, and for the benefit of the legatees, not for the benefit of the next of kin, whose claim was therefore confined to the income of the personal estate.

“ The position that the heir is not excluded by any conversion, however absolute, may seem, indeed, to be indirectly encountered by those cases in which a distinction has been carefully drawn between absolute and qualified conversion (m). The learned Editor of Peere Williams’s Reports, in a note which has often been referred to with commendation (n), states the question in between conversion to all intents and conversion for purposes

Distinction
of will.

(i) But apparently as personalty: see Re Richerson, [1892] 1 Ch. p. 382.

(j) 2 Kee. 564, cited ante, p. 390. See also Re Perkins, [1909] 53 Sol. J. 698. In both of these cases conversion took place under a power, not under a trust.

(l) The Thellusson Act, ante, p. 377.

(m) Wright v. Wright, 16 Ves. 188.

(n) Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. W. 20, Mr. Cox’s n.

CHAP. XXII.

Conversion
for purposes of will—
what.

those cases to be, 'whether the testator meant to give to the produce of the real estate the quality of personalty to all intents, or only so far as respected the particular purposes of his will.' There seems to be no ground to except to this statement of the doctrine, provided that, by an indication of intention to give to real estate the quality of personalty 'to all intents,' we are allowed to understand something very special and unequivocal, amounting, in effect, not merely to a disposition of the fund as personalty to the legatees named in the will, but to an alternative gift to the persons entitled by law to the personal estate, in the event of the failure of the intended disposition. Unless such an interpretation be given to the terms of this proposition, it must, however respectable the authority from which it proceeded, be pronounced to be not strictly accurate; at all events, it is not an explicit statement of the rule, and requires, it is conceived, in order to be a safe guide in its application, the following explanatory addition: 'But that every conversion, however absolute in its terms, will be deemed to be a conversion for the purposes of the will only, unless the testator distinctly indicates an intention that it is, on the failure of those purposes, to prevail as between the persons on whom the law casts the real and personal property of an intestate, namely, the heir and next of kin.' The respective claims of his own representatives, it may be confidently affirmed, are, in such cases, not in the contemplation of the testator, who always calculates on his legatees surviving him" (o).

Examples of conversion
for purposes of will only.

Accordingly, it is now settled, that neither a direction that the proceeds of the sale of land shall be deemed personal estate (p), nor such a direction joined with an express declaration that the heir at law shall not take in case of lapse (q), will exclude the claims of the heir at law as against the next of kin. If there is a residuary bequest, a direction that the proceeds of the real estate shall form part of the personalty, will make them pass by the

(o) In Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 19, an implied direction to use real estate for the purpose of carrying on a business seems to have been considered as equivalent to a trust for conversion pro tanto so as to bring the undisposed-of profits within the principle of Ackroyd v. Smithson.

(p) Taylor v. Taylor, 3 D. M. & G. 190, overruling Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 649; and see Robinson v. London Hospital, 10 Hare, 19; Gordon v. Atkinson, 1 De G. & S. 478; Flint v.

Warren, 16 Sim. 124; Shallcross v. Wright, 12 Beav. 505; Hopkinson v. Ellis, 10 ib. 169; Williams v. Williams, 5 L. J. (N. S.) Ch. 84; Collins v. Wake-man, 2 Ves. jun. 683 (as to the 1000l.). But Jessel, M.R., though he admitted it was so settled, yet thought such a direction might well have been held to mean that the next of kin should take, Court v. Buckland, 1 Ch. D. 610.

(q) Fitch v. Weber, 6 Hare, 145; Sykes v. Sykes, L. R., 4 Eq. 200.

residuary bequest (r). Even if the testator gives a share of his residue to A., who happens to be his heir at law, and by codicil revokes the gift, this does not prevent A. from claiming such part of the lapsed share of residue as consists of real estate (s). CHAP. XXII.

Mr. Jarman continues (t): "Upon the principle that real estate directed to be sold is converted only for the purposes of the will, it was held by Sir W. Grant (u), that such a devise in trust to pay certain legacies did not throw open the fund to simple contract creditors, though he said that a substantive and independent intention to turn real estate into personalty, at all events, would have that effect. Such a conversion, however, as that referred to by his Honor, must be of a special kind. It must have no specified object, for a specification of the object, we see, will confine it; or it must contain some expressions shewing that it is not so confined. In short, it must be manifest that the property is to be considered as personalty quoad this purpose, or, in other words, that the fund is intended to be subjected to the claims of simple contract creditors." As to conversion subjecting fund to simple contract debts.

Again, where a testator, having devised lands to trustees upon trust for sale, did not dispose of the surplus proceeds, and died without heir or next of kin, it was held that the Crown had no title to the surplus proceeds, (as it would have had if they had been personalty,) but that the trustees were entitled to retain them for their own benefit (v). Trustees entitled where no heir.

In further confirmation of the principle in question, it is now settled that the undisposed-of residue of money to arise from the sale of real estate will not pass under a general bequest of personalty in the same will, unless the testator expressly declares that it shall be considered as part of his personal estate, or unless such As to proceeds of real estate, passing under a residuary bequest.

(r) Infra. As to the case of Countess of Bristol v. Hungerford, cited by Mr. Jarman under a misapprehension as to the nature of the decision, see ante, p. 702.

(s) Gordon v. Atkinson, 1 De G. & S. 478.

(t) First ed. p. 561.

(u) Gibbs v. Ougier, 12 Ves. 413.

(v) Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Sim. 8. See also Cradock v. Owen, 2 Sm. & Gif. 244, 245. In the case of deaths since the 14th August 1884, the Intestates Estate Act, 1884, applies. In Re Bond, [1901] 1 Ch. 15, land was devised by an owner in fee simple to A. for life with no devise over; the testator died in 1882 without an heir. The land was sold by A. under the powers of the Settled Land Acts, and a fund representing the proceeds of sale remained in the hands of the trustees; on the death of the tenant for life it was held that the fund was money which vested in the Crown as bona vacantia. Kekewich, J., distinguished the case from Taylor v. Haygarth on the ground that in the latter case there was an express trust for sale.

CHAP. XXII.

Berry v.
Usher.

Real fund will not pass under a bequest of personalty.

an intention can be collected from the force and meaning of the expressions used by the testator through the whole will (w).

Thus, in Berry v. Usher (x), the appointment of two persons as joint residuary executrix and executor, was held not to give them the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold. And in Maugham v. Mason (y), where A. devised freehold chambers to trustees and their heirs, upon trust to sell, and apply the money arising by such sale towards payment of the legacies by his will bequeathed; and the rents, until sold, to be applied to the same uses; and after giving certain legacies, the testator then, as to all the residue of his personal estate, after payment of his debts, &c., bequeathed the same to trustees, upon trust to convert the said residue into money, and lay the same out as therein mentioned. Sir W. Grant held that the produce of the sale of the real estate, after payment of the legacies, resulted to the heir, and did not pass under the residuary bequest.

This construction, it will be observed, was somewhat aided by the circumstance of the trust being to convert the residue into money, which could not strictly apply to the money produced by the real estate; but the M.R., though he adverted to this circumstance, decided the case upon the general principle, that where there was a direction to sell land for a particular purpose, the surplus did not form "part of the personal estate, so as to pass by the residuary bequest."

Dixon v.
Dawson.

So, in Dixon v. Dawson (z), the testatrix devised and bequeathed her real and personal estate upon trust to sell and convert, and out of the proceeds of the real estate to pay her debts and testamentary expenses, and also certain legacies and annuities, and in case the proceeds should be insufficient, then to pay the same out of the personal estate, and she also bequeathed legacies to charities to be paid out of her personal estate, and then proceeded thus:—"Should any part of my personal estate and effects still remain undisposed of, after satisfying all my just debts and personal and other incidental expenses, and providing for the said charities herein mentioned, and paying the several legacies or sums of money herein bequeathed or directed to be paid thereout, then upon trust that my said trustees shall pay and transfer the residue and remainder of (w) See per Sir J. Leach, in Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 661. See also Sprigg v. Sprigg, 2 Vern. 394, where land was devised to be sold, and thereout to pay a contingent legacy, which failed, and the residue to B.; it was held that B., and not the heir, benefited by the failure of the legacy; otherwise, if it had been an absolute legacy.

(x) 11 Ves. 87.

(y) 1 V. & B. 410.

(z) 2 S. & St. 327.

my said estate and effects not hereby otherwise disposed of unto, &c." It was decided by Sir J. Leach, V.-C., that the last gift did not include the residue of the proceeds of the real estate, and that the heir at law was entitled.

Collis v. Robins.

And in Collis v. Robins (a), where the testator devised real estate upon trust for sale, and out of the proceeds and the rents in the meantime to pay the testator's debts and the trustees' costs and certain legacies, and the will then proceeded, "and as to all and singular my ready monies and securities for money to me belonging, and all other my personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever the same may be at the time of my decease, I give and bequeath, &c," Sir J. K. Bruce, V.-C., held that the surplus of the proceeds of the real estate belonged to the heir at law.

"But it is clear," says Mr. Jarman (b), "that if there be a declaration that the money arising from the sale shall be considered as part of the testator's personal estate, it will pass under a general bequest of personalty in the same will (c).

Conversion to all intents effected by declaration that proceeds of realty shall be personalty, or by blending real and personal estates.

"And it seems, that where the testator has blended the proceeds of the real and personal estates in regard to one legatee taking a temporary interest, it is to be inferred that he does not intend them to be subsequently severed; and accordingly, in such a case, very slight circumstances will suffice to extend a bequest applicable in terms to the personalty only, to the produce of the real estate, in order to avoid such severance. Thus, where (d) a testator gave his real estate and the residue of his personalty to trustees, to sell and convert the same, and invest the proceeds, and then gave the interest, dividends and produce of the whole of his real estate, and of the residue of his personalty, to his wife for life, and after her

(a) 1 De G. & S. 131. See also Brown v. Bigg, 7 Ves. 279, stated ante, p. 741.

(b) First ed. p. 566.

(c) For this proposition Mr. Jarman cites Collins v. Wakeman, 2 Ves. jun. 683 (stated post, p. 781, on another question), but the point does not seem to have been argued for the heir. The principle, however, is clearly established, or rather taken for granted, in several modern cases: Robinson v. London Hospital, 10 Hare, 19; Bright v. Larcher, 3 De G. & J. 148; Field v. Peckett, 29 Bea. 568. In Kidney v. Coussmaker (1 Ves. jun. 436), it was held, that where a testator had devised real estate in trust to be sold, and directed the produce to be applied in payment of the incumbrances on the estate, and the remainder to be considered as part of the residue of his personal estate, and then bequeathed the residue of his personalty after payment of his debts, the fund was subjected to the debts. Sir W. Grant, in Gibbs v. Ougier, supra, expressed his doubt of the soundness of the decision, but it was approved in Bright v. Larcher and Field v. Peckett.

(d) Byam v. Munton, 1 R. & My. 503.

CHAP. XXII.

decease he gave one moiety of the interest, dividends and produce of the residue of his personal estate and effects, or the securities on which the same should be invested, to his brother M., his executors, administrators, and assigns, and he gave the other moiety of the interest, dividends and produce of the residue of his personal estate and effects, or the securities on which the same should be invested, to his sister-in-law B. for life; and, after her decease, he gave the whole of the principal of such moieties, or the whole residue of his estate whatsoever and wheresoever, and the securities on which the same should be invested, to his said brother M., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns; and the question being whether the sister-in-law was entitled to a moiety of the income arising from the proceeds of the real estate, Sir J. Leach, M.R., decided in the affirmative" (e).

The blending of the proceeds of the two estates for any purpose not exhausting the whole, is always taken as rendering probable an intention that they shall be kept together throughout, and as inviting such a construction of subsequent words of gift as will carry that intention into effect. Thus, in Court v. Buckland (f), where a testator devised and bequeathed his real and the residue of his personal estate in trust to sell, and to dispose of the net moneys to arise from such real and residuary personal estate (after payment of debts and legacies) according to the trusts thereafter declared concerning the same. He then declared that until sale the real and personal estate should be subject to the trusts thereafter declared concerning the said net moneys, and that the rents and annual produce thereof should be deemed income for the purposes of the same trusts, and that the real estate should be transmissible as personal estate. The testator then directed a sum to be set apart out of the said net moneys to answer a life annuity, subject to which it was to form part of his residuary personal estate; and, subject to the annuity and to legacies and debts, the testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of his residuary personal estate in trust as to one moiety for his son, and, as to the other, for his daughter and her children. Jessel, M.R., held that the net proceeds of the real estate were included in the trusts of the "residuary personal estate."

(e) See Wall v. Colshead, 2 De G. & J. 683, post, and De Beauvoir v. De Beauvoir, 3 H. L. C. 524, stated in Chap. XL.

(f) 1 Ch. D. 605. See also Spencer v. Wilson, L. R., 16 Eq. 501; Norreys v. Franks, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 18.

Again, in Singleton v. Tomlinson (g), a testator directed his executors to pay his funeral expenses and debts "out of the proceeds of his property." He then recited that he was possessed of "landed and chattel property," and directed his executors to sell his "landed estates" for the best price. He gave certain legacies; he specifically devised a certain estate; and specifically bequeathed his plate and furniture; and concluded, "I constitute A. my residuary legatee." It was held in the House of Lords that A. was entitled to the surplus proceeds of the real estate, as well as of the personal estate, after payment of the funeral expenses, debts and legacies (h).

CHAP. XXII.

Effect, after blending, of appointing a "residuary legatee."

At the present day, the question must be treated as one purely of construction, unaffected by any special indulgence to the heir. No case, indeed, has gone further against the heir than the early one of Mallabar v. Mallabar (i), where a testator devised and

(g) 3 App. Ca. 404. See also Wildes v. Davies, 1 Sm. & Gif. 482, and other cases, post, Chap. XXVII. In Griffiths v. Pruett, 11 Sim. 202, the gift was of "any sum appearing after fulfilling" the will, an expression as properly applicable to the proceeds of real estate as to personalty. And see Bromley v. Wright, 7 Hare, 334.

(h) In this case, the heir at law relied on Kellett v. Kellett (1 Ba. & Be. 533, 3 Dow, 248), where a testator bequeathed legacies to several children; he bequeathed his interest in certain lands to A., and then proceeded as follows:—"The remainder of my properties I devise to my executors to make good the above sums and the following sums, that is to say": and then, after enumerating other legacies, he concluded thus:—"And I also ordain, appoint and devise the said W. G. and H. executors to this my last will and testament; also my residuary legatees, share and share alike." It was contended by the executors that the real estates were by the will, and for the purposes of it, turned into personal estate, to the residue of which they were entitled; or that if there was no such conversion, yet, by the manifest intention of the testator, they were legally and beneficially entitled to such parts of the estates as should remain after payment of the debts, legacies, &c., except the estates specifically devised to A. But Lord Manners held that the intention was not made plain enough to disinherit the heir: The executors appealed to the House of Lords, relying principally on the argument, that by constituting them residuary legatees, the testator intended them to take the residue of all that was included under the word "properties" in the preceding devise: but the House refused to disturb the decree. Lord Eldon said, "I should very much misrepresent the state of my mind with respect to this question, if I did not say that it is a state of infinite doubt, whether, according to the rules of law, and as collecting the intention of the testator from the whole of the will, the residue was intended by the testator to include the real estate. It is a whimsical way of putting it; but I feel a strong bias towards the opinion that he did mean to include it. I cannot say that the decision in this case is wrong, and I cannot say that it is right; but as I cannot say that it is wrong, it appears to me that the decree ought to be affirmed." Lord Redesdale expressed himself nearly to the same effect. Although the trust clearly authorized a sale to pay legacies, there was no express direction to sell; a fact upon which Lord Manners laid great stress. But although the land was thus less clearly treated as "something that was all to be turned into money," it is reasonably plain that neither Lord Eldon nor Lord Redesdale, if the case had come originally before him, would have held that any part of the testator's "properties" was undisposed of.

(i) Ca. t. Talb. 78.

CHAP. XXII.

bequeathed all his lands in certain counties to his sister C., her heirs and assigns, upon trust that the same should be sold, and out of the moneys arising therefrom all his just debts paid; and out of the remainder of the money he bequeathed certain legacies, including one to the heir at law; and then, after his "debts and legacies paid as aforesaid, and subject to the same," the testator gave the residue of his personal estate to his said sister, whom he appointed sole executrix. The produce of the real estate, after paying debts, was claimed by the heir. Lord Talbot admitted parol evidence against him; but afterwards decreed, upon the will itself, that there was no resulting trust, and that the executrix should have the whole residue, including the produce of the real estate.

"This case," as Mr. Jarman points out (j), "has been treated by Sir W. Grant as being governed by its particular circumstances (k), and certainly the giving of the residue 'after debts and legacies paid as aforesaid,' afforded an argument that it was intended to include the fund in question, which had been expressly subjected to those charges."

Conversion to all intents of land specifically devised.

In Wall v. Colshead (l), a testator devised several estates to his children severally for their respective lives, and after their death to his executors upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds equally between their respective children; he gave the residue of his property to two of his children in equal shares, and if any of his children died under twenty-one, he gave the part or parts intended for such child to the survivors for life, and after the decease of the survivors or survivor, he gave such part or parts to his executors upon trust to sell and pay the proceeds to their, his, or her children; two of the children died without issue: it was held by Knight Bruce and Turner, L.JJ., though not without some hesitation, that the testator intended a conversion out and out, and not only for the purpose of division between the children of the tenants for life.

Heir takes as personalty—where.

B.—Doctrine of Conversion as between Persons claiming under Heir or Next of Kin.—"It is observable," says Mr. Jarman (m), "that where a partial undisposed-of interest in real estate directed to be sold results to the heir at law of the testator, it becomes

(j) First ed. p. 563.

(k) In Maugham v. Mason, 1 V. & B. 416, stated ante, p. 770. See also the observations of Sir J. Leach, M.R., in Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 660, and Collis v. Robins, stated ante, p. 771.

(l) 2 De G. & J. 683.

(m) First ed. p. 568. Cited with approval by Chitty, J., in Re Richerson, [1892] 1 Ch. p. 382.

personalty in his hands. Thus, in Wright v. Wright (n), where A. devised his real estate in trust to be sold to pay his debts, &c., and the residue in trust for his daughter, but if she died in the lifetime of his wife, to his wife for life, and, at her decease, to go as he (the testator) should by a codicil direct. He left no codicil. The daughter died [intestate] in the widow's lifetime. The reversionary interest in the fund expectant on the widow's decease, which descended to the daughter as the heir at law of the testator, was, at her death, claimed respectively by her administratrix as personalty, and by her heir at law as real estate. Sir W. Grant, M.R., held, on the authority of the case of Hewitt v. Wright (o), (in which the same principle was applied to a disposition by deed,) that it was personal estate in the daughter, and accordingly belonged to her administratrix. According to the doctrine already stated (p), it is clear that no act on the part of the heir electing to take such partial interest as real estate, would avail to change its character."

And even where the land itself remains unsold, it results to the heir as personal estate (q).

"But if the purposes of the will wholly fail, as if all the legatees of the moneys to be produced by the sale die in the testator's lifetime, so that there is a total failure of the objects for which the conversion was to be made, the property will devolve upon the heir as real estate" (r). And in such a case it is immaterial that a sale has by mistake taken place on the supposition that the trusts

Where the objects of the conversion wholly fail.

(n) 16 Ves. 188; see also Smith v. Claxton, 4 Mad. 484; Jessop v. Watson, 1 My. & K. 665; Dixon v. Dawson, 2 S. & St. 327; Carr v. Collins, 7 Jur. 165; Tily v. Smith, 1 Coll. 434; Hatfield v. Pryme, 2 Coll. 204; White v. Smith, 15 Jur. 1096; Bagster v. Fackereil, 26 Beav. 469; Wilson v. Coles, 28 Beav. 215; Hamilton v. Foot, Ir. R., 6 Eq. 572.

(o) 1 Br. C. C. 86. As to conversion by deed, see Clarke v. Franklin, 4 K. & J. 257; Re Grimthorpe, [1908] 2 Ch. 675.

(p) Ante, p. 761. In Wright v. Wright the land had been actually converted into money, so that no question of election could have arisen. In saying that no act on the part of the heir would avail to change the character of the property, Mr. Jarman probably means "no act on the part of the heir during the continuance of the trust for conversion, and while the property remains unconverted"; but is it clear that the heir cannot elect in such circumstances? See ante, p. 763, n. (qq).

(q) Re Richerson, [1892] 1 Ch. 379; and the cases cited in note (o).

(r) In support of this proposition, Mr. Jarman refers to Sir J. Leach's judgment in Smith v. Claxton, 4 Madd. 493. As to Chitty v. Parker, 2 Ves. jun. 271, see Att.-Gen. v. Lomas, L. R., 9 Ex. 29; Simmons v. Rose, 6 D. M. & G. 411. "Where a person . . . has directed a conversion for a particular special purpose, or out and out, but the produce to be applied to a particular purpose, when the purpose fails, the intention fails; and this Court regards him as not having directed the conversion" per Lord Eldon, Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. p. 435; Re Grimthorpe, [1908] 2 Ch. 675.

CHAP. XXII.

have not wholly failed (s) : but the question whether the will causes a conversion or not is to be determined by the circumstances as they exist at the testator's death, and therefore where it is uncertain at that period whether a conversion will be required for the purposes of the will, the heir will take the property as personalty, although those purposes may have failed before a sale takes place (t).

But this doctrine only applies where the real estate is devised separately : it does not apply where the testator creates a mixed fund of his real and personal estate. Thus in Att.-Gen v. Lomas (tt) the testator directed his real estate to be sold and the proceeds, with his personalty, to be held in trust for the payment of debts and legacies, and as to the residue on certain trusts which failed ; at the death of the testator's heiress, part of the real estate remained unsold : it was held that it devolved to her as personalty.

Next of kin takes as realty
—where.

In the converse case, i.e., where personal estate is directed to be laid out in land, which is to be held on trusts which (either originally or by lapse) leave part of the interest undisposed of, this partial interest results to the testator's next of kin or residuary legatee as real estate, in case of whose death it passes to his heir at law, or devisee (u).

When land is devised charged with a sum of money, which is (s) Davenport v. Coltman, 12 Sim. 610. Cf. Bowra v. Rhodes, 31 L. J. Ch. 676.

(t) Carr v. Collins, 7 Jur. 165, per Shadwell, V.-C. On this Mr. Theobald (Wills, 7th ed. p. 259) makes the following observation : "The proposition may be right, but no such question arose in Carr v. Collins, where there was no intestacy." In Carr v. Collins the testator devised his real estate upon trust for sale and payment of his debts and certain legacies, and directed one half of the residue to be paid and applied to or for the benefit of his son John, or his issue as the trustees should think proper. John survived the testator, but died without issue before the property was sold, having by his will made such a disposition of his property as would give an absolute interest to the plaintiff in John's moiety of the testator's estate if that estate devolved as personalty, but only an estate for life if it devolved as realty. Shadwell, V.-C., held that it devolved as personalty. He said : "At the death of the testator it was uncertain whether John Bell might have any issue or not, therefore the character of the property was impressed upon it at the death of the testator." It is submitted that the proposition in the text (which is contained in the third edition of this work, by Messrs. Wolstenholme and Vincent), is correct.

(tt) L. R., 9 Ex. 29.

(u) Curteis v. Wormald, 10 Ch. D. 172 ; overruling Reynolds v. Godlee, Johns. 536, 582, where Wood, V.-C., held that it resulted to the executor, and through him to the next of kin, as personal estate. The V.-C. put the case of the liberated fund being wanted to make good abated legacies under the will, "in which case the land purchased must certainly be dealt with as the estate of the testator which the executors must apply as personal estate in payment of the legacies." But the case is scarcely relevant. Nothing of course results to the next of kin until all the purposes of the will which ought to be satisfied have been satisfied. Curteis v. Wormald was followed in Re Skerrett's Trusts, 15 L. R. Ir. 1.

given on trusts which do not exhaust the entire beneficial interest in the money, so that after it has been raised the undisposed-of interest sinks for the benefit of the devisee (v), the devisee takes it as he finds it, viz., as personalty. This, of course, assumes him to be absolutely entitled to the land (w).

VII.—Effect of Failure by Lapse, or otherwise, of Pecuniary Gifts out of Proceeds of Land.—Under the old law, in cases where real estate was devised to be sold, and a sum of money forming part of the proceeds was undisposed of, the question whether it went to the heir, or to the residuary legatee of the fund, or to the general residuary legatee, was the subject of much difference of opinion (x).

Specific sums payable out of the produce of real estate belong to the heir—when.

It is clear, that a sum expressly excepted out of the produce of the sale, but not attempted to be disposed of, belonged to the heir (y).

Sums excepted but not disposed of.

Nor is it to be doubted, that where a legacy was payable out of a fund of this description upon a contingency which did not happen, the residuary devisee of the fund had the benefit of such failure, on the principle that, in the event which had happened, there was no actual disposition in favour of the legatee (z).

Sums given on a contingency;

Where, however, a sum of money, part of the proceeds of real estate, was in terms given to an object incapable by law of taking, the authorities respecting its destination are conflicting, though here, also, there seems to be a preponderance in favour of the heir (a). In Page v. Leapingwell (b), however, Sir W. Grant, M.R., appears to have decided, that a charitable gift out of a real fund went, not to the heir, (as might have been inferred from the observations in his judgment,) nor to the residuary devisee of the fund, but to the general residuary devisee; “a conclusion which,” as Mr. Jarman remarks (c), “it seems difficult to reconcile with the principle repeatedly laid down by Lord Eldon, and other judges, that a residuary devise is, under the old law, in effect, a specific devise —given to objects incapable of taking.

(v) See as to this ante, p. 441.

(w) Re Newberry's Trusts, 5 Ch. D. 746.

(x) Having regard to the effect of the Wills Act, s. 25 (see post, p. 786), the remarks of the learned author of this work on this question are somewhat abbreviated. For a fuller statement and discussion of the cases on the subject, see the 4th ed. of this work, vol. I. pp. 632 et seq.

(y) Collins v. Wakeman, 2 Ves. jun. 683, stated post, p. 781; Watson v.

Hayes, 5 My. & Cr. 125; and as to trusts for conversion in deeds, see Emblin v. Freeman, Pr. Ch. 541; Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102; Griffith v. Ricketts, 7 Hare, 311; Matson v. Swift, 8 Beav. 368.

(z) Ante, p. 440.

(a) Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. W. 20; Collins v. Wakeman, 2 Ves. jun. 683; Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 V. & B. 294. See post, pp. 783 et seq.

(b) 18 Ves. 463.

(c) First ed. p. 570.

CHAP. XXII.

of the lands not included in the particular devises contained in the will." In Jones v. Mitchell (d), where A. devised his real estate, after certain limitations, to trustees in trust to be sold, and out of the moneys to be produced by the sale, to pay certain legacies, and then a legacy of 800*l.* to charities, and to pay the residue to B. ; Sir J. Leach, V.-C., held that the void legacy of 800*l.* belonged to the heir, on the principle that the residuary devisee of real estate, or of the price of real estate, could take nothing but what was at the time intended for him.

Destination of lapsed sums specifically given out of the produce of real estate.

The principle seems to apply, with exactly the same force, to the case of lapse ; and, undoubtedly, at one period, the established rule as to these cases also was, that the heir was entitled on failure of the devise ; unless, according to the doctrine of some cases (e), the produce of the sale was blended with the personal estate in one general residuary disposition.

Principle governing the cases.

"The ground upon which this rule was established (and the principle is equally applicable to every class of cases before noticed), is this : that where a testator devises real estate to be sold, and out of the produce gives a specific sum, say 1,000*l.*, to A., and the residue to B., the residue is to be considered as a gift of the specific sum which the purchase-money, after deducting 1,000*l.*, shall happen to amount to ; the gift being the same in effect as if the testator had said, I give to B. the purchase-money minus 1,000*l.*, which I give to A. It is a mere distribution of the purchase-money among them, the one taking a certain and the other an uncertain share ; and B. has no more right, in any event, to take the share of A., than A. has to take the share of B." (f).

Claim of the heir negatived in Noel v. Lord Henley.

A different doctrine was, however, propounded in a subsequent case (g), which was as follows :—Lord W. devised certain real estates to trustees, upon trust for sale, and out of the produce to pay certain sums of money, including a sum of 5,000*l.* to his wife, her executors and administrators, in part satisfaction of 10,000*l.* secured to her by their marriage settlement out of certain trust funds in case of her surviving him and failure of issue of his body by her (h) ; and after these purposes he directed the trustees to (d) 1 S. & St. 290. See also Taylor v. Bland, W. N. 1880, p. 155.

(e) See Lord Thurlow's judgment in Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Br. C. C. 148 ; Kennell v. Abbott, 4 Ves. 802 ; but as to which see post.

(f) First ed. p. 571. See this principle affirmed in Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Br. C. C. 128.

(g) Noel v. Lord Henley, 7 Pri. 241, Dan. 211, 322.

(h) "If the devise could have been considered as subject to this contingency, there would be no difficulty in reconciling the decision with Hutcheson v. Hammond, on the principle before stated in regard to contingent charges, ante, p. [440]. It seems to be impossible, invest the residue of the said moneys upon certain trusts. The testator's wife died in his life-time. One question was, whether the 5,000*l.* devolved upon the heir or next of kin, or belonged to the persons entitled to the residue. Richards, C.B., held, that by the lapse the residuary devisees of the fund were entitled.

The decree as to the 5,000*l.* was affirmed in the House of Lords (i). Lord Redesdale grounded his opinion on the view that the death of a legatee in the testator's lifetime, thus causing the legacy to lapse, is a contingency to which every person who makes a disposition by will must be deemed to know that such a disposition is subject. Lord Eldon concurred in the decree, but apparently on a different ground; for he said (using the word "contingency" in a different sense, as it seems, from Lord Redesdale) that the 5,000*l.* was only to be payable upon a contingency; and that not having happened, no direction was given, the will having failed with reference to that part of it.

Noel v. Lord Henley affirmed in D. P.

As Mr. Jarman points out (ii): "The reasoning . . . on which Lord Redesdale grounded his opinion, is directly opposed to the principle recognized in a great variety of cases (j), that a testator is in general supposed to calculate upon his dispositions taking effect, and not to provide for the happening of events in his life-time which will defeat them, as the death of legatees, &c. The whole doctrine of lapse stands upon this principle."

Remarks upon Noel v. Lord Henley.

Fortunately, however, the perplexing uncertainty in which the doctrine was thus placed, was in some degree dissipated by the subsequent case of Amphlett v. Parke (k), presently stated, which, as eventually decided, appears to have restored the authority of Hutcheson v. Hammond. Lord Brougham's judgment, on the appeal, contains a detailed examination of many of the cases, among which, however, neither Hutcheson v. Hammond, nor Noel v. Lord Henley, is to be found, nor do they appear to have been cited at the bar. Indeed, the question chiefly discussed in this case was, whether the declaration that the produce of the sale should be deemed personal estate, and the blending of such produce with the general residuary personal estate, did not so absolutely convert it into personal estate as to exclude the heir; and the adjudication in the negative affords the strongest possible however, consistently with sound construction, or the principle upon which it was decided, so to treat it." (Note by Mr. Jarman.) See however Lord Eldon's remarks on the appeal.

(i) Noel v. Lord Henley, 1 Dan. 322,

12 Pri. 213.

(ii) First ed. p. 574.

(j) See accordingly Robinson v. London Hospital, 10 Hare, 28.

(k) 4 Russ. 75, 2 R. & My. 221.

CHAP. XXII.

confirmation of the doctrine of Hutcheson v. Hammond, in opposition to Noel v. Lord Henley, in both which these circumstances were wanting.

Whether blending of proceeds of real and personal estate excludes the heir.

Mr. Jarman continues (l): "The unavoidable mention of Amphlett v. Parke has rather anticipated the subject next to be considered, namely, whether the circumstance of the produce of the real estate being blended with the general personal estate constitutes a ground for excluding the heir, by applying to the mixed fund the rule applicable to the latter species of property; such rule being (as is well known) that the residuary legatee takes, even under the old law, whatever is not effectually disposed of to other persons. It seems difficult to discover any solid reason why the blending of the two funds should produce this consequence. The testator, intending the proceeds of the two species of property to go in the same manner, comprises them in the same disposition for mere convenience, and to avoid a needless repetition of language; and the effect ought, one should think, to be the same as if, in one part of his will, he had given the proceeds of the real estate to A., and in another part, the proceeds of the residuary personal estate to A. How far the authorities lend their support to such a conclusion, will be seen by the following statement of them.

Cruse v.
Barley.

"A leading case on this subject is Cruse v. Barley (m), where a testator devised all his freehold and copyhold lands to P. and his heirs, in trust to sell the same, and, in the first place, to pay off all incumbrances upon the premises, and all his just debts. He devised all his personal estate to the same trustee, in trust to sell, and to apply the money arising by the sale, and also the money to be produced by sale of the real estate, amongst his five children: viz. to his eldest son C. 200*l.* at his age of twenty-one; the residue amongst his four younger children at their respective ages of twenty-one or marriage. C. died under twenty-one; upon which a question arose as to the 200*l.*, which, it was admitted, never vested in C. Sir J. Jekyll, M.R., having ordered the precedents to be looked into, declared that the 200*l.* should be construed as land, and descend to the heir: for that it was the same as if so much land as was of the value of 200*l.* was not directed to be sold, but suffered to descend.

Remark on Cruse v.
Barley.

"The legacy in this case was contingent, and failed by the non-happening of the event on which it depended; a circumstance which was not adverted to, but which would clearly now be held to take it out of the principle in question (n). It is enough, however, for the present purpose, that the heir was not excluded by the blending of the residue of the fund with the personal estate.

(l) First ed. p. 575.

(m) 3 P. W. 20.

"The next case is Durour v. Motteux (o), where a testator devised all his estate [mentioning various species of real and personal property], to trustees to sell; and, after payment of all his debts, funeral expenses and legacies, to place out all the residue of his personal estate at interest, upon securities, upon the trusts therein mentioned. One of the questions was, whether a legacy of 1,200*l.*, which was void, (because to be laid out in land for charitable purposes,) belonged to the heir or the residuary legatee. Lord Hardwicke decided in favour of the legatee; laying some stress upon the fact of the real estate being turned into personal, and observing, that the intent to include the whole in the residue plainly appeared from the testator's description of all his personal estate; so that the whole of the real was to be considered as personal property (p).

"In this case (which has been regarded as a leading authority) we find, for the first time, the circumstance of the blending of the produce of the real and personal estates was made the ground of the decision; and this principle was still more distinctly recognized in the subsequent case of Hutcheson v. Hammond (q), where Lord Thurlow, while deciding in favour of the heir's title to a lapsed legacy, payable out of the proceeds of real estate, added, 'though if a testator has blended his real with his personal fund, and has made a residuary legatee, it will carry all that is not disposed of.'

"No allusion to any such doctrine, however, occurs in the case of Collins v. Wakeman (r), (the next of this class,) where a testator devised certain lands to W., his heirs and assigns, in trust to sell; and the money arising from such sale he directed to be considered as part of his personal estate, and to be disposed of by his said trustee and executor, his heirs, executors and administrators, in manner following: he then gave several pecuniary legacies out of

CHAP. XXII.

Durour v. Motteux.

Residuary legatee held to be entitled to void legacy.

Dictum of Lord Thurlow in Hutcheson v. Hammond.

Collins v. Wakeman.
Heir held to take legacy excepted out of proceeds of land, but not disposed of.

(n) See ante, pp. 440 seq., and Doe d. Wells v. Scott, 3 M. & Sel. 300; the principle of which is, of course, applicable to devises out of the produce of real estate devised to be sold.

(o) 1 Ves. sen. 320; more fully and accurately stated, 1 S. & St. 292, n.

(p) Of this case, Sir W. Grant has observed, "From the little Lord Hardwicke is reported to have said, it is difficult to ascertain from what expressions he inferred that, by the description of all his personal estate, the testator meant to include everything in the residue. The decision is generally accounted for by the particular manner in which the sale was directed, and the circumstance of the testator having blended the real and personal estates in one gift to trustees, to sell the whole with his personal estate," &c., 1 V. & B. 417; see also 2 R. & My. 232; but see ib. 245.

(q) 3 Br. C. C. 148.

(r) 2 Ves. jun. 683.

CHAP. XXII.

his said trust monies and personal estate, and gave to his executor W. the sum of 1,000*l.*, to be disposed of according to any instructions he might leave in writing. The testator then gave all the residue of his [personal estate subject to debts, legacies, &c., to M.]. The testator left no instruction as to the 1,000*l.* which was now claimed by the residuary legatee, the next of kin, and the heir at law. Lord Loughborough decided in favour of the heir; observing, that ‘where the Court has no direction from the testator, to whom the money arising from any part of his real estate shall go, it rests with his heir at law’ (s).

Remark on Collins v.
Wakeman.

“In this case, it will be observed, the express declaration, that the produce of the sale should be considered personal estate (which was held sufficient to make the residue of the fund pass under the general bequest of personalty), did not, in Lord Loughborough’s opinion, authorize the Court to apply to the produce of the real estate the rule applicable to personalty, in reference to the effect of the failure of a specific gift.

Kennell v.
Abbott.

“This case was soon followed by Kennell v. Abbott (t), where a testatrix devised a certain copyhold estate to A. and her heirs, in trust to sell, and out of the monies arising therefrom to pay certain legacies; she then made some specific bequests; and, as to the residue of the purchase-money arising from the sale of the said estate, household goods, and all the residue of her monies, securities for money, personal estates and effects whatsoever, she gave to B., her executors and administrators, subject to her debts and funeral expenses; and she appointed B. executrix. One of the legacies payable out of the produce of the land was void on account of fraud in the legatee; which raised a question, whether it belonged to the residuary legatee or the heir. Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., held, that it devolved to the residuary legatee. He distinguished Hutcheson v. Hammond, on the ground of there being two residues—a special residue of the money arising from the sale, and the general residue; but that here the testatrix had given particular parts of her estate, stock, leasehold estate, household goods, furniture, and many other articles, and this copyhold estate, which she ordered at all events to be sold, and out of the purchase-money she directed these legacies to be paid; and she made a residuary disposition, ‘as to which,’ continued his Honor,

Residue of real fund being blended with the personalty, void legacy held to fall into residue.

(s) In Amphlett v. Parke, 2 R. & My. 221, Lord Brougham treated Collins v. Wakeman as a case in which the next of kin and the heir at law were the only litigating parties; but, according to the printed report, the residuary legatee also claimed.

(t) 4 Ves. 802.

‘ the question is, whether it is not to all intents a general residuary clause, carrying everything not disposed of. I am of opinion it is, under Mallabar v. Mallabar, and Durour v. Motteux. It is making the real estate, to all intents and purposes, personal; and then, taking a retrospective view of what she had done, and meaning to give everything not disposed of, she adds this residuary clause. Therefore, I think this estate is turned entirely into money.’

“ This case seems to have occasioned much of the uncertainty in which this doctrine has been long involved, by contradictory decisions. It was certainly founded on a very partial view of the then state of the authorities, as neither Cruse v. Barley, nor Collins v. Wakeman was noticed by the M.R., though the latter case was the latest upon the subject; having been decided only a short period before, by his contemporary on the Equity Bench.

Remark on Kennell v.
Abbott.

“ We now come to Gibbs v. Rumsey (u), where a testatrix devised her freehold, copyhold and personal estates to trustees, upon trust to sell, and out of the money to arise by the sale, together with her ready money and other effects, she bequeathed certain charitable legacies, and 100*l.* to her trustees for their care and trouble. And she afterwards bequeathed the residue of the monies arising from the sale, and all the residue of her personal estate, to her trustees and executors, to dispose of as they should think proper. It was held, that these trustees took the residue for their own benefit under this bequest; and, with respect to the charitable legacies, Sir W. Grant treated it as a point quite clear, that they went to the heir at law, and not to the residuary legatee or next of kin. The principal question in the case was, whether the devisees were trustees of the surplus or not (v); and it is observable that the point, as to the destination of the void legacies, does not appear to have been discussed; nor was the case of Kennell v. Abbott cited, or a single argument advanced in favour of the residuary legatees.

Gibbs v.
Rumsey.
Heir held to take void
legacies.

Observation
upon Gibbs v.
Rumsey.

“ The subject, however, was much more fully investigated in the subsequent case of Amphlett v. Parke (w), where A. devised freehold and copyhold lands to M. and P., upon trust for sale, and directed that the monies to arise from such sale should be considered as part of her personal estate; and then went on to direct that, out of the monies to arise from the sale and all other her personal estate, certain legacies should be paid, and all the residue of her personal estate, and the monies arising from her real estate, the testatrix Amphlett v.

Parke.

(u) 2 V. & B. 204. Compare Gravenor v. Hallum, Amb. 643, referred to ante, p. 442.

(v) Ante, p. 482.
(w) 1 Sim. 275, 4 Russ. 75, 2 R. & My. 221.

CHAP. XXII.

Heir held to take void
legacies.

Lord Brougham's judgment in Amphlett v.
Parke.

Remark on preceding cases.

Green v.
Jackson.

gave upon certain trusts. Sir J. Leach, V.-C., held, that some of the legacies which had lapsed fell into the residue . . . but his judgment was reversed by L.C. Brougham, who decided in favour of the heir, after an elaborate examination of many of the authorities.

"The only case which his Lordship seemed to consider to press strongly against the heir was Kennell v. Abbott, which he deemed to be inconsistent with the current of authority, especially Cruse v. Barley, Digby v. Legard (x), and Gibbs v. Rumsey, and to have been founded on a misconception of Durour v. Motteux, in the report of which, in Vesey, the will was not accurately stated, and the decision appeared from a MS. of Lord Hardwicke's judgment in his possession, to have chiefly turned on another question. The case of Mallabar v. Mallabar, Lord Brougham regarded as standing on special grounds, especially that of a legacy being given to the heir at law, but which circumstance has not invariably, we have seen (y), been considered to be of so much weight. In that case, however, the question, as already shown (z), was not, as to the destination of a lapsed or void legacy given out of the proceeds of real estate; but whether such proceeds passed under a general residuary disposition.

"It will be observed, that, in several of the preceding cases, including Gibbs v. Rumsey, and Amphlett v. Parke, the entire proceeds of the real estate, (not merely, as in Kennell v. Abbott, the surplus, after payment of the legacies in question,) were blended with the personalty, the legacies being charged on such mixed fund; so that the fact of the void or lapsed legacy being made payable out of the personal, as well as the real, estate, was not considered to afford a ground for applying to such legacies, in toto, the rule applicable to personal estate.

"In the interval between the original decree in Amphlett v. Parke and its reversal, occurred the case of Green v. Jackson (a), where a testator bequeathed all his personal estate to trustees, upon trust to pay some legacies, and also devised all the residue of his real estate (after some particular devises) to the same trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust to sell. The testator then directed,

(x) 3 P. W. 22, Cox's note, 2 Dick. 500. "A. devised her real and personal estate to trustees, in trust to sell, to discharge debts and legacies, and to pay the residue to five persons in equal shares. One of them died before the testatrix, and Lord Bathurst held, that the share of the deceased residuary legatee in the real estate resulted to the testatrix's heir. The case, therefore, does not appear immediately to belong to the class of authorities discussed in the text, but ranks with Ackroyd v. Smithson, stated ante, p. 766."

(Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(y) Ante, p. 707.

(z) Ante, p. 773.

(a) 5 Russ. 35, 2 R. & My. 238.

Void legacies held to fall into residue.

that the monies which should be received by his trustees by such sale, and by virtue of the bequest of the personalty, and all other his monies which should come to their hands, after his debts and legacies, and two sums directed to be sunk by way of annuity, and all costs attending the execution of the will should be paid and provided for, should be placed in a banking-house until the whole (except certain sums) should be got in. He then directed his trustees to pay considerable sums for charitable purposes, and concluded with a direction to them to pay and apply all the residue of the monies in their hands, after full satisfaction and discharge of the aforesaid several payments and bequests, to certain persons. It was admitted that the charitable legacies failed in the proportion which the produce of the real estate bore to the produce of the personalty (b). The heir at law claimed the benefit of such failure; but Sir J. Leach, M.R., on the authority of Durour v. Motteux, and also, he said, upon principle, held that the failure of the charitable legacies enured for the benefit of the residuary legatees; and that no distinction could be made between that part of the residue which had arisen from the real estate, and that part which had arisen from the personal estate: he observed that the facts in Gibbs v. Rumsey were not distinctly stated, and the argument there turned on another point. His Honor did not advert to the other opposing authorities.

"The case of Green v. Jackson was referred to by Lord Brougham in Amphlett v. Parke, as warranted by the particular terms of the will; but as his Lordship's remarks went to impugn the authority of Durour v. Motteux, on which it was chiefly founded, they probably induced the appeal which was brought against the decision of the M.R., and which was argued before Lord Lyndhurst, who, however, affirmed the decree, and that, too, chiefly on the authority of Durour v. Motteux. The circumstance that, in Green v. Jackson, the legacy was void ab initio, and in Amphlett v. Parke failed in event by lapse, seems to furnish no solid distinction between these cases; for the principle applicable to each species of case is, it is conceived, the same" (c).

Remark on Green v.
Jackson.

The last case on this subject appears to be Salt v. Chattaway (d), in which a testator devised and bequeathed to trustees all his real Salt v.

Chattaway.

(b) On this subject, vide ante, p. 265.

(c) Mr. Jarman's remarks on another decision of Leach, M.R., viz., Cooke v. The Stationers Company, 3 My. & K. 262 (referred to ante, p. 442), are omitted, as the decision seems not to affect the principle laid down in Amphlett v. Parke.

(d) 3 Beav. 576.

CHAP. XXII.

and personal estate, "subject to the payment thereof of his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses," upon trust to sell and receive the purchase-money and all money that might be owing to him at his decease, "and thereof and out of the ready money he might die possessed of to pay, among other legacies, a legacy of 100*l.* to A. when he should attain the age of twenty-one, and to divide the residue into three parts, which he then proceeded to dispose of. A. died under twenty-one, in the testator's lifetime; the contingency upon which the legacy was given thus never happened. According to the principle before stated (e), this would seem to have been the natural ground for holding that the legacy fell into the residue. Lord Langdale, however, passed over this ground, and based his decision that the legacy fell into the residue, on the decisions in Durour v. Motteux and Green v. Jackson.

General
remarks on the cases.

"Here, then" says Mr. Jarman (f), referring to the cases before Salt v. Chattaway, "closes the long line of cases respecting the destination of pecuniary legacies, originally void or failing by lapse, so far as they are payable out of the proceeds of real estate, where such proceeds are blended with the general personal estate. The state of the authorities is certainly not such as to justify the hope of all litigation being at an end on this perplexing subject. An adjudication founded on a full examination of all the cases is still wanting.

Rule in regard to wills
since 1837.

"The question, of course, will present itself under a different aspect in reference to wills made or republished since the year 1837, and containing a residuary devise, as such devise is made by the 25th section of the recent act of 1 Vict. c. 26, to extend to all interests in real estate comprised in any devise which fails by lapse or from being contrary to law, or otherwise incapable of taking effect; but the remarks occurring on this point have already found a place in connection with the subject of the failure of pecuniary charges on real estate, not directed to be converted, to which it will be sufficient to refer" (g). The general principle in such cases is that when the sum is a charge, as distinguished from an exception, the failure still (as before the act) enures for the benefit of the specific devisee, not of the residuary devisee (h).

(e) Ante, pp. 440 and 777.

(f) First ed. p. 586.

(g) Ante, p. 445.

(h) Tucker v. Kayess, 4 K. & J. 339 (will dated 1853); Sutcliffe v. Cole, 3

Drew. 135 (will dated 1843, 24 L. J. Ch. 486). And see the judgment in Carter v. Haswell, 26 L. J. Ch. 576, where it was immaterial whether charge or exception; the general (being the only) devisee could alone benefit by the failure. The case is more properly one of a void particular devise falling into residue.

Sometimes a testator, after bequeathing a sum of money which he charges on his real estate, directs that in a certain event the sum shall sink into the residue of his personal estate: in such a case, if the sum is not actually raised, and there is no necessity to raise it, the general rule is that it sinks into the real estate, the testator being considered not to have shewn any intention that it should be raised out of his real estate for the mere purpose of benefiting his personal estate (i).

(i) Johnson v. Webster, 4 D. M. & G. 474; Re Duke of Somerset, 55 L. T. 753.

CHAPTER XXIII.

POWERS OF APPOINTMENT AND DISPOSITION.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Preliminary.....	788	Property part of Testator's Estate.....	817
II. What Words will create a Power.....	790	VI. Special Powers :—
III. When and by whom exerciseable	796	(1) Who are Objects of a Special Power.....	821
IV. Formalities to be observed... 798		(2) Execution of Special Powers	825
V. General Powers :—		(3) Ineffectual Execution..	835
(1) Execution by Specific Disposition	802	VII. Miscellaneous Questions as to Powers	836
(2) Execution by a General Devise or Bequest.....	805	VIII. Construction of Appointments	856
(3) How far Exercise of General Power makes

Operation of a power of
appointment.

I.—Preliminary (a).—A power of appointment is either a power of original disposition, or a power to revoke an existing disposition and make a new one ; in the latter case, it is obvious that the existing interests are vested, and (after much discussion) it is now settled that where the power is one of original disposition, and is followed by a limitation in default of appointment, the interests so limited are vested, subject to be divested by an exercise of the power (b). The point is of importance when it is a question

(a) This chapter is new, except so far as it incorporates a few passages contained in Chap. XX. of previous editions of this work, on the "Operation of a General Devise of Real Estate" (Chap. XXV. in this edition). It does not profess to deal with those general principles which are common to all powers of appointment, whether exerciseable by deed or by will. As to these, the reader is referred to the treatises of Lord St. Leonards, Mr. Chance, and Mr. (now Lord Justice) Farwell.

(b) Sugden, Powers, 8th ed. p. 452 ; Doe v. Martin, 4 T. R. 39 ; Smith v. Lord Camelford, 2 Ves. jun. 698 ; Reade v. Reade, 5 Ves. 744 ; Re Ware, 45 Ch.

D. 269. As to Woodcock v. Rennick, see post, p. 824. On principle it would seem clear that where there is a gift to the children of A., in such shares as A. shall appoint, and A. never has more than one child, that child takes an absolute interest, and no appointment by A. can affect it, or give him a new title ; on the authorities, however, the point is by no means clear : see Sweetapple v. Horlock, 11 Ch. D. 745, where Re Frowd's Settlement, 4 N. R. 54, and De Serre v. Clark, L. R., 18 Eq. 587, are discussed. In Lovett v. Lovett, [1898] 1 Ch. 82, the power was to appoint to issue.

whether a person's interest in a trust fund passes to his trustee in bankruptcy, or is subject to his marriage settlement, or the like (c).

CHAP. XXIII.

The rules for ascertaining the persons to take in default of appointment, where they constitute a class are stated elsewhere (d).

Class taking in default, how ascertained.

It may here be observed that it is not strictly accurate to divide powers of appointment into two classes, general and special. The essence of a general power is that the donee of the power can appoint to whomsoever he pleases (e), and it will be noticed that sect. 27 of the Wills Act does not use the words "general powers," but the words "power to appoint in any manner the donee may think proper." Even if the donee can appoint to himself, yet if certain persons are excluded as objects of the power, such a power is not of the nature of the power referred to in sect. 27 (f). There is a class of powers which are not special in the sense that there is a distinct class of objects of the power, and yet are not general; to this class belong powers where the donee can appoint to any person or persons other than himself, his executors or administrators, or other than certain classes of persons. The Legacy Duty Act, 1796, uses language which implies that for the purposes of that act the two classes of power, special and general, were meant to include all possible cases (g), and in the case of Platt v. Routh (h) it was consequently held that limited powers of the kind above referred to were, for the purposes of that act, general powers. The question as to whether a power is general or not is sometimes of importance with reference to the question whether estate duty is payable by virtue of the definition contained in sect. 22 of the Finance Act, 1894, and also as to the applicability of the Rule against Perpetuities in relation to appointments under such powers.

General and special powers.

A power of appointment, as a general rule, requires for its Distinction between powers of appointment and powers of disposition.

(c) Lee v. Olding, 25 L. J. Ch. 580; Re Vizard's Trusts, L. R., 1 Ch. 588; Re Andrews' Trusts, 7 Ch. D. 635; Sweetapple v. Horlock, 11 Ch. D. 745; Re Maddy's Estate, [1901] 2 Ch. 820.

(d) Chap. XLI. (gifts to next of kin, relations, &c.); Chap. XLII. (gifts to children).

(e) Sugden on Powers, p. 394;

Farwell on Powers, 2nd ed. p. 7.

(f) Re Byron's Settlement, [1891] 3 Ch. 474.

(g) See per Lord Abinger, 6 M. & W. at p. 788.

(h) 3 Bea. 257, 6 M. & W. 756, affirmed sub nom. Drake v. Att.-Gen., 10 Cl. & F. 257.

CHAP. XXIII.

exercise some more or less formal expression of intention (a), while a power of disposition, although it may be expressed so as to confer a mere power of appointment (as where a power to dispose of property by will is given), may be expressed so widely as to include the exercise of powers incident to ownership, such as a power of using, selling, or otherwise alienating the property, which may obviously be exercised without any formal expression of intention (b).

Appointment operating as direct gift.

In some cases, where a person purports to charge or appoint property in exercise of a specific power, and of all other powers, and the charge or appointment cannot take effect under the specific power, it takes effect out of the appointor's own interest in the property (c).

Power equivalent to absolute interest.

The cases in which a person to whom a power of disposition or appointment is given takes an absolute interest, are considered in Chapter XXXIII.

Power to appoint income.

An absolute power of appointing the income of a fund carries the power to appoint the capital (d).

Absolute interest with superadded power.

II.—What Words will create a Power.—If an absolute interest in property is given in the first instance, superadded words purporting to give a power of disposition are, as a rule, surplusage (e). Thus, a devise to a married woman to be her sole and separate property, and with power to her to appoint the same to her children and husband in such a way as she may think fit, gives her the absolute property (f).

(a) See Irwin v. Farrer, 19 Ves. 86; Holloway v. Clarkson, 2 Ha. 521; Re Davids' Trusts, Johns. 495; Pennock v. Pennock, L. R., 13 Eq. 144. In Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 3 Mac. & G. 559, the donee of a general power appointed to his own executors and administrators, and this was held to make the property his own.

(b) See Brodrick v. Brown, 1 K. & J. 328. "There is nothing in the word 'disposal' essentially indicating power rather than property, independently of the context"; per Knight Bruce, V.-C., in Nowlan v. Walsh, 4 De G. & S. p. 586, where the V.-C. seems to cast doubts on the accuracy of the decisions in Reith v. Seymour, 4 Russ. 263, and Archibald v. Wright, 9 Sim. 161. Compare Re Pounder, Re Stringer, and Re Sanford, post.

(c) Cross v. Hudson, 3 Br. C. C. 30; Jones v. Southall, 30 Bea. 187; Sing v.

Leslie, 2 H. & M. 68; Re James, [1910] 1 Ch. 157.

(d) Re L'Herminier, [1894] 1 Ch. 675.

(e) See Hixon v. Oliver, 13 Ves. 108; Doe d. Herbert v. Thomas, 3 A. & E. 123; Howorth v. Dewell, 29 Bea. 18.

(f) Brook v. Brook, 3 Sm. & G. 280; Foxwell v. Van Grutten, [1900] W. N. 97. In the case of married women subject to the old law, a power of appointment by will, notwithstanding coverture, could be given in addition to absolute ownership; Bull v. Kingston, 1 Mer. 314; Hales v. Margerum, 3 Ves. jun. 299. The general principle of the Court of Chancery was that it would not allow an equitable merger or coalescence of interests given to a married woman, if the result would be to defeat its own rules aimed at the protection of married women from marital control: Whittle v. Henning, 2 Ph. 731. But since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882,

So if personal property is given to A., with a power to dispose of it by will or "at his death," he takes an absolute interest (g). CHAP. XXIII.

And it is, of course, immaterial that the power of appointment or disposition is confined to a class of persons, such as the children of the devisee or legatee (h).

The doctrine applies even if the absolute interest is not given directly, but is implied from an indefinite gift of the income of the property (i). Thus, where a testator bequeathed the dividends of stock to a woman, to be paid to her notwithstanding any future coverture, with a direction that her receipts should be a sufficient discharge, and that at her death she might leave it to anyone she chose, it was held that she took an absolute interest (j).

Absolute gift cut down to life interest with power of disposition.

And even if words are added declaring the testator's intention to be that the devisee shall enjoy the property during his life, and by his will dispose of the same as he thinks proper, they do not, of themselves, cut down the absolute interest previously given (k).

On the other hand, after an apparently absolute gift, the testator may go on to use words which shew that he meant to give a life interest, with a power of appointment or disposition over the capital (l). Thus a gift to A., to be vested in her on her attaining twenty-one, and to be subject to her disposition thereof, followed by a gift over in the event of her dying under twenty-one or without disposing of the property by her will, gives her a life interest with a power of appointment by will (m). So a gift to A. "for her own absolute use and benefit and disposal," with a gift over of any part remaining "undisposed of" at her death, gives A. a life interest, with a power of disposition by act inter vivos, but not by will (n). But the distinction between a case of this kind, and a case where this doctrine has ceased to be of importance: see Re Davenport, [1895] 1 Ch. 361, post. In Farwell on Powers (p. 107), Barrymore v. Ellis, 8 Sim. 1, and Medley v. Horton, 14 Sim. 222, appear to be treated as correctly decided, notwithstanding Brown v. Bamford, 1 Ph. 620; Harnett v. Macdougall, 8 Bea. 187, and Moore v. Moore, 1 Coll. 54; sed quære.

(g) Comber v. Graham, 1 R. & My. 450. This was the construction adopted in Re Mortlock's Trust, 3 K. & J. 456, but the will seems to be wrongly punctuated.

(h) Haworth v. Dewell, 29 Bea. 18; Brook v. Brook, 3 Sm. & G. 280; and cases on precatory trusts, cited Chap. XXIV.

(i) Weale v. Olive, 32 Bea. 421.

(j) Southouse v. Bate, 16 Bea. 132.

(k) Doe v. Thomas, 3 Ad. & E. 123. In that case the devise was to a woman, but nothing seems to have turned on this.

(l) See Constable v. Bull, 3 De G. & S. 411, and other cases cited in Chap. XIV.

(m) Borton v. Borton, 16 Sim. 552. See Ahearne v. Aherne, 9 L. R. Ir. 144.

(n) Re Pounder, 56 L. J. Ch. 113; Doe v. Glover, 1 C. B., 448. Compare Re Pedrotti's Will, 27 Bea. 583; Re Fox, 62 L. T. 762, and Re Richards, [1902] 1 Ch. 76 (in all of which the power of disposition was restricted to purposes of maintenance); Re Thomson's Estate, 14 Ch. D. 263, and Pennock v. Pennock, L. R., 13 Eq. 144 ("power to take and apply").

CHAP. XXIII.

Gift to parent and children.

the donee takes an absolute interest, or a life interest with a general power of appointment, is now difficult to draw (n).

Where the gift is for the benefit of a person and his children, it may be so expressed as not to confer concurrent interests, but to give the parent a life interest, with a power of appointment among the children (o). In Re Haly's Trusts (p), a sum was bequeathed to A. for her sole and separate use, "and to be appropriated by her to and amongst her children in such shares as she shall think proper." A. predeceased the testator, and it was held that the children took under the implied gift to them, from which it seems to follow that if A. had survived the testator she would either have held the fund upon trust for the children, or would have taken an estate for life with a power of appointment among the children (q).

Provision for death of legatee without having disposed of
property

Where a testator gives property to A., and then provides for the case of A.'s dying without having disposed of it, the question arises whether the original gift is an absolute one, in which case the gift over is repugnant and void; or whether A. takes an estate for life, with a general power of appointment, followed by a gift over in default of appointment.

may not affect absolute gift,

Thus, if a testator gives property to A. "for his own use," or "for his absolute use and benefit," or the like, and goes on to provide that on A.'s death any part of the property not disposed of by him shall go to some one else, this gives A. an absolute interest, and any part of the property not disposed of at his death forms part of his estate (r).

or may cut it down to life interest
with power.

On the other hand, the whole frame of the will may negative the idea of an absolute gift. Thus, in Re Stringer's Estate (s), the testator gave to J. all his property, with full power to sell and dispose of it in any way he thought fit, by deed, will, or otherwise, and appointed him executor, but if J. did not dispose of the property, the testator gave it or the part undisposed of to other persons, and appointed other executors: there were various provisions in the will to take effect after the death of the survivor of the testator and J.: it was held that J. took a life estate with a general power of appointment. And where a testator gave all his property to his wife, "so that she may have full possession of it and entire (n) See the cases of Re Stringer, 6 Ch. D. 1; Re Jones, [1898] 1 Ch. 438, and Re Sanford, [1901] 1 Ch. 939, cited post.

(o) Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 288.

(p) 23 L. R. Ir. 130.

(q) Compare Rorke v. Abraham, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 334, post.

(r) Re Yalden, 1 D. M. & G. 53; Re Mortlock's Trust, 3 K. & J. 456; Par-nell v. Boyd, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 571; Re Jones, [1898] 1 Ch. 438. See also Re Hanbury, [1904] 1 Ch. 415, reversed on appeal, [1905] A. C. 84.

(s) 6 Ch. D. 1.

power and control over it," with a gift over in the event of her dying without having devised or appointed it, it was held that she took an estate for life only with a general power of appointment (t). The decision, however, seems to have partly turned on the fact that the testator had previously by his will made a different disposition of his property, including a gift of the residue to his wife absolutely, and that the disposition above stated was contained in a codicil.

A power of appointment may be created by informal words, such as words giving a power of "settling" or "disposing" of property in a certain way (u). But vague words will not create a power if such a construction is inconsistent with the general scheme of the settlement containing them (v). Informal words.

As a general rule, a limitation to a person for life, and after his death to his heirs and assigns, does not give him a power of appointment (w).

In Re Holden (x), where a testator gave a life interest in property to A., and on his death "gave all the remainder of my personal property which may then exist" to B., this was held not to give A. a power of disposition.

But a gift of property to A. for life, with full power to will away any part at her decease, followed by a gift over of the residue and remainder of what was undisposed of by her, was held to give her a power of appointment over the whole (y).

In Atkinson v. Jones (z), a testator gave one moiety of his residue upon trust for M. for life, and after her death as to one half of it as she should appoint, and as to the other half upon the trusts thereafter declared of the other moiety, which he gave upon similar trusts for E., with a similar cross limitation of one half upon the trusts thereinbefore declared concerning M.'s moiety: it was held Power created by cross limitations.

(t) Re Sanford, [1901] 1 Ch. 939. See Re Pounder, 56 L. J. Ch. 113, ante, p. 791; and Rorke v. Abraham, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 334, where it was held that the power was limited to children, and in default of appointment they took equally; Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 288.

(u) Beachcroft v. Broome, 4 T. R. 441; Kennerly v. Kennerly, 10 Ha. 160; Downes v. Timperson, 4 Russ. 334. See Comiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury, [1905] A. C. 84, where there was an absolute gift, subject to an executory gift over, which in its turn was subject to a power of appointment created by informal words expressing the testator's confidence that the donee would dispose of the property for the benefit of the objects of the gift over: see Chap. XXIV.

(v) Van Grutten v. Forwell, 84 L. T. 545.

(w) Milman v. Lane, [1901] 2 K. B. 745, in which Tapner v. Merlott, Willes, 177, and Quested v. Michell, 24 L. J. Ch. 722, are discussed. See also Brookman v. Smith, L. R., 7 Ex. 271.

(x) 59 L. T. 358. Compare Re Thomson's Estate, 14 Ch. D. 263, and the other cases cited supra, p. 791.

(y) Cooke v. Farrand, 7 Taunt. 122.

(z) Johns. 246.

CHAP. XXIII.

that the effect was to give M. and E. between them a power of disposing of the whole of the testator's residuary estate.

Where a testator gave the income of his property to his wife for life, and directed that in case the income should not be sufficient she was to use such portion of the property as she might deem expedient, and that on her decease "what was left" of the property should be divided among certain persons: it was held that the wife had a general power of appointment over the capital during her life, but the question whether she could appoint by will was not decided (a).

Life interest enlarged into absolute interest.

A gift to A. for life, followed by a general power of appointment and a gift in default of appointment to A.'s executors or administrators, seems to confer on A. an absolute interest (b).

What words will create a testamentary power.

In Bristow v. Skirrow (bb), a testator gave leaseholds upon the same trusts as his wife might declare with respect to the disposition of her residuary personal estate by her will: it was held that this gave her a general testamentary power of appointment.

A power to appoint, without saying in what manner, or a power to appoint "by writing," or "by deed or otherwise," authorizes an appointment by will (c). And if the power is to appoint by a "writing" or "instrument" executed with certain prescribed formalities (such as sealing and delivery, or attestation), it may be exercised by a will executed with those prescribed formalities, but it cannot be exercised by an ordinary will (d).

A gift of property to A. for life, and "at" or "after" his decease, to such persons as he shall appoint, or to be "at his disposal," gives A. a power of appointment by deed or will (e), unless some words are added (such as "leave" or "will" or "bequeath") which imply a testamentary disposition, in which case the power can only

(a) Re Richards, [1902] 1 Ch. 76. See Re Pedrotti's Will, 27 Beav. 583; Re Fox, 62 L. T. 762; Re Rowland, 86 L. T. 78; ante, p. 464.

(b) Chap. XXXIII.

(bb) 27 Bea. 585.

(c) Sugden on Powers, 214; Lisle v. Lisle, 1 Br. C. C. 533; Taylor v. Meads, 4 D. J. & S. 597. In Doe v. Glover (1 C. B. 448), a gift over in the event of A. not disposing and parting with his interest, was held not to authorize a disposition by will; but see Holmes v. Godson, 8 D. M. & G. 166.

(d) Taylor v. Meads, supra; Kibbet

v. Lee, Hob. 312; Orange v. Pickford, 4 Dr. 363; West v. Ray, Kay, 385; Smith v. Adkins, L. R., 14 Eq. 402, and cases there cited.

(e) Tomlinson v. Dighton, 1 P. W. 149; Ex parte Williams, 1 J. & W. 89; Reith v. Seymour, 4 Russ. 263; Re Davids' Trusts, Johns. 495; Humble v. Bowman, 47 L. J. Ch. 62; Re Jackson's Will, 13 Ch. D. 189; where the cases Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 J. & W. 431; Reid v. Reid, 25 Bea. 469; and Freeland v. Pearson, L. R., 3 Eq. 658, are disapproved. As to Woodcock v. Renneck, 1 Ph. 72, see post, p. 824.

be exercised by will (f). So if the donee, being a married woman, is restrained from alienating the corpus (g). CHAP. XXIII.

On the other hand, a gift of a life estate, followed by a power of disposition, may be so expressed as to confine the power to acts inter vivos (h), or to give the donee an absolute interest (i).

In Re Bolton Estates (j), it was held that a power to create a jointure conferred by a private act of 1535, was exerciseable by a testamentary instrument, although the power of disposing of land by will did not exist before 1540. Power created before Statute of Devises, 1540.

If a power is exerciseable by any writing executed by the donee in the presence of two witnesses, and he executes a document of a testamentary character, this is "a writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power" within the definition contained in sect. 1 of the Wills Act, and must, therefore, comply with the requirements of sect. 9 (k). Writing in the nature of a will.

In Re Broad (l), it was held that if a power is exerciseable by will, or by "any writing purporting to be a will," it may be exercised by a document purporting to be the will of the donee and signed by him, although insufficiently attested and, therefore, incapable of probate. Writing purporting to be a will.

Where a testator, after giving his wife a life interest in his property, continued as follows: "And I devise and empower her by her will or in her lifetime to dispose of my estate in accordance with my wishes verbally expressed by me to her," it was held that the clause purporting to give the wife a power of disposition was void for uncertainty (m). Uncertainty.

(f) Doe v. Thorley, 10 East, 438; Walsh v. Wallinger, 2 R. & M. 78; Paul v. Hewetson, 2 My. & K. 434; Moore v. Ffolliot, 19 L. R. Ir. 499. See Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 319.

(g) Archibald v. Wright, 9 Sim. 161; Re Flowers, 55 L. J. Ch. 200. According to Re Waddington, [1897] W. N. 6, a mere restraint on anticipation does not have this effect.

(h) Re Thomson's Estate, 14 Ch. D. 263, and other cases cited in Chap. XIV.

(i) Re Jones, [1898] 1 Ch. 438, and other cases cited in Chap. XXXIV.

(j) [1903] 2 Ch. 461.

(k) Re Barnett, [1908] 1 Ch. 402; Bainbridge v. Smith, 8 Sim. 86; Re Daly's Settlement, 25 Bea. 456.

(l) Re Broad, [1901] 2 Ch. 86. In Gullan v. Grove, 26 Bea. 64, Romilly, M.R., refused to treat a portion of a duly signed and attested will (the other portion having been destroyed) as a writing "purporting to be a will." And see Re Edmonstone, 49 W. R. 555, where a testamentary document insufficiently attested, and not referring to the power or the property subject to it, was held not to be a "writing duly executed." In Re Barnett, supra, some doubt seems to have been felt by Warrington, J., whether the decision in Re Broad was correct, having regard to the definition of "will" in s. 1 of the Wills Act.

(m) Re Hetley, [1902] 2 Ch. 866. Compare Buckle v. Bristow, 10 Jur. N. S. 1005. It is hardly necessary to say that a power to appoint to A. or B. is not open to objection on the score of uncertainty: see Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124, and other cases cited in Chaps. XIV. and XVIII.

CHAP. XXIII.

A general power will not be cut down to a special power except by express words (m).

Contingent power.

III.—When and by whom exerciseable.—The general principle is that a power given to a designated person, to be exercised upon a contingency, can be well executed before the contingency happens. Thus if a woman has a power exerciseable by will in the event of her marriage, she can exercise it before the marriage (n).

Power given to contingent person.

A general power given to the survivor of two persons can be well exercised, during their joint lives, by the will of the one who turns out to be the survivor (o). And the same principle would appear to apply to any general power given to a contingent person who eventually proves to be the person entitled to exercise it (p).

A different rule seems to apply to special powers. Thus in Re Moir's Trusts (q), a special power was given to A. and B., exerciseable by deed during their joint lives, and in default of such appointment by the survivor by deed or will: it was held by Bacon, V.-C., that it was not well executed by the will, made during the joint lives, of the actual survivor.

A power exerciseable by persons answering a particular description at a certain time, cannot be exercised by persons who answer that description at a different time (r).

Where contingency does not happen.

It is hardly necessary to say that if a power is limited to arise upon a contingent event which does not happen, the power is not exerciseable. Thus, if property is settled upon such trusts as a married woman shall, in the event of her predeceasing her husband, by will appoint, the power is not well exercised by a will made during coverture, if she survives him (s). But if the words of contingency are ambiguous or obscure, regard will be paid to the general scheme of the instrument creating the power (t).

(m) Mackinley v. Sison, 8 Sim. 561.

(n) Logan v. Bell, 1 C. B. 872, and other cases cited Farwell, 144.

(o) Thomas v. Jones, 1 D. J. & S. 63, 2 J. & H. 475. The decisions in MacAdam v. Logan, 3 Br. C. C. 310, and Doe v. Tomkinson, 2 M. & S. 165, seem to have been rendered obsolete by the Wills Act.

(p) Farwell, 155. It does not seem to have been decided whether a general power, expressly made exerciseable by the survivor of two persons after the death of the other, can be exercised by a will made during their joint lives by the person who eventually survives.

(q) 46 L. T. 723. In Cave v. Cave,

8 D. M. & G. 131, and Re Blackburn, 43 Ch. D. 75, the power was expressly made exerciseable after the death of one.

(r) Valentine v. Fitzsimons, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 93.

(s) Price v. Parker, 16 Sim. 198; Trimmell v. Fell, 16 Bea. 537; Willock v. Noble, L. R., 7 H. L. 580; Re Cuno, 43 Ch. D. 12. Compare Van Grutten v. Foxwell, 84 L. T. 545. As to the wills of married women disposing of their separate estate, see ante, Chap. III.

(t) Wilkinson v. Thornhill, 61 L. T. 362. As to the doctrine of Avelyn v. Ward, see Chaps. XXXVII and LVIII.

A power limited to arise upon a future or contingent event must be distinguished from a power which takes effect upon a future event, but is presently exerciseable. The former, not being exerciseable before the event upon which it is limited to arise, happens, is, it seems, void for remoteness, unless the event is such that it must happen within the legal period (u).

CHAP. XXIII.
Future event.

In Blight v. Hartnoll (v), Fry, J., said: "I think that when a power of appointment amongst a class of persons is given, the appointor must know the class—must be able to ascertain the class amongst whom he or she is to divide the property. It is a discretionary power to be exercised with reference to the respective circumstances and merits of the persons who are to take, and that cannot be exercised where the persons are not known." But this statement was not necessary for the decision of the case, and is generally considered to be incorrect (w).

Whether objects of special power must be known to donee.

A power to appoint among several objects is not necessarily defeated by the death of any of them (x).

Death of one of several objects.

A power to appoint by will to any "existing member of my family" means a member living at the date of the will creating the power (y).

Where under a settlement the husband's life interest is determinable on bankruptcy, it is a question of construction whether this puts an end to his power of appointment (yy).

If a power is exerciseable by will, and the donor requires that it shall be exercised within a certain period, the question arises whether he merely means that the will shall be made within the period, or whether he means that the will must become operative by the death of the donee within the period. As a general rule, it seems to be sufficient that the will should be made within the period (z), but it may appear from the context or general scheme of the instrument creating the power, that the donor requires the will to become operative by the death of the donee during the prescribed period (zz).

Power to be exercised within a certain period.

(u) Marsden on Perp. 238. Compare Goodier v. Johnson, 18 Ch. D. 441; Goodier v. Edmunds, [1893] 3 Ch. 455; Blight v. Hartnoll, 19 Ch. D. 294; and the other cases cited ante, pp. 307 seq.

(v) 19 Ch. D. 294.

(w) See Farwell, 146. As to the point decided in the case, see p. 310.

(x) See post, Chap. XLIV.

(y) Sinnott v. Walsh, 5 L. R. Ir. 27.

(yy) Haswell v. Haswell, 2 D. F. & J. 456; Wickham v. Wing, 2 H. & M.

436; Potts v. Britton, L. R., 11 Eq. 433; Re Aylwin, L. R., 16 Eq. 585; Re Stone's Estate, Ir. R., 3 Eq. 621, 18 W. R. 222.

(z) Re Illingworth, [1909] 2 Ch. 297, where the cases of Burnham v. Bennett, 2 Coll. 254, 1 De G. & S. 513, and Cave v. Cave, 8 D. M. & G. 131, are discussed. In Burnham v. Bennett the instrument appears to have been a fabrication.

(zz) Cooper v. Martin, L. R., 3 Ch. 47; Potts v. Britton, L. R., 11 Eq. 433.

CHAP. XXIII.

Wills Act, ..
s. 10.

IV.—Formalities to be observed.—In the case of powers which are expressly made exercisable by will (a), regard must be had to sect. 10 of the Wills Act, which enacts that : “ No appointment made by will, in exercise of any power, shall be valid, unless the same be executed in manner hereinbefore required ; and every will executed in manner hereinbefore required shall, so far as respects the execution and attestation thereof, be a valid execution of a power of appointment by will, notwithstanding it shall have been expressly required that a will made in exercise of such power should be executed with some additional or other form of execution or solemnity.”

Accordingly, a testamentary power of appointment created before the Wills Act, is properly exercised by a will executed with the formalities required by the act (b).

This enactment does not prevent the donor of the power from imposing conditions or restrictions not relating to the formalities of execution. Thus, a special power which is exercisable by the survivor of two persons after the death of the other, cannot be exercised by one during their joint lives, even although that one survives (c). So a power made exercisable by will expressly referring to the power, cannot be exercised in any other way (d).

The Wills Act provides (sect. 1) that in the construction of the act the word “ will ” shall extend to “ an appointment by will or by writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power.” In Re Barnett (e), a fund was settled by A. upon certain trusts, subject to a proviso that it should be lawful for A., by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, with or without power of revocation, to be by her duly executed in the presence of two witnesses, to revoke any of the provisions of the settlement and to appoint other trusts in their place. She signed a document by which she did not in terms revoke any of the provisions of the settlement, but she dealt with the settled fund, and with other property, and directed that her funeral expenses should be paid. This document was signed by her in the presence of two witnesses, but as her signature was not placed at the foot or end thereof, it could not be proved as a will. It was held that this was a writing in the nature of a will in exercise

(a) As to powers exercisable by “ writing,” &c., see ante, p. 794.

(b) Hubbard v. Lees, L. R., 1 Ex. 255 ; Freme v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. 499, post, p. 859.

(c) Cave v. Cave, 8 D. M. & G. 131 ; Re Blackburn, 43 Ch. D. 75, post, p. 835.

(d) Phillips v. Cayley, 43 Ch. D. 222, post, p. 809. This statement is now only accurate so far as relates to special powers : see Re Waterhouse, and other cases cited, post p. 805.

(e) [1908] 1 Ch. 402. As to Re Broad, [1901] 2 Ch. 86 (“ writing in the nature of or purporting to be a will ”), see ante, p. 795.

of a power, and not being executed in accordance with sect. 9 of the act; it was invalid as an exercise of the power. If the document had been confined to an immediate disposition of the settled fund, it would apparently have been valid.

Aiding defective execution.

Before the Wills Act, the Court would in certain cases and in favour of certain persons, especially the wife and children (or adopted children) of a testator, aid the defective execution of a power by his will. Thus, if a power required to be exercised by a will signed in the presence of two witnesses, and the testator, by a will unattested, or only attested by one witness, exercised it in favour of his children, or of one or more of his children, equity would, as a general rule, hold it to be properly exercised (f). But since the Wills Act, a power which requires to be exercised by will cannot be exercised by a will not complying with the statutory requirements, and the Court has no jurisdiction to aid an execution which is defective in this respect (g), unless the testator is domiciled abroad, and special formalities are prescribed (h).

The old doctrine, however, applies to powers which are exercisable by deed. Thus in Bruce v. Bruce (i), a person who had a power of appointment by deed exercised it by will, duly executed, in favour of her children, and it was held to be a good execution of the power. But in such a case the will must be executed in accordance with the requirements of the Wills Act, by reason of the definition of "will" contained in the act (j).

Operation of testamentary appointment

There was formerly some question as to the proper functions of the Court of Probate and the Court of Construction with regard to the operation of a testamentary appointment, and it was at one time thought that the Judicature Acts would make a difference in the practice (k). This does not appear to have been the case, and the practice as now settled may be stated as follows :—

(f) Wilkes v. Holmes, 9 Mod. 485; Lucena v. Lucena, 5 Bea. 249; Hume v. Rundell, 6 Madd. 331; Morse v. Martin, 34 Bea. 500 (as to this case, see Re Walker, [1908] 1 Ch. 560).

(g) Re Kirwan's Trusts, 25 Ch. D. 373.

(h) Re Walker, [1908] 1 Ch. 560.

(i) L. R., 11 Eq. 371; Sneed v. Sneed, Amb. 64; Cooper v. Martin, L. R., 3 Ch. 47.

(j) See Re Barnett, [1908] 1 Ch. 402, supra. As to the case of Kennard v. Kennard, L. R., 8 Ch. 227, see Re

Kirwan's Trusts, 25 Ch. D. 373.

(k) See the remarks in the 4th edition of this work (p. 29 seq.), where the following cases are cited: Draper v. Hitch, 1 Hagg. 674; Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. 139; Barnes v. Vincent, 5 Moo. P. C. C. 201, 10 Jur. 233, 4 No. Cas. Supp. xxxi.; Tatnall v. Hankey, 2 Moo. P. C. C. 342; De Chatelain v. De Pontigny, 1 Sw. & Tr. 411, 29 L. J., Prob. 147; Paglar v. Tongue, L. R., 1 P. & D. 158; In b. Fenwick, ib. 319; In b. Munday, 1 Curt. 590; Douglas v. Cooper, 3 My. & K. 378; Ward v. Ward,

CHAP. XXIII.

- Probate, when necessary. (1) A testamentary appointment in exercise of a power over personal estate is inoperative unless duly proved or recognized by the Court of Probate as a will (l). Under the old law, a will merely exercising a power over real estate did not require to be proved, and in the case of a married woman was not entitled to be proved (m). But since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the will of a married woman can, it seems, be proved as a matter of course in every case. And where a person makes a will in exercise of a general power over real estate, and dies after 1897, it seems that it must be proved (n).
- Effect of probate. (2) Grant of probate (o) is conclusive as to the testamentary character of the document proved. It only remains for the Court of Construction to determine whether the necessary formalities have been complied with (p), and whether in other respects the power has been duly exercised (q).
- English domicil. (3) In the case of a will executed in accordance with English law, by a person domiciled in England, the probate is sufficient evidence of the due execution of the power, so far as formalities are concerned (r).
- Lord Kingsdown's Act. (4) A will admitted to probate under Lord Kingsdown's Act is not a good exercise of a testamentary power of appointment, unless executed in accordance with sect. 10 of the Wills Act (s).
- Will in English form by testator domiciled abroad. (5) A testamentary document exercising a power of appointment, executed in accordance with the requirements of English law by a person domiciled abroad, is recognised by the English Courts as a testamentary instrument, although not valid as a will according to the law of the appointor's domicil. The modern practice is not to grant probate, but letters of administration with the will annexed. If the appointor is a married woman, the grant is limited to the appointed property, unless the husband consents to a general grant being made (t).

11 Beav. 377; D'Huart v. Harkness, 34 Beav. 324; In b. Hallyburton, L. R., 1 P. & D. 90; In b. Tharp, 3 P. D. 76.

(l) Ross v. Ewer, 3 Atk. 160. As to probate in British colonies and possessions abroad, see Re Tootal's Trusts, 23 Ch. D. 532; Re Vallance, 24 Ch. D. 177; Colonial Probates Act, 1892.

(m) In b. Tomlinson, 6 P. D. 209; In b. Hornbuckle, 15 P. D. 149.

(n) Land Transfer Act, 1897.

(o) This includes a grant of administration with the will annexed: see Re Price, [1900] 1 Ch. 442.

(p) Douglas v. Cooper, 3 Myl. & K.

378; D'Huart v. Harkness, 34 Bea. 324.

(q) Paglar v. Tongue, L. R., 1 P. & D. 158.

(r) See Ward v. Ward, 11 Bea. 377, a case under the old law.

(s) Re Kirwan's Trusts, 25 Ch. D. 373; Hummel v. Hummel, [1898] 1 Ch. 642. See the remarks on these decisions in Re Price, [1900] 1 Ch. 442.

(t) In b. Alexander, 29 L. J. P. 93; In b. Hallyburton, L. R., 1 P. & D. 90; In b. Huber, [1896] P. 209; In b. Tréfond, [1899] P. 247; In b. Vannini, [1901] P. 330; Re Baker's Settlement Trusts, [1908] W. N. 161; Murphy v. Deichler, [1909] A. C. 446.

CHAP. XXIII.

Will in foreign form.

(6) Where a power is exerciseable by will, and the donee is domiciled abroad, a will executed by him in accordance with the law of his domicile and recognized as a valid will by the Court of Probate in England, although not executed in accordance with the formalities required by English law, operates as an exercise of the power if an intention to exercise it appears by the will, and if no special formalities are prescribed by the instrument creating the power (u).

Defective execution.

(7) In such a case as that last supposed, if special formalities are prescribed by the instrument creating the power, and they are not observed by the testator, the defective execution may be aided by the Court in accordance with its general principles (v).

Testamentary capacity.

(8) In a case falling within (5) or (6), the appointment takes effect according to English law, and not according to the law of the appointor's domicile. From this follow two corollaries: first, the appointor may, by exercising the power, dispose of the property in a way not permitted by the law of his domicile (w); and secondly, a general devise or bequest contained in the will operates as an exercise of a general power under sect. 27 of the Wills Act, if the appointor shews an intention that his will should take effect according to English law, but not otherwise (x).

Where special formalities must be observed.

(9) In a case where the provisions of the Wills Act do not apply, if special formalities are required by the instrument creating the power, and the donee is domiciled abroad, it is not sufficient that the instrument purporting to exercise the power should be a will according to the law of the domicile; it must also comply with the terms of the power (y).

Land.

(10) According to Murray v. Champernowne (z), a will made in exercise of a power to appoint land must be executed in accordance with the formalities required by the lex loci, and a will so executed is a valid appointment, although the will itself is invalid by the law of the testator's domicile. In the same case, it was held that where a person has a power of appointing the proceeds of sale of land subject to a trust for sale, but not sold, the power is to be Trust for sale.

(u) D'Huart v. Harkness, 34 Bea. 324; Re Harman, [1894] 3 Ch. 607; Re Price, [1900] 1 Ch. 442; Re Walker, [1908] 1 Ch. 560.

(v) Re Walker, [1908] 1 Ch. 560.

(w) Re Hernando, 27 Ch. D. 284; Pouey v. Hordern, [1900] 1 Ch. 492; Re Bald, 76 L. T. 462; Re Mégret, [1901] 1 Ch. 547.

(x) Re Price, supra; Re D'Este's

Settlement Trusts, [1903] 1 Ch. 898; Re Scholefield, [1905] 2 Ch. 408, [1907] 1 Ch. 664; Re Baker's Settlement Trusts, [1908] W. N. 161.

(y) Barretto v. Young, [1900] 2 Ch. 339.

(z) [1901] 2 Ir. R. 232. Compare Bank of Africa v. Cohen, [1909] 2 Ch. 129.

treated as a power to appoint immoveable property within this doctrine (y).

Express or implied.

Power destroyed and replaced by new one.

Misdescription of property.

Implied exercise
of power.

V.—General Powers.—(1) Execution by Specific Disposition.—

An intention to execute a general power may be express or implied.

In Thompson v. Simpson (z), A. had a general power of appointment by deed or will: she made a will expressly exercising the power; she subsequently executed a deed in exercise of the power, by which she reserved to herself a general power of appointment by will: it was held that the will was not an exercise of the power, and that the fund went as in default of appointment.

The fact that a testator misdescribes property which he purports to appoint, does not necessarily prevent the appointment from taking effect. Thus, if he has a power of appointment over the proceeds of sale of Blackacre, and by his will appoints Blackacre itself to X., this will primâ facie operate as a good appointment of the proceeds of sale (a). And if a person has a power of appointing a limited interest in a certain property, and by his will appoints that property by name to X., this may operate as an exercise of his power, unless he has some other interest in the property which will satisfy the terms of the appointment (b).

In the absence of an express exercise, as to which no question usually arises (c), an intention to exercise a power may be inferred from a reference to the power itself in a preceding part of the will (d). Thus in Walker v. Laxton (e), a testatrix who had a power of appointment over a sum of 2,200*l.* made a will in which she recited the power and proceeded to "give and bequeath" to various persons, not objects of the power, legacies amounting in all to 2,200*l.*: it was (y) Ante, p. 3, note (g). The question is a difficult one, but it is submitted that the decision is correct, for the reason that in cases of conflict of laws the true nature of the property should be regarded. Otherwise English leaseholds would be subject to the law of the domicile. The distinction is not between real and personal property, but between moveable and immoveable property. It is observable that Andrew, J., relied to some extent on a note in the first edition of Dicey's Conflict of Laws; in the second edition this note does not appear and there are other alterations tending to shew that the learned author thinks the point more doubtful than he at first supposed.

(z) 50 L. J. Ch. 461.

(a) Per Cairns, L.J., in Cooper v. Martin, L. R., 3 Ch. 47. See this and other cases cited, infra, p. 840.

(b) See Farmer v. Bradford, infra.

(c) See Davies v. Fisher, 5 Bea. 201. As to the requirement that the appointment shall refer to the power, see the cases of Re Waterhouse and Re Lane, post.

(d) As to the principles which ought to guide the Court in inferring an intention of this nature, see Denn v. Roake, 5 Barn. & C. 720; Bennett v. Aburrow, 8 Ves. 609; Cunninghame v. Anstruther, L. R., 2 Sc. & D. 223.

(e) 1 Y. & J. 557.

held, notwithstanding the absence of any words connecting the legacies with the power, that the gifts were intended to be appointments, and therefore could not take effect as legacies.

CHAP. XXIII.

Again, an intention to exercise a general power of appointment may be inferred from a reference to the specific property subject to the power (d). Thus, where a testatrix who had a power of appointment over certain personal property, including a sum of stock, made a will bequeathing pecuniary legacies, followed by a bequest of "all the rest and residue of my bank stock, goods, &c., and all other property, &c., excepting 50*l*. of my bank stock," this was held to denote an intention to include in the general bequest the residue of the stock which was subject to the power, and to charge it with the legacies (e). Here, the expression, "my bank stock," joined with the other terms in the will, was prima facie evidence that the testator was pointing to a specific existing fund; parol evidence was therefore admissible, to shew whether she had any such fund of her own to which the bequest was applicable; and this being proved in the negative, the decision was inevitable. And it may be stated as a general rule, that where the bequest is on the face of the will thus specific, and it is ascertained by parol evidence that the testator has no other such fund, the power will (other things attended to) be well executed (f). Beyond this, of course, parol evidence cannot be adduced to influence the construction in any of these cases (g).

Parol evidence.

But the mere bequest of a sum of money, corresponding in amount to that which is the subject of the power, raises no such inference, though the testator, when he made his will, was not possessed of any other property affording a fund for payment; as it is possible that he may have calculated on the future acquisition of property adequate to satisfy the legacy (h). For the same reason, the (d) See Scrope's Case, 10 Rep. 143*b*. Lounds v. Lounds, 1 Y. & J. 445, seems to have been decided on this ground (see Davies v. Thorns, 3 De G. & S. 347), for at that time it was not settled that parol evidence of the state of the testator's property was admissible.

(e) Walker v. Mackie, 4 Russ. 76. It was also decided that leaseholds subject to the same power passed by the words "other property." This part of the decision was questioned by Pepys, M.R., Hughes v. Turner, 3 My. & K. 697; but see Standen v. Macnab, 6 B. P. C. Toml. 193, decreeing the personal estate to pass with the real; and see Sugd. Pow. 321, 8th edition; Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73.

(f) Innes v. Sayer (Sayer v. Sayer), 7 Hare, 381, 3 Mac. & G. 606; Horwood v. Griffith, 4 D. M. & G. 708; Tredennick v. Tredennick, [1900] 1 Ir. 354. Compare Rooke v. Rooke, 2 Dr. & Sm. 38, and the other decisions with regard to special powers, post.

(g) Standen v. Standen, 2 Ves. jun. 589. And as to the subject generally, see further Sugd. Pow. 8th edition, 289, 2 Chance on Powers, 83.

(h) Jones v. Trucker, 2 Mer. 533; Davies v. Thorns, 3 De G. & S. 347, explaining Forbes v. Ball, 3 Mer. 437.

CHAP. XXIII. mention of "money in the funds" in a general bequest of personal estate, and the fact of the testator having no stock of his own at the date of the will, did not, under the old law, cause the bequest to operate as an appointment of stock over which the testator had a general power of disposition (i).

Where testator has interest as well as power.

In Farmer v. Bradford (j), Blackacre was settled, subject to a term of 500 years, to such uses as A. should appoint, and in default of appointment to him in fee; the trusts of the term were to raise £1000, over which, in the event, A. had a general power of appointment, with a trust, in default, for other persons; A. by his will devised Blackacre to B.: it was held that this devise took effect out of A.'s interest, and did not operate as an exercise of his power to appoint the £1000, which therefore went in default of appointment. If he had had no interest in Blackacre except the £1,000, his devise of the estate might have operated as an execution of his power.

Power of revocation.

The general principle above stated applies where the power is one of revocation as well as appointment. Thus, if a man settles land in Dale, reserving a power of revocation and new appointment by will, and devises all his lands in Dale to J. S., having no other lands in Dale, this is a good exercise of the power (k). So if he makes a will by which he disposes of the property upon trusts which vary in some respects from those declared by the settlement, this prima facie operates as a revocation of the settlement pro tanto (l).

Where will would otherwise be inoperative.

Where a testator affects to deal with some property in general terms, not defining it, under such circumstances that the will cannot have effect except upon the property comprised in the power, this may shew an intention to exercise the power (m).

Republication.

As to the effect of republication, see post, p. 842.

Interest.

If a testator, having a general power over a fund, expressly appoints a particular sum out of that fund to A., this is a specific gift, and A. is entitled to interest on it from the death of the testator (n).

"Residue."

The construction of the word "residue," when a testator

(i) Webb v. Honnor, 1 J. & W. 352. Compare Re Huddleston, [1894] 3 Ch. 595, and the other decisions with regard to special powers, post, p. 833.

(j) 3 Russ. 354.

(k) Deg v. Deg, 2 P. W. 412.

(l) Quin v. Armstrong, Ir. R., 11 Eq. 161.

(m) Per Wood, V.-C., in Brodrick v. Brown, 1 K. & J. 328; Bennett v. Aburrow, 8 Ves. 609.

(n) Re Marten, [1901] 1 Ch. 370.

appoints part of a fund to A. and the residue to B., is discussed later (j).

CHAP. XXIII.

General reference to powers.

Independently of sect. 27 of the Wills Act (k), it is clear that if a testator disposes of "all property over which I have any power of disposition by will," this operates as an exercise of a general power of appointment by will. It also operates as an exercise of a general power conferred on the testator after the date of the will (l). Such a clause is often inserted in wills as a common form, and in most cases it does no harm. But it sometimes happens that a settlor who gives a person a limited interest in property, with a gift in remainder, wishes to confer on him a power to appoint the whole or part of the property in any way he pleases, so as wholly or partially to defeat the interests of the remainder-men, but desires that the power shall not be exercised either by the operation of sect. 27 or by the common clause above referred to: in other words, he does not wish the interests of the remainder-men to be defeated, except by a deliberate exercise of the donee's discretion. In such cases it is usual to insert in the power words requiring that it shall only be exercised by a will "expressly referring to this power," or "expressly purporting to exercise this power," or the like, the object, of course, being to require the testator to refer to the power in such a way as to shew that he had it in his mind. On this supposition a will disposing of "all property over which I have any power of disposition by will" would not comply with such a requirement. However, it has been held that it does (m). It would not be respectful to question the accuracy of these decisions, but they certainly defeated the intention of the donor of the power in each case.

(2) Execution by a General Devise or Bequest.—(a) Old Law.— Realty.

Before the Wills Act, a general devise or bequest did not operate as an execution of a general power of appointment over real estate, unless an intention to exercise the power could be inferred from the language of the will and the testator's circumstances (n). Thus, if a testator, by a will made before and not

(j) Page 859. See Re Bringloe, 26 L. T. 58, stated post, p. 860, n. (s).

(k) Post, p. 808.

(l) Re Old's Trusts, 54 L. T. 677 ("property over which I have any disposing power"). See Patch v. Shore, 2 Dr. & S. 589.

(m) Re Waterhouse, 98 L. T. 30; Re Rolt, [1908] W. N. 76; Re Lane, [1908] 2 Ch. 581. Compare the cases on s. 27 of the Wills Act, post, p. 809.

(n) See Jones v. Curry, 1 Swanst. 66; Sugden on Powers, 342.

CHAP. XXIII.

republished on or since the 1st January, 1838, devised all his hereditaments or real estate, and it appeared that he had no real estate at the time of its execution, but that he had a general testamentary power over real estate, the devise operated as an appointment under the power (o). And where real estate was settled to the separate use of a married woman in fee, with a testamentary power of appointment, a general devise by her took effect as an appointment under the power (p).

On the other hand, if the testator had real estate on which the will could operate, it would be presumed that the devise was made with a view to such property, and not as an exercise of the power (q). On the same principle, where a testator who had freehold property, and a power over freeholds and copyholds, devised his freehold and copyhold estates, the devise operated as an execution of the power with respect to the copyholds (there being no other property of this description on which it could operate), but not as to the freeholds (r). So, if a testator devised all his lands in the parishes of A. and B., having lands in A. only, and a power over lands in A. and also in B., the devise would exercise the power over the lands in B., but not the power over those in A. (s).

Personalty.

As Mr. Jarman points out (t): "The ground on which a general devise has been held to operate as an appointment of real estate, it is obvious, does not apply to personalty (u); for as a will of personal estate comprises whatever property of this description a testator dies possessed of, without regard to the period of its acquisition, it is not necessarily to be presumed, that the testator had any specific property in his view when he made it; and, therefore, even if it should happen that the testator had no other disposable property at the time of making his will or at

(o) Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256. See also Standen v. Standen, 2 Ves. jun. 589, 6 Bro. P. C. 193, where the fact that the testatrix had no real estate seems to have been the principal reason for holding that a residuary devise and bequest passed both real and personal estate over which she had a power of appointment. In all these cases the onus of proving that the testator had no real estate upon which the devise could operate, lay on the person claiming as appointee; Doe d. Caldecott v. Johnson, 7 M. & Gr. 1047.

(p) Curteis v. Kenrick, 3 M. & Wel. 461, 9 Sim. 443; Churchill v. Dibben, 9 Sim. 447, n.

(q) Sir Edward Clere's Case, 6 Co.

176; Ex parte Caswall, 1 Atk. 559; Hoste v. Blackman, 6 Madd. 190.

(r) Lewis v. Llewellyn, T. & R. 104.

(s) Napier v. Napier, 1 Sim. 28; Roake v. Denn, 4 Bli. N. S. 1. See also Doe v. Roake, 2 Bing. 497; Denn v. Roake, 5 B. & Cr. 720.

(t) First ed. p. 630.

(u) Jones v. Curry, 1 Sw. 66. See, however, Standen v. Standen, supra. "Leaseholds, of course, are undistinguishable from other personal estate in this respect, though in some cases they have most inconsiderately been treated as governed by the same principle as devises of freehold estates. See Grant v. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

his death, than the subject of the power (v), or that its exclusion from the will, will leave nothing for the residuary clause to operate upon, or will leave the personal estate inadequate to the payment of pecuniary legacies, still the will does not operate as an appointment under the power (w). And the circumstance that the donee, being a married woman, has no general testamentary capacity (but who, it is to be remembered, may have separate estate, disposable by will), has been held not to constitute a ground for varying the construction" (x). But it must be observed that in all the cases where it was so held it appeared that in fact the married woman, at the time of making her will, had separate estate which would or might pass by the general bequest; and it seems that unless this was proved affirmatively the bequest operated as an appointment (y). Under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a married woman has a general testamentary capacity in respect of her separate property, and consequently the doctrine laid down in Shelford v. Acland has ceased to be of importance (z).

Distinction where the testatrix is a married woman.

A general gift of "all my real and personal estate and effects whatsoever whereof I have power to dispose," or the like, was generally taken not as a mere superfluous mention of the ordinary powers which, as owner, the testator had of disposing of his own property, but as a reference to any power which he might possess of appointing property not strictly his own (a). Most of the cases involving this doctrine relate to special powers, and will be found in a subsequent section of this chapter.

Reference to testator's own property may include property subject to power.

The doctrine was applied strictly. Thus, a codicil professing to be made in exercise of a certain power "and all other powers," but not referring to property over which the testatrix had a general power of appointment, created since the date of her will, was held not to make the property pass under a general appointment contained in the will (b). A general devise of all the lands which the testator had power to dispose of was held not to extend to moneys to arise from the sale of lands, over which moneys the testator had (v) Buckland v. Barton, 2 H. Bl. 136; Langham v. Nenny, 3 Ves. 467; Croft v. Slee, 4 Ves. 60; Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 445. As to the effect of a specific reference to a particular kind of property in a residuary gift, see Webb v. Honnor, supra, p. 804, n. (i).

(w) Andrews v. Emmot, 2 B. C. C. 297; Nannock v. Horton, 7 Ves. 391; Bennett v. Aburrow, 8 Ves. 609.

(x) Lovell v. Knight, 3 Sim. 275; Lempriere v. Valpy, 5 Sim. 108; Evans

v. Evans, 23 Beav. 1.

(y) Shelford v. Acland, 23 Beav. 10 (which was decided on this ground, though the will was since 1837, and was therefore a good appointment under 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 27); Att.-Gen. v. Wilkinson, L. R., 2 Eq. 816.

(z) See Re Herdman's Trusts, 31 L. R. Ir. 87, where the power was special.

(a) Lowe v. Pennington, 10 L. J. Ch. 83.

(b) Jowett v. Board, 16 Sim. 352.

CHAP. XXIII.

merely a power of appointment (c). And a general devise or bequest, expressed to be made in exercise of all powers enabling the testator, did not operate as an execution of a power of revocation and new appointment, if there was other property to which the devise or bequest could apply (d).

In Maddison v. Andrew (e), the testator had made a voluntary settlement of land by which he reserved to himself power to "charge, limit, or appoint" any sums not exceeding 1,000*l.*; he made a will by which he charged all his estate, real and personal, with his debts and legacies: it was held that this was a good exercise of the power.

Reference to part of fund insufficient.

Where a testator had a power of appointment over a fund or property, the fact that he disposed of a specific part of it as his own property did not make the residuary gift in his will operate as an exercise of the power in respect of the remainder (f).

But where a testator declared his intention of disposing of a sum of stock over which he had a power of appointment, and then gave various parts of it, but not the whole, to different people, it was held that the balance was effectively appointed by a bequest of "the residue of my personal estate" (g).

What amounts to an appointment in wills made or republished
since 1837.

(b) Under Wills Act.—The preceding doctrines, however, do not apply to wills made or republished since 1837, the Wills Act having provided (sect. 27) that a general devise of the real estate of the testator, or of the real estate of the testator in any place, or in the occupation of any person mentioned in his will, or otherwise described in a general manner, shall be construed to include any real estate, or any real estate to which such description shall extend (as the case may be) which he may have power to appoint in any manner he may think proper, and shall operate as an execution of such power, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will; and in like manner a bequest of the personal estate of the testator, or any bequest of personal property described in a general manner (h),

(c) Adams v. Austen, 3 Russ. 461.

(d) Pomfret v. Perring, 5 D. M. & G. 775, infra.

(e) 1 Ves. sen. 58.

(f) Hughes v. Turner, 3 My & K. 666, where the facts were in dispute. Compare Elliott v. Elliott, 15 Sim. 321, and Butler v. Gray, L. R., 5 Ch. 26, post, p. 827.

(g) Re Comber's Trust, 14 W. R. 172. If the power had been a special one, a more strict construction would have been applied. See Butler v. Gray, post, p. 827.

(h) "The language of the section is addressed to bequests of a general description, not to bequests of particular property," per Fry, J., Re Greaves's Settlement Trusts, 23 Ch. D. 318. Thus a bequest of "securities for money" will pass a sum of Consols over which the testator has a general power of appointment (Turner v. Turner, 21 L. J. Ch. 843), and a bequest of "all stock, shares, and securities which I possess or to which I am entitled" will pass railway and colonial stocks which the testator is not possessed of or entitled to, shall be construed to include any personal estate, or any personal estate to which such description shall extend (as the case may be), which he may have power to appoint in any manner he may think proper, and shall operate as an execution of such power, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will.

A power is not the less general within the meaning of this section because it is to be executed by will only, and not by deed (i). But a power is not general within the meaning of this section if the instrument creating the power prescribes conditions as to the exercise of the power (not being conditions as to the mode of execution), and in such case a general devise or bequest will not, under sect. 27, be a good execution of the power unless the conditions are complied with (j). Thus, where a settlement gave to the settlor a general power of appointment over a sum of stock to be exercised by will or codicil expressly referring to the power, it was held by the Court of Appeal that a general bequest of his personal estate, not referring to the power, did not operate to pass the stock (k). So a power to appoint in favour of any persons except a specified person or class of persons, is not a general power within sect. 27 (l). But it seems that a power to appoint in favour of any persons except A., B., and C. may become a general power by the death of A., B., and C. before the power is exercised (m). And a power given to a woman by her marriage settlement to appoint to any "person or persons, child or children," is a general power (mm).

What powers are general within s. 27.

A general bequest will operate under sect. 27 as an exercise of a power to appoint a sum charged on land, even where the testator also has a power of appointing the land itself, which he exercises by the same will (n).

Sum charged on land.

but over which he has a general power of appointment (Re Jacob, [1907] 1 Ch. 445). Any words which would operate as a residuary gift (such as, "I constitute A. my residuary legatee") will operate as an execution of a power under this section: Re Spooner's Trust, 2 Sim. N. S. 129.

(i) Hawthorn v. Shedden, 3 Sm. & Gif. 293; Lefevre v. Freeland, 24 Beav. 403; Re Powell's Trusts, 39 L. J. Ch. 188.

(j) Re Phillips, 41 Ch. D. 417; Re Tarrant's Trust, 58 L. J. Ch. 780; Re Davies, [1892] 3 Ch. 63.

(k) Phillips v. Cayley, 43 Ch. D. 222, overruling Re Marsh, 38 Ch. D. 630. But a requirement that the will shall "expressly purport" to exercise the power is sufficiently complied with if the testator bequeaths property over which he has "any disposing power". Re Waterhouse, 98 L. T. 30. So if the donor requires that the will shall "expressly refer to this power": Re Lane, [1908] 2 Ch. 581, following Re Roll, [1908] W. N. 76. See ante, p. 805.

(l) Re Byron's Settlement, [1891] 3 Ch. 474; ante, p. 789, where the question whether powers can be accurately divided into "general" and "special" is referred to.

(m) Ib. The question whether a power was general or restricted also arose in Bristow v. Skirrow, 27 Bea. 585, stated ante, p. 794.

(mm) Cosfeld v. Pollard, 3 Jur. N. S. 1203.

(n) Clifford v. Clifford, 9 Ha. 675. See Farmer v. Bradford, 3 Russ. 354, ante, p. 804.

CHAP. XXIII.

Power to direct sum to be raised.

If a testator has power by will to charge certain real estate with a maximum sum of money (say 10,000*l.*) for such purposes or for the benefit of such persons as he may direct, this power is not exercised by a will containing merely a general or residuary bequest. Such a power is really a double power, namely, a power to create a sum not exceeding 10,000*l.* and a power to appoint it; it "requires a distinct intention and a distinct act to bring the subject into existence before the general power of appointment can operate upon it" (o), and this intention is not implied by sect. 27 (p).

In Re Jones (q), a testator gave his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for conversion, and directed the proceeds to be held upon certain trusts for the benefit of his widow and issue; and he empowered his widow by will to appoint that any sum not exceeding 20,000*l.* should be raised and paid or applied for the benefit of such persons as she should think fit: it was held by Kay, J., that this power was exercised by a general bequest contained in the widow's will. In Re Salvin (qq), Buckley, J., distinguished Re Jones from the case before him on the ground that the effect of the trust for conversion in Re Jones was to create a fund of personal estate, and that the power was simply a power of appointment over part of the fund.

Power of revocation.

A general devise or bequest will not, under sect. 27, operate as an exercise of a power of revocation and new appointment (r), although a general devise or bequest may, it seems, have that operation on the ground of implied intention; for example, in a case where the gift would otherwise be wholly inoperative (s). The general rule applies to the case where the power of revocation is contained in the instrument originally creating it, as well as to the case where the power is reserved by an appointment made in exercise of the original power (t).

The doctrine in question only applies to powers which are strictly powers of revocation (u).

Power to charge money
on land.

In Re Wallinger's Estate (v), a person had power to create a mortgage or charge on certain lands as security for any sum not exceeding 2,000*l.*, for such purposes as he should appoint: it was held that this power was not exercised by a residuary gift.

(o) Per Fitzgibbon, L. J., in Re Wallinger's Estate, [1898] 1 Ir. R., at p. 150.

(p) Re Salvin, [1906] 2 Ch. 459.

(q) 34 Ch. D. 65.

(qq) Supra.

(r) Palmer v. Newell, 20 Bea. 32; Charles v. Burke, 43 Ch. D. 223, n.; Re Brace, [1891] 2 Ch. 671; following the principle laid down in Pomfret v. Per-ring, 5 D. M. & G. 775, post, p. 831.

(s) Ibid.

(t) Re Goulding's Settlement, 48 W. R. 183.

(u) Re Jones, 34 Ch. D. 65, stated supra.

(v) [1898] 1 Ir. R. 139.

Where a testator has a power of appointment over lands which have been sold, and the proceeds are liable to be applied in the purchase of other lands, the question whether the power is exercised by a residuary bequest of personalty seems to depend on two questions. One is, whether any person other than the testator has a right to require the money to be re-invested in land, for if so, the residuary bequest will not operate as an appointment under sect. 27 (w). But if no one other than the testator has that right, the further question arises whether he has shewn an intention of treating the money as personalty; if he has, the money will pass under the bequest (x); if he has not, it will only pass as land—e.g., under a residuary devise (y).

CHAP. XXIII.
Conversion.

Conversely, a devise of all lands which the testator has power to dispose of, or (what is now the same thing) a residuary devise, will not pass moneys to arise from the sale of lands (z).

As to the effect of conversion in adeeming appointments of specific property, see p. 839, infra.

Although it is now settled that a devise may be residuary under sect. 25 of the Wills Act, notwithstanding that it is limited to a particular description of real estate (a), it is clear that a particular residue is not within either sect. 25 (b) or sect. 27. Thus, where by marriage settlement a testatrix had power to appoint estates A. and B., and she made her will reciting the power and giving A. to one person, and "all other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement not hereinbefore disposed of" to another; she then by codicil revoked the appointment of estate A. and appointed it on charitable trusts, which were void: it was held that estate A. did not pass by the appointment of "all other hereditaments," &c., for that this was not a general or residuary gift, but clearly specific (c). And a gift by a married woman of the "residue of her separate property" was held not to include a lapsed share of a fund over which she had a general power (d).

Particular residue is not within s. 27.

(w) Gillies v. Longlands, 4 De G. & S. 372; Re Greaves's Settlement, 23 Ch. D. 313.

(x) Gale v. Gale, 21 Bea. 349; Blake v. Blake, 15 Ch. D. 481. In Chandler v. Pocock, 15 Ch. D. 491, 16 Ch. D. 648, the testatrix obtained a transfer of the proceeds of sale from the trustees to herself: Re Harman, [1894] 3 Ch. 607.

(y) Re Duke of Cleveland's S. E., [1893] 3 Ch. 244. In that case the further question arose whether the money was to be treated as land in Staffordshire, from the sale of which it arose: the C. A. held that as it might be invested in land situate anywhere in England, it did not pass under a devise of land in Staffordshire. See Basset v. St. Levan, 43 W. R. 165.

(z) Adams v. Austen, 3 Russ. 461.

(a) Mason v. Ogden, [1903] A. C. 1. See Chap. XXV.

(b) See Springett v. Jennings, post, p. 951.

(c) Re Brown's Trusts, 1 K. & J. 522.

(d) Wilkinson v. Schneider, L. R., 9 Eq. 423, 429. See Freme v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. 511, 512.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 Vict. c. 26,
s. 27, applies to wills of married women.

Pecuniary legacies are appointments within s. 27,
and directions
to pay debts.

Operation
of s. 27.

The applicability of this section to the construction of the wills of married women has been disputed, but without success. Their testamentary capacity is not enlarged by the statute, but their wills, when made, have the benefit of the more liberal rules of interpretation laid down by it (e).

General pecuniary legacies are "bequests of personal property described in a general manner," and operate under this section as appointments, so far as the subject of the power is required in aid of the testator's own estate for payment of the legacies (f). To the same extent a direction to pay the testator's debts will operate as an appointment (g). And although in the cases where these points were decided executors had also been appointed, that circumstance does not appear to be essential (h). "It seems not unreasonable to hold that a testator having a general power, and directing a certain application of his property, must be taken in all cases to exercise the power to the extent to which the direction is effectual" (i). But "it has not yet been decided that an appointment of an executor without more would make the fund assets. And so to hold would appear to give a very unnatural construction to the section" (j).

Where a power of appointment is exercised by a general bequest by virtue of sect. 27, the property appointed is included in and passes by the bequest according to the terms of the will, and not as if a separate execution of the power were read into the will; the will operates, in fact, as if the testator had added to the bequest: "in thus disposing of my personal estate I include any personal estate over which I have a general power of appointment." If, therefore, the testator charges his debts and legacies on his real estate, in aid of his personal estate, and his own personal estate is insufficient for payment of his debts and legacies, the fund over which he has a power of appointment is deemed to form part of his personal estate, and the residuary legatees (to whom the fund

(e) Bernard v. Minshull, Johns. 276; Thomas v. Jones, 2 J. & H. 475, 1 D. J. & S. 63; Noble v. Willock, L. R., 8 Ch. 778, 7 H. L. 580; Re Ludlam, 63 L. T. 330.

(f) Hawthorn v. Shedden, 3 Sm. & Gif. 293; Widday v. Barnett, L. R., 6 Eq. 193; Re Wilkinson, L. R., 8 Eq. 487, 4 Ch. 587; notwithstanding Hurlstone v. Ashton, 11 Jur. N. S. 725. See Re Ludlam, 63 L. T. 330, where a married woman, who had a general power of appointment over a reversionary fund, but no separate estate, bequeathed to A. a legacy of 400*l.*: it was held that it was not payable until the fund fell into possession. As to Shelford v. Acland, 23 Bea. 10, see ante, p. 807, note (y).

(g) Att.-Gen. v. Brackenbury, 1 H. & C. 782; Laing v. Cowan, 24 Beav. 112.

(h) Per Wickens, V.-C., Re Davies' Trusts, L. R., 13 Eq. 166.

(i) Ibid.

(j) Ibid. Stuart, V.-C., thought otherwise, 3 Sm. & Gif. 304.

goes under sect. 27) are not entitled to throw the debts and legacies on the real estate in exoneration of the fund (k). But this result of sect. 27 does not follow if the testator has no property of his own; in such a case the dispositions of his will are read as being express exercises of the power of appointment (kk).

By the combined operation of sects. 24 and 27 of the Wills Act, where a will contains a general devise or bequest, a general power of appointment created after the date of the will, but in the testator's lifetime, will, unless a contrary intention appears, be executed by the will, if the will would have operated to execute the power had it been in existence at the date of the will (l).

Powers created after date of will.

It is hardly necessary to say that if A. by will gives B. a general power of appointment over property, and B. predeceases A., having made a will containing a residuary gift, this does not operate as an exercise of the power (ll). The power lapses.

Where donee predeceases donor.

The effect of sect. 27 is to reverse the old rule, and to throw on those who deny that a general devise or bequest executes a general power, the burden of proving by what appears on the face of the will the testator's intention that it shall not do so (m). This intention must, it seems, be clearly expressed. Even if the testator gives his residue to A. for life with remainders over, this will operate as an exercise of a power which is only given to the testator in the event of his surviving A. (n).

How a contrary intention may appear.

(k) Re Hariley, [1900] 1 Ch. 152.

(kk) Re Ludlam, 63 L. T. 330.

(l) Sugd. R. P. Stat. 379; and see Carte v. Carte, 3 Atk. 174; Stillman v. Weedon, 16 Sim. 26; Cosfield v. Pollard, 3 Jur. N. S. 1203; Patch v. Shore, 2 Dr. & Sm. 589; Hodsdon v. Dancer, 16 W. R. 1101; Lake v. Currie, 2 D. M. & G. 536; Thomas v. Jones, 2 J. & H. 475, 1 D. J. & S. 63; Meredyth v. Meredyth, Ir. R., 5 Eq., 565; Boyes v. Cook, 14 Ch. D. 53; Re Hernandez, 27 Ch. D. 284; Airey v. Bower, 12 A. C. 263. The power in Stillman v. Weedon seems to have been a special power, and the actual decision was, therefore, erroneous: see Re Hayes, [1900] 2 Ch. 332. As to Re Old's Trusts, 54 L. T. 677, see Farwell, 224. The better opinion is that sect. 24 does not apply to any powers of appointment except those coming within sect. 27; see per Stirling J. in Re Wells' Trusts, 42 Ch. D. 656, and post, p. 839.

(ll) Jones v. Southall, 32 Bea. 31; post, p. 840. It is suggested in Farwell on Powers, 226, that if A. by will gives his son B. a power of appointment, and B. predeceases him, having made a will containing a residuary gift, this operates after A.'s death as an exercise of the power, under sect. 33 of the Wills Act; but sect. 33 only applies where "real or personal estate" is "devised or bequeathed" to the testator's child, and it is submitted that giving a power of appointment is not a devise or bequest within the meaning of the section; see Holyland v. Lewin, 26 Ch. D. 266.

(m) Walker v. Banks, 1 Jur. N. S. 606. But a specific exercise of a power existing at the date of the will is not converted by sect. 24 into an exercise of a new power substituted for the old power after the date of the will: Thompson v. Simpson, 50 L. J. Ch. 461. The decision seems to be questioned in Farwell on Powers, 225, but it is submitted that it is correct; the will contained no residuary gift.

(n) Thomas v. Jones, 2 J. & H. 475, 1 D. J. & S. 63.

CHAP. XXIII.

The fact that an appointment has been actually made, will not shew an intention to exclude the appointed property from a general residuary gift, where the appointment fails by lapse (o), or through uncertainty (p), or otherwise (q). And where the property was over-ridden by a power to sell and re-invest to the same uses, and, after the execution of the will, the property was sold accordingly: it was held that the express appointment was adeemed, but that the substituted property passed by the residuary devise in the will (r). The effect of the residuary gift upon the void or imperfect particular appointment is analogous to its effect upon a void or imperfect particular bequest; and the suggestion of a learned Judge (s), that the gift of a partial interest (as a life estate) in the subject of a power is so inconsistent with an appointment of the entire interest to the same person as to shew an intention to exclude it from a residuary request to that person, would probably not be followed, although founded on common sense (ss).

Moss v. Harter.

Effect where appointment would defeat testator's own settlement.

In Moss v. Harter (t), where by voluntary settlement personalty was settled as the settlor should appoint generally, and in default on himself for life, and after on several named persons. The settlor then under his power executed a deed appointing part of the fund; and afterwards made a will by which he bequeathed his residue "not otherwise effectually disposed of." It was held by Stuart, V.-C., that this bequest did not include the unappointed portion of the settled fund, on the ground that the whole fund was in fact "effectually disposed of" by the partial appointment, and, so far as that did not extend, by the limitation in default contained in the settlement. It was argued strongly against this construction that the words "not otherwise effectually disposed of" must be read "not otherwise by the will effectually disposed of," but the (o) Re Spooner's Trust, 2 Sim. N. S. 129; Bush v. Cowan, 32 Bea. 228 (personalty). See as to realty, Freme v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. 499, 512. The reasoning of Jessel, M.R., on this point does not appear to be affected by the decision of the C. A. in Holyland v. Lewin, 26 Ch. D. 266.

(p) Bernard v. Minshull, Johns. 276. See also Hickson v. Wolfe, 9 Ir. Ch. Rep. 144.

(q) In Re Elen (68 L. T. 816) the appointment was contingent, and failed.

(r) Gale v. Gale, 21 Beav. 349; Re Dowsett, [1901] 1 Ch. 398, post.

(s) Wood, V.-C., Scriven v. Sandom, 2 J. & H. 745. See Hopewell v. Ackland, Scutt v. Alberry, Roe v. Gilbert, Day v. Daveron (all stated in next chapter), where remainders in fee were held to pass by general residuary devises to the same persons to whom life estates in the same property were specifically devised in a former part of the will.

(ss) See Bush v. Cowan, 32 Bea. 228, where the testator gave his residuary legatee the arrears of income of the settled fund.

(t) 2 Sm. & Gif. 458.

V.-C. thought that this would be to violate the express language of the will. He added that it was probably the intention of the legislature that sect. 27 should apply only to cases like Cox v. Chamberlain (u), where the power was in such ample terms as to amount to absolute property. The terms of this section, however, are certainly of more extensive import.

With reference to this decision, Lord St. Leonards says (v), “ The case is not without difficulty ; but where the property is, as in this case, settled by the testator himself upon others, in default of any appointment by him under his power, it would seem to require some indication of an intention by him to defeat his settlement in order to hold a general gift in his will, which can be satisfied by other property, to be an execution of his power.” But this observation was disapproved of by the Court of Appeal in Re Clark’s Estate (w), where it was held that the will would execute the power, whether the property was settled by the testator himself or by another person. In that case Cotton, L.J., said : “ With respect to the extract that has been read from Lord St. Leonards’ Treatise on Powers, I do not quite understand whether it is a statement of his own opinion, or merely a comment on the effect of Moss v. Harter. But if it is to be taken as an expression of his opinion that, in the case of a power of appointment in a settlement created by the testator himself, an indication of his intention to defeat his settlement must be shown, that appears to me to contradict the words of the statute, and I should hesitate to act, even upon Lord St. Leonards’ authority, against the expressed intention of the Legislature.” And James, L.J., expressed himself to the like effect. And in Boyes v. Cook (x), it was held by the Court of Appeal that a power was duly exercised by will, though the settlement creating the power was made after the will, for that only the will could be looked at to shew a contrary intention.

Remarks on Moss v.
Harter.

This decision was approved by the House of Lords in Airey v. Bower (y). There a testatrix who had a general power of appointment by deed or will over the A. property, by her will in 1854 devised and bequeathed the residue of her estate to X. By deed poll in 1855 she appointed the A. property upon such trusts as she by deed or by her last will should “ from time to time or at any time thereafter appoint,” and in default of appointment upon trust for Airey v.

Bower.

(u) 4 Ves. 631.

(v) Sug. Pow. p. 305, 8th edition.

(w) 14 Ch. D. 422.

(x) 14 Ch. D. 53, disapproving Re

Ruding’s Settlement, L. R., 14 Eq. 266.
See also Re Hernando, 27 Ch. D. 284 ;

Re Marsh, 38 Ch. D. 630.

(y) 12 A. C. 263.

CHAP. XXIII.

Y. She died in 1857. It was held that the will operated as an exercise of the power reserved by the deed poll of 1855, and that the property went to X.

Confirmation of settlement.

Where a testator has a general power of appointment under a settlement, followed by a limitation over in default of appointment, a residuary devise or bequest contained in his will operates as an exercise of the power, even if the will contains an express confirmation of the settlement; the confirmation is considered to apply to those parts of the settlement which the testator has no power to disturb (z).

Whether an express confirmation of the settlement would shew a "contrary intention" within sect. 27 in a case where the testator's power covered the whole subject matter of the settlement, as in Moss v. Harter (supra), seems doubtful.

"Last will."

In Pettinger v. Ambler (a), a testator made a will containing a residuary devise; then he made a voluntary settlement of certain lands, under which he had a general power of appointment by his "last will"; then he made another will purporting to be his "last will," by which, in pursuance of the power, he charged the lands with an annuity: it was held by Romilly, M.R., that the residuary devise in the first will did not operate as an execution of the power. So far as the decision turned on the question of what was the testator's "last will," the M.R.'s reasoning seems somewhat artificial.

Sect. 27
often defeats testator's
intention.

Where a testator makes a will containing a residuary gift, and afterwards settles part of his property, subject to an overriding general power of appointment reserved to himself, it is obvious that the statutory rule above stated probably defeats his intention (b).

Uses declared
by reference.

A residuary devise operates as an execution of a general power of appointing land, although it has been conveyed to uses similar to those of an existing settlement, and the testatrix has excepted the lands comprised in that settlement from the residuary devise (c).

How a contrary intention may be shewn.

But a "contrary intention" within the meaning of sect. 27 may

(z) Lake v. Currie, 2 D. M. & G. 536; Hutchins v. Osborne, 4 K. & J. 252, 3 De G. & J. 142; and see Atherton v. Langford, 25 Beav. 5, where an expressed intention that lands over which the testator had a power should not be included in his will, but should go according to the settlement, was held not to prevent a share in the lands vested in the testator in default of the exercise by him of the power from passing under the residuary gift in his will. In Re Bringlee, 26 L. T. 58 (stated post, p. 860, n. (s)), the point did not arise, as the case turned on the meaning of "residue" in an express appointment.

(a) L. R., 1 Eq. 510.

(b) See Re Ruding's Settlement, L. R., 14 Eq. 266 (overruled by Boyes v. Cook, supra), and Airey v. Bower, supra.

(c) Hughes v. Jones, 11 W. R. 898.

appear by implication. In Thompson v. Simpson (d), where there were two settlements, one made before, and the other after, the will, it was held that a reference in the will to the power created by the first settlement shewed that the testatrix did not mean the will to operate as an execution of the power contained in the second settlement.

Where the donee of a general testamentary power is domiciled abroad, sect. 27 does not make his will operate as an execution of the power, unless he shews on the face of the will an intention that it shall take effect according to English law (e).

Effect of foreign domicil.

(3) How far Exercise of General Power makes Property part of Testator's Estate.—Where a general power is effectually exercised by will, the property, whether real or personal, becomes liable for the testator's debts (f), so far as his own property is insufficient to satisfy them (g). This liability is created by law, and the donee of the power cannot give any individual creditor a charge on the property, or priority over the other creditors, by making an appointment with that object, even if he has entered into a covenant to do so (h).

Liability to debts.

The general rule above stated does not apply to property abroad, for the administration of such property is governed by the law of its locality. Consequently, if an Englishman exercises a general power of appointment over a trust fund subject to foreign law, he does not thereby make it assets for the payment of his debts (i).

Foreign
property.

A direction by a testator that his debts shall be paid, makes property over which he has a general power of appointment assets for the purpose, if his own property is insufficient, but it seems that the mere appointment of an executor will not have that effect (j).

If a person who has exercised a testamentary power is a bankrupt at the time of his death, the appointed property does not pass to the (d) 50 L. J. Ch. 461.

(e) Re Price, [1900] 1 Ch. 442; Re D'Este's Settlement Trusts, [1903] 1 Ch. 898, ante, p. 801.

(f) Holmes v. Coghill, 12 Ves. 206; Fleming v. Buchanan, 3 D. M. & G. 976; Williams v. Lomas, 16 Bea. 1; Re Hartley, 69 L. J. Ch. 79. See Re Newnham's Estate, [1881] Week. N. 69, where it was held that the creditors had no claim against the trustees for a breach of trust. As to the rule where the testator becomes bankrupt, see Jenney v. Andrews, 6 Madd. 264; Re Guedalla, [1905] 2 Ch. 331.

(g) See Chap. LIV.

(h) Re Lawley, [1902] 2 Ch. 799: affirmed on appeal sub nom. Beyfus v. Lawley, [1903] A. C. 411.

(i) Re Bald, 66 L. J. Ch. 524.

(j) Laing v. Cowan, 24 Bea. 112; Re Davies, L. R., 13 Eq. 163; Re Thurston, 32 Ch. D. 508.

CHAP. XXIII. trustee in bankruptcy, but to the testator's executors, and is only liable to the payment of debts incurred by the testator since the bankruptcy (k).

Married woman.

Before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the question whether an appointment by a married woman made the property liable for her general engagements was a matter of doubt. Fine distinctions were drawn, or attempted to be drawn, depending on whether the married woman had a power of appointment by deed or will, or by will only, whether she had a separate life estate, and whether the property was limited to her or her representatives in default of appointment (l).

What were "debts."

The "general engagements" of a married woman under the old law were not "debts" in the proper sense of the word. However, in a recent case (m), where a married woman who had a general testamentary power of appointment over an estate, by her will directed her executors to pay her just debts, and appointed the estate in express exercise of the power, it was held by Stirling, J., that certain sums owing by her at her death were a charge upon the appointed property, apparently on the ground that in the administration action these sums had been found by the chief clerk's certificate to be debts of the testatrix.

Married W. P. Act, 1882.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, enacts (sect. 4) that "the execution of a general power by will by a married woman shall have the effect of making the property appointed liable for her debts and other liabilities in the same manner as her separate estate is made liable under this Act."

As to contracts made during coverture, the section only applies to those made after 1882 (n), but it applies to contracts made by the testatrix while a feme sole, whether before 1883 or not (o).

"Debts and other liabilities" means engagements entered into by a married woman during coverture, for which her separate estate (if she had any) would be liable. Unless contracted since (k) Jenney v. Andrews, 6 Madd. 264; Re Guedalla, [1905] 2 Ch. 331.

(l) Vaughan v. Vanderstegen, 2 Drew. 165, 363; Hobday v. Peters, 28 Bea. 354; Blatchford v. Woolley, 2 Dr. & Sm. 204; Johnson v. Gallagher, 3 D. F. & J. 494; Shattock v. Shattock, L. R., 2 Eq. 182; London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lemprière, L. R., 4 P. C. 572; Re Harvey's Estate, 13 Ch. D. 216; Hodges v. Hodges, 20 Ch. D. 749;

Mayd v. Field, 3 Ch. D. 587; Pike v. Fitzgibbon, 17 Ch. D. 454 (at p. 466). See the result of the balance of the authorities stated in Farwell on Powers, 262-3.

(m) Re De Burgh Lawson, 41 Ch. D. 568.

(n) Re Roper, 39 Ch. D. 482.

(o) Re Parkin, [1892] 3 Ch. 510. See Re Hughes, [1898] 1 Ch. 529.

December 5, 1893 (p), it is necessary that she should have had separate estate at the time she contracted them (q). CHAP. XXIII.

An appointment is operative under this section, although it eventually fails to take effect in favour of the appointee by reason of events happening after the testatrix's death (r).

Where a testator exercises a general power of appointment over personal estate, his executor, or his administrator with the will annexed, is the proper person to administer and give a discharge for the appointed fund (s), and the same result follows even if the testator appoints the fund to special trustees and directs them to distribute it (t). The rule applies to married women dying before the M. W. P. Act, 1882, came into operation (u). Whether the property passes to "the executor as such" within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1894, is a question which has been much discussed with reference to the incidence of estate duty. There is a division of judicial opinion on the subject (v), but according to the latest decision (vv) the property does so pass (w). Personalty appointed under general power vests in personal representative of appointor.

In the case of a person entitled to a general power of appointment over land dying since 1897, having by will exercised the power, the land vests in his personal representative in accordance with the provisions of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 1. It has been suggested that the effect of this enactment is that the land becomes legal assets for payment of debts (x). Land Transfer Act, 1897.

If an appointment under a general power fails to take effect (z), the question arises whether the property, or the part of it ineffectually appointed, devolves as in default of appointment, or as part of the testator's estate. There is no difference in this respect between Failure of appointment

(p) The date of the passing of the Married W. P. Act, 1893.

(q) Re Fieldwick, [1909] 1 Ch. 1, overruling Re Ann, [1894] 1 Ch. 549. See Re Hughes, [1898] 1 Ch. 529.

(r) Re Hodgson, [1899] 1 Ch. 666.

(s) Re Philbrick's Trusts, 13 W. R. 570; Hayes v. Oatley, L. R., 14 Eq. 1; Re Hoskin's Trusts, 5 Ch. 229, 6 Ch. D. 281; Re Davies' Trusts, L. R., 13 Eq. 163; Re Peacock's Settlement, [1902] 1 Ch. 552.

(t) Re Peacock's Settlement, supra.

(u) Ibid.

(v) Re Treasure, [1900] 2 Ch. 648; Re Moore, [1901] 1 Ch. 691; Re Maddock, [1901] 2 Ch. 372; Re Power, [1901]

2 Ch. 659; Re Dixon, [1902] 1 Ch. 248; Re Fearnside, [1903] 1 Ch. 250; Re Dodson, [1907] 1 Ch. 284; Re Orlebar, [1908] 1 Ch. 136; Re Hadley, [1909] 1 Ch. 22 (judgment of Parker, J.).

(vv) That of the Court of Appeal in Re Hadley, [1909] 1 Ch. 22.

(w) This argument does not apply to real estate, because at the time the Finance Act, 1894, was passed real estate did not vest in the executor. See ante, p. 64, and Chap. LIII.

(x) Brickdale and Sheldon v. L. T. Acts, 278; Carson v. R. P. Stat., 402. See post, Chap. LIV.

(z) As to the lapse of appointments, see infra, p. 843.

CHAP. XXIII.

real and personal estate (a). The question "is one of intention, namely, whether the donee of the power meant by the exercise of it to take the property dealt with out of the instrument creating the power for all purposes, or only for the limited purpose of giving effect to the particular disposition expressed" (b). The cases are not quite consistent. The principal rule is that if the testator deals with the whole of the settled property as his own (e.g., by giving it to his executors (c) or trustees (d)), or if, without giving it to executors or trustees, he deals with the settled property and his own property as one mass (e), then he shews an intention to take the settled property out of the settlement for all purposes, so that if any of the dispositions of his will fail, the settled property, or so much of it as is undisposed of, devolves as part of his estate, and does not go to the persons entitled in default of appointment.

If, however, the testator merely shews an intention to appoint the settled property for a limited purpose, then any part of it which is undisposed of by the failure of the residuary gift goes as in default of appointment (f). Thus, in Laing v. Cowan (g), where the donee of a general power directed her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid, but did not dispose of her residuary estate, or expressly exercise the power, it was held by Romilly, M.R., that the balance of the settled fund, after payment of debts, &c., went as in default of appointment (h). In Re Davies' Trusts (i), the donee of a general power bequeathed the residue of her personal estate, without referring to the power, to four persons equally, two of whom died in her lifetime: Wickens, V.-C., held that the lapsed shares of the settled property went as in default of appointment, apparently on the ground that the appointment being to the legatees direct, and

(a) Re Van Hagan, 16 Ch. D. 18.

(b) Per Chatterton, V.-C., in Re De Lusi's Trusts, 3 L. R. Ir. 232, cited with approval in Re Pinède's Settlement, Willoughby Osborne v. Holyoake, and Coxen v. Rowland, infra.

(c) Chamberlain v. Hutchinson, 22 Bea. 444; Brickenden v. Williams, L. R., 7 Eq. 310. Compare Re Scott, [1891] 1 Ch. 298. Where there is an appointment to trustees, the testator's representatives take under the doctrine of resulting trust: ibid.

(d) Lefevre v. Freeland, 24 Bea. 403; Wilkinson v. Schneider, L. R., 9 Eq. 423; Re Van Hagan, 16 Ch. D. 18.

(e) Re Pinède's Settlement, 12 Ch. D. 667; Re Ickeringill's Estate, 17 Ch. D. 151; Willoughby Osborne v. Holyoake, 22 Ch. D. 238; Re Horton, 51 L. T. 420; Coxen v. Rowland, [1894] 1 Ch. 406; Re Marten, [1902] 1 Ch. 314; Re Keown's Estate, Ir. R., 1 Eq. 372. The reasoning in Hoare v. Osborne, 33 L. J. Ch. 586, is not satisfactory, and the decision may be considered overruled.

(f) See Easum v. Appleford, 5 My. & C. 56, where the will was made before 1837.

(g) 24 Bea. 112.

(h) The decision in Bristow v. Skirrow, L. R., 10 Eq. 1, by the same judge, turned chiefly on the language of the instrument creating the power.

(i) L. R., 13 Eq. 163. According to Romer, L.J., the decision turned on the fact that the testatrix did not expressly purport to execute the power: see Re Marten, [1902] 1 Ch. at p. 324.

not to executors or trustees, shewed that the testatrix did not intend to make the settled property her own for all purposes. If the decision in Re Ickeringill's Estate (j) is right, that in Re Davies' Trusts seems to be wrong.

It seems that if the donee of a power makes a will which deals only with the property which is the subject of the power, and appoints an executor, this alone is not sufficient to make the property his own for all purposes (k).

The general rules above stated apply to married women (l).

If the donee of a general power expressly exercises the power by his will, and deals with his own property separately, then, if the residuary gift fails, the settled property will, as a rule, go as in default of appointment (m).

Separate dispositions.

Re Creed (n) was a clear case. There the testatrix exercised a general power by giving 200*l.* to A., and directing that the residue of the fund should go as in default of appointment; she also bequeathed legacies; one of the persons entitled in default of appointment predeceased her: it was held that she had shewn a clear intention not to make the fund her own; consequently the lapsed share devolved as in default of appointment, and the legacies were payable only out of the testatrix's own property.

VI.—Special Powers.—(1) Who are Objects of a Special Power. Uncertainty. —The doctrine of uncertainty applies to powers. Thus a power to dispose of the testator's property "in accordance with my wishes verbally expressed," is void for uncertainty (o). But although a simple gift to "A. or B." is, it would seem, void for uncertainty (p), a bequest to A. or B. at the discretion of C. is good, for he may divide it between them (q).

The cases where a gift which is in terms absolute has been cut down to an estate for life, with a power of appointment among children or the like, are referred to elsewhere (r).

Absolute gift cut down.

Where a power is apparently intended to be limited to certain classes of persons, but some of the terms used are too vague to be

Rejection of words.

(j) Supra, p. 820.

(k) Re Thurston, 32 Ch. D. 508.

(l) See the cases cited supra, p. 818.

(m) Re De Lusi's Trusts, 3 L. Rep. Ir. 232; Re Boyd, [1897] 2 Ch. 232. In both these cases the learned judges professed to follow Re Davies' Trusts. In that case, however, the testatrix did not deal with her own property and the settled property separately. See also Blight v. Hartnoll, 23 Ch. D. 218, where the testatrix dealt with the settled property separately, in such a way as to make it part of her estate.

(n) [1905] W. N. 94.

(o) Re Helley, [1902] 2 Ch. 866, ante, p. 474.

(p) See Chap. XVI.; ante, p. 475 n. (n).

(q) Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124; and other cases cited in Chap. XIV.

(r) Chaps. XXXIII, XXXIV.

CHAP. XXIII.

given effect to, it seems that they may be rejected. Thus a power to appoint to "friends and relations," or "relations or friends," has been construed to be a power to appoint to relations only (s).

Illegitimate persons, whether objects of power.

As a general rule, the objects of a power are determined by the same rules of construction as those which apply to direct gifts in similar terms. Accordingly, in a power to appoint to "children," "sons," "issue," "relations," "next of kin," or the like, the words primâ facie mean legitimate children, sons, issue, &c. (t), unless it appears from the whole will that the testator intended the power to extend to illegitimate children, sons, issue, &c. (u).

"Issue."

On the same principle, "issue," in a power of appointment, includes descendants of every degree (v), unless there is something to restrict its meaning (w). But "issue" may be used in the sense of "children" (ww). Sometimes a testator uses the terms "issue" and "children" interchangeably; in such cases "issue" may be construed as meaning "children," or "children" may be construed as meaning "issue" (x), whichever may best give effect to the testator's intention (y).

"Descendants."

A power to appoint to the "descendants" of A. does not authorize a substitutional appointment to the personal representatives of a deceased descendant, even if those representatives should happen themselves to be descendants of A. (z).

"Children."

A power to appoint to "children" does not authorize an appointment to grandchildren (a), or to the representatives of a deceased child (b).

"Family."

The primary meaning of the word "family," in a bequest of personal estate, as explained elsewhere (c), is "children," but the context may shew that the testator used it in another sense. Thus,

(s) Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. sen. 87; Re Caplin's Will, 2 Dr. & Sm. 527.

(t) Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 V. & B. 422; Re Standley's Estate, L. R., 5 Eq. 303.

(u) Re Deakin, [1894] 3 Ch. 565. In Humble v. Bowman, 47 L. J. Ch. 62, where there was a power to appoint to the testator's family, Hall, V.-C., said: "No doubt illegitimate children are not included under a gift to children, but . . . under the description 'family' in a power of appointment a natural child may be included."

(v) Hockley v. Mawbey, 1 Ves. jun. 143; Farwell on Powers, 494, citing Donoghue v. Brooke, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 489; Re Howard, 7 Ir. Ch. R. 344. See Re Warren's Trusts, 26 Ch. D. 208 (deed).

(w) Leigh v. Norbury, 13 Ves. 344.

(ww) Chap. XLI. See Swift v. Swift, 8 Sim. 168 (marriage articles).

(x) As in Harley v. Miford, 21 Bea. 280. See Daltzell v. Welch, 2 Sim. 319.

(y) As to the construction of a power to appoint land to issue in strict settlement, see Bell v. Bell, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 517.

(z) Re Susanni's Trusts, 47 L. J. Ch. 65.

(a) Kennerley v. Kennerley, 10 Hare. 160; Reid v. Reid, 25 Bea. 469, and other cases cited in Sugden on Powers, 664.

(b) Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. sen. 58.

(c) Chap. XLI.; Re Hutchinson and Tennant, 8 Ch. D. 540; Sinnott v. Walsh, 5 L. R. Ir. 27, 3 L. R. Ir. 12.

a power to appoint for the benefit of a married woman and her family may authorize an appointment in favour of her husband (d). Again, "family" may mean "relations" (e) or "descendants" (f), and in Snow v. Teed (g), and Lambe v. Eames (h), James, L.J., seemed to think it a word of very wide meaning; in the former case he thought it included any relative, and in Lambe v. Eames, where the testator gave all his property to his widow, "to be at her disposal in any way she may think best for the benefit of herself and family," a gift by her to an illegitimate son of one of the testator's sons was upheld.

In Sinnott v. Walsh (i), a testator gave freeholds to his two sons, and directed that if either of them died without issue, his part of the property should fall "to whatever existing member of my family he may be disposed to will it to." It was held that "existing" meant living at the date of the will creating the power, and that the power authorized an appointment to one or more persons.

In the case of powers to appoint to the relations (j) of a certain person, there is a distinction between powers of distribution and powers of selection in respect of construction. If the power is non-exclusive, or a power of distribution merely, the donee is confined to the statutory next of kin (k), while if the power is expressly made exclusive, or a power of selection, the donee can appoint to any relations, although not within the degree of next of kin (l). And this rule has not been altered by the Powers of Appointment Act, 1874 (m).

A power to appoint to "friends and relations," or to "relations or friends," seems to be equivalent to a power to appoint to "relations" (n). It is not clear what construction would be placed on a power to appoint to "friends" (o).

(d) MacLeroth v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 159.

(e) Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 319, and other cases cited in Chap. XLI., and Sinnott v. Walsh, supra.

(f) Williams v. Williams, 1 Sim. N. S. 358.

(g) L. R., 9 Eq. 622. The power was given to a single woman in the event of her not marrying.

(h) L. R., 6 Ch. 597. The L.JJ. were disposed to think that the widow took absolutely (see Chap. XXIV.), and if so it was not necessary to decide whether the illegitimate child was an object of the power; but the point was expressly decided by Hall, V.-C., in Humble v. Bowman. 47 L. J. Ch. 62.

(i) 5 L. R. Ir. 27.

(j) As to powers to appoint to "relations," see the remarks of Chitty, J., in Wilson v. Duguid, 24 Ch. D. 251.

(k) Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Mer. 689; Re Patterson, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 324.

(l) Grant v. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292; Harding v. Glyn, 1 Atk. 469; Lawlor v. Henderson, 10 Ir. R. Eq. 150; Salisbury v. Denton, 3 K. & J. 529.

(m) Re Deakin, [1894] 3 Ch. 565.

(n) Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. sen. 87, 110; Re Caplin's Will, 2 Dr. & S. 527.

(o) See Coogan v. Hayden, 4 L. R. Ir. 585, referred to in Chap. XLI.

"Existing member of my family."

"Relations."

"Friends."

CHAP. XXIII.

Class of objects may be impliedly restricted.

Construction of appointments.

Whether power exclusive or non-exclusive.

Acts of 1830
and 1874.

Perpetuities
and remoteness.

Joint tenancy.

In Woodcock v. Renneck (oo), property was given upon trust for A. and B. and the survivor for their lives, and after their decease for their children, in such shares as the survivor of A. and B. should by will appoint: it was held that the only objects of the power were children living at the death of the survivor of A. and B.

The construction of appointments under special powers is considered in a subsequent part of this chapter (p).

The question whether a power is exclusive or non-exclusive is one of intention, to be collected from the instrument creating the power: "no general rule can be laid down, except, perhaps, that the words 'all and every' are mandatory, and make it necessary that each object should have a share (5 Ves. 857), and that 'such' authorises exclusion, unless a contrary intention appear" (q). In Re Veale's Trusts (r), a testatrix bequeathed a fund to her daughter for life, and after her death "to and amongst my other children or their issue in such parts, shares, proportions, manner, and form as my said daughter shall appoint": this was held to be an exclusive power.

Since the Illusory Appointments Act, 1830 (s), and the Powers of Appointment Act, 1874, the distinction between exclusive and non-exclusive powers has lost much of its importance, except in the case of powers to appoint to relations (t). Every power of appointment, unless so expressed as to forbid the exclusion of one or more objects, authorizes an exclusive appointment. It seems clear that each statute is retrospective; that is to say, it applies to powers existing at the time of, but executed after, the passing of the act (u).

The application of the Rule against Perpetuities and (in the case of real estate) the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell, to appointments under special powers, is considered elsewhere (v).

Where a person has power to appoint among several objects, in (oo) 4 Bea. 190; 1 Ph. 72. See L. R., 2 Eq. at p. 158, and post, Chap. XLII.

(p) Post, p. 856.

(q) Farwell, 362; approved by Jessel, M.R., in Re Veale's Trusts, 4 Ch. D. 61 (aff. 5 Ch. D. 622); and by Hall, V.-C., in Chamberlain v. Napier, 15 Ch. D. 634. See also Re Deakin, supra, and Re Patterson, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 324.

(r) Supra; and see Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124; Penny v. Turner, 2 Ph. 493; and the cases of Garthwaite v. Robinson, 2 Sim. 43, and Stokworthy v. Sanicroft, 10 Jur. N. S. 762, commented on by Jessel, M.R., in Re Veale's Trusts.

(s) The following cases have been decided on appointments made since this act: Bulleet v. Plummer, L. R., 6 Ch. 160; Minchin v. Minchin, 3 Ir. Ch. R. 167; Re Capon, 10 Ch. D. 484; Re Stone, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 621; Re Crofton's Trusts, 7 L. R. Ir. 279. The result of these decisions is that if a fund is appointed to all the objects of a non-exclusive power, a gift over, in the event of any of them dying under age, or the like, to the others, is good, independently of the act of 1874.

(t) Ante, p. 823.

(u) Farwell, 372, 374, citing Reid v. Reid, 25 Bea. 469. See Moynan v. Moynan, 1 L. R. Ir. 382; Re Walsh, 1 L. R. Ir. 320.

(v) Chap. X.

such shares and proportions as he thinks proper, he can, if he wishes to do so, appoint part of the fund to two or more of the objects as joint tenants (w).

CHAP. XXIII.

As a general rule, a power to appoint "in such manner and form" as the appointor thinks fit, authorizes an appointment to trustees upon trust for the objects of the power (x). Where one of the objects is a married woman, such a power, even under the old law, authorized an appointment to trustees for her separate use (y). Such a power also authorizes an appointment of the property to trustees upon trust to sell and hold the proceeds in trust for the objects of the power (z). In Dowglass v. Waddell (zz) a testator had power to appoint land to his sons, charged in favour of his female issue; by his will he directed the property to be sold and the proceeds divided among his sons and daughters: it was held that this was a good exercise of the power.

Appointment to trustees;

—upon trust for sale.

But the donee of a special power cannot, by a mere declaration, enlarge the range of investments authorized by the instrument creating the power (a).

Range of investments.

Where a power is given to a person to appoint a life interest in real or personal estate to any wife of his, although it is expressed in general terms, it may appear from the context that the power was intended to be one in the nature of a power to jointure; consequently no appointment can be made under it so as to take effect until after the donee's death (b).

Power to appoint life interest to wife.

The donee of a power to charge money on land by way of portions has a right to fix the rate of interest (c); but where the sum is charged by the settlor, and the testator has merely a power of distributing it, he has no power to fix the rate of interest (d).

Power to appoint portions.

(2) Execution of Special Powers.—"For the exercise of a special power there must be either (1) a reference to the

How intention may be shewn.

(w) Alloway v. Alloway, 4 Dr. & W. 380.

(x) Thornton v. Bright, 2 My. & Cr. 230.

(y) Ibid.

(z) Long v. Long, 5 Ves. 445, where a power to charge portions was held to be well exercised by a will directing a sale and appointing the money; see Crozier v. Crozier, 3 Dr. & W., at p. 371. Kenuworthy v. Bates, Cowx v. Foster, and other cases (which are referred to post, p. 856) are cited in Re Paget, [1898] 1 Ch. 290, and Re Redgate, [1903] 1 Ch. 357.

(zz) 17 L. R. Ir. 384.

(a) Re William Falconer's Trusts, [1908] 1 Ch. 410.

(b) Re De Hoghton, [1896] 2 Ch. 385, where Jamieson v. Trevelyan, 10 Exch. 269, is explained; Re Lindo, 59 L. T. 462, stated shortly in Chap. XXXI.

(c) Boycot v. Cotton, 1 Atk. 552; Lewis v. Freke, 2 Ves. jun. 507.

(d) Balfour v. Cooper, 23 Ch. D. 472.

CHAP. XXIII.

power, or (2) a reference to the property subject to the power, or (3) an intention otherwise expressed in the will to exercise the power" (e).

Inaccurate reference to power.

In exercising a special power by express reference, an inaccurate or incomplete description of the power is sufficient, if the intention is clear (f).

Indirect
appointment.

An appointment may be made indirectly. Thus, in Oke v. Heath (g), a testatrix appointed a fund of 4,000*l.* to A., an object of the power, "upon condition" or "in consideration" of his paying B., another object of the power, 100*l.* a year during B.'s life. A. died in the testatrix's lifetime, so that the gift in A.'s favour lapsed, but it was held that the annuity to B. did not lapse.

Implied
intention.

Where a testator does not express an intention to exercise a special power, an intention to do so can only be inferred from the words of the will, and from the circumstances which at the time of executing it were known to the testator (h).

Appointment
by implication.

Where a person who has power to appoint to A. and B., expressly exercises it in favour of A., he may do it in such a way that "by necessary implication" he will be deemed to have exercised it in favour of B. as well (i). And if a person deals with property over which he has a special power of appointment in a way which does not of itself constitute an exercise of the power, he may shew a sufficient intention to exercise it by referring to that transaction in his will (j). But the reference must be specific (k). Again, if the donee of a power erroneously recites that he has made an appointment in favour of X., an object of the power, this is evidence of an intention to exercise the power in favour of X.; but if he recites that X. is entitled to the property, this is evidence that he supposes that X. possesses an independent title, and negatives any intention to exercise the power (l). So, if he exercises the power as to part in favour of X., and expressly states that he makes no further appointment because he wishes the rest of the property to go to Y. and Z.,

Ambiguous or erroneous recital.

Mistake.

(e) Per Buckley, J., in Re Weston's Settlement, [1906] 2 Ch. 620.

(f) Re Wilmot, 29 Bea. 644; Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73; Carver v. Richards, 27 Bea. 488. See Bruce v. Bruce, L. R., 11 Eq. 371, post.

(g) 1 Ves. sen. 135.

(h) Re Mills, 34 Ch. D. 186; Re Esther Williams, 42 Ch. D. 93; per Romer, L.J., in Re Hayes, [1901] 2 Ch. 531. The doctrine laid down in Re Morgan (7 Ir. Ch. R. 18) by the majority of the Court cannot, it is submitted, be supported.

(i) See Foster v. Cautley, 6 D. M. & G. 55 (settlement).

(j) Lees v. Lees, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 549.

(k) Re Walsh, 1 L. R. Ir. 320.

(l) L'Estrange v. L'Estrange, 25 L. R. Ir. 399; Pennefather v. Pennefather, Ir. R., 7 Eq. 300, citing Carver v. Richards, 27 Bea. 488; Garth v. Townsend, L. R., 7 Eq. 220 (not testamentary appointments); Haverty v. Curtis, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 23; Minchin v. Minchin, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 178, 258 (deed); Farwell, 194. Compare the similar doctrine as to gifts by implication, Chap. XIX.

the other objects of the power, this does not operate as an appointment by implication in favour of Y. and Z. (m).

CHAP. XXIII.

And if there is a gift over in default of appointment, an intention to exercise the power will not be easily implied (n).

Effect of gift over.

Sometimes an intention to exercise a power may be inferred from a reference to it in another part of the will (o); and where a testator refers to the instrument creating the power, and makes a disposition of a nature authorised by the power, it will generally be presumed that he intended to exercise it: it is a question of intention to be collected from the whole will (p). In Disney v. Crosse (pp), the testatrix had a power of appointing a fund among her children; she bequeathed legacies to her children, and (in express exercise of the power) appointed the fund, "subject and charged with" the legacies, to A. B. (not an object of the power) absolutely: it was held that this operated as an appointment of the legacies out of the fund.

Indirect reference.

If a testator expressly exercises a power, but only partially, and makes a residuary disposition in terms primâ facie applying only to his own property, this will not operate as an exercise of the unexhausted part of the power (q), unless such an intention can be inferred from the whole will (r).

Doubts as to a testator's intention of exercising a special power arise most frequently in connection with residuary gifts. The following propositions are, it is believed, justified by the authorities.

Effect of residuary gift.

An intention to exercise a special power may appear from the use of words referring to powers generally (s).

Reference to powers generally.

Thus, if a testator, having a power of appointment in favour of his children, devises and bequeaths "all my real and personal estate and effects whatsoever whereof I have power to dispose," or "over

(m) Re Jack, [1899] 1 Ch. 374; Langslow v. Langslow, 21 Bea. 552.

(n) Henderson v. Constable, 5 Bea. 297, stated post.

(o) Re Comber's Settlement, 11 Jur. N. S. 968; Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73. But if a will does not itself amount to an exercise of a power, the fact that it is made in favour of an object of the power, and that it revokes an earlier will which exercised the power, is not a sufficient indication of an intention to exercise the power; Harvey v. Harvey, 32 L. T. 141. In Wrigley v. Loundes, [1908] P. 348, the circumstances were similar, but the decision really turned on the language of the later will.

(p) Hunloke v. Gell, 1 R. & Myl. 515; Peirce v. M'Neale, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 118.

(pp) L. R., 2 Eq. 592. In Gainsford v. Dunn, L. R., 17 Eq. 405, a similar inference was drawn from the use of the word "residue"; but see Re Boards, [1895] 1 Ch. 499.

(q) Buller v. Gray, L. R., 5 Ch. 26, where there was also a reference to general powers.

(r) Elliott v. Elliott, 15 Sim. 321: in that case the specific disposition did not refer to the power, but to the subject matter.

(s) Compare Maddison v. Andrew, supra, p. 808.

CHAP. XXIII.

Use of word
"appoint."

which I have any power of appointment," or the like, upon trust for his children, this operates as an execution of the power (t). Even if he merely says "I appoint, devise, and bequeath my real and personal estate upon trust for" persons who are objects of the power, this may operate as an exercise of the power, if it appears that he has no other power (u). Where the testator has more than one power, other considerations arise (infra, p. 829).

Such a devise or bequest is not necessarily prevented from operating as an execution of the power by the fact that it includes the testator's own property (v), and that he gives the whole to trustees upon trust to sell and pay his debts or debts and legacies out of the proceeds (w), or by the fact that the testator professes to give part of the property subject to the power to persons not objects of the power (x), or to create interests which are illegal (y), or in excess of what the power authorises (z). But in most of the cases in which circumstances of this nature were present, the construction was assisted by the fact that the testator had no other power (a).

Examples of special power not being exercised by general
words.

On the other hand, the inference arising from the use of the word "appoint," or any other expressions referring to powers generally, may be rebutted by the context or by the nature of the gift. Thus, a special power to appoint an annuity to children is not exercised by a general gift of property "over which I have any disposing power" upon trust for the testator's wife for life, with remainder to his children (b).

And if the will contains indications that the testator either had not the power in his mind at all, or that he did not intend to exercise it, then such vague expressions as "property which I have power (t) Bailey v. Lloyd, 5 Russ. 330, Pidgely v. Pidgely, 1 Coll. 255; Cowx v. Foster, 1 J. & H. 30; Ferrier v. Jay, L. R., 10 Eq. 550; Gainsford v. Dunn, L. R., 17 Eq. 405; Re Swinburne, 27 Ch. D. 696; Re Blackburn, 43 Ch. D. 75. Wrigley v. Lowndes, [1908] P. 348 ("everything I have power to will"). As to Clogstoun v. Walcott, 13 Sim. 523, see below, p. 829, n. (d). In Re Hunt's Trusts, 31 Ch. D. 308, the testatrix appointed part of a fund to A., a person not an object of the power, and gave "all the residue of my personal estate . . . over which I have any power of disposal by this my will" to objects of the power; it was held by Bacon, V.-C., that this operated as an appointment of the part badly appointed to A.

(u) Re Milner, [1899] 1 Ch. 563; Re Mayhew, [1901] 1 Ch. 677 (disapproving dictum in Re Richardson's Trusts, 17

L. R. Ir. 436); Kent v. Kent, [1902] P. 108.

(v) Byrne v. Cullinan, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 42; Wrigley v. Lowndes, supra.

(w) See cases in note (t) and (u) supra. That a special power of appointment over land authorises an appointment to trustees upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds among the objects of the power, see Kenworthy v. Bate, 6 Ves. 793; Re Redgate, [1903] 1 Ch. 356; post, p. 856.

(x) Re Swinburne, 27 Ch. D. 696; Re Boyd, infra; Re Milner, [1899] 1 Ch. 563.

(y) Re Boyd, 63 L. T. 92.

(z) Re Teape's Trusts, L. R., 16 Eq. 442, and cases cited supra n. (t).

(a) Infra, p. 829.

(b) Sykes v. Carroll, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 17.

to dispose of," or "appoint," or the like, will not include property over which he has a special power of appointment. Thus, in Cooke v. Cunliffe (c), a devise of "all my real estate over which I have any disposing power," by a testator who had real estate of his own, was held not to be an exercise of a special power, where, if it had been, it would have defeated certain interests under the settlement creating the power, which interests the testator clearly intended to take effect after his death. So if the trusts of the original settlement and of the will are inconsistent with one another, something more than a mere reference to powers generally is required to exercise the power (d).

The case of Re Weston's Settlement (e) is an example of what may be called cumulative indications of the absence of an intention to exercise a power. In that case the testator had a power to appoint certain leaseholds among his children, and had no other power. By his will he gave, devised, bequeathed, and appointed all the residue of his estate to trustees upon trust to convert, and out of the proceeds to pay his debts, &c., and to divide the residue among three out of his seven children; he empowered his trustees to postpone conversion, to manage his real and leasehold estates while unsold, and to invest the shares of two children who were infants: it was held by Buckley, J., that the power was not exercised.

If a testator uses words referring to powers generally, and he has a general power of appointment to which those words may refer, they will not, as a general rule, operate as an exercise of a special power (f).

Where testator has a general as well as a special power.

In most of the cases above referred to, in which a gift of property which the testator had power to dispose of or appoint has been held to be an exercise of a special power, it was proved or assumed that the testator had no other power, and this fact was referred to as the basis of the decision, or, at all events, as assisting the construction (g). But it does not appear to have been decided that the existence of another power would prevent a gift, expressed in general language, from exercising a special power. On the contrary,

Where testator has more than one power.

(c) 17 Q. B. 245.

(d) Re Cotton, 40 Ch. D. 41. See Hope v. Hope, 5 Giff. 13; Re Blackburn, 43 Ch. D. 75; Re Denton, 63 L. T. 105. In Clogstown v. Walcott (13 Sim. 523) there was a trust for sale and investment, and the decision turned partly on this. It was disapproved by Selborne, L.C., in Re Teape's Trusts, L. R., 16 Eq. 442.

(e) [1906] 2 Ch. 620.

(f) Re Richardson, 17 L. R. Ir. 436. See Re Mayhew, supra, p. 828.

(g) This consideration does not appear to have influenced the decision in Bailey v. Lloyd or Re Blackburn, supra.

CHAP. XXIII.

in Ferrier v. Jay (h), where a testatrix, having a general power to appoint 500*l.*, and a special power to appoint certain property, gave all her real and personal estate which she had any power to appoint or dispose of to trustees to pay her debts, &c., and to divide the residue among the objects of the special power: it was held by Malins, V.-C., that the special power was well executed, notwithstanding the direction to pay debts, because, reddendo singula singulis, she meant her debts to be paid out of the property subject to the general power. In Re Milner (i), Stirling, J., after observing that the special power in question was the only testamentary power to which the testatrix was entitled, said: "This is a circumstance which has in many cases been held to afford evidence of considerable cogency of an intention to exercise such a power." Again, in Re Sharland (j), where the testatrix had two general powers of appointment, and a special power to appoint the income of certain property to her husband for life, she appointed all real and personal estate over which she might have a power of appointment to her husband absolutely, and it was held that this operated as an exercise of the special power.

In Re Rickman (k), on the other hand, the testatrix had a power of appointment among her children, and in default of children a general power. She made a will by which, "in pursuance of all powers and authorities enabling me thereto," she directed, limited, and appointed all her residuary estate to trustees upon trust as to one moiety for her son for life; all the other trusts were beyond the scope of the power: it was held that the special power was not exercised.

The principle of construction reddendo singula singulis, was also applied by Malins, V.-C., in the case of Thornton v. Thornton (l), where a testator had two special powers, one to appoint among his children subject to a life interest in his wife, and the other to appoint a life interest to his wife in a fund which, subject to the power, was held in trust for his children at twenty-one in equal shares. The testator, by his will, gave "all my property over which I have any disposing power" to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death for his children at twenty-one equally. The V.-C. held that both powers were well exercised.

"Beneficial"
power.

In Ames v. Cadogan (m), Fry, J., held that a special power was not (h) L. R., 10 Eq. 550.

(i) [1899] 1 Ch. 563. See also Re Mayhew, [1901] 1 Ch. 677, where similar evidence was admitted: ante, p. 828.

(j) [1899] 2 Ch. 536.
(k) 80 L. T. 518.
(l) L. R., 20 Eq. 599.
(m) 12 Ch. D. 868.

exercised by a devise and bequest of all real and personal estate over which the testator had "any beneficial power of disposition." But in Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm (n), Pearson, J., held that the use of the word "beneficial" did not necessarily prevent such a gift from being an exercise of a special power.

CHAP. XXIII.

An appointment expressed to be made in exercise of every power enabling the appointor, does not extend to property which he cannot appoint without the exercise of a power of revocation, if there be other property to which the appointment can apply (o).

Power of revocation.

Formerly the question whether a special power was exercised by a general devise or bequest was governed by the same considerations as those applying to general powers, and therefore, under the old law, a devise of land operated as an exercise of a special power of appointing land, if the testator had no land of his own (p).

Effect of a general devise or bequest.

Special powers to appoint in favour of particular persons or classes, as children (q), or kindred (r), are not within sect. 27 of the Wills Act. Generally, therefore, the question whether such powers are executed by a general devise or bequest still depends on the old law. But if the question arises with regard to a special power over realty, then, inasmuch as by sect. 24 a will now takes effect, with reference to the testator's own property, as if made immediately before the death of the testator, no presumption can be raised in favour of the appointment by reason of the testator having no real estate of his own at the date of the will, however short may be the interval between the execution of the will and the testator's death.

Sect. 27 does not apply to special powers.

Accordingly, a testator who makes a general devise, though having no real estate of his own, does not thereby sufficiently indicate an intention of exercising a special power of appointing real estate, even although the person in whose favour the devise is made is the sole object of the power (s); the argument against such a construction would, of course, be even stronger if the testator included in the general devise persons who are not objects of the power (t).

(n) 30 Ch. D. 172.

(o) Pomfret v. Perring, 5 D. M. & G. 775. Compare the cases on general powers, supra, p. 804.(p) Wallop v. Lord Portsmouth, Sugd. Powers, 916 (8th edition).(q) Cloves v. Audry, 12 Beav. 604; Pidgely v. Pidgely, 1 Coll. 255; Elliott v. Elliott, 15 Sim. 321; Cronin v. Roche, 8 Ir. Ch. Rep. 103; Russell v. Russell,12 Ir. Ch. R. 377; Doyle v. Coyle, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 205; Humphery v. Humphery, 36 L. T. 91.(r) Hawthorn v. Shedden, 3 Sm. & Gif. 293; Re Caplin's Will, 2 Dr. & Sm. 527.(s) Harvey v. Harvey, 32 L. T. 141; Re Esther Williams, 42 Ch. D. 93.(t) Re Mills, 34 Ch. D. 186.

CHAP. XXIII.

Where testator has no property of his own.

It sometimes happens that a testator has a special power of appointment over personal property, but has no property of his own, or property of insufficient value to satisfy his testamentary dispositions, and that those dispositions are all in favour of objects of the power, from which facts it might be inferred that he intended to exercise the power in their favour: it seems clear, however, that no such inference can be drawn (tt).

Married woman.

In the case of a married woman having a power of appointment in favour of A., and making a disposition by will in his favour within the scope of the power, but not expressly referring to it, the general rule seems formerly to have been that it operated as an appointment, unless it was proved that the testatrix had separate property of her own at the date of the will; but this rule no longer exists (u).

Reference to subject
of power.

If a testator has a special power over certain property, and by his will, without referring to the power, disposes of that specific property in favour of the objects of the power, it will generally be inferred that he meant to exercise the power (v). Thus, in Re Davids' Trusts (w), a testatrix had a power of appointment over a sum of $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. stock in favour of certain persons: by her will she gave 10*l.* to each of two objects of the power, and bequeathed to the remaining object "all the residue of my property in the $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. annuities"; the testatrix had no such stock of her own at the date of the will or subsequently, and it was held that the three gifts took effect as an exercise of the power. And if a testator manifests an intention to exercise by his will a special power, by reason of his making some gifts of property which he describes as "my" property, the words of which gift cannot be satisfied unless they pass property subject to the power, the Court will assume that he intended also to exercise the power in the case of other gifts in the will which are capable of passing other property subject to the power, although the words of gift can be satisfied by means of property belonging to the testator himself (x).

(tt) See Humphrey v. Humphrey, 36 L. T. 91; Re Huddleston, [1894] 3 Ch. 595. Such facts may however have weight if combined with other circumstances: see Peirce v. M'Neale, [1894] 1 Ir. R. 118.

(u) See Re Herdman's Trusts, 31 L. R. Ir. 87.

(v) Davies v. Davies, 4 Jur. N. S. 1291; Elliott v. Elliott, 15 Sim. 321;

Forbes v. Ball, 3 Mer. 437.

(w) John. 495. Innes v. Sayer, 3 Mac. & G. 606; Rooke v. Rooke, 2 Dr. & Sm. 38; Re Gratwick's Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 177, and Fletcher v. Fletcher, 7 L. R. Ir. 40, were similar cases. Compare the analogous cases of general powers, Walker v. Mackie, & Co., supra, p. 803.

(x) Reid v. Reid, 25 Bea. 469; Re Wait, 30 Ch. D. 617.

To bring a case within this doctrine, however, the description of the property must be specific and unambiguous, so as to shew beyond a doubt that the testator has in mind the property subject to the power (y). And if he attempts to deal with the property in a manner not authorized by the power, the presumption that he intended to exercise it may be rebutted (z).

CHAP. XXIII.

What
description
required.

Moreover, if the testator has property of his own, which answers the description and is sufficient to satisfy the gift, it will generally be assumed that he did not mean to exercise the power (a). But an intention to do so may appear from the context : e.g., if the testator excepts from the gift a certain part of the property subject to the power (b).

Where testator has property
of his own which will satisfy gift.

In Bruce v. Bruce (bb) a testatrix had a special power to appoint property to A., B., and C., but she thought that under a certain deed she had a general power of appointment over the property ; by her will, not referring to the former power, but in professed exercise of the supposed general power, and of every other power enabling her in that behalf, she purported to appoint to B., C., D., and E. : it was held by Romilly, M.R., that the will operated as an exercise of the special power.

Reference to wrong power.

How far a will can operate as an exercise of a special power created after the date of the will, is a question of some difficulty. The only case in which it has been held that a special power can be effectively exercised in this manner seems to be Stillman v. Weedon (c), but the decision in that case can only be supported, if at all, on the ground that the will disposed specifically of the property, which afterwards, by the testator's own act, became subject to a special power of appointment by him in favour of the persons to whom it was given by the will. The better opinion is that sect. 24 of the Wills Act has not the same effect with regard to special powers as it has in the case of general powers falling within sect. 27 (cc), and the question is therefore one of intention.

Exercise of future
power.

(y) Bennett v. Aburrow, 8 Ves. 609 ; Mattingley's Trusts, 2 J. & H. 426 ; Re Huddleston, [1894] 3 Ch. 595, where the question of admitting parol evidence was discussed.

(z) Wildbore v. Gregory, L. R., 12 Eq. 482 ; Re Rickman, ante, p. 830. In Re Gratwick's Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 177, the appointment was partly to objects and partly to a stranger ; it was held good pro tanto.

(a) Noel v. Noel, 4 Drew. 624.

(b) Reid v. Reid, 25 Bea. 469.

(bb) L. R., 11 Eq. 371. The special power was exercisable by deed only, but the defective execution was aided : ante, p. 799.

(c) 16 Sim. 26.

(cc) See the operation of these sections explained by Stirling, J., in Re Wells' Trusts, 42 Ch. D. 656 ; infra, p. 839. See also Farwell on Powers, 226. In an article in the Solicitor's Journal, vol. liii. p. 240, it is suggested that

CHAP. XXIII.

In Re Hayes (d), a testator gave "all the residue of the property over which at the time of my death I shall have a disposing power" to trustees upon trust for sale, conversion, and investment, and directed them to pay the income to his wife for life, and subject, as aforesaid, to stand possessed of the trust estate upon trusts for his children; after the date of his will he became entitled to a power authorising him to appoint the income of certain settled funds in favour of his wife for life: it was held by Byrne, J., and by the Court of Appeal, that the language of the testator was not sufficient to shew an intention to exercise the special power in favour of his wife. The Court of Appeal expressed some doubt whether it is possible in any case to execute by anticipation a special power created after the attempted execution. It was not, however, necessary to consider this in the case in question, because the testator's dispositions clearly shewed that he did not contemplate the contingency of his becoming entitled to exercise a special power of the nature afterwards created. If a testator declares that in the event of his becoming subsequently entitled to exercise a power in favour of A., he wishes his will to operate as an appointment under it, there seems, on principle, no reason why effect should not be given to his intention, if it is in accordance with the power (e).

On principle, it seems clear that if a testator by his will expressly exercises a special power, which is subsequently destroyed and replaced by a new power, the will does not operate as an exercise of the new power (ee).

the conclusion to be drawn from the decisions in Wilkinson v. Duncan, 30 Bea. 111, Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm, 30 Ch. D. 172, and Re Thompson, [1906] 2 Ch. 199 (all referred to in Chapter X., ante, p. 319) is "that section 24 of Wills Act, 1837, does apply to limited powers." But it is submitted that the application of the Rule against Perpetuities does not depend on sect. 24; the general principle of the Rule was established before 1837, and the ambulatory nature of a will exercising a special power was then well settled: thus in Crompe v. Barrow, [1799] 4 Ves. 681, Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., said: "I do construe the will at the death of the testatrix; and I think the ultimate appointment is good."

(d) [1900] 2 Ch. 332; [1901] 2 Ch. 529, following Doyle v. Coyle, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 205. Walker v. Armstrong, 21 Bea. 284, and Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Bea. 223, were also cited.

(e) In Charlton v. Charlton ([1906] 2 Ch. 523), A. by his marriage settlement covenanted to charge all real and personal estate which might come to him from his father with a jointure of 400l. a year for his intended wife; a year afterwards the father died, having by his will given A. a power of charging certain real estate by deed or will with a jointure of 400l. for his wife: it was held that the covenant in the marriage settlement operated as a defective execution of the power to which the Court would give effect; it was treated as a question of intention.

(ee) See Farwell, 226. The decision in Thompson v. Simpson, ante, p. 813, seems to involve this principle, for although the power in that case was a general one, the appointment could only have operated under sect. 24. In Airey v. Bower, 12 A. C. 263, it was suggested by Lord Macnaghten that sect. 23 of the Wills Act applies to powers of appointment, sed quære: see post, p. 841.

A will may be made to operate as an exercise of a subsequently acquired power, if it is republished after the acquisition of the power (f).

CHAP. XXIII.

Republication.

In Gainsford v. Dunn (ff), a testatrix had power to appoint certain funds in favour of A., B., C., D., and E. By her will she gave legacies of 5*l.* each to A., B., and C., and "all the residue of my property, over which I have any power of appointment or disposition," to D. and E.: it was held by Jessel, M.R., that the legacies were payable partly out of the testatrix's own property and partly out of the appointed fund. But the principle of the decision has been questioned (g).

Appointment taking effect partly out of testator's own property.

Where a testator has a power of revocation and new appointment, exercisable by deed or will, and he exercises it by will, and afterwards exercises it by deed, reserving to himself a fresh power of revocation and new appointment, the will does not, by virtue of sect. 24 of the Wills Act, operate as a revocation and new appointment under the latter power (gg).

Power of revocation.

(3) Ineffectual Execution.—An intention to execute a special power may be ineffectual either for some reason applying to all testamentary gifts (h), or for some reason applying to special powers. The rules as to the failure of an appointment under a special power, by reason of the appointment being a fraud on the power (i), or exclusive (j), or made in favour of a person not an object of the power (k), or being otherwise an excessive execution of the power, or because it is a delegation of the power (kk), are not peculiar to testamentary powers, and are, therefore, not treated of in this work.

Failure of appointment.

The effect of the failure of an appointment under a special power is considered in a later part of this chapter (l).

Where there is an absolute appointment under a special power,

Absolute appointment followed by void addition.

(f) Re Blackburn, 43 Ch. D. 75; post, p. 843.

(ff) L. R., 17 Eq. 405.

(g) Re Boards, [1895] 1 Ch. 499.

(gg) Re Wells' Trusts, 42 Ch. D. 646.

(h) See Champney v. Davy, 11 Ch. D. at p. 958. As to charitable gifts, see Chap. IX.; as to the Rule against Perpetuities, see Chap. X.; as to ademption, lapse, abatement, &c., see post, pp. 839 seq.

(i) As in Re Crawshaw, 43 Ch. D. 615.

(j) As in Bulleel v. Plummer, L. R., 6 Ch. 160. See also White v. Wilson, 1 Dr. 298; Re Davids' Trusts, Johns, 495; Gainsford v. Dunn, L. R. 17 Eq. 405: all cases before the Powers of Appointment Act, 1874, supra.

(k) As in Re Jeaffreson's Trusts, L. R., 2 Eq. 276; post, p. 860; Re Hunt's Trusts, 31 Ch. D. 308; ante, p. 828.

(kk) As in the case of an attempt to create a discretionary trust: Chap. XXIV.

(l) Post, pp. 844 seq.

CHAP. XXIII.

with a superadded modification which is in excess of the power, or otherwise void, the modification is rejected and the appointment stands (ll).

Defect in power supplied by testator's interest.

VII.—Miscellaneous Questions as to Powers.—Where a testator makes a will purporting to execute a power, and the power proves to be invalid, or to have been destroyed, or not to have arisen, or not to authorize the disposition which the testator desires to make, then if the testator has an interest in the property, it will make good the defect in the appointment (m).

Covenant to exercise general power.

A covenant to exercise a general testamentary power of appointment is good, and an action lies for a breach of it, but specific performance will not be decreed (n). It may be satisfied by the covenantee taking in default of appointment (o). A covenant to exercise a general power in favour of a creditor, so as to give him a first charge on the fund, followed by a will purporting to comply with the covenant, does not give him priority over the other creditors (p).

Release of general power.

A general testamentary power of appointment, like any other general power, may be released, or the donee may by covenant debar himself from exercising it (q). A married woman may by unacknowledged deed release a power given to her in respect of personal property (or, semble, in respect of real property), even if her life estate is subject to a restraint on anticipation (r).

Covenant to exercise special power.

If a special power of appointment is exerciseable by will only, a covenant to exercise it in a particular way is, it would seem, void (s), but an appointment made in accordance with such a covenant is good (t). And if the power is exerciseable by deed as well as by will, the covenant may operate as a defective execution of the power to which the Court will give effect (u).

(ll) Post, p. 847.

(m) Farwell, p. 268, citing Mandeville v. Roe, 1 J. & L. 371; Cross v. Hudson, 3 Br. C. C. 30; Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 292; Sing v. Leslie, 2 H. & M. 68; Jones v. Southall, 30 Beav. 187; Re James, [1910] 1 Ch. 157 (married woman).

(n) Robinson v. Ommaney, 23 Ch. D. 285; Re Parkin, [1892] 3 Ch. 510. As to married women, see Re Ann, [1894] 1 Ch. 549, supra, p. 819.

(o) Thacker v. Key, L. R., 8 Eq. 408, where the power was special, but the principle seems to be the same. Compare the cases on covenants to leave a sum of money by will, ante, p. 28.

(p) Re Lawley, [1902] 2 Ch. 799; s. c. nom. Beyfus v. Lawley, [1903] A. C. 411.

(q) Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 52.

(r) Re Chisholm's Settlement, [1901] 2 Ch. 82. See Heath v. Wickham, 5 L. R. Ir. 285.

(s) Thacker v. Key, supra; Re Bradshaw, [1902] 1 Ch. 436.

(t) Coffin v. Cooper, 2 Dr. & Sm. 365; Palmer v. Locke, 15 Ch. D. 294.

(u) Affleck v. Affleck, 3 Sm. & G. 394; Charlton v. Charlton, [1906] 2 Ch. 523.

The donee of a special testamentary power may release it, unless it is a fiduciary power, or power coupled with a duty (v). The rule above stated as to the release of a power by a married woman applies also to special powers (w). CHAP. XXIII.
Release of special power.

An administrative power, such as a power of sale, may be accelerated, but not a power of charging (ww).

A power given by will can, of course, be revoked by a codicil, or a subsequent will. In Re Brough (x), a testator gave H. a life interest in a fund, and a special power of appointment by will over the capital; by a codicil he revoked all devises and bequests "in favour of" H.: it was held that the power was revoked as well as the life interest. Revocation of power.

Sometimes property is settled by deed, subject to a power of revocation by will; the question whether such a power can be exercised by implication has been already considered (xx). Power of revocation.

A will exercising a power of appointment is only in certain cases revoked by the marriage of the testator (y), but with this exception the rules as to revocation of wills apply to such a will (z). Consequently, a general clause in a will, revoking all former wills, revokes a prior express testamentary appointment, whether the power under which it was made is general or special (a), and although the latter will does not execute the power (b). Revocation of appointment.

The doctrine of implied revocation by a later inconsistent will or codicil also applies to appointments (c), so that if a testator, having a general power, makes a will containing a residuary bequest operating Implied revocation.

(v) Re Radcliffe, [1892] 1 Ch. 227; Re Somes, [1896] 1 Ch. 250; Foakes v. Jackson, [1900] 1 Ch. 807. A covenant not to exercise a testamentary power operates as a release: Davies v. Huguenin, 1 H. & M. 730; Isaac v. Hughes, L. R., 9 Eq. 191. The principle of these cases is altogether wrong, for their effect is to enable the donee of a testamentary power to convert it into a power to appoint by deed; this view is put with great force by Neville, J., in Re Evered, 54 Sol. J. 83.

(w) Re Chisholm's Settlement, supra.

(ww) Truell v. Tysson, 21 Bea. 437.

(x) 38 Ch. D. 456.

(xx) As to general powers, ante, p. 804. As to special powers, ante, p. 831. As to the construction of a special power of revocation, see Morgan v. Gronow, L. R., 16 Eq. 1; Farwell, 210.

(y) Supra, p. 142. In bonis Russell, 15 P. D. 111.

(z) As to these rules, see ante, Chap. VII. In Re Gore-Booth's Estate, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 387, there were two powers, one to charge a sum by deed, and the other to appoint the sum by deed or will. As to the formalities required to revoke an appointment under the old law, see Richardson v. Barry, 3 Hagg. 249.

(a) Sotheran v. Dening, 20 Ch. D. 99; Re Kingdon, 32 Ch. D. 604; Cadell v. Wilcocks, [1898] P. 21; Kent v. Kent, [1902] P. 108.

(b) Harvey v. Harvey, 23 W. R. 476. Some old decisions to the contrary are, it seems, no longer law: see ante, p. 168.

(c) In bonis McFarlane, 13 L. R. Ir. 264.

CHAP. XXIII.

Special power.Implied revocation
pro tanto.

as an execution of the power, and afterwards makes another will containing a residuary bequest, this would, it seems, by virtue of sect. 27 of the Wills Act, operate as a revocation of the previous appointment. Whether a general residuary gift would operate as an implied revocation of an express appointment under a general power made by an earlier will, does not seem to have been decided (d). On principle it seems clear that it would not, the doctrine of implied revocation being based on intention. If a testatrix having a special power makes a will expressly exercising it, and makes a subsequent will by which she "gives, devises, and bequeaths" all her property, this does not operate as an implied revocation of the appointment contained in the first will (e). But if the second will operates as an exercise of the power (either by referring to it, or by a general gift containing the word "appoint" (f)), then the second will impliedly revokes the appointment made by the first (g).

If a testator exercises a special power of appointment in favour of some of the objects, and by a codicil, without expressly revoking the appointment, makes an appointment of part of the fund in favour of other objects, this only revokes the will to the extent to which it effectively interferes with the original appointment (h). In Duquid v. Fraser (i) the testatrix had a power of appointment among her husband and children; she appointed the fund to her husband and children in equal shares; one of the children predeceased her, and she made a codicil appointing his share to his children: it was held that this invalid appointment did not operate as a revocation pro tanto of the appointment by the will to the class, and that the husband and surviving children took the whole fund.

It has been held that if a testator expressly exercises a power by a special testamentary instrument of appointment (not admitted to probate), and afterwards executes a will containing a residuary bequest, the bequest operates as an exercise of the power and as a revocation of the special testamentary appointment, because to prevent this effect a contrary intention must appear from the will, and the Court cannot infer it from the terms of the special appointment (j). This unsatisfactory result, it seems, might have been

(d) See Cadell v. Wilcocks, [1898] P. at p. 27.

(e) Cadell v. Wilcocks, supra.

(f) See Re Mayhew, supra, p. 828.

(g) Kent v. Kent, [1902] P. 108; In b. Tenney, 45 L. T. 78, and other cases cited supra, p. 828.

(h) Re Walker, [1908] 1 Ch. 560.

(i) 31 Ch. D. 449.

(j) Re Gibbes' Settlement, 37 Ch. D. 143.

avoided by applying to the Probate Court to allow the special appointment to be proved as part of the will. CHAP. XXIII.

In Re Wells (k), the donee of a special power of appointment made a will expressly exercising the power; some years afterwards he executed a deed (not referring to the will) by which he expressly and effectually exercised the power as to four-fifths of the fund, and ineffectually exercised it as to the remaining one-fifth: it was held that the fact of the will being dated before the deed, was sufficient evidence of "a contrary intention" within sect. 24 of the Wills Act, and, consequently, that the will did not speak from the death of the testator so as to revoke the appointment by that deed. It was also held that, as to the one-fifth ineffectually appointed by the deed, the will took effect. Double appointment by will and deed.

The doctrine of dependent relative revocation applies to wills exercising powers of appointment. Consequently, if a testator makes a will exercising a power, and afterwards cancels it under the mistaken impression that in default of appointment the fund will be divided among a certain class of persons, this does not operate as a revocation, and the will stands (l). But as in the case of direct gifts, so in the case of appointments under powers, the doctrine is less easy of application where the revocation is effected by an express clause of revocation in a subsequent testamentary instrument. Thus, where a testator made a valid appointment in favour of his younger children, and by a codicil revoked this appointment, and made a fresh appointment which was ineffective, it was held that the revocation nevertheless took effect (ll). Dependent relative revocation.

A testamentary appointment has no operation until the death of the testator; there is no relation back to the date of the will (m). It follows that an appointment under a testamentary power may be adeemed by subsequent dealings with the settled property. And there is no distinction, in this respect, between a general and a special power (n). Thus, if a testator in exercise of a power appoints Blackacre to A., and Blackacre is subsequently sold and the proceeds invested in the purchase of Whiteacre, the appointment is Ademption.

(k) 42 Ch. D. 646.

(l) Stamford v. White, [1901] P. 46. This appears to be the effect of the decision, but the case is badly reported.

(ll) Quinn v. Butler, L. R., 6 Eq. 225. See Onions v. Tyrer, Richardson v. Barry, and other cases cited ante, p. 170.

(m) Re Moses, [1902] 1 Ch. 100, aff. s. n. Beddington v. Baumann, [1903] A. C. 13.

(n) Re Dowsett, [1901] 1 Ch. 398, approved in Beddington v. Baumann, supra. As to the effect of conversion, see Chap. XXII.

CHAP. XXIII.

adeemed, and A. takes nothing under the appointment (o). So, if part of Blackacre is sold, the appointment is adeemed pro tanto (p). In the case of personal property, such as stock, the same principle applies. But whether the property is real or personal, the appointment may be so expressed as to shew an intention to appoint whatever property may for the time being be subject to the power, and not merely the specific property which is subject to it at the date of the will. Thus, an appointment of stock may take effect notwithstanding changes in investment (q).

In Jones v. Southall (r), the settlement under which the testatrix professed to appoint certain investments was invalid, and the appointments appear to have operated merely as bequests: they were held to be adeemed pro tanto by reason of the testatrix having called in some of the securities and re-invested the proceeds.

In Cooper v. Martin (s), the testator devised an estate upon trust for sale, with power of pre-emption to his younger children, and the proceeds were to be held upon such trusts in favour of his issue as his wife should, within a prescribed period, appoint; she appointed the estate by name to the eldest son; this appointment was invalid, not being made within the prescribed period, and it was therefore unnecessary to decide whether the proceeds of sale would have passed under it: Lord Cairns thought that they would.

In Beddington v. Baumann (t) a testator had a power of appointment among his children over some freehold houses, of which he was tenant for life: he made a will appointing them to two sons; after the date of the will he granted leases of these houses under the Settled Land Acts, partly in consideration of premiums, and these premiums were paid to the trustees and invested by them: on the death of the testator it was held that the investments representing the premiums did not go to the appointees, but went as in default of appointment.

It has been held that where a married woman, having a power of appointment under a settlement, exercises it by will, and the settlement afterwards comes to an end, the mere fact of her obtaining a transfer to herself of the property comprised in the settlement does

Transfer of property to donee of power.

(o) Gale v. Gale, 21 Bea. 349; Re Dowsett, supra. In Collinson v. Collinson, 24 Bea. 269, the appointment was by deed. Gale v. Gale and the other cases are discussed in Farwell, pp. 217 seq.

(p) Blake v. Blake, 15 Ch. D. 481.

(q) See Re Johnstone's Settlement, 14 Ch. D. 162; Re Dowsett, supra; Willett

v. Finlay, 29 L. R. Ir. 497; as to which, see Re Moses, supra.

(r) 32 Bea. 31.

(s) L. R., 3 Ch. 47. The case was really one of falsa demonstratio: see Chap. XXXV.

(t) [1903] A. C. 13, affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal in Re Moses, [1902] 1 Ch. 100.

not operate as an ademption of the appointment (v). But if in such a case the power is exerciseable by deed as well as by will, and the transfer professes to be made in exercise of the power to appoint by deed, this operates as an execution of the power, and the appointment by will is revoked (w).

In Re Fox (x), a trust fund was settled upon A. for life, with a power of appointment among four children, who were to take equally in default of appointment; there were the usual hotchpot and advancement clauses. During A.'s life 705*l.* was advanced to R., one of the children, and A., by her will, subsequently appointed an equal fourth part of the fund in favour of each of the children: it was held that R. was not bound to account for the 705*l.*

Advancement.

An appointment may also be adeemed by the power under which it was expressed to be made being destroyed. And its efficacy will not, as a general rule, be restored by another equally extensive power being conferred on the testator (y), unless the power is a general one, and the will contains a residuary gift; this prima facie operates as an exercise of the power (yy).

Destruction of power and creation of new power.

It must, however, be observed that the effect of sect. 23 of the Wills Act (z) on cases of this kind has not been fully considered (a). In Airey v. Bower (b), most of the learned lords thought that the case fell within that section, and with the same result as that produced by sects. 24 and 27. That was the case of a general power being exercised by a general bequest. Whether the same principle would apply to an appointment expressed to be made in exercise of a power, whether general or special, which is subsequently destroyed and replaced by a new power, is another matter, because an appointment of this kind depends on intention, and it seems somewhat difficult to hold that sect. 23 of the Wills Act can convert an intention to exercise power X into an intention to exercise power

Effect of
s. 23.

(v) Dingwell v. Askew, 1 Cox, 427; Clough v. Clough, 3 My. & K. 296. These decisions seem contrary to principle, although they probably gave effect to the testatrix's intentions.

(w) Lawrence v. Wallis, 2 Br. C. C. 319.

(x) [1904] 1 Ch. 480.

(y) Thompson v. Simpson, 50 L. J. Ch. 461.

(yy) Ante, p. 813. In Thompson v. Simpson the power was general, but the will contained no residuary gift.

(z) "No conveyance or other act made or done subsequently to the execution of a will of or relating to any real or personal estate therein comprised, except an act by which such will shall be revoked as aforesaid, shall prevent the operation of the will with respect to such estate or interest in such real or personal estate as the testator shall have power to dispose of by will at the time of his death."

(a) In Walker v. Armstrong, post, p. 842, the will was subject to the old law.

(b) 12 A. C. 263, supra, pp. 815, 834.

CHAP. XXIII.

Y (c). Moreover, it is by no means certain that sect. 23 applies to powers of appointment at all, for it relates only to property "comprised" in the will, and the better opinion is that property subject to a power of appointment is not "comprised" in the will of the person who exercises the power. The contrary view involves a confusion between property and power (cc).

Mistake. If by mistake a deed is so framed as to defeat a previous testamentary appointment, the Court may reform it (d).

Act done after testator's death. It is hardly necessary to say that an appointment is not admeemed by the act of a stranger after the testator's death: the contrary proposition was put forward, unsuccessfully, in the case of Re Hodgson (e).

Effect of republication. Under the old law, the republication of a will did not render it a good execution of a power given to the testator after the date of the will; and consequently, if a testator appointed property in exercise of a power, and the power was afterwards destroyed and replaced by a new power, the republication of the will did not make it a good execution of the new power, even if it was a general power (f). It is, of course, clear that, since the Wills Act, a general devise or bequest operates as an execution of a general power conferred on the testator since the date of the will, unless a contrary intention appears by the will (g), but the act does not seem to have made any further alteration in the law as to the execution of powers (h).

If this is so, it follows that where a testator by his will expressly exercises a power, whether special or general, in favour of A., and the power is afterwards destroyed and a new power substituted, the mere republication of the will would not make it operate as an

(c) See Thompson v. Simpson, 50 L. J. Ch. 461; ante, p. 834. In Gale v. Gale, 21 Bea. 349, Lord Romilly, M.R., thought there was a new estate and a new power in relation to it, and that the will did not operate as an exercise of the old power; but, as Lord St. Leonards points out (Powers, 309), there was no new power. He thought the decision "a narrow construction" of s. 23: it has, however, been treated in Blake v. Blake, Re Dowsett, and Re Moses, all cited supra, as laying down the correct rule on the question of ademption.

(cc) As to the meaning of "comprised" in s. 24, see per Stirling, J., in Re Wells' Trusts, 42 Ch. D. at p. 656:

Farwell on Powers, 226. The contrary view was expressed by Jessel, M.R., in Freme v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. at p. 509, but it was dissented from by the Court of Appeal in Holyland v. Lewin, 26 Ch. D. 266.

(d) Walker v. Armstrong, 8 D. M. & G. 531.

(e) [1899] 1 Ch. 666.

(f) Holmes v. Coghill, 7 Ves. 499, 12 Ves. 206; Lane v. Wilkins, 10 East, 241; Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Bea. 223.

(g) Cofield v. Pollard, 3 Jur. N. S. 1203, and the other cases cited ante, p. 813.

(h) Unless s. 23 affects the question: ante, p. 841.

execution of the power in favour of A. (i). And even if the will is expressed to be made in exercise of all powers then vested in the testator, the republication of the will does not, apparently, make it operate as an exercise of an intermediately acquired special power (j). But if a testator disposes of property in exercise of all powers which may be vested in him at the time of his death, and republishes it after he has acquired a new power, this makes the will operate as an exercise of it, even if it is a special power, provided, of course, the dispositions of the will are in accordance with the terms of the power (k).

The question whether a special power can be exercised by a will made before the power comes into existence, has been already discussed (l).

Exercise of power in anticipation.

A power given by will lapses by the death of the donee in the lifetime of the donor (m).

Lapse of power.

The question whether a power to appoint to a number of named persons lapses pro tanto by the death of one in the lifetime of the testator, is discussed in another chapter (n).

It has been suggested (o) that sect. 33 of the Wills Act might apply to powers, so that if a testator gave one of his children a power of appointment, and the child died in the testator's lifetime, leaving issue, and having made a will which in terms would be an exercise of the power, the appointment thus made would take effect. It is submitted that this is not so, because the gift of a power of appointment is not a "devise or bequest" of "real or personal estate for any estate or interest" within the meaning of sect. 33 (oo).

Appointments under powers are liable to failure by lapse if the beneficiary dies during the lifetime of the testator (p). But if an appointment is made to A. upon trust for B., or upon condition of his giving part of the benefit of the appointment to B., and Lapse of appointment.

(i) The contrary of this proposition seems to be implied in Farwell on Powers, 226.

(j) Hope v. Hope, 5 Giff. 13. In this case the republication was before the Wills Act, but nothing seems to turn on this. See Re Blackburn, 43 Ch. D. 75.

(k) Re Blackburn, 43 Ch. D. 75. As to what amounts to a republication, see Re Smith, 45 Ch. D. 632.

(l) Ante, p. 833.

(m) Jones v. Southall, 32 Bea. 31; Sharpe v. M'Call [1903] 1 Ir. R. 179.

(n) In Chap. XLIV., in connection with Reade v. Reade, 5 Ves. 744.

(o) Farwell on Powers, 2nd edition, 226.

(oo) In Griggs v. Gibson, 35 L. J. Ch. 458, Wood, V.-C., decided that the power was not exercised, because it was determinable at the death of the donee.

(p) Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. sen. 61, and Re Susanni's Trusts, 47 L. J. Ch. 65, ante, Chap. XIII.

A. dies in the lifetime of the testator, B.'s interest does not lapse (q).

The fact that an appointment is made in pursuance of a covenant does not save it from lapse (qq).

There are differences between general and special powers in respect of lapse. If a testator specifically executes a general power in favour of A., and A. predeceases him, the power will, as a general rule, still be executed by a residuary gift in the will, if there is one (r). And it seems that a testamentary appointment, under a general power, to A., in trust for B., which lapses as to the beneficial interest by B.'s death before the testator, operates as a good appointment to A., who holds the property on the same trusts as if it had been the testator's own (s). Again, if a testator executes a general power in favour of a child who predeceases him, leaving issue, the appointment is preserved from lapse by sect. 33 of the Wills Act (t). But special powers stand on a different footing, for in the case of an appointment under a special power lapsing, it will only be executed by a residuary devise or bequest if the residuary devise or bequest is within the scope of the power, and if an intention to exercise it in that way appears by the will (u), because, as already noticed, sect. 27 of the Wills Act does not apply to special powers (v). Nor are special powers within sect. 33 of the act, so that an appointment under such a power is not saved from lapse by that section (w); nor can the testator prevent an appointment to A. under a special power from lapsing by appointing to A.'s executors or administrators in substitution for him, because they are not objects of the power (x).

As to the cases in which an appointment of the "residue" or "remainder" of a fund is held to be an appointment of a specific sum, and those in which it operates as an appointment of the "residue" in the technical sense, so as to include specific appointments which fail, see post, pp. 859 et seq.

(q) Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. sen. 135.

(qq) Re Brookman's Trust, L. R., 51 Ch. 182; see Jervis v. Wolferstan, L. R., 18 Eq. 18.

(r) See cases supra, p. 814.

(s) Per Wickens, V.-C., in Re Davies' Trusts, L. R., 13 Eq. 163, citing Chamberlain v. Hutchinson, 22 Bea. 444, and Wilkinson v. Schneider, L. R., 9 Eq. 423.

(t) Eccles v. Cheyne, 2 K. & J. 676.

(u) As in Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. sen. 135; Re Hunt's Trusts, 31 Ch. D. 308, post, p. 860.

(v) Supra, p. 831. In Freme v. Clement,

18 Ch. D. 499, Jessel, M.R., held that the word "devise," in s. 25 of the Wills Act, includes an appointment under a special power, so that property appointed by an appointment which fails, would pass by the residuary devise, but this is clearly erroneous: Holyland v. Lewin, 26 Ch. D. 266.

(w) Griffiths v. Gale, 12 Sim. 327; Freeland v. Pearson L. R., 3 Eq. 658; Holyland v. Lewin, 26 Ch. D. 266, disapproving Freme v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. 499.

(x) Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. sen. 57; Butcher v. Butcher, 1 V. & B. 79.

As to the result of the failure of a residuary devise or bequest as regards general powers of appointment, see above, pp. 819, 820.

CHAP. XXIII.

An appointment under a general power is like an ordinary legacy in this respect, that if it is made in discharge of a moral or legal obligation, it does not necessarily lapse by the death of the appointee in the testator's lifetime (y).

Appointment in discharge of obligation.

An appointment under a general power may fail ex postfacto in other cases besides that of lapse, as where it is made to take effect upon a contingency which does not happen. In such a case it will, as a general rule, be executed by a general devise or bequest (z).

Failure of appointment under general power.

An appointment under a special power may also fail in other cases besides that of lapse, and the result is, it seems, the same as if it had lapsed (a): the property so appointed may pass under an appointment of the "residue" of the property subject to the power, or under a residuary devise or bequest, or it may go as unappointed.

Failure of appointment under special power.

The rules as to the failure of appointments under special powers, by reason of the appointment being a fraud on the power (b), or exclusive, or made in favour of a person not an object of the power (c), or being otherwise an excessive execution of the power, are not peculiar to testamentary appointments, but form part of the general law relating to powers, and are therefore not treated of in this work (d).

As to the acceleration of appointments, see ante, p. 725.

Acceleration.

Where a testator, in exercising a special power of appointment over land, attempts to create an estate tail by purchase beyond the limits allowed by law, effect will, if possible, be given to his intention under the doctrine of cy-près (dd).

Cy-près.

The validity of appointments under special powers, with reference to the Rule against Perpetuities, is considered elsewhere (e).

Perpetuities.

Where a testator has a special power of appointment over property, and also has property of his own, and disposes of both properties in one mass in favour of objects of the power, upon trusts which are good as regards his own property, and void for remoteness as regards the appointed property, the fund will be apportioned (f).

Composite fund.

(y) Stevens v. King, [1904] 2 Ch. 30.

(z) Re Elen, 68 L. T. 816.

(a) Per Hall, V.-C., in Champney v. Davy, 11 Ch. D. at p. 958.

(b) As in Re Crawshaw, 43 Ch. D. 615.

(c) As in Re Jeaffreson's Trusts, L. R., 2 Eq. 276, post; Re Hunt's Trusts, 31

Ch. D. 308.

(d) See Sugden on Powers and Farwell on Powers, passim.

(dd) Line v. Hall, 43 L. J. Ch. 107, ante, p. 292.

(e) Chap. X.

(f) Re Wright, [1906] 2 Ch. 288.

CHAP. XXIII.

“ Demonstrative ”
appointment.

“ Specific ”
appointment.

Appointment
to objects and non-objects in shares.

Where a testatrix, having a power of appointment in favour of her children, bequeathed pecuniary legacies to them, and appointed the settled fund, subject to those legacies, to X., it was held that the legacies were primarily payable out of the settled fund (g).

Where a testator has property of his own, and also a power of appointment (whether general or special) over settled property, and bequeaths sums of money to various persons, the question whether they are ordinary legacies, or whether they are appointments of the settled fund, depends on the wording of the will. The point is of importance with reference to the question of interest (h) as well as of ademption (i).

If a testator who has a special power of appointment appoints the fund to six people as tenants in common, of whom only three are objects of the power, each of them takes one-sixth, and the rest of the fund goes as unappointed. It is immaterial that the appointment is in form an appointment to a class (j). But if a fund is appointed to a number of persons in such a way that it is impossible to say how much goes to objects and how much to non-objects, the appointment fails altogether (k).

Where the appointment is to objects and non-objects as joint tenants, the rule does not seem to be settled. In accordance with the principle above stated, the appointment would be bad. But in Alexander v. Alexander (l), a testatrix, who had a power of appointment among her children, appointed a share for the benefit of her son Francis and his wife and children, and it was held by Sir T. Clarke, M.R., that Francis took the whole. The M.R. recognized the principle that where a power is so executed that “ the boundaries between the excess and execution are not distinguishable, it [the appointment] will be bad,” but he read the will as equivalent to an appointment to such of the appointees as were capable of taking. In Re Kerr’s Trusts (m), where the donee of a power to appoint among children, appointed the fund to her children E. and C., (E. being illegitimate), it was held by Jessel, M.R., that the testatrix’s obvious intention was to appoint the fund in moieties, and that (g) Disney v. Crosse, L. R., 2 Eq. 592.

(h) Davies v. Fowler, L. R., 16 Eq. 308, and other cases cited post, p. 855.

(i) Re Young, 52 L. T. 754.

(j) Sadler v. Pratt, 5 Sim. 632; per Kindersley, V.-C., in Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 136-7; Re Gratwick’s Trusts, L. R., 1 Eq. 177; Re Farncombe’s Trusts, 9 Ch. D. 652.

(k) Re Brown’s Trust, L. R., 1 Eq. 74.

(l) 2 Ves. sen. 640. See Sugden, V. & P. 504.

(m) 4 Ch. D., 600, where Humphrey v. Tayleur, Amb. 136, is referred to. Bruce v. Bruce, L. R., 11 Eq. 371, seems to have been erroneously decided on this point.

consequently C. took one half and the other half went in default of appointment. The M.R. disapproved of the decision in Alexander v. Alexander, which is, indeed, clearly bad law.

CHAP. XXIII.

The doctrine laid down in Lassence v. Tierney (n) and other cases—namely, that if there is an absolute gift, followed by directions or conditions which are void, the absolute gift takes effect—applies to appointments under powers; and consequently, if a testator makes an absolute appointment, and adds some direction or condition which is void (whether because it infringes the Rule against Perpetuities, or is in excess of the power, or for any other reason), the absolute appointment takes effect (o). But if the condition is not severable from the appointment, the latter is void in toto (p).

Rule in Lassence v.
Tierney.

If the testator makes an appointment in favour of an object, subject to conditions which are void, and then goes on to provide that if the conditions cannot take effect, he appoints the fund to X., an object of the power, this latter appointment takes effect (pp).

Alternative
appointment.

If the testator makes an appointment in favour of a person who is not an object of the power, and subject thereto appoints to objects, the latter appointment takes effect (q).

Invalid, followed by valid,
appointment.

So a valid appointment made by will is not impliedly revoked by an invalid appointment made by codicil (r).

Valid, followed by invalid,
appointment.

As a general rule, where a testator appoints a specific part of a fund to A. and makes no substitutional or residuary appointment which can apply to it, and the appointment fails to take effect in favour of A., the appointed sum goes to the persons entitled in default of appointment. To this rule there seems to be an exception in cases where the testator has made a mistake as to the amount of the fund. Thus, in Eales v. Drake (s), the testator thought he had a power of appointing 10,000*l.*, and he accordingly appointed various specific sums, amounting in all to 10,000*l.*, to various objects

Mistake
of testator as to amount of fund.

(n) 1 Mac. & G. 551. See Chap. XXXIII.

(o) Thornton v. Bright, 2 My. & C. 230; Fry v. Capper, Kay 163; Re Jeaffreson's Trusts, L. R., 2 Eq. 276; Douglass v. Waddell, 17 L. R. Ir. 384. Churchill v. Churchill, L. R., 5 Eq. 44; Cooke v. Cooke, 38 Ch. D. 202; Re Boyd, 63 L. T. 92; Stephens v. Gadsden, 20 Bea. 463; Gerrard v. Butler, 20 Bea. 541; Re Lord Sondes' Will, 2 Sm. & G. 416; Woolridge v. Woolridge, Johns. 63; Webb v. Sadler, L. R. 8 Ch. 419.

(p) Re Perkins, [1893] 1 Ch. 283, where Sadler v. Pratt, 5 Sim. 632, and Watt v. Creyke, 3 Sm. & G. 362, are commented on.

(pp) Re Crawshay, 43 Ch. D. 615.

(q) Carr v. Atkinson, L. R., 14 Eq. 397; Williamson v. Farwell, 35 Ch. D. 128, where the earlier authorities are examined. Compare Re Crawshay, supra.

(r) Duguid v. Fraser, 31 Ch. D. 449; Re Wells' Trusts, 42 Ch. D. 646.

(s) 1 Ch. D. 217. Compare the rules as to abatement in cases where the fund is insufficient, infra, p. 848.

CHAP. XXIII.

of the power; he really only had power to appoint 7,000*l.* One of the appointees predeceased him. It was held by Jessel, M.R., that the surviving appointees, and not the persons entitled in default of appointment, took the benefit of the lapse. It is not easy to justify the exception on principle, but no doubt it works substantial justice.

Implied gift to objects.

The cases where a gift to the objects of a power is implied in default of appointment are referred to in another chapter (t).

Effect of appointment.

An act or default on the part of a person, in respect of a share or interest to which he is entitled in default of appointment is, as a general rule, overridden by a subsequent exercise of the power by the donee (u).

Death of one tenant in common.

The doctrine of Lord St. Leonards, that where one of several persons to whom property is given in default of appointment dies in the lifetime of the testator, this defeats the power pro tanto, is discussed elsewhere (v).

Abatement.

Appointments are subject to abatement. Thus, if a testator appoints 9,900*l.* to A. and 10,000*l.* to B., having, in fact, only power to appoint 10,000*l.* in all, that sum is divided between A. and B. in the proportion of 99 to 100 (w).

Whether residue of fund abates.

If a testator appoints specific sums out of a fund to A. and B., and the "residue" to C., and the fund realizes less than the testator contemplated, the question whether the three abate rateably, or whether the deficiency falls primarily on the "residue" appointed to C., depends on whether the testator used the word "residue" (or some equivalent word) in the technical sense (x). A similar question arises when there is no appointment of the residue. These questions are discussed later (y).

Augmentation.

Conversely, an appointment of a specific sum out of a fund may operate to give the appointee a larger sum if the fund increases in amount (z).

Limitations in default of appointment.

Limitations in default of appointment, following a power which is void for remoteness, are not invalid unless they themselves contravene the Rule against Perpetuities (a). So a limitation in (t) Chap. XIX.

(u) Re Vizard, L. R., 1 Ch. 588; De Serre v. Clarke, L. R., 18 Eq. 587; Re Maddy's Estate, [1901] 2 Ch. 820. See Lord v. Bunn, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 98; Chambers v. Smith, 3 A. C. 795.

(v) Chap. XLIV.; Reade v. Reade, 5 Ves. 744.

(w) Laurie v. Clutton, 15 Bea. 65.

(x) Petre v. Petre, 14 Bea. 197; Harley v. Moon, 1 Dr. & Sm. 623; Miller v. Huddleston, L. R., 6 Eq. 65; De Lisle v. Hodges (appointment by deed), L. R., 17 Eq. 440; Re Currie, 36 W. R. 752.

(y) P. 859.

(z) See Re Cruddas, [1900] 1 Ch. 730, stated infra, p. 859.

(a) Re Abbott, [1893] 1 Ch. 54.

default of appointment may be good, although the power itself cannot be exercised, or fails by reason of the death of the donee in the testator's lifetime (b). CHAP. XXIII.

In some cases a question arises whether a proviso following a gift in default of appointment, is intended to limit the power, or only to apply in default of appointment (c). Effect of proviso.

"There is, it seems," says Mr. Jarman (d), "no necessary inference that the testator intends that a qualification, applied by him exclusively to the objects of the power, should be extended to the objects of the gift, expressly limited in default of appointment to a class of objects identical in other respects with that of the power." Thus, where (e) the devise was to A. for life, with remainder to such child and children of A. and him surviving, who should be educated as a member of the Church of England, in such parts and proportions, &c., as A. should appoint, and in default of such appointment, to the first son of A. who should be educated as aforesaid and the heirs of the body of such son, with divers remainders over: it was contended that as the power of appointment was restricted to "surviving" children, the gift over was to be construed with a like limitation; but Sir J. Leach, M.R., held that such a construction would be contrary to the force of the expressions used, and was not warranted by necessary or rational inference. Restriction of gift in default of
appointment.

In considering whether an appointment by will in exercise of a special power is good within the Rule against Perpetuities, the test is to place the appointment in the instrument creating the power, in lieu of the power itself (f), and it is, therefore, sometimes said that a will executing a special power is to be read into the instrument creating it. But this is not true for all purposes; in questions of lapse and ademption, for example, events subsequent to the execution of the will must be considered (g). Effect of subsequent events.

Where a testator, having a special power, appoints to the uses or trusts of an existing settlement, or "such of them as are capable Appointment
by reference.

(b) Edwards v. Saloway, 2 Ph. 625, and other cases cited in Chap. XIII. Webb v. Sadler, L. R., 8 Ch. 419, and Williamson v. Farwell, 35 Ch. D. 128, were both cases on settlements, but the principle appears to be the same.

(c) Re Simmons, 87 L. T. 594.

(d) First ed. p. 486.

(e) Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371. Mr. Jarman's citation of the case is not quite accurate.

(f) Sugden, Powers, 396. The rule as so stated is somewhat misleading, for it may be necessary to regard the state of facts at the time the appointment takes effect: ante, p. 318.

(g) Re Dowsett, [1901] 1 Ch. 398. The appointment does not relate back in point of time to the creation of the power: Farwell, 278.

CHAP. XXIII.

of taking effect," these words may be construed as meaning what the law allows to take effect (gg). The question is considered in Chapter XX.

Doctrine of election.

It is clear that the doctrine of election is applicable to cases of appointment under a power, so that if one having a special power by his will gives benefits out of his own property to the objects of the power, and appoints the subject of the power to strangers, or to an object of the power charged in favour of strangers, the former will be obliged to elect in favour of the latter (h). And a similar rule applies where the testator purports to exercise a power which he erroneously supposes himself to possess (i). But the doctrine of election may be excluded if the testator shews that he is aware that the appointment is of doubtful validity (j). And in cases where the appointment is made to the objects of the power absolutely, and the donee superadds a proviso or condition in favour of strangers to the power, though the proviso is void, no case of election arises. The Court reads the will as if all the passages in which such attempts are made were swept out of it, for all purposes; that is, not only so far as they attempt to regulate the quantum of interest to be enjoyed by the appointee, but also so far as they might otherwise have been relied upon as raising a case of election (k).

Where doctrine does not apply.

Where appointment is void for remoteness and there is a residuary appointment.

A residuary appointment that carries an ill-appointed portion of the fund is, in this respect, undistinguishable from an absolute appointment with ineffectual modifications. Thus, where the donee of a special power appointed part of the fund upon trusts that were void for remoteness, and the residue to A. and B., to whom also he bequeathed part of his own estate, it was held, first, that the ill-appointed part did not pass as in default of appointment, but (gg) Re Finch and Chew's Contract, [1903] 2 Ch. 486.

(h) Whistler v. Webster, 2 Ves. jun. 367; and see Kater v. Rogel, 4 Y. & C. 18; Prescott v. Edmunds, 4 L. J. (O. S.) Ch. 111; Fearon v. Fearon, 3 Ir. Ch. 19; Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469; Tomkyns v. Blane, 28 Beav. 422; Cooper v. Cooper, L. R., 6 Ch. 15, 7 H. L. 52; White v. White, 22 Ch. D. 555; Re Wheatley, 27 Ch. D. 606; King v. King, 13 L. R. Ir. 531.

(i) Re Brooksbank, 34 Ch. D. 160.

(j) Post, p. 853.

(k) Carver v. Bowles, 2 R. & My. 301; Church v. Kemble, 5 Sim. 525; Blacket v. Lamb, 14 Beav. 482; Woolridge v. Woolridge, Johns. 63; Churchill v.

Churchill, L. R., 5 Eq. 44; King v. King, 15 Ir. Ch. 479. See this class of cases distinguished, 22 Ch. D. at p. 559. The doubts expressed in Moriarty v. Martin, 3 Ir. Ch. 26, whether this is law except in cases where the proviso is in terms "so far as lawfully may be" (as in Carver v. Bowles) have not prevailed. And see the doctrine recognised in Roach v. Trood, 3 Ch. D. 444, where, however, it was excluded by the appointee having executed the appointment (which was by deed) and so accepted the proviso. As to the question whether the appointment is in the first instance absolute, vide ante, pp. 361 seq. Mr. Gray does not approve of the doctrine (Perp. §§ 557 seq.).

fell into the residue, and, secondly, that A. and B. were not bound to elect in favour of the remote objects. James, V.-C., collected from the authorities that: "The rule as to election is to be applied as between a gift under a will and a claim dehors the will and adverse to it, and is not to be applied as between one clause in a will and another clause in the same will" (l). It has been held that the same rule applies where the ill-appointed property goes as in default of appointment. Thus, in Re Warren's Trusts (m), a testatrix made an appointment which was void for remoteness, and bequeathed property of her own to the persons entitled in default of appointment, and it was held that they were not bound to elect. It is true that in Re Bradshaw (n) a different rule was applied. There the testator made an appointment which was void for remoteness, and bequeathed property of his own to A. E. B., one of the persons entitled in default of appointment, and it was held by Kekewich, J., that A. E. B. was bound to elect. The learned judge said that he did not see any difference in principle between an appointment which is void for remoteness and one which is void because it is made to persons who are not objects of the power. But this decision was disapproved by Farwell, J., in Re Oliver's Settlement (o), on the ground that the Rule against Perpetuities is a rule of public policy, and that the Court will not apply the doctrine of election in order to enable a testator to evade it. It is difficult to see why an attempt to evade the Rule against Perpetuities should be treated with greater severity than an attempt by a testator to give away property which does not belong to him. However, the principle thus laid down was acted on by Warrington, J., in Re Beale's Settlement (p), by Buckley, J., in Re Wright (q), and by Eve, J., and the Court of Appeal, in Re Nash (r),

Where appointment is void for remoteness and property goes as in default of appointment.

(l) Wollaston v. King, L. R., 8 Eq. 165; Wallinger v. Wallinger, L. R., 9 Eq. 301; Burton v. Newbery, 1 Ch. D. 242; Bizzey v. Flight, 3 Ch. D. 274.

(m) 26 Ch. D. 208; Re Hancock's Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 34.

(n) [1902] 1 Ch. 436.

(o) [1905] 1 Ch. 191.

(p) [1905] 1 Ch. 256.

(q) [1906] 2 Ch. 288.

(r) [1909] 2 Ch. 450; [1910] 1 Ch. 1. The doctrine of election in cases of appointments under powers is not very consistent or satisfactory. Mr. Gray (Perp. §§ 561 seq.) has some remarks on the cases which are well worth reading.

He approves of the decision in Re Bradshaw. Mr. Gray is a staunch defender of the modern Rule against Perpetuities, and his protest against the tendency of our courts to regard the Rule as so sacro-sanct that a conscious or unconscious attempt to evade it is something morally wrong, is therefore of especial weight. Mr. Theobald also has some excellent remarks on the decisions in Re Warren's Trusts, Re Bradshaw, and Re Oliver, in the preface to the 7th ed. of his treatise on Wills; they did not, however, commend themselves to the Court of Appeal in Re Nash.

CHAP. XXIII.

Express appointment by way of substitution.

There must be an actual disposition of property belonging to the person who is to be put to his election.

Whether married woman can raise case of election.

There must also be property of the testator to compensate the disappointed devisee.

Doubtful intention.

where the appointment was bad under the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell (q).

In Re Swinburne (r), a testatrix having a special power of appointment, by her will appointed part of the fund to persons who were, and part to persons who were not, objects of the power, and she declared that in case of the failure of any of the trusts therein-before declared, the parts as to which the trusts should fail should be held upon the trusts declared of the parts as to which the trusts should not fail : it was held that no case of election arose.

Where a person having a testamentary power of appointment over a fund which in default of appointment belongs to A., makes his will and thereby expressly declares that he abstains from making any appointment, on the ground that the fund will devolve (as he supposes) to B., and gives A. certain benefits by his will ; A. is not put to his election, since by taking both he disappoints no actual disposition of the testator : all that can be said is that the testator was mistaken (s).

The question whether a married woman can raise a case of election against her husband, next of kin, or other persons, by exercising a power of appointment, is discussed in Chapter XVI.

A case of election arises where a testator, whether under a power or not, gives property which belongs to one person to another, and gives to the former some property of the testator ; but there must be some " free disposable property " given to the person who is put to his election, which, if he elects to take against the will, may be laid hold of to compensate the disappointed beneficiary (t). The doctrine is therefore inapplicable where the will deals only with property subject to special powers of appointment. Thus, where a man had an exclusive power of appointing an estate to his children and grandchildren, and an exclusive power of appointing a fund to his children only ; and appointed the estate to some of his children, and the fund to his children and to a grandchild. It was held that the children were not bound to elect between giving effect to the appointment of a share in the fund to the grandchild and rejecting the estate appointed to them under the first power (u).

Where a testator purports to exercise a power of appointment in favour of persons who are not objects of it, and gives his own (q) Ante, p. 284. See Addenda, where Re Nash is referred to.

(r) 27 Ch. D. 696.

(s) Langslow v. Langslow, 21 Beav. 552 ; see also Boz v. Barrett, L. R., 3

Eq. 244 ; Re Jack, [1899] 1 Ch. 374.

(t) Per Lord Loughborough, Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. jun. 350.

(u) Re Fowler's Trusts, 27 Beav. 362 ; Re Aplin, 13 W. R. 1062.

property to the persons entitled in default of appointment, the doctrine of election is excluded if the testator appoints "so far as he lawfully can," or provides for the case of the appointment failing (v). CHAP. XXIII.

Questions of election may also arise in cases where a testator having a power of appointment does not dispose of his own property in favour of the objects of the power. Thus, in Re Wells' Trusts (w), there was a marriage settlement under which several appointments by deed and will were made: in the result the eldest son of the marriage took the settled real estate by title paramount, adversely to the settlement, and also took part of the settled personalty under the appointments made by deed: it was held that the terms of the appointments shewed that the benefits thereby appointed to the son were intended to be in addition to the real estate, and that he was not bound to elect between them (x). One of the appointments, however, was made in favour of persons not objects of the power, and this share consequently passed by the will of the appointor, by which the residue of the settlement funds was appointed to the eldest son: it was held that he was bound to elect between the real estate and the appointed residue. Other cases of election.

Where there is a power to appoint to a class, and a gift to the class in default of appointment, and the will creating the power contains a provision directing that members of the class to whom the testator has made advances during his lifetime shall bring them into account, this operates only on such part of the fund, if any, as remains unappointed (y). Hotchpot.

A hotchpot clause will not, as a general rule, be implied, either in the will creating the power or in the will by which it is exercised, the result being that if part of the fund is appointed to one of the class, and the rest of the fund is unappointed, the appointee is entitled to share in the unappointed part without bringing the appointed part into hotchpot, even if the appointor expressly says that he makes no appointment of the unappointed part in order that it may pass directly to the other members of the class (z). In the case of appointments by deed, an appointment to a member

(v) Church v. Kemble, 5 Sim. 525; Re Swinburne, 27 Ch. D. 696. Compare Re Wells' Trusts, 42 Ch. D. 646.

(w) 42 Ch. D. 646.

(x) A question also arose whether s. 24 of the Wills Act had the effect of making the appointment by will revoke one of the appointments by deed. As to this, see ante, p. 839.

(y) Brocklehurst v. Flint, 16 Bea. 100.

(z) Re Jack, [1899] 1 Ch. 374; Langslow v. Langslow, 21 Bea. 552. As to the time for valuing the appointed share, see Re Kelly's S. T. [1910] 1 Ch. 78.

CHAP. XXIII.

of the class "as his share" does not imply a hotchpot clause (a). But whether the appointment is made by deed or will, the appointor may, of course, shew, expressly or impliedly, an intention to exclude an appointee from sharing in the unappointed part; in other words, this operates as an implied appointment to the other objects (b).

In Re Buckley's Trusts (bb) a testator who had a power of appointment among his children, with a limitation in default to the children equally (but no hotchpot clause), appointed real estate unequally among his children, and provided that if any of his children should die in his lifetime leaving issue living at his death, then no child taking under the appointment should be entitled to any share "so lapsing," without bringing his or her appointed share into hotchpot; one of the daughters died in the testator's lifetime, and it was held by Kekewich, J., that the hotchpot clause was operative, and that her heir at law was entitled to a share.

Satisfaction.

Where a person has a power of appointment by deed or will, and he makes one appointment by deed and another by will to the same person, the question may arise whether either of the appointments revokes the other (c). Another question which also sometimes arises is whether the appointments are cumulative or substitutionary, or whether one operates as a satisfaction or ademption of the other (d). Where the testator is the father of or stands in loco parentis towards the appointee, it seems that the rule against double portions applies (e): in other cases it is a question of intention (f). In Re Ashton (g), the donee of a special power made a will by which she directed the trustees to divide the fund equally between her three children; by irrevocable deeds-poll executed after the will she appointed a third to one of the children: it was held by Stirling, J., that the child to whom the appointment was made by deed was entitled to share equally with the other children under the will. On appeal, evidence was adduced to shew that the child in question (a married woman) had in the lifetime of the Double portions.

(a) Wilson v. Piggott, 2 Ves. jun. 351; Wombwell v. Hanrott, 14 Bea. 143. See Walmsley v. Vaughan, 1 De G. & J. 114.

(b) Alloway v. Alloway, 4 Dr. & War. 380, where Fortescue v. Gregor, 5 Ves. 553, is referred to. See Foster v. Cautley, 6 D. M. & G. 55; Chune v. Apjohn, 17 Ir. Ch. 25; Armstrong v. Lynn, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 186.

(bb) [1893] W. N. 95.

(c) Re Wells' Trusts, ante, p. 839.

(d) As to the distinction between ademption and satisfaction, see Chap. XXXII.

(e) Montague v. Montague, 15 Bea. 565.

(f) Re Tancred's Settlement, [1903] 1 Ch. 715, explaining England v. Lavers, L. R., 3 Eq. 63.

(g) [1897] 2 Ch. 574, [1898] 1 Ch. 142.

testatrix accepted the third appointed to her by the deeds-poll in prepayment or anticipation of the third appointed to her by the will, and the Court of Appeal held that she had done so (h).

CHAP. XXIII.

A sum appointed by will out of a trust fund under a general power of appointment, is looked upon as the same thing as an ordinary legacy, and only carries interest from the expiration of a year from the testator's death (i), unless it is payable at a time fixed by the will, in which case it carries interest from that time (j); or unless it is directed to be severed from the rest of the fund immediately after the death of the testator, in which case it carries interest from that time (k); or unless it is payable out of a reversionary fund, in which case it carries interest from the time when the fund falls into possession (l). And where a testatrix, having a general power of appointment over a sum of 5,000*l.* and certain stocks, appointed to A. and B. the 5,000*l.* and such portion of the stocks as would make up 9,000*l.*: it was held that both appointments, that of the 5,000*l.* and that of the stocks to be appropriated to make up the 9,000*l.*, were specific, and that consequently the whole 9,000*l.* carried the income from the death of the testatrix (m).

Interest on appointed sum.

A contingent appointment of a sum of money under a special power does not, as a general rule, carry interest. Consequently, where a fund is given subject to a special power of appointment in favour of the donee's children, and in default in trust for all the children who attain twenty-one, and the donee appoints part of the fund to a child under age contingently on its attaining twenty-one, the income of that part, during the minority of the child, goes to the children who have attained twenty-one (n).

Contingent appointment under special power does not carry interest.

In Long v. Ovenden (o), the testatrix had a special power of appointment among her children; she appointed a share to her son A. for life, and "from and after" his death to her grandson B. (not an object of the power) as and when he should attain the age of twenty-one years, and if he should die under that age then to the testatrix's daughter C. The son survived the testatrix, and Intermediate income.

(h) Compare the rule where part of the fund is unappointed, ante, p. 853.

(i) Tatham v. Drummond, 2 H. & M. 262.

(j) Gibbon v. Chaytor (Re Gyles), [1907] 1 Ir. R. 65.

(k) Dundas v. Wolfe Murray, 1 H. & M. 425.

(l) Re Ludlam, 63 L. T. 330. Compare Lord v. Lord, L. R. 2 Ch. 782, where the appointed sums were not payable until certain litigation should terminate.

(m) Re Marten, [1901] 1 Ch. 370; Davies v. Fowler, L. R., 16 Eq. 308.

(n) Gotch v. Foster, L. R., 5 Eq. 311. As to interest on contingent legacies, see Chap. XXX.

(o) 16 Ch. D. 691. See Re Clements [1894] 1 Ch. 665.

CHAP. XXIII.

died before B. attained twenty-one. It was held by Jessel, M.R., both on principle and by reason of the words "from and after," that if the appointment to B. had been valid he would have been entitled to the intermediate income on attaining twenty-one, and that consequently, in the event of his dying under that age, C. would be entitled to it.

Special
power exercised by appointment
to trustees.

Where a person having a special power over property vested in trustees, appoints it to other trustees for the objects of the power, the question whether the original trustees ought to transfer the property to the trustees appointed by the donee of the power, depends to a great extent on the terms of the instrument creating the power: if it shews an intention that the original trustees should execute the trust, they are bound to do so (q).

If the donee of a special power of appointment over real estate appoints it to trustees upon trust to sell and hold the proceeds upon trust for the objects of the power, this vests the legal estate in them, and they will be the proper persons to sell, although the trustees of the instrument creating the power may have an express power of sale (r). The same principle applies where the limitations are equitable (s).

Costs and expenses.

Where appointments of specific sums, parts of a trust fund, are made, and the residue of the fund is then appointed, the probate or estate duty, and the expenses of administering the fund, ought, as a general rule, to be borne rateably by all the appointees (t). But, of course, if an appointment is made of a "clear" sum, or a sum to be paid "without any deduction," the expenses must be paid out of the other part of the fund (u).

The same rule applies, in general, to the appointed and unappointed parts of a fund (v).

Law of domicil.

VIII.—Construction of Appointments.—The general principle, that a will is construed in accordance with the law of the (q) Busk v. Aldam, L. R., 19 Eq. 16; Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm, 30 Ch. D. 172; Scotney v. Lomer, 31 Ch. D. 380; Re Tyssen, [1894] 1 Ch. 56.

(r) Re Paget, [1898] 1 Ch. 290, following Kenworthy v. Bate, 6 Ves. 793, and Cowx v. Foster, 1 J. & H. 30.

(s) Re Redgate, [1903] 1 Ch. 356; Re Adams' Trustees and Frost, [1907] 1 Ch. 695.

(t) Re Chisholm, [1902] 1 Ch. 457;

Re Saunders, [1898] 1 Ch. 17; Re Coxwell's Trusts, [1910] 1 Ch. 63; Warren v. Postlethwaite, 2 Coll. 108; Re Shaw, [1895] 1 Ch. 343.

(u) Ibid. See also Re Currie, 36 W. R. 752, and Davies v. Fowler, L. R., 16 Eq. 308, where the words of the will were treated as special.

(v) Trollope v. Routledge, 1 De G. & Sm. 662; Moore v. Dixon, 15 Ch. D. 566; Re Lambert, 39 Ch. D. 626.

testator's domicile, cannot always be strictly applied to testamentary appointments, because many foreign systems of law do not recognize powers as distinct from ownership. It has accordingly been decided that sect. 27 of the Wills Act does not apply to the will of a person domiciled abroad, unless it contains words introducing the statutory rule of construction (vv). If possible, therefore, the will of a domiciled foreigner, who has a testamentary power of appointment over a trust fund, subject to the jurisdiction of the English courts, will be construed according to English law (w).

General rules of construction.

As a general rule, the same canons of construction apply to an appointment under a power as if it were a direct gift (x), so that (for example) such questions as whether the property subject to the power is described with sufficient accuracy in the appointment (y); or whether an appointee takes a vested or a contingent interest (z); or whether a contingent remainder created by appointment is a legal limitation and therefore bad for want of an estate of freehold to support it (a); or how a class should be ascertained (b); or whether appointees take per capita or per stirpes (c), are governed by the ordinary rules of construction. And the question whether an appointment in fee is defeated by an executory limitation which fails to take effect, is decided in the same way as if the limitations were created by direct devise (d). The doctrine of cy-près applies to appointments of land by will (e). And the presumption in favour of the vesting of portions applies to appointments of settled funds to children (f).

But there is a difference between a direct gift and an appointment under a special power in this respect, that if a particular (vv) Re D'Este, [1903] 1 Ch. 898. The decision in Re Scholefield, [1905] 2 Ch. 408, was appealed against, but the case was compromised, [1907] 1 Ch. 664.

(w) See Re Harman, [1894] 3 Ch. 607; Re Price, [1900] 1 Ch. 442, ante, p. 801.

(x) Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. sen. 135; Easum v. Appleford, 5 My. & Cr. 56. Freme v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. at p. 504.

(y) The question often arises whether an appointment of real estate by a generic or specific description, passes real estate subject to a trust for sale, the testator having a power of appointment over the proceeds; and conversely, whether a gift of personal property passes money which is subject to a trust for investment in land: see Adams v. Austen, 3 Russ. 461; Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Mer. 521; Gillies v.

Longlands, 4 De. G. & S. 372 and other cases cited in Chap. XXII; Re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348; Cooper v. Martin, L. R., 3 Ch. 47, and other cases cited in Chap. XXXV.

(z) Doe d. Vessey v. Wilkinson, 2 T. R. 209; Re Shuckburgh's Settlement, [1901] 2 Ch. 794.

(a) Cunliffe v. Brancker, 3 Ch. D. 393, post, Chap. XXXVIII. Whitby v. Mitchell (ante, p. 284) was the case of an appointment by deed.

(b) Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Drew. 73, post, p. 859.

(c) Baker v. Baker, 6 Ha. 269.

(d) Doe v. Eyre, 5 C. B. 713. See Chap. XXXVIII.

(e) Line v. Hall, 43 L. J. Ch. 107.

(f) Re Crofton's Trusts, 7 L. R. Ir. 279.

CHAP. XXIII.

interest is appointed to a stranger, the interests in remainder are not accelerated, unless the testator shews an intention to that effect (z).

“Capable of taking effect.”

And where an appointment under a special power is made by reference to such of the provisions of an existing settlement as are “capable of taking effect,” this shows an intention to conform to the rules of law applying to appointments under special powers (a).

“Specific” and “demonstrative” appointments.

The question whether a gift of money or stock by will is a general legacy, or is payable out of a fund over which the testator has a power of appointment, so as to have the nature of a specific or demonstrative legacy, has been already referred to (b).

Whether intention to appoint can be implied.

There seems, moreover, to be a difference between an appointment and a direct gift in this respect, that where a testator has a power of appointment, with a gift over in default, an intention to exercise the power will not be implied in cases where a gift would be implied if the property were the testator's own. Thus in Henderson v. Constable (c), a testatrix who had a special power of appointment over a fund of 2,500*l.* appointed several sums amounting to 1,630*l.* to certain persons, and a further sum of 670*l.* to A., and then directed that the said sums should be paid at the decease of A., except the sum appointed to him, which was to be paid at the testatrix's decease: it was held that A. was not entitled to a life interest in the 1,630*l.* by implication, but that the income of it during his life went as in default of appointment. Lord Langdale remarked: “There is a gift to persons in default of appointment, and there must be a distinct appointment to defeat the gift over.”

Construction of appointment not affected by terms of power.

In Re Adams (d), a person had power to appoint real estate to his sons for an estate not exceeding a life estate with remainder to their issue in tail; by a codicil referring to the power he appointed to “E. R. A. and his issue,” E. R. A. being one of his sons: it was held that the appointment could not be construed so as to take effect in accordance with the power, and that it failed except so far as it gave E. R. A. a life estate.

If property is settled upon trust for A. for life, and after his death upon trust for such of his children living at the death of B. as B. shall appoint, and B. by will appoints to the children of A. generally, the Court is bound to construe the appointment in the same manner

(z) Crozier v. Crozier, 3 Dr. & W. 353; Craven v. Brady, L. R., 4 Eq. 209.

(a) Re Finch and Chew's Contract, [1903] 2 Ch. 486.

(b) Ante, p. 812.

(c) 5 Bea. 297.

(d) 94 L. T. 720 (C. A., reversing Buckley, J., 54 W. R. 42).

as if it were a bequest of the testator's own property ; it cannot put a different construction on the words in order to make them fit the terms of the power (e).

CHAP. XXIII.

But where the testator's language is ambiguous, it seems that the construction of an appointment may be affected by the terms of the instrument creating the power. Thus in Re Crofton's Trusts (f) the testator had a power of appointment among his issue, and in default of appointment the fund was to go to issue who attained twenty-one or (being daughters) married ; he appointed the fund to his daughters, with a gift over "in case any of them die" : this was construed as meaning "if any of them die under twenty-one or without having been married." So if A. has power to appoint so much of certain trust funds as he may be "entitled or presumptively entitled to," an appointment by him of his "share" may, it seems, carry a share which accrues after his death (g).

Construction affected by instrument creating power.

A will exercising a special or general power of appointment must be construed according to the rules of law applicable to wills at the time of its execution, although the power may have been created before, but exercised after, an alteration in the law as to the construction of wills (h).

Alteration in law.

An appointment of a "clear" or "net" sum, whether under a general or a special power, entitles the appointee to have the legacy or succession duty and other expenses paid out of the balance of the fund (j).

"Clear" or "net" sum.

If a person having a power of appointing a fund of 30,000*l.*, appoints "the sum of 6,000*l.*, part of the said sum of 30,000*l.*," to A., and various other sums, exhausting the whole amount, to other persons, the last being described as "the remainder of the said sum of 30,000*l.*," this is equivalent to appointing the fund in aliquot shares, so that if the investments representing it are worth more than 30,000*l.*, each appointee takes proportionately more than the nominal amount allotted to him (k).

Where "sum" means an aliquot share.

If a testator has a power of appointment over three settled estates, A., B., and C., and appoints the A. estate to X., and "all other the hereditaments comprised in the settlement" to Y., the Specific and residuary appointments, &c.

(e) Harvey v. Stracey, 1 Dr. p. 126. As to the effect of the appointment in that case, see supra.

(f) 7 L. R. Ir. 279.

(g) Re Denton, 63 L. T. 105. The decision is not conclusive, because the accrued share would in any case have passed under the residuary bequest.

(h) Freem v. Clement, 18 Ch. D. 499.

(j) See the cases cited supra, p. 856, notes (t) and (u).

(k) Re Cruddas, [1900] 1 Ch. 730. See Butler v. Blackall, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 405.

CHAP. XXIII.

latter appointment is specific and not residuary, so that if the appointment of the A. estate to X. fails, it goes as unappointed (l). So if a testator has a power of appointing a specific fund, say 1000*l.*, and appoints 200*l.* to A. and 200*l.* to B., and the residue," or "rest," or "remainder," or "balance," or "surplus" to C., this is prima facie an appointment to C. of the specific sum of 600*l.* (m). If, therefore, the appointment to A. fails, C. cannot claim the 200*l.* (n).

Use of "residue,"
&c., in technical sense.

But it may appear from the context that the testator uses "residue" in the technical sense, so as to include specific appointments which fail (o), or he may appoint the residue of the fund "after payment of," or "subject to," the appointments of specific sums, and then any of these which fail will, as a general rule, pass to the residuary appointee (p), unless the Court can find some indication of a contrary intention (q). The case of Re Jeaffreson's Trusts (r) illustrates the distinction. There the donee of a special power appointed 100*l.*, part of the fund, to a stranger, and other sums to objects of the power, and appointed the balance, amounting to 260*l.*, to pay her own debts, and "should any surplus remain" she gave it to E., one of the objects of the power: it was held that the 100*l.* was unappointed and did not pass to E., but that the balance of 260*l.* was well appointed to E., free from the charge of debts (s). So if a testator gives all his residue, including property over which he has any power of disposal, to persons who are objects of a special power, this will include such part of the property subject to the power as is comprised in an appointment which has failed (t).

(l) Re Broun, 1 K. & J. 522. See Re Mason, [1901] 1 Ch. 619; Mason v. Ogden, [1903] A. C. 1, and other cases cited post, Chap. XXV.

(m) Per Kindersley, V.-C., in Harley v. Moon, 1 Dr. & Sm. p. 626; approved by Wood, L. J., in Baker v. Farmer, L. R., 3 Ch. p. 540. Compare the cases on bequests of specific parts of a fund in Chap. XXX.

(n) Easum v. Appleford, 10 Sim. 274, 5 Myl. & Cr. 56; Re Jeaffreson's Trusts, L. R., 2 Eq. 283; Ratcliffe v. Hampson, 1 Jur. N. S. 1104. Lakin v. Lakin, 11 Jur. N. S. 522, was an appointment by deed. In Champney v. Davy, 11 Ch. D. 958, Hall, V.-C., said that in his opinion the construction of a particular residuary gift is not affected by the presence or absence of a general residuary gift.

(o) Carter v. Taggart, 16 Sim. 423; Re Meredith's Trusts, 3 Ch. D. 757.

(p) Re Harries' Trust, Johns. 199. In that case the construction was aided by the fact that the fund was not definite.

(q) See Miller v. Huddleston, L. R., 6 Eq. 65, decided by Malins, V.-C., on the assumption of what the testatrix would have intended if she had known that the fund would prove insufficient.

(r) L. R., 2 Eq. 276; followed in Douglass v. Waddell, 17 L. R. Ir. 384.

(s) In Re Bringloe, 26 L. T. 58, a testator had settled part of a fund upon trust for A. for life, then for such persons as the testator should appoint, and in default for his next of kin; by his will he confirmed the settlement, and gave the residue of the fund to X.: it was held that this did not exercise the power of appointment over the settled fund.

(t) Re Hunt's Trusts, 31 Ch. D. 308. referred to ante, p. 828, u. (t). Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. sen. 135, is usually cited on this point, but on examination of Again, the general rule of construction above stated does not apply if the fund is of unascertained amount, or is so treated by the testator. Thus, in Falkner v. Butler (u), where a testatrix, having under her deceased husband's will special power to appoint the residue of his personal estate, appointed several legacies, including one to a stranger, and then appointed "the residue of her husband's estate after payment of the legacies": it was held that the residue carried the ill-appointed legacy. It is to be observed that here, although when the testatrix made her will her husband's estate may have consisted of an ascertained sum, she did not so refer to it. The material circumstance was, therefore, wanting to show that she was parcelling out a fixed sum in definite proportions.

CHAP. XXIII.

Effect of gift of fund of unascertained amount.

And in Petre v. Petre (v), where a testator, having a general power over a sum of 7,100*l.* stock, gave certain money legacies thereout, and the residue, after deducting the legacies, to his son; the fund having by the appointment become subject to debts, and the amount it would produce by a sale being uncertain till it was sold, Sir J. Romilly held the gift of the residue to be not specific, but merely residuary, and subject to all the incidents of a common residue. After adverting to the rule in Page v. Leapingwell, he continued: "In this case, so far from knowing the amount of the fund, the testator could have no conception of it; for it was impossible to ascertain the amount until the fund had been realized by a sale, and the charges on it known. If, in this case, the testator thought he was dealing with 7,100*l.* sterling, and he had divided it into different proportions, the loss would then fall on all the persons interested in proportion to their shares, although the last portion was called 'the residue,' but that is not the case here" (w).

Where ascertained fund is subject to unascertained charges.

An express charge of debts on the fund shews that the testator does not mean the legatee of "residue" to take a definite proportion of the fund, the debts being of altogether uncertain amount (x). But it does not appear that the charge of debts which, by a rule of law only, and not by express provision, attached to the fund in Petre v. Petre, was essential to the decision in that case, even if it could

Charge of debts.

R. L. 1748 B., fo. 215, it appears not to be in point, inasmuch as the will contained a general residuary bequest, under which, and not under any gift of particular residue, the lapsed fund passed. Compare Wright v. Weston, 26 Bea. 429.

(u) Amb. 514. See the remarks of Wood, V.-C., on this case in Re Harries'

Trust, Johns. p. 206.

(v) 14 Bea. 197.

(w) See Page v. Leapingwell, and the other cases on gifts of a particular residue, post, Chap. XXIX. Compare Re Currie, 36 W. R. 752.

(x) Harley v. Moon, 1 Dr. & Sm. 623; Baker v. Farmer, L. R., 3 Ch. 537; Champney v. Davy, 11 Ch. D. 949.

CHAP. XXIII.

properly be permitted to weigh. In the case put by the M.R. at the close of the remarks cited above from his judgment, the debts would still have been a charge on the fund ; yet, he said, in that case the residue would have borne only a proportion of the loss. Hence it would seem that wherever there is a gift of money legacies to be raised and paid out of a specified sum of stock, followed by a gift of the " residue," this will be a true residue, the amount of it being necessarily uncertain until the stock is actually sold (y). The intention is placed beyond doubt if, to a proper description of the fund, the testator adds " or other the stocks or securities in which the same may hereafter be invested " (z).

The rules above stated apply both to general and to special powers (a). In the case of general powers it will be remembered that if a specific appointment out of a fund fails, and does not pass by an appointment of the " residue " of the fund under the rule stated by Kindersley, V.-C., in Harley v. Moon (supra), it will pass by the general residuary bequest, if any, contained in the will.

Where there is no appointment of the residue.

In Booth v. Alington (b), a person had a power of appointing a sum of 120,000*l.* ; she appointed 30,000*l.*, " part of the said sum of 120,000*l.*," to A., and made no appointment of the residue ; the estate of the donor of the power was insufficient to provide the whole of the 120,000*l.*, and it was contended that A.'s 30,000*l.* ought to abate rateably with the 90,000*l.* which went in default of appointment : it was held that this was not so, and that the words " part of the said sum " were merely meant to designate the fund out of which the 30,000*l.* was to be paid ; they indicated a definite sum, and not an aliquot share of the fund.

In Barry v. Barry (c), a different construction prevailed. There the testator had a non-exclusive power of appointing among his children a sum of money secured by a policy ; he made a will by which he recited the power and the amount payable under the policy, and appointed portions of it to all the objects of the power except one child, X., leaving a small part unappointed. At the date of the will he had wrongfully pledged the policy to secure a (y) See Vivian v. Mortlock, 21 Beav. 252 ; Carter v. Taggart, 16 Sim. 423 ; Re Currie, 36 W. R. 752.

(z) De Lisle v. Hodges, L. R., 17 Eq. 440.

(a) See per Hall, V.-C., in Champney v. Davy, 11 Ch. D. at p. 958 ; per Rigby, L.J., in Re Mason, [1901] 1 Ch. at p. 625. In Farwell on Powers (p. 247)

a doubt is expressed whether special powers resemble general powers in this respect.

(b) 6 D. M. & G. 613, where Chambers v. Chambers, Mose. 333, is commented on. Compare the cases on specific legacies out of a fund. Chap. XXX.

(c) Ir. R., 10 Eq. 397.

debt due by him, and in the result the amount recovered under the policy was insufficient to satisfy the appointments. It was held that the appointments were good, apparently on the ground that the residue left unappointed was to be treated as if the testator had specifically appointed it to X., so that it abated rateably with the sums expressly appointed. The decision seems correct (d).

CHAP. XXIII.

(d) Compare Walpole v. Aphorp, L. R., 4 Eq. 37.

CHAPTER XXIV.

TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES (a).

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Appointment of Trustee	864	IV. Executory Trusts	903
II. What Words will create a Trust:—		V. Undisclosed Trusts	907
(1) Preliminary	865	VI. Trusts and Powers frequently inserted in Wills . 912
(2) Precatory Trusts	868	VII. Devolution of Trusts and Powers — Disclaimer—
(3) Gifts for a Specified Purpose	882	Survivorship, &c.	933
(4) Directions as to Employment in Office, &c.	898	VIII. Failure of Trust	936
III. Trusts without a Definite Object	900

Conditional
appointment.

I.—Appointment of Trustee.—A person may be appointed trustee contingently, or subject to a condition; as, for example, “if and when he” (being abroad) “shall return to England”: it was held in a case of this kind, that residence in England for six months fulfilled the condition (b).

Trustees of another trust.

It sometimes happens that a testator appoints as his trustees “the persons who shall at my death” be the trustees of some other trust: in such a case it seems that the persons who are acting as trustees of that trust answer the description, although not formally so appointed (c).

Corporation.

A corporation can be a trustee, if its powers authorize it to accept the office; and it can be one of several trustees (d).

Judicial trustee.

It may be noted that under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, the Court has power to appoint a person (called a judicial trustee) to be trustee jointly with any other person, or as sole trustee, either in addition to or in substitution for any existing trustees, and that the executor of a deceased person is a trustee within the meaning of the act.

There are various kinds of public or official trustees.

(a) This chapter is new, except so far as it incorporates part of the chapter on “Gifts void for Uncertainty,” which in previous editions included the subject of precatory trusts. Resulting trusts are treated of in Chap. XXI.

(b) Re Arbib and Class, [1891] 1 Ch. 601.

(c) Re Waidenis, 77 L. J. Ch. 12. As to this case, see post, p. 935, n.

(d) Bodies Corporate (Joint Tenancy) Act, 1899.

Under the Charitable Trusts Acts, 1855 and 1887, the secretary of the Board of Charity Commissioners is a corporation sole, under the name of the "Official Trustee of Charity Lands," for the purpose of holding lands directed to be vested in him by an order of the Court or of the Board, in accordance with the provisions of the acts. There are also "Official Trustees of Charitable Funds," who are a corporation aggregate for the purpose of holding stocks, shares, &c., belonging to charities. The Official Trustees deal with the property vested in them in such manner as the Board direct.

CHAP. XXIV.

Official trustees of charity lands, &c.

The office of Public Trustee has been established by the Public Trustee Act, 1906. The Public Trustee may be appointed by a testator to be an ordinary trustee, or to be a "custodian trustee." In the latter case the trust property is vested in him, but the management of the trust remains vested in the other trustees (the "managing trustees"). The Public Trustee is also authorised to accept probates of wills (b), but not any trust exclusively for religious or charitable purposes.

Public
Trustee.

The Charitable Trusts Acts expressly declare that the Official Trustee of Charity Lands has power to take and hold land, but the Public Trustee Act contains no such provision. A licence in mortmain has, however, been granted to him (c).

II.—What Words will create a Trust.—(1) Preliminary.—A trust, like any other testamentary disposition, may be void for uncertainty (d).

Uncertainty.

Although a testator can create a trust without setting out the terms of it in his will (e), yet if he gives property to A. upon the trusts "declared by my will" or "to be declared by a codicil," and no trusts are, in fact, so declared, the gift fails (f); so if he gives property to A. upon such trusts as he (the testator) may declare by some existing or future document the gift fails, unless the writing is duly executed as a testamentary document or is so referred to as to be incorporated in the will (g).

Unfulfilled intention to declare trusts.

(b) Public Trustee Rules, 1907.

(c) This licence is dated 1st January 1908, the day on which the act came into operation, but it appears that the actual grant was not made until about six months later, and the question has been raised whether land devised or conveyed to him in the interval has not been forfeited to the Crown: Law Quart. Review, xxv. 125.

(d) See Chap. XIV., ante, p. 481.

(e) Post, "Undisclosed Trusts."

(f) Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood, 3 Ha. 131, 1 H. L. C. 272; Aston v. Wood, L. R., 6 Eq. 419.

(g) Smart v. Prujean, 6 Ves. 560; University College of North Wales v. Taylor, [1907] P. 228, [1908] P. 140; Re Thistlethwaite, 11 T. L. R. 206; ante, p. 134. These cases must be

[CHAP. XXIV.]

Where intended trust is secondary purpose of gift.

On the other hand, the testator may so express himself as to shew an intention to give property to a person beneficially, subject to any trust which the testator may hereafter impose, he not having made up his mind whether he will do so or not. Thus in Fenton v. Hawkins (h), the testator gave his residue to A., B., and C. as tenants in common, subject, however, to such disposition thereof as he might by any deed or writing duly executed thereafter direct: he made no such disposition, and it was held that A., B., and C. took beneficially.

Resulting trust.

Where the gift is complete on the face of the will, and it appears from it that the testator intended the property to be held on trust, the effect in any case is to prevent the devisee or legatee from taking beneficially; if therefore the trust which the testator intended to create is void ab initio, or fails by reason of lapse or otherwise, there is a resulting trust (a).

Whether gift is beneficial or fiduciary.

The question whether a gift is intended to be beneficial or fiduciary is often extremely difficult to decide, and the authorities, as might be expected, are not altogether harmonious.

The fact that property is given to a person "absolutely," or "in the most absolute manner," although it primâ facie imports a beneficial gift (b), does not necessarily prevent the inference, from the context, that he was intended to be a trustee. Thus in Bernard v. Minshull (c) a testatrix appointed a fund to her husband "absolutely," and went on to request that after reserving out of it for himself certain specified benefits, he would make such disposition of the remainder "as he may deem most desirable to carry out my wishes often expressed to him by word"; it was held that he was excluded from all benefit in the remainder of the fund.

Disposition at discretion of donee.

Where property is given to a person for such purposes as he thinks fit, or to be disposed of as he thinks right, or the like, this is primâ facie a beneficial gift (cc). And even if the devisee or legatee holds a public or official position, such a gift does not necessarily give rise to the inference that he takes as a trustee (d).

distinguished from those in which the testator makes a complete gift, and accompanies it by the expression of an intention to impose regulations or conditions, which intention he fails to carry out: Yates v. University College, L. R., 7 H. L. 438; supra, pp. 226 seq.

(h) 9 W. R. 300.

(a) Chap. XXI., ante, pp. 704 seq.; post, p. 880. So if the trust fails for uncertainty; ante, p. 481.

(b) Ante, pp. 716-17, where also the effect of such words as "for their own use and benefit" is discussed.

(c) Johns. 276; Gray v. Gray, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 218, infra. In Bernard v. Minshull the husband took the remainder of the fund as residuary legatee.

(cc) O'Brien v. Condon, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 51.

(d) Re Harbison (Morris v. Larkin), [1902] 1 Ir. R. 103, stated post, p. 897. This case is near the line. Compare the cases of charitable gifts, ante, pp. 223 seq.

CHAP. XXIV.

If a testator bequeaths his residuary personal estate to persons who are his executors, the question whether they take beneficially or not is a question of construction on the whole will (e). And the same rule applies to devises of real estate (f). But if a testator gives his residuary personalty to his executors for such purposes as they think fit, they hold it as trustees for the next of kin (g).

Gift to executors.

In other cases, where property is given to a person subject to the performance of certain trusts, or for purposes which do not exhaust the beneficial interest, the question whether he is a trustee, or whether he takes beneficially subject to the performance of those trusts or purposes, is one of construction (h).

Gift for specified purposes.

“Technical language,” as Mr. Jarman points out (i), “is not necessary to create a trust. It is enough that the intention is apparent.” Thus, if a testator gives property to his executors, “in and for the consideration” of paying the rents and profits to his wife for life, this shews that it is given to them in trust and not beneficially (j). And if a testator devises land “for this intent and purpose and upon this condition,” these words are sufficient to create a trust (k). Similarly a bequest to a married woman for her sole and separate use, and to be appropriated by her amongst her children in such shares as she shall think proper, creates a trust in favour of the children (l). So if a gift of property to A. and B., “in the most absolute manner,” is followed by a declaration of the testator’s intention that they shall at their discretion allocate the property to certain persons, this will create a trust (m).

Technical words not required.

And as a trust can be created without the use of the word “trust,” so a trust will not be created by the word “trust” if it appears from the whole will that the testator did not intend the word to have that effect. Thus, in Hughes v. Evans (n), a testator devised all his estates to E. E. “upon the trusts and for the uses following,” but did not declare any use or trust except as to one Effect of word “trust.”

(e) Ante, p. 715.

(f) Ante, p. 707.

(g) Ante, p. 717.

(h) Ante, pp. 705 seq., 707 seq.

(i) First edition, p. 334.

(j) Bird v. Harris, L. R., 9 Eq. 204. Compare Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 H. & M. 60 (gift to executor to enable him to carry into effect the purposes of the will), and other cases cited in Chap. XXI.

(k) Merchant Taylors’ Co. v. Att.-Gen., L. R., 6 Ch. 512; Att.-Gen. v. Wax Chandlers’ Co., L. R., 6 H. L. 1. As to the import of the word “purpose,” see Stubbs v. Sargon, 3 My. & C. 507, and Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood, 3 Ha. 131; 1 H. L. C. 272, both stated ante, p. 481; and compare Aston v. Wood, L. R., 6 Eq. 419, where the language was sufficient to shew that a trust of some kind was intended.

(l) Re Haly’s Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 130. Re Delahunty, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 507 (gift to husband to be applied by him to maintenance and education of children).

(m) Gray v. Gray, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 218.

(n) 13 Sim. 496.

CHAP. XXIV.

of his estates, which he devised upon trust for O. for life ; it was held, on the context of the will and a codicil thereto, that subject to the devise in favour of O., E. C. took the whole of the estates beneficially. Williams v. Roberts (o), and Clarke v. Hilton (p), are to the same effect. So if a testator gives his property to trustees upon the usual trusts for conversion and payment of debts, and directs them to hold the residue, subject to payment of pecuniary legacies, upon certain trusts, this does not make them trustees of the legacies, so as to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations (q).

Trust created by informal expressions.

In considering the question what expressions, though informal, are sufficient to manifest an intention to create a trust, it will be convenient to deal separately with the cases on precatory trusts, and those on words purporting to declare the purpose of the gift.

Precatory
trusts.

(2) Precatory Trusts.—The doctrine of precatory trusts has undergone a gradual change since the early part of the eighteenth century. In former days the judges held that almost any expression of wish or expectation by a testator, however vague, was sufficient to create a trust, provided the subject and object were certain. At the present day the tendency is the other way : the Courts consider every will by itself, and do not allow vague and informal words to create a trust, if they think it improbable, taking the will as a whole, that the testator intended them to have that effect.

Doctrine laid down in the older cases.

Mr. Jarman states the doctrine thus (qq) : “ It has been long settled, that words of recommendation, request, entreaty, wish or expectation, addressed to a devisee or legatee, will make him a trustee for the person or persons in whose favour such expressions are used ; provided the testator has pointed out, with sufficient clearness and certainty, both the subject-matter (r) and the object or objects of the intended trust ” (s).

(o) 4 Jur. N. S. 18.

(p) L. R., 2 Eq. 810. See also the cases of Cunningham v. Mellish, Pr. Ch. 31 ; Dawson v. Clarke, 18 Ves. 247 ; Mapp v. Elcock, 2 Ph. 793, cited in Chap. XXI.

(q) Re Barker, [1892] 2 Ch. 491.

(qq) First ed. p. 334.

(r) See Re Pinckard's Trust, 4 Jur. N. S. 1041, 27 L. J. Ch. 422 ; Reeves v. Baker, 18 Beav. 372 ; Macnab v. Whitbread, 17 ib. 299 ; Smith v. Smith, 2 Jur. N. S. 967 ; Hood v. Oglander, 34 Beav. 513.

(s) See also the rule as laid down by Sir R. Arden in Malim v. Keighley, post, p. 869. This “ arbitrary rule ” was disapproved by the Court of Appeal in Re Hamilton, [1895] 2 Ch. 370, where the modern doctrine is explained. See also the passage in Lord St. Leonards's Law of Prop. 375, quoted in Re Williams, [1897] 2 Ch. at p. 21.

In Willis v. Kymer (7 Ch. D. 181) a testatrix bequeathed various legacies, including a legacy of 3,000*l.* to J. K. for life, the principal to be divided at his death between his children, J., S., and A. By a codicil she gave to her sister, E. K., “ all I possess, requesting at her

Among the older cases one of the most important is Massey v. Sherman (t), where a testator devised copyholds to his wife, "not doubting but that" she would dispose of the same to and amongst his children as she should please; this was held to be a trust for the children, as the wife should appoint. CHAP. XXIV.
"Not doubting."

So, in Prevost v. Clarke (u), a testatrix gave the residue of her property equally between her sons and daughter; and, after directing the share of the daughter to be invested in public securities, &c., added, "Convinced of the high sense of honour, the probity and affection of my son-in-law, E. C., I entreat him, should he not be blessed with children by my daughter, and survive, that he will leave at his decease, to my children and grandchildren the share of my property I have bestowed on her." Sir J. Leach, V.-C., was clearly of opinion that these words created a contingent trust (subject to the power of selection) in favour of the children and grandchildren. "Convinced."

Again, in Malim v. Keighley (v), where a testator in certain events and subject to certain trusts, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to his surviving daughter, and such bequest was followed by these words: "hereby recommending to such daughter to dispose of the same after her own death, and the determination of the several trusts aforesaid, unto and among the children of my daughter A. and my nephew I., desiring that his reputed daughter C. may be considered as one of his children." The surviving daughter died without exercising the power, and Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., and Lord Loughborough held, that a trust was created in favour of the children of the daughter and nephew. "Recommending."

In Foley v. Parry (w), the testator gave property to his wife for life, with remainder to his nephew for life, and then stated it to be "Wish and request."

death she will leave the sums as I have directed heretofore." E. K. made a will by which she confirmed the bequests made by her sister's will, and gave various legacies out of her own property, and declared that all legacies to married women should be for their separate use. It was held by Jessel, M.R., that E. K. had power to bequeath a share of the 3,000*l.* to J. K.'s married daughter S. for her separate use. It is submitted that the decision is not in accordance with principle: it implies that a precatory trust differs in its effect from a direct trust.

(t) Amb. 520; s.c. nom. Macey v. Shurmer, 1 Atk. 389. See also Wynne v. Hawkins, 1 Br. C. C. 179; Parsons v. Baker, 18 Ves. 476; Malone v. O'Con- nor, 2 Ll. & Go. 465.

(u) 2 Mad. 458.

(v) 2 Ves. jun. 333, 529; see also Paul v. Compton, 8 Ves. 380; Ford v. Fowler, 3 Beav. 146; Knott v. Cottee, 2 Phil. 192; Cholmondeley v. Cholmondeley, 14 Sim. 590. Under the circumstances in Meggison v. Moore, 2 Ves. jun. 630, "recommend" was held not to create a trust; and as to the proper meaning of the word see Johnston v. Rowlands, 2 De G. & S. 356.

(w) 5 Sim. 138, 2 My. & K. 138. See Broad v. Bevan, 1 Russ. 511, n. See also Wilson v. Bell, L. R., 4 Ch. 581, where the devise was to the son for life, with a direction that his sister should reside with and be maintained by him.

CHAP. XXIV.

Other cases of doubtful words creating a trust.

his particular wish and request, that his wife, and another person who took nothing under the will, should superintend and take care of the education of the nephew, so as to fit him for any respectable employment; and it was decided by Lord Brougham, affirming the decision of Sir L. Shadwell, that the nephew was entitled to be educated and maintained out of the income of the property given to the widow till he attained the age of twenty-one: the duty was to be performed by means of the fund given.

Trusts, or powers in the nature of trusts, have also been held to be created by the following expressions: "I desire him to give" (x); "I hereby request" (y); "I beg" (z); "it is my dying request" (a); "empower and authorise her to settle and dispose of the estate to such persons as she shall think fit by her will, confiding in her not to alienate the estate from my nearest family" (b); "in the full belief" (c); "advise him to settle" (d); "this is my last wish" (e); "my dying wish" (f); "require and entreat" (g); "trusting" (h); "recommend" (i); "trusting that he will preserve the same, so that after his decease it may go and be equally divided, &c." (j); "well knowing" (k); "under the conviction that she will dispose, &c." (l); "to be at her disposal to apply the same" (m); and by a direction to trustees to convey to the eldest son at twenty-one, "but so that the settler's wish and desire may be observed, which is hereby declared, that the other children may be allowed to participate" (n).

Owing to the change in the principles of construction applicable to precatory trusts, many of the cases above referred to would

(x) Mason v. Limbury, cited in Vernon v. Vernon, Amb. 4; Harding v. Glym, 1 Atk. 469. See Medlicot v. Bowes, 1 Ves. sen. 207.

(y) Nowlan v. Nelligan, 1 Br. C. C. 489; Eade v. Eade, 5 Madd. 118; Shelley v. Shelley, L. R., 6 Eq. 540.

(z) Corbet v. Corbet, Ir. R., 7 Eq. 456.

(a) Pierson v. Garnet, 2 Br. C. C. 38, 226; and see Re O'Bierne, 1 J. & Lat. 352.

(b) Griffiths v. Evan, 5 Beav. 241. The devise to the donee of the power was in tail; if it had been in fee, a trust would scarcely have been created without the word "confiding"; see Brook v. Brook, 3 Sm. & Gif. 280; Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Jur. N. S. 898.

(c) Fordham v. Speight, 23 W. R. 782.

(d) Parker v. Bolton, 5 L. J. N. S. Ch. 98. But in Teasdale v. Braithwaite (5 Ch. D. 630) a declaration by the testator of a wish that his daughter should settle property on herself was held not to be binding on her; and compare Re Crawshay, 43 Ch. D. 615.

(e) Hinxman v. Poynder, 5 Sim. 546.

(f) Godfrey v. Godfrey, 11 W. R. 554.

(g) Taylor v. George, 2 V. & B. 378.

(h) Pilkington v. Boughey, 12 Sim. 114.

(i) Tibbits v. Tibbits, 19 Ves. 656. Jac. 317.

(j) Baker v. Mosley, 12 Jur. 740.

(k) Briggs v. Penny, 3 De G. & S. 539, 3 M. & Gord. 546; per Wood, V.-C., Johns. 289. Briggs v. Penny was dissented from in Stead v. Mellor (5 Ch. D. 225) and Clancarty v. Clancarty, 31 L. R. Ir. 530.

(l) Barnes v. Grant, 26 L. J. Ch. 92, But see post, pp. 873, 874.

(m) Salisbury v. Denton, 3 K. & J. 529.

(n) Liddard v. Liddard, 28 Bea. 266.

probably not be followed at the present day. But before dealing with the recent cases it may be convenient to refer to some rules, restricting the creation of precatory trusts, which are to be found even in the older decisions. CHAP. XXIV.

For example, if the testator's language amounts merely to a general expression of goodwill towards the objects in question, and does not intimate any definite disposing intention in their favour, as where he adds, "I have no doubt but A. B. (the legatee) will be kind to my children," such words are inoperative to qualify the legatee's interest (o). Mere expressions of kindness not sufficient.

Another rule is that a precatory trust will not be created unless its objects are pointed out by the testator with sufficient certainty. "Vagueness in the object is regarded as evidence that no trust was intended to be created" (p). In cases of this kind the question sometimes arises whether property which is given to A. is intended (i.) to be held by A. for his absolute benefit, unfettered by any trust (q); or (ii.) to be held upon trust for other persons, exclusive of A. (r); or (iii.) upon trust for A. and other persons. The last question generally arises where the testator states the motive or purpose of the gift; as where property is given to A. in order to maintain or provide for some other person or persons. The cases are discussed in a subsequent part of this chapter (s). Reference is also made to the important difference between those cases in which uncertainty in the object prevents a precatory trust from being created, and those in which a trust is created, but cannot take effect in the way intended by the testator by reason of the objects not being defined with sufficient certainty (t). Certainty in the object.

On the principle above stated, namely, that vagueness in the object is an indication that no trust was intended to be created, a suggestion that the legatee's family or relations should benefit by the gift, is not sufficient to create a trust (u).

The question was much discussed in the case of Wright v. Atkyns (v), where the testator devised freehold and leasehold property to his mother and her heirs for ever, "in the fullest confidence" that Wright v. Atkyns.

(o) Buggens v. Yeates, 8 Vin. Abr. 72, pl. 27; Pope v. Pope, 10 Sim. 1; Greene v. Greene, Ir. R., 3 Eq. 629; ("deal justly and properly"); Ellis v. Ellis, 23 W. R. 382 ("do justice to").

(p) Per Lord Truro in Briggs v. Penny, 3 Mac. & G., at p. 555. See also Bernard v. Minshull, John. 276; Harland v. Trigg, 1 Br. C. C. 142 ("hoping he will continue them in the family").

(q) Infra, p. 895.

(r) As in Massey v. Sherman, supra, p. 869.

(s) Infra, p. 892.

(t) Infra, p. 880.

(u) Harland v. Trigg, 1 Br. C. C. 142, and cases cited in note (k) infra.

(v) 17 Ves. 255, 19 Ves. 299; T. & R. 143; Sugden's Law of Prop., 376. The case was referred to in detail in Re Williams, [1897] 2 Ch. 12.

CHAP. XXIV.

after her decease she would devise the property to his family, but owing to the form which the litigation took, the question whether these words created a trust, and if so in whose favour, was never decided.

Wishes of testator not clearly expressed.

On the same principle, where a testator gives property to A. "having confidence" that he will dispose of it in accordance with his wishes, and the testator does not communicate any wishes of a definite nature, no trust is created (w).

Certainty in the subject.

There must also be a definite subject. Thus, in Re Moore (x) a testator gave a fund in trust for his three sisters, adding: "They are hereby enjoined to take care of my nephew J. as may seem best in the future": it was held by Kay, J., that these words were too indefinite to create a trust in favour of the nephew; if there had been a direction to maintain him, the case might have been different (y). So if a testator gives property to A. absolutely, with a direction that he will at his death leave the "bulk" or "remainder" of it to B.: this direction is too vague to create a precatory trust (z). Other instances of trusts being void for uncertainty in the subject are referred to elsewhere (a). The doctrine was recognized in Horwood v. West (b), where a testator recommended his wife to give by her will what she should die possessed of under his will in a certain manner; Sir J. Leach, V.-C., assumed that if these words had been uncontrolled by the context, the trust must have been void for uncertainty; but he thought that it was evident, from a direction in the will to the wife to secure to herself, on a second marriage, whatever she should possess by virtue of his will, that the testator intended the trust in question to be co-extensive with such direction, i.e., to extend to all the property the wife derived from the testator.

Doubtful expressions explained by context.

Expressions sufficient per se to create a trust may be deprived of their effect by a context expressly declaring (c), or by implication showing, that no trust was intended. Thus, where a testator gave his property to A. and declared express trusts of part of it, and requested that the residue should be applied in a certain way, it (w) Reid v. Atkinson, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 373; Creagh v. Murphy, Ir. R., 7 Eq. 182. As to the creation of a power to carry out the wishes of a testator, see Re Helley, [1902] 2 Ch. 866, cited in Chap. XXIII.

(x) 55 L. J. Ch. 418.

(y) See Broad v. Bevan, post, p. 876, n. (e).

(z) Lechmere v. Lavie, 2 My. & K. 197, referred to below, p. 877; Eade v. Eade, 5 Madd. 118; Palmer v. Sim- monds, 2 Dr. 221; Parnall v. Parnall, 9 Ch. D. 96; Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor, 7 A. C. 321.

(a) Hudson v. Bryant, 1 Coll. 681; Flint v. Hughes, 6 Bea. 342; Cowman v. Harrison, 22 L. J. Ch. 993; Bland v. Bland, 2 Cox, 349, and other cases cited supra, p. 462.

(b) 1 Sim. & St. 387.

(c) Young v. Martin, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 582.

was held that this expression of wish did not create a trust (d). So if a testator, after settling a fund on his daughters and their children, by codicil revokes that bequest on account of the inconvenience of having the money tied up, and leaves the property "to be disposed of by the husbands for the good of their families": no trust will be created in favour of the wives and children; otherwise the inconvenience complained of would continue (e).

Again, the idea of a trust may be excluded if the donee is given a wide discretion as to the disposition of the property (f). Discretion.

And where the words of a gift expressly point to an absolute enjoyment and power of disposition by the donee himself (g), the natural construction of subsequent precatory (h) words is that they express the testator's belief or wish without imposing a trust.

Where the gift is absolute, precatory words do not create a trust.

Thus, in Meredith v. Heneage (i), where the testator, after having given his real and personal estate in the fullest terms to his wife, declared that he had devised the whole of his real and personal estate to his wife, "unfettered and unlimited," in full confidence, and with the firmest persuasion that in her future disposition and distribution thereof she would distinguish the heirs of his late father by devising and bequeathing the whole of his said estate together and entire to such of his said father's heirs as she might think best deserved her preference; it was held in D. P. that the wife was absolutely entitled for her own benefit, Lord Eldon considering that the testator intended to impose a moral but not a legal obligation on his wife; for which he relied much (as did also Lord Redesdale) on the words "unfettered and unlimited." Lord Eldon also adverted to the great difficulty of reconciling the testator's direction that the estate should go "entire" with his direction respecting its "distribution" (j).

A similar construction has been placed on a gift to the testator's (d) House v. House, 23 W. R. 22; Shepherd v. Nottidge, 2 J. & H. 766.

(e) Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Jur. N. S. 898, not appealed on this point, 6 D. M. & G. 593.

(f) As in Curtis v. Rippon, 5 Madd. 434 ("remembering always the Church of God and the poor"); Hoy v. Master, 6 Sim. 658; White v. Briggs, 15 Sim. 33; Ex parte Payne, 2 Y. & C. 636; Huskisson v. Bridge, 15 Jur. 738 ("in any other way most agreeable to herself"); per Wood, V.-C., in Bernard v. Minshull, Johns. at p. 287; Eaton v. Watts, L. R., 4 Eq. 151 ("to dispose of as he thinks fit"); Re Bond, 4 Ch. D. 238 ("quite at liberty"); Re Harbison, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 103; McCor- mick v. Grogan, L. R., 4 H. L. 82; Sullivan v. Sullivan, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 193 ("you may modify it if you think desirable").

(g) "Absolute" property means not only unlimited in estate, but unfettered by trust or condition: per James, V.-C., Irvine v. Sullivan, L. R., 8 Eq. 673; and per Wood, V.-C., Godfrey v. Godfrey, 2 N. R. 16.

(h) Secus, if the words are imperative, Bonser v. Kinnear, 2 Giff. 195; Evans v. Evans, 12 W. R. 508; Curtis v. Graham, ib. 993.

(i) 1 Sim. 542, 10 Pri. 306.

(j) See also Lefroy v. Flood, 4 Ir. Ch. R. 1; Re Bond, 4 Ch. D. 238.

CHAP. XXIV.

wife "for her own use and benefit," coupled with a suggestion that she should dispose of it amongst her children or family (k); and on a gift to the testator's wife to be disposed of "by her will in such way as she shall think proper," with a recommendation to her to dispose of one moiety among her own relations, and the other among such of his own as she should think proper (l); and on a gift to the testator's wife for her absolute use and benefit, "trusting that she will do justice to any children we may have" (m).

The subject of gifts of this nature is considered more in detail in a subsequent part of this chapter (n).

Ware v. Mallard,

It remains to notice the case of Ware (or Wace) v. Mallard (o), where the testator devised and bequeathed all his real and personal property to his wife, her heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, to and for her sole use and benefit, in full confidence that she would in every respect appropriate and apply the same unto and for the benefit of all his children. Sir J. Parker, V.-C., decided that the widow took a life estate with a power of appointment among the children. No reasons are reported. If the words "in full confidence," &c., created a trust, it is difficult to see how the widow could take any beneficial interest whatever: and if they did not, it is equally difficult to understand how she could be entitled to less than the whole.

The authority of the V.-C. has given some currency to this decision (p). But the better opinion is, that in such a case no trust is imposed on the widow. In the first place, the words "for her sole use and benefit" prima facie exclude the notion of a trust (q), (k) Williams v. Williams, 1 Sim. N. S. 358. See also Webb v. Woods, 2 Sim. N. S. 267; White v. Briggs, 15 Sim. 33; Re Bond, 4 Ch. D. 238; Parnall v. Parnall, 9 Ch. D. 96; and the following cases bearing on the subject, Winch v. Brutton, 14 Sim. 379; Bardswell v. Bardswell, 9 Sim. 319; Huskinson v. Bridge, 15 Jur. 738; Fox v. Fox, 27 Beav. 301; Green v. Marsden, 1 Drew. 646; M'Culloch v. M'Culloch, 11 W. R. 504.

(l) Johnston v. Rowlands, 2 De G. & S. 356. See also Pope v. Pope, 10 Sim. 1; M'Alinden v. M'Alinden, Ir. R., 11 Eq. 219; Morrin v. Morrin, 19 L. R. Ir. 37. The cases of Wood v. Cox (1 Keen, 317, 2 Myl. & Cr. 684) and Irvine v. Sullivan (L. R., 8 Eq. 673) are sometimes referred to as bearing on the subject, but they seem to the editor to relate more properly to the matters treated of in the subsequent sections of this chapter (post, pp. 895).

(m) Ellis v. Ellis, 23 W. R. 382.

(n) Post, p. 895.

(o) 21 L. J. Ch. 355, 16 Jur. 492.

(p) Gully v. Oregoe, 24 Beav. 185; Shovelton v. Shovelton, 32 Beav. 143; Curnick v. Tucker, L. R., 17 Eq. 320; Le Marchant v. Le Marchant, L. R., 18 Eq. 414. Curnick v. Tucker and Le Marchant v. Le Marchant were not followed by Jessel, M.R., in Re Hutchinson and Tenant, 8 Ch. D. 540, cited post. In Godfrey v. Godfrey, 11 W. R. 554, Wood, V.-C., refused to decide what interests the widow and children took. It seems doubtful whether in Curnick v. Tucker a dictum of Kindersley, V.-C., in Palmer v. Simmonds, 2 Drew. 221, was correctly interpreted as a surrender by him of the principle which he enforced in Webb v. Woods.

(q) See Williams v. Williams, and other cases cited supra.

and in the second place, the tendency at the present day is not to imply a trust from such words as "in full confidence." Thus, in Re Hutchinson and Tenant (r), where a testator gave all his real and personal estates to his "dear wife absolutely, with full power for her to dispose of the same as she may think fit for the benefit of my family, having full confidence that she will do so," it was held by Sir G. Jessel, M.R., that the wife took absolutely. He considered the case undistinguishable from Lambe v. Eames (s), where a testator gave his estate to his widow "to be at her disposal in any way she may think best for the benefit of herself and family," upon which a strong opinion was expressed by the L.JJ. that no trust was created; but assuming that there was, it could not be extended to mean a trust for the widow for life, with remainder for the children in such shares as she might think fit to direct (t).

It should be observed that in some of the cases where Sir J. Parker's construction has prevailed, there has been a reference to the donee's death as the time when the recommended disposition was to take effect (u); and this may have been taken as marking the point of time when the interest of the other beneficiaries was to commence, as well as negating the widow's right to dispose of the corpus in her lifetime (v). But the distinction is discountenanced by Meredith v. Heneage, and Johnston v. Rowlands, and in expressing his dissent from the construction in question, Sir G. Jessel drew no distinction between the cases where such a reference existed and where it did not (w).

In Re Byrne's Estate (x) the testator gave property to his wife "to be held by her for her own and all my children's use and benefit. But I leave it entirely in her power to fix the portion that each of my children is to get out of my property." It was held that this did not impose a precatory trust on the wife, but that she was a trustee

(r) 8 Ch. D. 540.

(s) L. R., 6 Ch. 597. See also Mackett v. Mackett, L. R., 14 Eq. 49; Re Adams and Kensington Vestry, 27 Ch. D. 394; Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor, 7 App. Ca. 321. These cases are referred to again, post.

(t) See Re Haly's Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 130, where the legatee (a married woman) predeceased the testator, and it was held that the children were entitled: the question whether the mother took a life interest therefore did not arise. In that case the trust was imperative.

(u) Gully v. Cregoe, 24 Beav. 185; Le Marchant v. Le Marchant, L. R., 18 Eq. 414; Cholmondeley v. Cholmondeley, 14 Sim. 590 (but here the words were only "to be hers independent of her husband"—as to which see also Stubbs v. Sargon, 3 My. & Cr. 513).

(v) In Hart v. Tribe, 18 Beav. 215, 1 D. J. & S. 418, there was an express "recommendation" not to do so.

(w) It should be noticed that in Fordham v. Speight (23 W. R. 782) there was a gift of property to the testator's wife absolutely, in the full belief that she would so dispose of it by deed, will or otherwise that at her decease the whole might be equally divided between his children, and Jessel, M.R., held that this created a trust for the children.

(x) 29 L. R. Ir. 250.

CHAP. XXIV.

for herself and the children, with a large discretionary power of determining the children's portions. The case somewhat resembled Crockett v. Crockett (y).

Where donee has a discretion.

Another important restriction on the doctrine of precatory trusts was laid down by Sir R. P. Arden in Malim v. Keighley (z), in stating the general principle with regard to precatory trusts: "Wherever any person gives property, and points out the object, the property, and the way in which it shall go, that does create a trust (a), unless he shews clearly that his desire expressed is to be controlled by the party, and that he shall have an option to defeat it." This qualification was approved by the House of Lords in Knight v. Boughton (b), and the decisions in several other cases have turned, wholly or partially, on it (c).

Limits of the doctrine of precatory trusts.

With regard to the general doctrine of precatory trusts, doubts began to arise, even in Mr. Jarman's day, whether it had not been carried too far; he remarks (d), with reference to the words which in Broad v. Bevan (e) were held to create a trust: "Recent cases suggest a doubt whether such words would now receive a similar construction, for the Courts seem to be sensible that they have gone far enough in investing with the efficacy of a trust loose expressions of this nature, which, it is probable, are rarely intended to have such an operation. Accordingly we find, of late, a more strict and uniform requisition of definiteness in regard to both the subject-matter and objects of the intended trust, than can be traced in some of the earlier adjudications." The cases referred to by Mr. Jarman are Curtis v. Rippon (f), Abraham v. Alman (g), Sale v. Moore (h), Meredith v. Heneage (i), Benson v. Whittam (j), Hoy

Instances of words being too indefinite to create a trust.

(y) 2 Ph. 553: post, p. 893.

(z) 2 Ves. jun. 333.

(a) "Everything in that passage, to my mind, turns upon the emphasis which is to be attributed to this expression, 'the way in which it shall go.' If it means 'the way in which it shall go'—imperatively—I do not quarrel with it:" per Lindley, L.J., in Re Hamilton, [1895] 2 Ch. at p. 372.

(b) 11 Cl. & F. 513.

(c) Ex parte Payne, 2 Y. & C. 636; Curtis v. Rippon, 5 Madd. 434; House v. House, 31 L. T. 427; Greene v. Greene, Ir. R., 3 Eq. 629; Lefroy v. Flood, 4 Ir. Ch. R. 1; Re Harbison. [1902] 1 Ir. R. 103.

(d) First ed. p. 338.

(e) 1 Russ. 511, n. In that case the testator bequeathed to his daughter Ann a small annuity, and proceeded: "I also order and direct my son Joseph to take care of and provide for my said daughter Ann during her life"; he bequeathed all his property to Joseph, and appointed him sole executor: Plumer, M.R., held that the daughter was entitled to have a provision made for her out of the residue in addition to the annuity. Compare the case of Re Moore, ante, p. 872, in which Kay, J., referred to and distinguished Broad v. Bevan.

(f) 5 Madd. 434.

(g) 1 Russ. 509.

(h) 1 Sim. 534. See also Reeves v. Baker, 18 Beav. 372.

(i) 1 Sim. 542.

(j) 5 Sim. 22.

v. Master (k), Lechmere v. Lavie (l), Horwood v. West (m), and Ex parte Payne (n). CHAP. XXIV.

Some of these cases proceeded on the principle that even where the words used by the testator to express his wishes would, on the authority of the decisions above referred to (o), be sufficient to create a trust, they will not have this effect if the subject-matter of the trust is not defined with certainty. There are other cases to the same effect (p). Indeed, the rule is expressly recognized in all statements of the general doctrine of precatory trusts (q).

After discussing the cases above referred to, Mr. Jarman makes the following remarks (r): "Such, then, is the long train of decisions arising from the neglect of testators clearly to distinguish between expressions which are meant to impose a trust or obligation, and those which are intended merely to inculcate the discharge of a moral duty. At one period the Courts seem to have been so astute in detecting an intention to create a trust when wrapped in the disguise of vague and ambiguous expressions, as almost to take from a testator the power of intimating a wish without creating an obligation, unless, indeed, by the use of words distinctly negating the contrary construction. But though a sounder principle now prevails, the practitioner will perceive, in the state of the authorities, the strongest incentive to caution in the employment of words which may give rise to a question of this nature. If a trust is intended to be created, this should be done in clear and explicit terms; and if not, any request or exhortation which the testator may choose to introduce, should be accompanied by a declaration, that no trust or legal obligation is intended to be imposed."

Mr. Jarman's remarks upon the older cases.

Since Mr. Jarman wrote, the reluctance of the Courts to construe vague expressions of wish or advice as creating precatory trusts has increased. In Lambe v. Eames (s), James, L.J., said: "In Modern decisions on the general doctrine.

(k) 6 Sim. 568.

(l) 2 My. & K. 197. Mr. Jarman points out (first ed. p. 341) that the language of the will in this case brought it within the principle of Wynne v. Hawkins, and the other cases referred to ante, p. 869.

(m) 1 Sim. & St. 387. This case is referred to above, p. 872.

(n) 2 Y. & C. 636. See also Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 148; s.c. nom. Knight v. Boughton, 11 Cl. & Fin. 513; Lefroy v. Flood, 4 Ir. Ch. Rep. 1 (in which great reliance was placed on the fact that the approbation of the devisee was required to the conduct of the persons claiming as cestuis que trustent; the force of which requisition must, however, depend on circumstances, Bonser v. Kinnear, 2 Gif. 195; Quayle v. Davidson, 12 Moo. P. C. C. 268; Maud v. Maud, 27 Beav. 615; Scott v. Key, 35 Beav. 291 (as to one-third); but see Malone v. O'Conner, 2 Ll. & Go. 465.

(o) Ante, p. 869.

(p) Eade v. Eade, 5 Madd. 118; Palmer v. Simmonds, 2 Dr. 221. See also Williams v. Williams, 1 Sim. N. S. 358.

(q) Ante, p. 871.

(r) First ed. p. 344.

(s) L. R., 6 Ch. 597; supra, p. 875. Of course, the doctrine laid down in Lambe v. Eames does not apply if the hearing case after case cited, I could not help feeling that the officious kindness of the Court of Chancery in interposing trusts, where in many cases the father of the family never meant to create trusts, must have been a very cruel kindness indeed." The doctrine thus enunciated was followed by Jessel, M.R., in Stead v. Mellor (t) and Re Hutchinson and Tennant (u), and approved by the Judicial Committee in Mussoorie Bank v. Raynor (v); in that case the testator gave to his widow the whole of his property "feeling confident that she will act justly to our children in dividing the same when no longer required by her": and it was held that she took absolutely.

CHAP. XXIV.

Re Adams.

In Re Adams and the Kensington Vestry (w), a testator gave all his real and personal estate and effects to his wife, "in full confidence" that she would do what was right as to the disposal thereof between his children either in her lifetime, or by will after her decease. It was held by the Court of Appeal (affirming the decision of Pearson, J.), that these words gave to the widow an absolute interest unfettered by any trust. Cotton, L.J., said: "I have no hesitation in saying myself, that I think some of the other authorities went a great deal too far in holding that some particular words appearing in a will were sufficient to create a trust. Undoubtedly confidence, if the rest of the context shews that a trust is intended, may make a trust, but what we have to look at is the whole of the will which we have to construe."

Re Diggles.

In Re Diggles (x), where a testatrix gave all her property to her daughter, adding "and it is my desire that she allows to A. G. an annuity of 25*l.* during her life," it was held by the Court of Appeal that the will created no trust or charge as to the annuity, but only a request to the daughter making it merely her moral duty to pay reasonable attention to the wishes of the testatrix. Bowen, L.J. (y), said: "Just as uncertainty of the property and object are reasons for not construing the will as creating a trust, so also the fact that a trust would cause embarrassment and difficulty is a reason for coming to the same conclusion." And Fry, L.J., (z) said: "The later cases have established the reasonable rule that the Court is to consider in each particular case what was the testator's intention."

language of the will is imperative; see Re Haly's Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 130, ante, p. 875.

(t) 5 Ch. D. 225. See Clancarty v. Clancarty, 31 L. R. Ir. 530.

(u) 8 Ch. D. 540, supra, p. 875.

(v) 7 App. Ca. 321. As to the use of word "justice" in gifts of this kind, see Ellis v. Ellis, 23 W. R. 22.

(w) 24 Ch. D. 199, 27 Ch. D. 394. See also Re Moore, 55 L. J. Ch. 418, ante, p. 872. Cochrane v. Dundonald, 10 T. L. R. 262.

(x) 39 Ch. D. 253.

(y) Ibid. at p. 257.

(z) Ibid. at p. 258.

In Re Hamilton (a) a testatrix gave legacies to her two nieces for their separate use, and added: "I wish them to bequeath the same equally between the families of O. and P.," and it was held by the Court of Appeal (Lindley, Lopes and Kay, L.JJ.) that no precatory trust was created. The principle laid down in Re Hamilton was approved by the Court of Appeal (Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Chitty, L.JJ.) in Hill v. Hill (b).

The whole doctrine of precatory trusts was discussed in Re Williams (c). In that case a testator gave his residuary estate to his wife, "her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns absolutely, in the fullest confidence that she will carry out my wishes in the following particulars," namely, that she would pay the premiums on a policy of insurance on her life (which was her own property), and that she would by her will leave the moneys payable under the policy and also the moneys payable at the testator's death in respect of a policy on his life (which was the testator's property) to his daughter Lucy, and he appointed his wife and another person executors and trustees of his will: it was held by Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ., affirming the decision of Romer, J., that the wife was not put to her election as to her policy, and that she took the testator's residuary estate absolutely, unfettered by any condition or trust. Rigby, L.J., dissented (d).

The present state of the authorities on the subject is not altogether satisfactory. "It would," as Lindley, L.J., remarked in the case last cited, "be an entire mistake to suppose that the old doctrine of precatory trusts is abolished. Trusts—i.e., equitable obligations to deal with property in a particular way—can be imposed by any language which is clear enough to shew an intention to impose them." The difficulty is to say how far the old decisions are binding authorities in cases where the language used is practically identical. It cannot be questioned that the leaning of the Courts at the present day is against the implication of a trust from precatory words; nor can it be questioned that this tendency is a sound one. A will is a business document, in which the use of diplomatic or courteous language is unnecessary, and it is, as Lopes, L.J., remarked (e), "inconceivable that a testator who really meant his

(a) [1895] 2 Ch. 370; Re Conolly, [1910] 1 Ch. 219.

(b) [1897] 1 Q. B. 483.

(c) [1897] 2 Ch. 12.

(d) Re Williams was followed in Re Oldfield, [1904] 1 Ch. 549, where a testatrix gave her property to her two daughters for their absolute use and benefit, and added an expression of her "desire" that they should during the lifetime of their brother pay him a certain part of their income.

(e) Hill v. Hill, [1897] 1 Q. B. p. 488.

hope, recommendation, confidence or request to be imperative, should not express his intention in a mandatory form."

But such cases do occasionally happen. Thus in Willis v. Kymer (ee) a testatrix "requested" her sister to perform her wishes expressed in her will, and gave various directions as to the disposition of her property: it was held by Jessel, M.R., that this created a precatory trust.

In Comiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury (f), the testator gave to his wife "the whole of my real and personal estate and property absolutely, in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself, and that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit; and in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament, I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be divided among the surviving said nieces." It was held by Kekewich, J., and by the Court of Appeal (Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ., Cozens-Hardy, L.J., dissenting) (g), that the widow took absolutely for her own benefit. But this decision was reversed by the House of Lords, and it was held that there was an absolute gift of the testator's property to his wife, subject to an executory gift of the same at her death to such of his nieces as should survive her, equally, if more than one, so far as his wife should not dispose by will of the property in favour of the surviving niece or nieces, or any one or more of them. This construction (which was founded on the whole will, and not on the testator's use of any particular words) was strengthened by the bequest to one of the executors of "such sum not exceeding 150*l.* as my dear wife may decide upon": if the testator intended her to be absolute owner of the property this gift was senseless. The question of precatory trust did not, in the view taken by the House of Lords, arise at all.

Where no trust created donee takes absolutely.

Whenever it is a question whether a trust has been created or not, the consequence of holding the expressions to be too vague for the creation of a trust is that the devisee or legatee retains the property for his own benefit; and in this respect such cases stand distinguished from those (h) in which there is considered to be sufficient indication of the testator's intention to create a trust, though the objects (ee) 7 Ch. D. 181; ante, p. 868, note (s); Re Burley, [1910] 1 Ch. 215.

(f) [1905] A. C. 84. See Chap. XXXIII.

(g) Re Hanbury, [1904] 1 Ch. 415.

(h) Stubbs v. Sargon, Fowler v. Garlike, Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood, ante, p. 481; Briggs v. Penny, 3 De G. & S. 525; 3 M. & Gord. 546.

of it are uncertain : a state of things which, of course, lets in the claim of the residuary devisee or legatee, or of the heir or next of kin (as the case may be), to the beneficial ownership (i). In the latter class of cases there is no uncertainty as to the intention to create a trust, but merely as to the objects ; in the other class of cases it is uncertain whether any trust is intended to be created. But inasmuch as uncertainty in the object furnishes a strong argument that a testator did not intend to create a trust, it is obvious that the two classes of cases are intimately connected with each other. For the rule that a certain subject and a certain object are necessary to constitute a trust, where the words used are precatory only, does not mean that the subject or object must be so defined that it can in fact be ascertained by the Court. A precatory trust " for the benefit of —," or of " the person named in such a paper," where no such paper is found, or " for such objects as I have communicated to " the donee, where no such communication has been made (j), would completely exclude the donee from all beneficial interest, although it leaves the object wholly unascertained (k). But what is meant by the rule is this : in ascertaining whether the precatory words import merely a recommendation, or whether they import a definite imperative direction to the donee as to his mode of dealing with the property, the Court will be guided by the consideration whether the amount he is requested to give is certain or uncertain, and whether the objects to be selected are certain or uncertain, and if there is a total absence of explicit direction as to the quantum to be given, or as to the objects to be selected by the donee of the property, then the Court will infer from the circumstance of the testator having used precatory words, expressive only of hope, desire or request, instead of the formal words usual for the creation of a trust, that those words are used, not for the purpose of creating an imperative trust, but simply as suggestions on the part of the testator, for the guidance of the donee in the distribution of the property : the testator placing implicit reliance upon his discretion and leaving him the sole judge whether he will adopt those suggestions or not, and whether he will dispose of the property in the manner indicated by the testator, or in any other manner at his absolute discretion. The question is not whether the object

Meaning of the rule requiring certainty of object and subject for a precatory trust.

(i) Chap. XXI.

(j) Bernard v. Minshull, Johns. 276, see Re Boyes, 26 Ch. D. 531. But where the gift was subject to such disposition thereof or of any part thereof as the testator might by deed or writing thereafter direct, it was held there was no trust, the testator not having made up his mind whether he would make any such disposition or not, Fenton v. Hawkins, 9 W. R. 300, ante.

(k) See n. (h).

CHAP. XXIV.

is so defined that it can be distinctly ascertained by the Court, but whether the object is purposely left to be selected by the donee (l); as, for instance, where the testator expresses a desire that the donees shall "distribute the fund as they think will be most agreeable to his wishes" (m).

Gifts for a specified purpose.

(3) Gifts for a Specified Purpose.—We are now to consider whether, in cases where words are added expressing a purpose for which the gift is made, such purpose is to be considered obligatory.

Where the purpose is the benefit of donee alone, the gift is absolute.

Where the purpose of the gift is the benefit solely of the donee himself, he can claim the gift without applying it to the purpose, and that, it is conceived, whether the purpose be in terms obligatory or not. Thus, if a sum of money be bequeathed to purchase for any person a ring (y), or a life annuity (z), or a house (a), or to set him up in business (aa), or towards the printing of a book, the profits on which are to be for his benefit (b), the legatee may claim the money without applying it, or binding himself to apply it, to the specified purpose; and even in spite of an express declaration by the testator, that he shall not be permitted to receive the money (c).

Principle of the cases.

These cases rest on the principle that the Court will not compel that to be done which the legatee may undo the next moment, as by selling the thing to be purchased or giving up the business: the same principle (as we have already seen (d)) applies where property is directed to be converted, for the donee may claim it in its original state. But, of course, if there be more than one donee interested in the gift, the deviation from the testator's directions cannot be made without the consent of all: as if the house when purchased is to be conveyed to, or settled on, two or more persons (e).

Where a testator, in bequeathing a legacy, states the purpose for (l) See the judgment of Wood, V.-C., Bernard v. Minshull, Johns. 287, 290, quoted ante, p. 483.

(m) Stead v. Mellor, 5 Ch. D. 225; Reid v. Atkinson, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 373, and Creagh v. Murphy, Ir. R., 7 Eq. 182, seem to have been decided on this principle.

(y) Apreece v. Apreece, 1 V. & B. 364.

(z) Dawson v. Hearn, 1 R. & M. 606; Ford v. Batley, 17 Beav. 303; Re Browne's Will, 27 Beav. 324. It makes no difference whether it be a bequest of a specified sum to purchase an annuity, or a direction to purchase an annuity of a specified amount, Dawson v. Hearn, supra.

(a) Knox v. Hotham, 15 Sim. 82;

Dowling v. Dowling, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 79.

(aa) This seems to follow from the decision in Gough v. Bult, 16 Sim. 45, though there the exact point did not arise: see post, p. 887.

(b) Re Skinner's Trusts, 1 J. & H. 102, in which it was a question of some difficulty whether the principal object of the bequest was the benefit of the person named, or the publication of the testator's opinions.

(c) Stokes v. Cheek, 28 Bea. 620.

(d) Chap. XXII., ante, p. 758.

(e) As to the case of Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 19, where a testator directed his executors to carry on his business for a certain time, but did not dispose of the profits during that time.

which he gives it, the mere fact that if the legacy were applied for that purpose it would benefit other persons besides the legatee, does not impose on him any trust in their favour (f).

CHAP. XXIV.

Where purpose would benefit others.

But if the testator bequeaths a legacy to trustees to be applied for the benefit of a number of persons, they can, if they are all ascertained and sui juris, elect to have the money paid to them in lieu of having it applied in the manner directed by the testator. Thus, a bequest of money to trustees to be laid out in planting trees on an estate of which the testator was tenant for life, is a gift for the benefit of the persons entitled to the estate, and belongs to them absolutely (g).

As a general rule, a bequest of a capital sum for the maintenance and education of a person is equivalent to a bequest of it for his benefit, and entitles him to the whole (h), but if a legacy is directed to be applied by the testator's executors or trustees in a certain way for the benefit of A., with a gift over of any surplus remaining after the purpose is fulfilled, this only entitles A. to so much of the legacy as is necessary for the purpose (i).

Gift over.

The principle above stated does not apply in cases where the motive is so stated as to create a condition. Thus, in Re Unite (j), a testatrix gave a sum of 20,000*l*. "towards the new building and equipment to the satisfaction and under the direction of my executors, of the B. Hospital." Between the date of the will and the death of the testatrix, the hospital was almost totally rebuilt, but not painted, furnished or equipped. It was held by Kekewich, J., that the object specified by the testatrix could not be treated as merely the motive of the gift (k), so as to entitle the hospital to the legacy in any event. The question whether, if any balance of the legacy remained, after the expenditure of such part of it as could be properly applied in rebuilding or equipment, it might be treated as charitable and applied cy-près, was reserved.

Distinction where gift conditional.

Where the principle applies and the gift is immediate, the legatee's interest vests on the death of the testator, and if he dies before the money is paid or laid out, his personal representatives are entitled to it (l).

Death of legatee.

(f) Adams v. Loddell, 25 L. R. Ir. 311; Mexborough v. Savile, 88 L. T. 131, stated post.

(g) Re Bowes, [1896] 1 Ch. 507, and cases there cited.

(h) See post, p. 885.

(i) Re Lee's Trusts, Ir. R., 10 Eq. 157; Falls v. Alford (Re Black), [1907] 1 Ir. R. 486.

(j) [1906] W. N. 26.

(k) As in the class of cases referred to by Wood, V.-C., in Re Sanderson's Trust, 3 K. & J. 497 · the passage is quoted post, p. 888.

(l) Yates v. Compton, 2 P. W. 308; Barnes v. Rowley, 3 Ves. 305; Palmer v. Craufurd, 3 Swanst. 482. Compare Gough v. Bull, 16 Sim. 45, stated post, p. 887.

CHAP. XXIV.

Future and contingent
gifts.

Provision against alienation.

Direction to accumulate income, when void.

The rule is applied where the gift is to take effect at a future time. For example, if a testator directs a sum of money or share of residue to be laid out at a future time (e.g., on the death of a tenant for life) in the purchase of an annuity, and the annuitant dies before the time arrives, his representatives will be entitled to the money (m). If an annuity is directed to be purchased for a person on the happening of a contingent event, and he dies before the event happens, his representatives have no claim; but if he dies after the event has happened and before the annuity is purchased, his representatives are entitled to the money (n).

If an annuity is directed to be purchased in the name of the annuitant, a gift over in the event of his alienating it is inoperative, and he takes absolutely (o). But if the annuity is directed to be held by trustees for the annuitant, with a gift over in case he should alienate it or become bankrupt, his right to receive the fund is taken away (p). Where such a trust is not to take effect immediately, but is postponed until the death of a tenant for life, and the annuitant dies before the tenant for life without alienating or becoming bankrupt, the question arises whether the personal representatives of the annuitant are entitled to the fund, or whether the bequest of the annuity fails altogether. The authorities are conflicting (q).

On the same principle, if a testator gives property to A. absolutely, but directs his trustees to retain possession and accumulate the income for a certain number of years and then transfer the property and accumulations to A., the trust for accumulation is nugatory, and A. is entitled to have the property transferred to him at once. Of course if the gift is contingent or defeasible, or if any other person may, by possibility, be interested in the trust, the principle does not apply (r). Nor does it apply where the trust for accumulation is illegal, so that the income is undisposed of (rr).

(m) Bayley v. Bishop, 9 Ves. 6; Day v. Day, 22 L. J. Ch. 878; Palmer v. Craufurd, 3 Swanst. 482.

(n) Re Mabbett, [1891] 1 Ch. 707. In Re Ross, [1900] 1 Ch. 162, an arrangement was made between the beneficiaries under a will that a sum should be set aside to purchase an annuity, and the annuitant died before the purchase was made: it was held that her representatives were entitled to the money. The annuitant was a married woman restrained from anticipation, but this was held not to affect the question.

(o) Hunt-Foulston v. Furber, 3 Ch. D. 285.

(p) Hatton v. May, 3 Ch. D. 148; per Kindersley, V.-C., in Day v. Day, 22 L.

J. Ch. 881.

(q) Day v. Day, 22 L. J. Ch. 878; Power v. Hayne, L. R., 8 Eq. 262; Re Draper's Trusts, 57 L. J. Ch. 942. They are discussed in Chap. XXXI.

(r) Saunders v. Vautier, 4 Bea. 115, Cr. & Ph. 240; Gosling v. Gosling, Johns. 265; Coventry v. Coventry, 2 Dr. & Sm. 470; Gott v. Nairne, 3 Ch. D. 278; Wharton v. Masterman, [1895] A. C. 186. In the last case the gift was charitable; see Re Swain, [1905] 1 Ch. 669.

(rr) Talbot v. Jevvers, L. R., 20 Eq. 255; Weatherall v. Thornburgh, 8 Ch. D. 261; Re Parry, 60 L. T. 489; Re Travis, [1900] 2 Ch. 541.

Again, if a testator gives property for the benefit of A. absolutely (that is, without settling it on him for life, or providing for a gift over, or the like) (s), and gives his trustees a discretion, or specific directions, as to the manner in which the property shall be held and applied for A.'s benefit, A. takes it absolutely (t). And the same rule applies even where the testator shews that his object was to secure the property for the benefit of A.'s children (u). So if the testator expressly directs that the property shall not be delivered over to him until he attains twenty-five, or the like, he is nevertheless entitled to immediate delivery, if he has attained twenty-one (uu). So if the whole of a certain fund or income is given for the maintenance, or the maintenance and education, of a person, he is absolutely entitled to the fund or income, as the case may be, and if he dies before it has been paid or expended, his personal representatives are entitled to it, or if he becomes bankrupt, his interest passes to the trustee for his creditors (v). But if the money is given for the maintenance of several persons in such manner as the trustees think proper, no one beneficiary is entitled to any specific share (w).

CHAP. XXIV.

Trust, when ineffective.

Trusts for maintenance.

So where property was given to trustees upon trust to apply it in the maintenance or advancement of the testator's son A., "it being my wish that my said son (if living) should have the whole benefit of such moneys if he should conduct himself steadily and to the satisfaction of" the trustees, with a gift over of any unapplied part, it was held that this was equivalent to a gift of the fund in trust for the son, subject to a power in the trustees to deprive him of it if he should not conduct himself steadily and to their satisfaction (x).

Discretionary trust with gift over.

There are also cases in which a sum of money is directed to be applied for the benefit of a person in a certain way (as to bind him apprentice), but the time within which it is to be expended is left to the discretion of the testator's executors or trustees: here the beneficiary cannot, so long as the trustees exercise their discretion

Where time is left to discretion of trustees.

(s) Re Eagles, [1890] Week. N. 74.

(t) Richards v. Richards, 9 Price, 219; Re Jacob's Will, 29 Bea. 402, and other cases cited in Chap. XVII.; Re Johnston, [1894] 3 Ch. 204; Re Miller, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 290.

(u) Dowling v. Dowling, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 79.

(uu) Rocke v. Rocke, 9 Bea. 66; Re Couturier, [1907] 1 Ch. 470.

(v) Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. 239; Webb v. Kelly, 9 Sim. 469; Beevor v. Partridge, 11 Sim. 229; Green v. Spicer,

1 Russ. & My. 395; Youngehusband v. Gisborne, 1 Coll. 400; Presant v. Goodwin, 1 Sw. & Tr. 544; Lewes v. Lewes, 16 Sim. 266; Noel v. Jones, ib. 309; Soames v. Martin, 10 Sim. 287; Wilkins v. Jodrell, 13 Ch. D. 564; Williams v. Papworth, [1900] A. C. 563. See also Re Howard, [1901] 1 Ch. 412.

(w) Re Coleman, 39 Ch. D. 443; Re Booth, [1894] 2 Ch. 282.

(x) Re Coe's Trust, 4 K. & J. 199. See the reference to this case in Chap. XXXIX.

CHAP. XXIV.

Where performance of trust becomes unnecessary.

properly, demand payment of the money, but if he dies before it is applied, his personal representatives are entitled to the money (y).

On a somewhat similar principle, if a legacy is given to be applied for the benefit of a person in a particular way, and the prescribed mode of application becomes impossible or unnecessary, the legatee is entitled to the legacy absolutely (z). As in Lockhart v. Hardy (a), where a legacy was given to a person to enable him to pay off a mortgage debt on the estate devised to him, and he was held entitled to it although the mortgage was foreclosed in the testator's lifetime. There are numerous other authorities to this effect (b).

In Re Howard (c) a testator directed his trustees to set aside 200*l.* and thereout to pay to his wife 3*l.* monthly "so long as she remains unmarried, or until the said sum of 200*l.* becomes exhausted, the said payment of 3*l.* monthly to cease on my said wife marrying again." She died without having married again, and it was held that her executrix was entitled to the unexpended balance.

Where part only need be applied.

In the preceding cases the trust applied to the whole fund, but where the trust is to expend a sum "not exceeding" a certain amount, or such a sum as the trustees think fit, for a specific purpose, a different principle applies, and the true rule seems to be that the beneficiary is not entitled to the whole fund, or the maximum amount, unless it is required to satisfy the specified purpose (d). There are, indeed, some early cases in which the contrary rule was applied, but it is doubtful whether they are now binding authorities.

Thus, in Cope v. Wilmot (e), the testator directed that his trustees "should and might" raise any sums they should think proper, not exceeding in the whole 3,000*l.*, for the advancement of the plaintiff

(y) Barlow v. Grant, 1 Vern. 255; Woolridge v. Stone, 4 L. J. O. S. 56; Barton v. Cooke, 5 Ves. 461. The beneficiary's creditors have not, during his lifetime, any higher right than he has: Chambers v. Smith, 3 A. C. 795. See the cases cited with reference to provisions against involuntary alienation, post, Chap. XXXIX.

(z) Leche v. Lord Kilmorey, T. & R. 207; A.-G. v. Haberdashers' Company, 1 M. & K. 420. See Palmer v. Flower, L. R., 13 Eq. 250. In Nevill v. Nevill, 2 Vern. 431, a sum of money directed to be applied for the benefit of a child was ordered to be paid to him, apparently because the mode of application had become impossible: see Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Bea. 231.

(a) 9 Bea. 379. See also Parsons v. Coke, 27 L. J. Ch. 828.

(b) Earl of Lonsdale v. Berchtoldt, 3 K. & J. 185; Re Colson's Trusts, Kay, 133; Re Bowes, [1896] 1 Ch. 507. As to this last case, see post.

(c) [1901] 1 Ch. 412.

(d) A direction to apply the income of a fund, "or so much as may be necessary," for the maintenance of a person, does not give the trustees a discretion how much shall be applied; if the whole income is required it must be applied: Rudland v. Crozier, 2 De G. & J. 143.

(e) [1771] 1 Coll. 396, n. See the observations of Wood, V.-C., on this case in Re Sanderson's Trust, infra.

in any business, art or profession, or in any civil or military employment; they laid out over 1,000*l.* in purchasing a commission in the army, &c., but declined to expend any more: it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid the balance of the 3,000*l.* Gough v. Bult (f) is commonly cited as an authority to the same effect. In that case the testator "ordered and empowered" his trustees at their free will and pleasure to sell part of the trust property, and to pay and apply such part of the proceeds not exceeding 2,000*l.* to each of his sons for setting them up in business, or for such other purposes as his wife should think proper and most beneficial for them, and to apply the residue in manner therein mentioned. One of the sons survived the testator and died nine years afterwards, without any part of the 2,000*l.* having been raised; his personal representative filed a bill to have the 2,000*l.* raised, and a demurrer to it was overruled. Shadwell, V.-C., held that the whole 2,000*l.* ought to be raised: Cottenham, L.C., agreed that the testator's direction to sell was imperative, and that the mode of applying the money alone was discretionary, but he did not decide that the plaintiff was entitled to the whole 2,000*l.* Palmer v. Flower (g) seems to have been decided on the same principle, and it is supported by the dicta of Wood, V.-C., in Joel v. Mills (h).

Gude v. Worthington (i) is commonly cited as carrying the rule even farther. There the testatrix gave a fund to trustees upon trust to apply the principal or interest for the benefit of A. B. in such way as they might in their discretion think fit during her life, with power to dispose the principal and interest or any part thereof, or to withhold the whole and let the interest accumulate, without being accountable to A. B. or anyone else, and there was a gift over of any undisposed-of part of the fund. The trustees paid the interest and part of the principal to A. B., and died without any other exercise of their powers: Knight Bruce, V.-C., held that A. B. was absolutely entitled to the whole fund, but directed a reference to the Master to approve of a settlement, from which it would appear that the Court undertook to exercise the discretion given to the trustees. If A. B. had died before the trustees, it seems clear that her representatives would have had no claim to the fund.

*Gude v.
Worthington.*

The true principle is laid down in Lewis v. Lewis (j), where power was given to trustees to raise a sum not exceeding 600*l.*, and to

True Principle.

(f) 16 Sim. 45.

(g) L. R., 13 Eq. 250; Maud v. Maud, 27 Bea. 615.

(h) 3 K. & J. 458.

(i) 3 De G. & S. 389.

(j) 1 Cox, 162, followed in Robinson v. Cleator, 15 Ves. 526. See also Bull v. Vardy, 1 Ves. jun. 270; Brown v. Higgs, ante, pp. 651 seq.

CHAP. XXIV.

apply it for the preferment or advancement in life or other the occasions of A. B. before he attained twenty-six, as the trustees should think proper. Lord Thurlow said: "This is not the case of a gift by the testator, but a power to others to give, and that seems confined to answer some particular purpose. The proper question to be made in this case is whether the present situation and circumstances of the petitioner are such as the testator intended this legacy for. I shall therefore refer it to the Master to inquire whether the present situation of the petitioner requires any, and what part of this money to be advanced before his age of twenty-six, and to report the grounds of his determination." So in Cowper v. Mantell (k), the testator authorised his trustees to apply any sum not exceeding 600*l.* in the purchase of a church preferment for the benefit of A. : Romilly, M.R., said that the trustees had a discretion as to the propriety of exercising the power at all, and that the legatee could not during his lifetime have claimed payment of it, and that as he died before the money was expended, his representatives had no claim to it. Re Stanger (l) seems to have been decided on the same principle.

Sanderson's Trust.

The principle has also been laid down by Wood, V.-C. (m): "In reference to gifts of this description, there are two classes of cases between which the general distinction is sufficiently clear, although the precise line of demarcation is occasionally somewhat difficult to ascertain. If a gross sum be given, or if the whole income of the property be given, and a special purpose be assigned for that gift, this Court always regards the gift as absolute, and the purpose merely as the motive of the gift, and therefore holds that the gift takes effect as to the whole sum or the whole income, as the case may be. Thus, where there is the gift of a sum to apprentice a child or to buy a commission for a son, the Court gives effect to the entire gift; and whether the sum can or cannot be applied for the purpose of buying the commission or apprenticing the child, the Court holds that the child is entitled to the whole of it. So again with regard to maintenance, as to which the distinction between the two classes of cases is very clearly put by Sir William Grant in Hanson v. Graham (n), where he says that if an entire fund is given for the maintenance of children or the like, they take the whole fund absolutely, and the maintenance is treated in effect as simply the motive in making the gift; while on the other hand, if a portion (k) 22 Bea. 231.

(l) 64 L. T. 693. See Re Ward's Trusts, L. R., 7 Ch. 727.

(m) Re Sanderson's Trust, 3 K. & J.

at p. 503. The principle was followed in Re Andrew, [1905] W. N. 86, where the trust was created inter vivos.

(n) 6 Ves. 239.

only of the fund is given for maintenance, then they are entitled to draw out so much only as may be necessary for the purpose specified.”

CHAP. XXIV.

It is on this principle that a discretionary trust to apply the whole or part of the income of a fund for the maintenance of a person is effective, notwithstanding assignment or bankruptcy (o).

Maintenance of spend-thrift.

Even where maintenance is not referred to, and the direction is to pay to the beneficiary the whole or only a portion of the income, subject to any conditions or restrictions, as the trustees in their sole and absolute discretion think fit, this gives the beneficiary or his assigns no right to any part of the income, unless the trustees fail to exercise their discretion properly (p).

Unlimited discretionary trust.

If trustees in the exercise of their discretion expend money in making a purchase for the object of their power, it seems that the thing purchased becomes his absolute property (q). In Messeena v. Carr (r), Romilly, M.R., held that a discretionary power to purchase an annuity authorised the trustees to make payments out of capital to the beneficiary : sed quære.

Exercise of discretion.

If the object of a discretionary trust dies before the fund is expended, his personal representatives have no claim to it (s).

Death of object.

On the other hand, it seems that the trustees may, if they think fit, renounce their discretion, and pay over the whole fund to the cestui que trust (ss).

If a trustee in whom a discretion is vested dies without exercising it, or refuses to exercise it, the question may arise whether it can be exercised by other trustees, or by the Court. If the discretion is a mere power and it is not executed, the Court cannot execute it (t). But if property is given to trustees upon trust to apply it according to some principle indicated by the testator, the manner being left to the discretion of the trustees, then the Court will, as a general rule, exercise the discretion if the trustees fail to do so. As if property is given upon trust to apply so much as may be required for the maintenance of one or more persons (u) or upon trust to divide it among the testator's relations according to their necessities (v). These cases, however, must be distinguished from Failure of trustee to exercise discretion.

(o) Re Coleman, 39 Ch. D. 443; Re Bullock, 60 L. J. Ch. 341. In Two-penny v. Peyton, 10 Sim. 487, Shadwell, V.-C., practically overruled his own decision in Snowdon v. Dales, 6 Sim. 524.

(p) Train v. Clapperton, [1908] A. C. 342.

(q) Lawrie v. Bankes, 4 K. & J. 142; Re Coleman, supra.

(r) L. R., 9 Eq. 260.

(s) Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Bea. 231; Messeena v. Carr, L. R., 9 Eq. 260; Re Stanger, 64 L. T. 693.

(ss) Re Coe's Trust, 4 K. & J. 199, stated post, Chap. XXXIX.

(t) See Bull v. Vardy, 1 Ves. jun. 270; Cowper v. Mantell, 22 Bea. 231.

(u) Re Sanderson's Trust, 3 K. & J. 497.

(v) Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. sen. 87; Lewin on Trusts.

Doyley v. Attorney-General (w) and Brown v. Higgs (x) and similar cases, where a power of selection or distribution among a number of objects gives rise to an implied gift in their favour, and if the power is not exercised the Court divides the property among them equally (y).

In Re Yates (z) the testator directed his trustees to pay an annuity to his wife during widowhood, and to pay to her a further annuity until his daughter should attain twenty-one, to be applied by his wife for the maintenance and education of the daughter; subject to the payment of this and other annuities, the trustees were directed to accumulate the income until his daughter attained twenty-one. The widow died while the daughter was an infant: it was held that the further annuity continued to be payable during her minority.

Farr v. Hennis (a) was the converse case. There the testator gave an annuity to his niece of 8s. a week "towards the support and maintenance of her two children until they shall attain the age of twenty-one years." By a codicil the testator gave certain leasehold property to the niece "to enable her to provide for her children," and referred to his will as "my said will in her favour." One of the children of the niece died, and the other attained twenty-one. It was held that the words in the gift of the annuity referring to the support and maintenance of the children were merely descriptive of the testator's motive in making the gift, and that they did not cut down the life estate of the niece.

Where the purpose not for benefit of donee alone: three constructions.

Where the motive or purpose of the gift is the benefit of other persons as well as the primary donee, three constructions obtain, according to the language used. The purpose may be so peremptorily expressed as to constitute a perfect trust; or may be such as to leave entirely in the discretion of the primary donee the quantum of benefit to be communicated to the other persons, provided that such discretion is honestly exercised; or lastly, the expression of motive or purpose may be merely nugatory, and not operate to abridge the previous absolute gift to the primary donee. In the following cases, illustrating these distinctions, the decisions will be found on examination of the reports to turn in (w) 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 195. Down v. Worrall (1 Myl. & K. 561) would probably not now be followed, the use of the word "or" not being sufficient to exclude the general rule.

(x) Ante, p. 651.

(y) See Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 124; Salisbury v. Denton, 3 K. & J. 536; Re Douglas, 35 Ch. D. at p. 485.

(z) [1901] 2 Ch. 438. Compare Ryan v. Keogh, Ir. R., 4 Eq. 357.

(a) 44 L. T. 202.

many instances on minute distinctions, which it would require too much space to particularise, and some cases will be found almost irreconcilable with others; the preponderance, however, seems to lean in favour of giving the primary donee a discretion which he must honestly exercise, or in default, subject himself to the control of the Court, with a tendency, however, rather to narrow than to extend the effect heretofore ascribed to words expressing the purpose or motive of the gift.

(a) As to the cases in which a complete trust is created. A gift to A., to dispose of among his children (b), or for bringing up his children, or to be applied for their maintenance and education (c), gives A. no interest, but creates a complete trust for the children (d). And in Taylor v. Bacon (e), where the testator bequeathed the dividends of stock to R., the wife of his son G., for the benefit of his son G., of herself and of their children, and after the decease of G., the stock to remain in trust for the benefit of R. and her children during her lifetime, if she should remain a widow; it was held that the wife was a trustee of the interest for herself, her husband and children.

(a) Cases of complete trust.

In Jubber v. Jubber (f), the bequest was to the testator's wife "for the benefit of herself and unmarried children, that they may be comfortably provided for as long as my wife may remain in this life," with a bequest over upon her death. The widow and unmarried daughters were held to be entitled in equal shares to the income during the widow's life, whether as joint tenants or tenants in common was not decided. In Wetherell v. Wilson (g), the testatrix, under a general power, bequeathed a sum of stock in trust for her children at twenty-one or marriage, and directed the trustees, in the meantime, to pay the interest of the fund to her husband, in order the better to enable him to maintain the children of the marriage, until their shares should become assignable to them. Lord Langdale decided that the husband took nothing beneficially, but was bound to apply the income for the benefit of

(b) Blakeney v. Blakeney, 6 Sim. 52; Barnes v. Grant, 26 L. J. Ch. 92. See Re Haly's Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 130, where the primary legatee predeceased the testator.

(c) Pilcher v. Randall, 9 W. R. 251; Re Delahunty, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 507, distinguishing Mackett v. Mackett, L. R., 14 Eq. 49, post, p. 894.

(d) See Talbot v. O'Sullivan, 6 L. R. Ir. 302, where the mother died ante litem motam, and it was therefore unnecessary to decide whether she took any interest.

(e) 8 Sim. 100; see also Chambers v. Atkins, 1 S. & St. 382; Fowler v. Hunter, 3 Y. & J. 506; Re Camac's Trust, 12 Jur. 470; Barnes v. Grant, 26 L. J. Ch. 92; Bibby v. Thompson, 32 Beav. 646.

(f) 9 Sim. 503.

(g) 1 Kee. 80.

CHAP. XXIV.

the children. In Wilson v. Maddison (h), the testator bequeathed "to A. W., with her little girl and two little boys, for their joint maintenance,—their mother to have the care of bringing them up to the best of her power, till they are able to do for themselves,—30*l.* a year, to be paid to the said mother, as above, half-yearly, as may best suit"; and it was held that the four persons were constituted joint tenants, and that while three were minors, the fourth, being an adult, should receive the annuity for their maintenance (i).

A trust for the maintenance of children is primâ facie for the benefit of adults as well as infants, and, if necessary, the Court will direct an inquiry what provision should be made (j).

Interest coupled with trust.

Where the donee has a beneficial interest coupled with a trust, the extent of his interest is sometimes difficult to define. In Evans v. Evans (k) the testator gave all his property to his wife absolutely, and to be by her willed to any or either of his children in any manner suitable to her wishes: the wife died ante litem motam, so that it was unnecessary to decide the exact nature of her interest, but the result seems to have been that she took a life interest, with a power of appointment by will among the children.

(b) Cases in which there is a discretion liable to be controlled.

(b) As to the cases in which the Court has considered the primary donee to have a discretion liable to be controlled, if not honestly exercised (l). In Hamley v. Gilbert (m), the residue was given to E. G. H., to be laid out and expended by her at her discretion, for or towards the education of her son F. G. H., and that she should not at any time thereafter be liable and subject to account to her said son or to any other person whatever for the disposal or application of such residue or any part thereof. It was held that E. G. H. was absolutely entitled to the residue, subject to a trust to apply a part to the education of her son during his minority (n), and it was referred to the Master to inquire what would be a sufficient sum to be appropriated for that purpose. In Gilbert v. Bennett (o), the testator bequeathed all his property to his wife and two other persons in trust, to pay the income to his wife for the (h) 2 Y. & C. C. C. 372.

(i) See also Re Harris, 7 Exch. 344; Re Yates, [1901] 2 Ch. 438, ante, p. 890.

(j) Re Booth, [1894] 2 Ch. 282.

(k) 33 L. J. Ch. 662.

(l) As to the circumstances and manner in which the Court will control the discretion of the donee, see Castle v. Castle, 1 De G. & J. 352; Re Roper's Trusts, 11 Ch. D. 272; Re G., [1899] 1 Ch. 719; Re O'Flanagan and Ryan, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 280.

(m) Jac. 354.

(n) As to this, see below, p. 925. Compare Re Robertson's Trust, 6 W. R. 405, where the bequest was to A. for the maintenance and support of himself and his family: Kindersley, V.-C., said that no trust was created, and ordered the money to be paid to A., but added that if the children were not maintained they could apply to the Court: this implies that a trust was created.

(o) 10 Sim. 371.

education and support of his children by her; but none of his property was to be disposed of, but the income arising therefrom to be applied as above, to their maintenance and support, and advancement in life and support of his children; and after her death, he gave the property to be divided among his children. The V.-C. said the natural construction of the will was, that the testator intended the whole of the income to be paid to his wife for her life, and to impose on her the burden of maintaining and educating the children out of it. In Hadow v. Hadow (p), Leach v. Leach (q), Browne v. Paull (r), and Longmore v. Elcum (s), words nearly similar received the same construction (t). It appears, as the result of these authorities, that where the interest of the children's legacies is given to a parent to be applied for or towards their maintenance and education, there, in the absence of anything indicating a contrary intention, the parent takes the interest subject to no account, provided only that he discharges the duty imposed upon him of maintaining and educating the children (u); and that a contrary intention is not indicated by a direction, that in case of the parent's death, other trustees should make the application of the fund, in which case, however, such trustees would take nothing beneficially (v).

Result of the authorities.

The question how long a trust for maintenance lasts is discussed in a later part of this chapter (vv).

In Crockett v. Crockett (w), where the testator directed that all his property should be at the disposal of his wife for herself and children, the only point decided was that the wife and children were not joint tenants; but Lord Cottenham was of opinion that the wife had a personal interest in the fund, and that as between herself and her children she was either a trustee with a large discretion as to the application of it, or had a power in favour of the children, subject to a life estate in herself. The former construction would have been the more consistent with the previous authorities. The latter would not only have introduced a limitation of the wife's interest not expressed in the will, but would have left that Duration of trust for maintenance. Crockett v. Crockett.

(p) 9 Sim. 438.

(q) 13 Sim. 304.

(r) 1 Sim. N. S. 92; see also Bowden v. Laing, 14 Sim. 113.

(s) 2 Y. & C. C. C. 363.

(t) See also Re Booth, [1894] 2 Ch. 282; Farr v. Hennis, 44 L. T. 202; Berkeley v. Swinburne, 6 Sim. 613.

(u) Per Lord Cranworth, 1 Sim. N. S. 103. See Farr v. Hennis, 44 L. T.

202; Re Moore, 55 L. J. Ch. 418.

(v) 1 Sim. N. S. at p. 105.

(vv) Post, p. 924.

(w) 2 Phil. 553, reversing the decision, 5 Hare, 326 (which seems to have proceeded on some misapprehension of the decree, 1 Hare, 451). As to Crockett v. Crockett, see Lambe v. Eames, infra. See also Scott v. Key, 35 Beav. 291; Armstrong v. Armstrong, L. R., 7 Eq. 518.

CHAP. XXIV.

diminished interest still subject to the charge of maintaining the children. A "recommendation" not to diminish the principal but to vest it in government or freehold securities, has been held to require this construction (x).

Raikes v. Ward.

In Raikes v. Ward (y), the gift was to the testator's wife, "to the intent she may dispose of the same for the benefit of herself and our children in such manner as she may deem most advantageous." The Court, in deciding against the claim of the children to an absolute interest, said, it could not deprive the widow of the honest exercise of the discretion which the testator had vested in her, or refuse its assistance to inquire into or sanction any reasonable arrangements which she might desire to make. Expressions somewhat similar to those found in the last two cases have received the same construction in the cases of Conolly v. Farrel (z), Woods v. Woods (a), and Costabadie v. Costabadie (b).

Other cases.

Donee allowed to receive legacy without his interest being declared.

In several cases (c), the Court has held the donee entitled to receive the legacy or dispose of the property devised or bequeathed and receive the proceeds, without saying whether he was absolutely entitled or bound honestly to exercise a discretionary trust. In such cases it was merely decided that there was no absolute trust.

Distinction where given in first instance absolutely.

But here, as in the case of precatory trusts, if the property is given in the first instance for the absolute benefit, or to be at the disposal, of the donee, especially if such donee be the parent, no trust will be created by subsequent words shewing that the maintenance of the children was a motive of the gift. And, although it is not directly denied that the Court may control the execution of a trust where the shares of the beneficiaries are left to the discretion of the donee (for the Court is in the constant habit of ascertaining the amount required for maintenance of children), yet increased weight is given to that indefiniteness as shewing that no trust whatever was intended. Thus, in Lambe v. Eames (d), a testator gave his estate to his widow "to be at her disposal in any way she may think best for the benefit of herself and family"; the widow (x) Hart v. Tribe, 18 Beav. 215; but see per Turner, L. J., 1 D. J. & S. 418.

(y) 1 Hare, 445.

(z) 8 Beav. 347.

(a) 1 My. & Cr. 401 ("towards her support and her family").

(b) 6 Hare, 410; and see Cowman v. Harrison, 10 Hare, 234; Smith v. Smith, 2 Jur. N. S. 967; Godfrey v. Godfrey, 2 N. R. 16; Dixon v. Dixon, W. N. 1876, p. 225; Ryan v. Keogh, Ir. R., 4 Eq. 357; Bond v. Dickinson, 33 L. T. 221; Re Robertson's Trust, 6 W. R. 405.

(c) Cooper v. Thornton, 3 Br. C. C. 96; Robinson v. Tickell, 8 Ves. 142; Woods v. Woods, 1 My. & Cr. 401; Wood v. Richardson, 4 Beav. 174; Pratt v. Church, ib. 177; Briggs v. Sharp, L. R., 20 Eq. 317. As to Re Robertson's Trust, 6 W. R. 405, see supra, p. 892 n. (n).

(d) L. R., 6 Ch. 597. See also Mackett v. Mackett, L. R., 14 Eq. 49; Re Adams and Kensington Vestry, 24 Ch. D. 199. But see Scott v. Key, 35 Beav. 291.

made a will disposing of part of her husband's estate, and giving an interest therein to a natural son of one of his children; and the questions were whether there was a trust, and if there was, whether it had been duly executed. Crockett v. Crockett, and other cases cited above, were pressed on the Court; but with reference to them Sir W. James, L.J., expressed a strong disapproval of the "official kindness" of the Court in interposing trusts where none were intended, and said, "If the case stood alone, I should say that no sufficient trust was declared by the will; but if there be any such obligation, I think it has been fairly discharged by the way in which she (the widow) has made her will" (e).

CHAP. XXIV.

(c) Lastly, as to cases where the primary donee is held to be absolutely entitled.

(c) Where primary donee held absolutely entitled.

In Brown v. Casamajor (f), a legacy was given to a father, the better to enable him to provide for his younger children. The father consented to secure the principal for the benefit of his younger children, but the Court, on his petition, held him entitled to the past arrears of interest. The report suggests no reason for this decision, but that which appears to be the reasonable one, viz. that the legacy was originally absolute to the father, and remained so except so far as his consent to settle it had deprived him of his interest.

Brown v. Casamajor.

Again, in Hammond v. Neame (g), there was a gift to a trustee of a sum of stock, upon trust to pay the income to the testator's niece, "for and towards the maintenance, education and bringing up of all and every her children, until he, she, or they shall attain twenty-one"; and then the stock was given equally among them. The niece having no children at the testator's death, it was held that she was entitled to the interest of the stock.

Hammond v. Neame.

In Wood v. Cox (h) the testatrix gave property to A. for his own use and benefit, "trusting and wholly confiding in his honour that he will act in strict conformity to any wishes": it was held that A. took absolutely, subject to the payment of certain legacies which were admitted to be validly bequeathed.

Wood v. Cox.

(e) As to Willis v. Kymer, 7 Ch. D. 181, see ante, p. 868, note (s).

(f) 4 Ves. 498.

(g) 1 Sw. 35. See also Benson v.

Whittam, 5 Sim. 22.

(h) 1 Kee. 317; 2 My. & Cr. 684.

See Irvine v. Sullivan, L. R., 8 Eq. 673, a similar case. See ante, p. 866.

CHAP. XXIV.

*Thorp v.
Owen.*

In Thorp v. Owen (i), the testator desired that everything should remain in its present position during the lifetime of his wife, and after her decease gave his real and personal property to other persons, and then added, "I give the above devise to my wife, that she may support herself and her children according to her discretion and for that purpose." Sir J. Wigram, V.-C., decided that the widow took absolutely for her life. He said, "The cases should be considered under two heads: first, those in which the Court has read the will as giving an absolute interest to the legatees, and as expressing also the testator's motive for the gift; and, secondly, those cases in which the Court has read the will as declaring a trust upon the fund, or part of the fund, in the hands of the legatee. A legacy to A. the better to enable him to pay his debts, expresses the motive for the testator's bounty, but certainly creates no trust which the creditors of A. could enforce in this Court; and again, a legacy to A. the better to enable him to maintain, or educate and provide for, his family must, in the abstract, be subject to a like construction: it is a legacy to the individual, with the motive only pointed out. This is very clearly, and, in my opinion, very correctly, laid down by the V.-C. in Benson v. Whittam; and the cases of Andrews v. Partington (k), Brown v. Casamajor, and Hammond v. Neame, illustrate the same principle. At the same time, a legacy to a parent upon trust to be by him applied, or in trust, for the maintenance and education of his children, will certainly give the children a right, in a Court of Equity, to enforce their natural claims against the parent in respect of the fund on which the trust is declared" (kk). And the V.-C. added (l): "If you give property to persons to accomplish an object, increasing their funds so that they might be the better able to do it—that is, in point of fact, a gift to them, and there is no trust which others can enforce." This is an important distinction, clear in principle, but often difficult of application.

Bequest
to A. to maintain B.

In Biddles v. Biddles (m), under a gift to A., to bring up and maintain B., A. was held to be absolutely entitled, principally on the ground that the testatrix directed the income of one-fourth of

(i) 2 Hare, 607. See M'Alinden v. M'Alinden, 11 E. R., 11 Eq. 219; Morrin v. Morrin, 19 L. R. Ir. 37.

(k) 2 Cox, 223. Compare Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 H. & M. 60.

(kk) See Re Robertson's Trust, ante, p. 892, n. (n).

(l) 2 Hare, 614.

(m) 16 Sim. 1; see also Berkeley v.

Swinburne, 6 Sim. 613 (where the income was payable to the guardians of the children after the death of their parent); Oakes v. Strachey, 13 Sim. 414; Leigh v. Leigh, 12 Jur. 907; Jones v. Greatwood, 16 Beav. 527; Hart v. Tribe, 18 Beav. 215 (as to the 100l.); Wheeler v. Smith, 1 Gif. 300; Howorth v. Dewell, 29 Beav. 18.

her residuary estate to be applied for the maintenance and education of B. during his infancy, and the capital to be paid to him on attaining twenty-one. And in Byne v. Blackburn (n), where the testator bequeathed a sum of money to trustees, in trust after the death of his daughter M., to pay the dividends to her husband during his life, "nevertheless to be by him applied for or towards the maintenance, education or benefit of the children of M.," it was held that no trust was created in favour of the children, and that A. was entitled absolutely for his life; on the ground that if the testator had intended A. to be merely a trustee, he would not have made the bequest in the first instance to other trustees; and that where there is a gift to a parent, coupled with a direction that he shall perform certain parental duties (which are legal obligations as regards a father, but are merely moral obligations in the case of a mother), it is a gift to and a beneficial interest in the person to whom it is made. Yet nothing is more common in trusts for the maintenance of children, than to direct the trustees to pay the money over to the children's guardian, to be by him applied for their benefit; and with regard to the second reason, it is difficult to reconcile it with Sir J. Wigram's remarks cited above.

In Dowling v. Dowling (o) a testator gave a fund to be equally divided among his four sons, and then provided that his executors should invest the share of his son J. in the purchase of a residence "where my said son and family may enjoy apartments free of rent, and that he may have . . . some income towards support of himself and family." It was held that the gift to J. was absolute, and that the trust was repugnant and void.

In Re Harbison (p), property was given to "the Rev. T. L., parish priest, for a Roman Catholic school, or for whatever other purpose he pleases": it was held that he took beneficially. Vagueness of purpose.

In Earl of Mexborough v. Savile (q) a testator bequeathed to his eldest son, to whom certain settled estates would pass on the testator's death, "a sum of money sufficient to pay and discharge all the estate duty which may be payable by" him: it was held that this was a gift to the son for his own absolute benefit, and that it did not impose upon him a trust to pay the duty for the benefit of the persons interested in the settled estates in succession to him. Legacy to pay estate duty.

In Adams v. Lopdell (r) a testator devised lands to A. charged (n) 26 Beav. 41. See also the judgment in Lambe v. Eames, L. R., 6 Ch. 597.

(o) [1902] 1 Ir. R. 79.

(p) Re Harbison (Morris v. Larkin),

[1902] 1 Ir. R. 103.

(q) 88 L. T. 131, overruling C. A. Re Mexborough, 86 L. T. 331.

(r) 25 L. R. Ir. 311.

CHAP. XXIV.

Intention to create a trust.

Directions
as to tenancies, employment of particular persons, &c.

Direction to permit tenants to continue in occupation, to employ a particular steward, &c.

*Hibbert v.
Hibbert.*

with an annuity to B., and bequeathed a sum of money to A. to assist him in paying off a mortgage on the demised lands. It was held that B. could not compel A. to apply the money in discharge of the mortgage.

But, of course, a testator may use language shewing that he intends to create a trust: as in Cary v. Cary (s), where the testator gave leaseholds to A. in order to exonerate his estates from certain debts and incumbrances, and charged the leaseholds with the payment thereof.

(4) Directions as to Employment in Office, &c.—Sometimes a testator's recommendation in favour of a third person is not of a nature to create a simple absolute trust for his benefit, but has for its object the placing or continuance of such person in some office or capacity connected with the property that is the subject of disposition, involving the performance of a certain duty. As where a testator directs that the tenants of the devised property shall be allowed to continue in its occupation, either with or without a condition or restriction as to rent, cultivation, &c.

In Tibbits v. Tibbits (n), where a testator made a devise to his son, recommending him to continue his cousins A. and B. "in the occupation of their respective farms in the county of W. as heretofore, and so long as they continue to manage the same in a good and husbandlike manner, and to duly pay their rents," it was held to be a trust for the cousins, who had been tenants at will. Whether such words would be given this effect at the present day may, perhaps, be doubted.

It has been much discussed whether a direction or injunction to employ a particular agent or steward, imposes on the devisee an obligation in the nature of a trust in favour of the person so named, subject, of course, to the implied condition faithfully to discharge the duties of the office. In Hibbert v. Hibbert (o), the testator, whose only real estates were in Jamaica, directed that his friend H. should be appointed receiver of his real and personal estates, adding that he made this appointment for the sake of benefiting H. in a pecuniary point of view. Sir W. Grant, M.R., gave effect to the testator's direction by appointing H. to be receiver, agent and consignee for the Jamaica estates, upon his personal recognizance,

(s) 2 Sch. & L. 173, explained in Barrs v. Fewkes, 2 H. & M. 60, cited ante, p. 708.

(n) 19 Ves. 656. Compare Quayle v. Davidson, 12 Moo. P. C. C. 268.

(o) 3 Mer. 681. See also Saunders v. Rotherham, 3 Gif. 556 (direction to continue testator's trade and employ A. as manager).

without (as would have been required if he had not been appointed by the testator) giving the usual security. But the Court obviously had a discretion in the matter.

CHAP. XXIV.

In Williams v. Corbet (p), where a testator devised his estates to trustees upon trust to let the same, and apply the rents in paying off certain incumbrances, and appointed A. to be auditor of the accounts during the execution of the trusts, and directed the trustees to pay him the usual annual remuneration; Sir L. Shadwell, V.-C., held that the trustees were not justified in removing A. from the office, there being no imputation on his conduct, for that he had as much right to be the auditor as any one of the devisees had to the estates.

Williams v. Corbet.

True principle.

The application of this rule, however, would in many cases cause serious embarrassment to trustees in the management of the trust, and it is submitted that the true principle was laid down in Lawless v. Shaw (q), where a testator, after devising his estates, charged with certain annuities, to his friend William Shaw for life, with remainders over in strict settlement, and after bequeathing to his friend and agent B. E. Lawless 100*l.* as a token of the testator's esteem for him, declared it to be his particular desire that Shaw should continue Lawless in the receipt and management of the devised estates, and likewise should employ and retain him in the agency and management of lands to be purchased in pursuance of the will, at the usual fees allowed to agents, he having acted for the testator since he became possessed of the estate fully to his satisfaction. Soon after the testator's decease, Shaw dismissed Lawless from his office as land-agent, but without impeaching his character or capacity. Lawless filed a bill against Shaw, claiming to be reinstated, which was dismissed by Lord Plunket. This decision, after being reversed by Sir E. Sugden, was restored by the House of Lords (r), on the ground that a gift of an estate to one person is inconsistent with a direction that another should have the management of it.

The same principle was followed in Finden v. Stephens (s): where the testator expressed the wish and desire that the plaintiff be appointed as agent, receiver, or manager, whenever the trustees should have occasion for the services of a person in that capacity. Lord Cottenham said: "The testator gives his property to trustees who, until the death of the survivor of the wife and her

(p) 8 Sim. 349.

(q) Ll. & Go. 154.

(r) Shaw v. Lawless, 5 Cl. & Fin. 129.(s) 2 Ph. 142; Belaney v. Kelly, 24 L. T. 738.

CHAP. XXIV.

nieces, were to act in the management of the estate. . . . Is it consistent with this purpose, that he should give to the plaintiff an irrevocable office of agent, receiver or manager ? ”

So, a direction in a will that a particular person “ shall be the solicitor to my estate and to my said trustees in the management and carrying out the provisions of this my will,” has been held not to impose any trust or duty on the trustees to continue such person as their solicitor (t).

Solicitor
trustee.

A testator sometimes appoints a solicitor, surveyor, stock-broker, or other professional person to be one of the trustees of his will, and authorises him to charge for his professional services (u). Such a provision confers a beneficial interest under the will within sect. 15 of the Wills Act, which is forfeited if the person to whom it is given attests the execution of the will (v). It cannot be claimed as against creditors (w), and appears to be liable to legacy duty (x).

Trust must have object.

III.—Trusts without a Definite Object.—The general rule is that “ every trust must have a definite object. There must be somebody in whose favour the Court can decree performance ” (y). Charitable gifts are no exception to the rule, because they can be enforced at the suit of the Attorney-General, representing the Crown; but in a charitable trust, as in any other trust, there must be a cestui que trust, namely, the public or a section of the public (z). And an intention to create a trust of a charitable nature must be expressed (a).

Discretionary trusts.

What appears to be an exception to the rule is where property is given to a person as a trustee, with power to apply it in a certain way at his discretion, the result being that he may apply it in that way if he likes : that no one can compel him to apply it in that way : and that if he does not apply it in that way, it (or the unapplied part) belongs to the original donor or his representatives. This is called a discretionary trust. Whether it can properly be called (t) Foster v. Elsley, 19 Ch. D. 518.

(u) See Re Ames, 25 Ch. D. 72 ; Re Chapple, 27 Ch. D. 584.

(v) Re Barber, 31 Ch. D. 665 ; Re Pooley, 40 Ch. D. 1.

(w) Re White, [1898] 2 Ch. 217.

(x) Re Thorley, [1891] 2 Ch. 613. It is difficult to understand, on principle, why this should be so. See Hanson's Death Duties, 4th edition, 419.

(y) Per Sir W. Grant, M.R., in Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves. 399. Compare Doe d. Toone v. Copestake, 6 East, 328, where the trusts were so indefinite that the trustees might apply the property to any use they thought fit : and Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 19, where a testator directed his executors to carry on his business for a certain time without disposing of the profits, and it was held that except so far as it might be necessary to do so for the purpose of paying debts and legacies, the direction was inoperative : and see ante, p. 481.

(z) Re Church Patronage Trust, [1904] 2 Ch. 643.

(a) Ante, Chap. IX.

a trust or not does not seem very material: perhaps it would be more accurate to call it a power in the nature of a trust. A common example is the ordinary power of applying income for the maintenance of infants (w); a discretionary trust for the benefit of an adult is another example (x). In Gott v. Nairne (xx), trustees were allowed to carry out a trust, although there was no person who could enforce it.

On the same principle, a direction by a testator that a monument shall be erected to his memory is lawful. Such a direction is effectual to this extent, that the executors or trustees are justified in expending the money, but no one can compel them to do so: "it stands on the same footing as an expensive funeral" (y).

Erection of monument.

The rule laid down in Morice v. Bishop of Durham has been much discussed in connection with the decision of North, J., in Re Dean (z). There the testator bequeathed his horses and dogs to his trustees with an annual sum for their maintenance, payable for a term of fifty years from his death, if any of the animals should so long live: it was held that the trust was valid, although it was not a charity, and that any surplus unexpended by the trustees belonged to the testator's representatives. The decision was based partly on the analogy of a trust for the erection of a monument, and partly on the authority of Mitford v. Reynolds (a), where the point does not seem to have been argued. Its correctness has been doubted, on the ground that the trust was incapable of enforcement (b), but it is submitted that if the trust had been limited to the period allowed by the Rule against Perpetuities, it would have been good, on Trust for benefit of animals.

(w) See Conveyancing Act, 1881, ss. 42, 43.

(x) Gisborne v. Gisborne, 2 App. Ca. 300; Re Coleman, 39 Ch. D. 443.

(xx) 3 Ch. D. 278.

(y) Mellick v. Asylum, Jac. 180, 184; Adnam v. Cole, 6 Bea. 353; Trimmer v. Danby, 25 L. J. Ch. 424 (where Mitford v. Reynolds, 1 Ph. 185, is referred to); Hoare v. Osborne, L. R., 1 Eq. 585; Mussett v. Bingle, [1876] W. N. 170. As to expensive funerals, see Chap. LIV. It has been held that a trust for the maintenance of a tomb is legal, if restricted to the period allowed by the Rule against Perpetuities. These decisions have been criticized by Mr. Gray (Perp. §§ 906-7), but I venture to contend that they are correct. No one can enforce the performance of such a trust, and therefore if the trustees do not expend the income for the purposes of it, there is a resulting trust for the persons interested in the testator's estate; it follows that their interest is contingent, being dependent on the acts of the trustees, and if the trust were of indefinite duration, it would allow contingent interests to take effect beyond the period allowed by law: it is therefore illegal, unless restricted to the period allowed by the Rule against Perpetuities. [C. S.]

(z) 41 Ch. D. 552.

(a) 16 Sim. 105. See also Hicks v. Ross, L. R., 14 Eq. 141.

(b) See an article by Professor Gray in the Harvard Law Review, xv. 509; Gray on Perp. §§ 905 seq.; and an article by the present editor in the Juridical Review for July 1906. On the question of perpetuity, see above, p. 279. The proper way of providing for animals is to give an annuity to the custodian payable so long as any of the animals are living: Re Howard, Times, October 30, 1908.

CHAP. XXIV.

the ground that a discretionary trust can be created for the benefit of animals as well as for the benefit of a spendthrift or lunatic. The difficulty as to perpetuity did not arise in Pettingall v. Pettingall (c), where the trust was held to be valid.

How far objects must be defined.

If a testator shews an intention to create a trust, it is not always necessary that he should definitely indicate the objects of it. Thus where a testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* to trustees upon trust to expend it in planting trees on land of which he was tenant for life, it was held that this was a good trust for the benefit of the owners of the land for the time being (d).

Discretionary gift.

If the gift be expressly "in trust," or if the donees are described as trustees, though the property is to be disposed of in such manner and for such purposes as they think fit, "it being my will that the distribution thereof shall be left entirely to their discretion," they are trustees, and the beneficial interest results to the heir or the next of kin (e). It was at one time supposed that if the property was not expressly given in trust, the donees took beneficially. Thus in Gibbs v. Rumsey (f), the testatrix gave the residue of her property to her "said trustees and executors" (naming them) to be disposed of unto such person and persons and in such manner and form as they in their discretion should think proper and expedient, and it was held by Grant, M.R., that this was not a trust, but the same thing as a general power of appointment, and that the executors took the residue beneficially. But this distinction has been disapproved (g), and in Fenton v. Nevin (h), where the testator bequeathed various legacies, including a legacy to each of his executors, and after directing his property to be sold, proceeded as follows: "I will my executors shall apply the overplus, if any, as they think fit": it was held that they did not take beneficially. Again, in Re Sinclair (i) the testator gave and bequeathed, "with the exception of my said house in Sunderland, the disposal of which I leave to the discretion of my trustees hereinafter mentioned," his real and personal estate to his wife and A. B. upon certain trusts; A. B. predeceased the testator: it was held that the wife took neither a

(c) 11 L. J. Ch. 176.

(d) Re Bowes, [1896] 1 Ch. 507. Cary v. Cary, 2 Sch. & L. 173, may perhaps be referred to this principle; and see Re Mexborough, 86 L. T. 331, 88 L. T. 131, ante, p. 897. As to the result when it becomes impossible to carry out such a trust, see below.

(e) Fowler v. Garlike, 1 R. & My. 232; Buckle v. Bristow, 10 Jur. N. S. 1095; Re Dean, 41 Ch. D. 552, where an annual sum was given to trustees to be expended for certain purposes, with a direction that any part remaining unapplied should be dealt with by them at their sole discretion.

(f) 2 V. & B. 294.

(g) See Buckle v. Bristow, supra; Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo, L. R., 6 P. C. 381.

(h) 31 L. R. Ir. 478.

(i) [1903] W. N. 113.

beneficial interest in the house nor a beneficial power of appointment, and that the house devolved to the testator's heir.

CHAP. XXIV.

But where a testator gives property to his executor or trustee, without words implying any discretion or power of selection, it may appear from the general frame of the will, and the circumstances of the testator's family, that the gift was intended to be beneficial (j); as where he provides for his immediate relatives, and gives the residue of his estate to A. B., whom he has previously appointed executor and trustee (k). The question whether a person is to take as an executor or trustee, or is to have a beneficial interest, is a question of intention, and (as regards executors) is not affected by the Executors Act, 1830 (l).

Where no discretion is given.

The question whether the objects of a trust are sufficiently indicated often arises in gifts which are partly for charitable purposes (m).

Charity.

It will, of course, be remembered that the question frequently arises whether property is given to a person for the purpose of conferring on him the beneficial interest, subject to a particular purpose, or whether it is given to him for a particular purpose, with no intention of conferring on him any beneficial interest; in the latter case, if there is no disposition of the beneficial interest, a resulting trust arises. This subject is discussed in Chapter XXI.

Resulting trust.

IV.—Executory Trusts.—The question whether words used by a testator in declaring a trust are complete in themselves (n), or whether they are intended to serve merely as an outline or minutes of the trust, the details of which are to be filled in by the trustees or some other person, arises chiefly in those cases where the testator directs property to be settled on a certain person and his or her issue (o).

Direction to settle.

The nature of the estates and interests which ought to be limited in pursuance of a direction to settle land, or money to be laid out in the purchase of land, is discussed in another chapter, in connection with the rule in Shelley's Case (p).

Strict settlement of land.

(j) Fenton v. Hawkins, 9 W. R. 300.

(k) Williams v. Arkle, L. R., 7 H. L. 606: post, Chap. XXI.

(l) Ibid.

(m) See above, pp. 228 et seq.

(n) A gift of property to trustees upon trust to convey, transfer or pay it to certain persons in certain events, is not, properly speaking, an executory trust, but the construction of such a gift is sometimes different from that of a direct gift. See Chap. XXXVII., and Abbiss v. Burney, 17 Ch. D. 211.

(o) Lord St. Leonards's definition of "executory trusts," in Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. C. at p. 210, is quoted in Chap. XLVIII. A direction to executors to settle land which is not devised to them gives them a common law power: Knocker v. Bunbury, 6 Bing. N.C. 306.

(p) Chap. XLVIII. As to the way in which a name and arms (shifting) clause should be framed, see Trevor v. Trevor, 13 Sim. 108. In D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 34 Bea. 36, a testator directed a

CHAP. XXIV.

Doctrine of
cy-près.
Form of settlement of land.

The doctrine of cy-près is sometimes applied to executory trusts for the settlement of land on a person's issue (q).

It may here be mentioned that where land is devised or agreed to be settled upon a person and his issue in tail, the established form of limitation, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, is to the first and other sons successively, according to seniority, in tail, remainder to the daughters as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them (r). But if there are words importing division among the issue, it seems that they all take as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them (s). It seems that although a direction to settle land on a person and his children means that it must be settled as realty, the Court may authorize the insertion of powers of leasing, sale, and exchange, with provisions for advancement, &c. (t). According to the older cases, even where there was a direction to insert usual powers, neither a power to jointure (u), nor a power of portioning (v), could be inserted. But a more liberal principle of construction seems now to prevail (w).

Jointure.

In Wright v. Wright (x) a testator gave real and personal estate to his son, to be settled in strict settlement on his marriage: the son having married and died without any settlement having been made, it was held that the widow was entitled to an annuity by way of jointure.

Direction to "entail" realty or personalty.

If real or personal property is directed to be "entailed" on A. and his heirs, it seems that A. only takes a life interest, with remainder to his heirs in tail or absolutely, according to the nature of the property (y).

Second wife.

If the trust is to settle land on marriage as a jointure to the wife, the widow of a second marriage may be entitled (z).

settlement to be made and to contain two shifting clauses in different forms; the M.R. held that the testator had not been his own conveyancer.

(q) Ante, p. 289. The argument in favour of such a settlement failed in Seal v. Seal, Prec. Ch. 421.

(r) See Grier v. Grier, L. R., 5 H. L. 688, post, Chap. XLVIII.

(s) Dodson v. Hay, 3 Br. C. C. 404; Hadwen v. Hadwen, 23 Bea. 551. See Phillips v. James, 3 De. G. J. & S. 72; Mason v. Mason, 5 Ir. R. Eq. 288; Vaizey on Settlements, 167 seq.

(t) Turner v. Sargent, 17 Bea. 515; Wise v. Piper, 13 Ch. D. 848. Older cases are Peake v. Penlington, 2 V. & B. 311; Hill v. Hill, 6 Sim. 136; Lindow v. Fleetwood, 6 Sim. 152; Wheate v. Hall, 17 Ves. 80; Horne v. Barton, Jac. 437; Pearse v. Baron, Jac. 158; Brewster v. Angell, 1 J. & W. 625; Duke of Bedford v. Abercorn, 1 M. & Cr. 312.

(u) Duke of Bedford v. Marquess of Abercorn, 1 My. & C. 312.

(v) Higginson v. Barneby, 2 S. & St. 516.

(w) Viscount Holmesdale v. West, L. R., 3 Eq. 474; 12 Eq. 280; Sackville-West v. Holmesdale, L. R., 4 H. L. 543; Vaizey, 180.

(x) [1904] 1 Ir. R. 360.

(y) See Graves v. Hicks, 11 Sim. 536; Sealy v. Stawell, Ir. R., 2 Eq. 326. In Boydell v. Golightly, 14 Sim. 327, the ultimate limitation of the real and personal estate was made to the person who was the testator's heir.

(z) Mason v. Mason, 5 Ir. R. Eq. 288. See Allanson v. Clitherow, 1 Ves. sen. 24.

Another question which sometimes arises is whether a bequest of chattels or leaseholds (v) to follow the limitations of a strict settlement of realty, or to go with a title, creates an executed or executory trust. This question also is discussed in another chapter (w).

CHAP. XXIV.

Bequest of chattels in strict settlement.

The case of Shelley v. Shelley (x), in which a testatrix bequeathed jewels to be held as heirlooms, without reference to any real estate, is referred to in the same chapter.

A somewhat narrow construction has been placed on testamentary trusts or powers to settle personalty (y). In Laing v. Laing (z) the testator gave a legacy of stock to a female infant, to be paid or transferred to or settled upon her by his trustees and executors by such deed or instrument in writing as they should think most prudent and proper, upon her attaining the age of twenty-one; she married in the testator's lifetime, and attained twenty-one after his death: Shadwell, V.-C., directed the stock to be transferred to her. In Kennerley v. Kennerley (a) the testator gave all his property to his wife to bring up his children, "and when they come of age to settle on them what shall be deemed by her prudent": it was held that this merely gave her a power of appointment among the children, and not a power to settle property on them for life, with remainder to their children. In Loch v. Bagley (b) greater attention was paid to the obvious intention of the testator; he directed his daughters' shares in his residuary personal estate "to be settled on themselves strictly," and it was held that each daughter should have a life interest for her separate use without power of anticipation, with a power of appointment by will over the corpus if she predeceased her husband: in default of appointment the property to go to her next of kin or, if she survived her husband, to her absolutely. In Magrath v. Morehead (c), the narrow construction was applied. In that case the testator gave a share of his property to each of his daughters, "to be settled on themselves on their marriage": it was held by Bacon, V.-C., that on the daughters attaining twenty-one, being unmarried, they were entitled to their shares absolutely.

Direction to settle
personalty.

(v) See Miles v. Harford, 12 Ch. D. 691.

(w) Chap. XX., ante, pp. 695 seq.

(x) L. R., 6 Eq. 540, stated ante, p. 696.

(y) In White v. Briggs (15 Sim. 17) and Combe v. Hughes (L. R., 14 Eq. 415) a direction that property should be "secured" for the benefit of certain persons was held to be equivalent to a direction to settle it. As to the peculiar case of Burrell v. Crutchley (15 Ves. 544), see Vaizey on Settlements, 190.

(z) 10 Sim. 315.

(a) 10 Ha. 160.

(b) L. R., 4 Eq. 122. Compare Munt v. Glynes, 41 L. J. Ch. 639, where the legatee was judicially separated from her husband, and the legacy was ordered to be paid to her.

(c) L. R., 12 Eq. 491.

CHAP. XXIV.

Where restrained from anticipation.

Effect of gift over,

or contingent legacy.

Interests of children.

But if a legacy is given to a woman, with a direction that it shall be settled upon her for her life, it will be settled for her separate use with a restraint on anticipation (d).

If the testator gives a legacy to his daughter, with a direction to settle it on her marriage, and a gift over in the event of her not leaving issue, this is an effective direction, and will be carried into effect by giving her a life interest for her separate use, with remainder to her children as she shall appoint, and in default to her children who attain twenty-one or being daughters, marry (e). And if a legacy is given to a feme sole contingently on her marriage, a direction to settle it is effective (f). A fortiori, a direction to settle property on a person and his or her issue, children or family is effective (g). The children take as tenants in common (gg).

Where the testator directs a legacy to be settled on the legatee and his (or her) wife (or husband) and children, a power of appointment among the children will be given to the husband and wife, or the survivor, with the usual trust in default of appointment for children who attain twenty-one or marry, and the usual hotchpot, maintenance and advancement clauses (h). But if the testator has shewn an intention that the children are to take equally, the power of appointment will be omitted (i). The ultimate trust varies according to circumstances (ii). In Turner v. Sargent (j) a trust to settle on children, with a substitutional gift to their issue, (d) Re Parrott, 33 Ch. D. 274; Re Dunnill's Trust, Ir. R., 6 Eq. 322. See Turner v. Sargent, 17 Bea. 515; Symonds v. Wilkes, 11 Jur. N. S. 659; Eustace v. Robinson, 7 L. R. Ir. 83; Stanley v. Jackman, 23 Bea. 450; Dowd v. Dowd, [1898] Ir. 244. It has been held that where a precatory trust has been created by will in favour of "children," the trustee may vary the trust, by limiting the shares of daughters to their separate use: Willis v. Kymer, 7 Ch. D. 181. But see ante, p. 868 n. (s).

(e) Young v. Macintosh, 13 Sim. 445; Oliver v. Oliver, 10 Ch. D. 765; Harris v. Loftus (No. 2), [1903] 1 Ir. R. 203. Compare Stanley v. Jackman, 23 Bea. 450, where the direction to settle was contained in a deed. If there are several children of the first taker, and one of them dies under age and unmarried before the settlement is executed, it seems that the survivors take the whole: Herring-Cooper v. Herring-Cooper, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 465. Compare Harris v. Loftus, supra. In Findon v. Findon, 1 De G. & J. 380, there was a direction to settle on testator's daughter and her issue, with a gift over "in default of such issue"; no settlement was executed, and the daughter's only child died an infant in her lifetime: it was held that the daughter's personal representative was entitled to the fund.

(f) Duckett v. Thompson, 11 L. R. Ir. 424.

(g) Stonor v. Curwen, 5 Sim. 264; White v. Briggs, 15 Sim. 17; Combe v. Hughes, L. R., 14 Eq. 415; Re Spicer, 84 L. T. 195; Wright v. Wright, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 360, and the cases cited post. The decision of Shadwell, V.-C., in Samuel v. Samuel (14 L. J. Ch. 222) is unintelligible.

(gg) Taggart v. Taggart, 1 Sch. & L. 84. (h) Re Gowan, 17 Ch. D. 778: following Cogan v. Duffield, 2 Ch. D. 44.

(i) Re Parrott, 33 Ch. D. 274. As to the practice in Ireland with regard to the hotchpot clause, see Re Norcott's Estate, 14 Ir. Ch. 315; Lees v. Lees, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 549; Miller v. Gulson, 13 L. R. Ir. 408.

(ii) Stanley v. Jackman, 23 Bea. 450. (j) 17 Bea. 515.

was carried out so as to exclude issue who did not survive the tenant for life. This would probably not be followed at the present day (k).

CHAP. XXIV.

A covenant to settle after-acquired property is not a "usual" provision (kk).

It seems that a direction to settle property on a person and his or her issue or "family" does not authorise a direct provision for his or her wife or husband (l). But in Charlton v. Rendall (m) the Court approved of the insertion in the settlement of a power enabling the legatee to appoint a life interest to her husband (n).

Wife or husband of legatee.

Where a testator directs personalty to be settled on a person for life, with remainder to his (or her) children in such a way as to include children by any marriage, and provides for a life interest being given to the wife (or husband), this authorises a life interest being given to a second wife (or husband) (o).

Future wife or husband.

There are also cases in which real and personal property is directed to be settled by the same will. No general principle as to the frame of the settlement in such cases seems to be deducible from the decisions (p).

Real and personal property in same settlement.

If a settlement on marriage is directed, and the marriage takes place, but no settlement is executed, it seems that a proper settlement will be directed at any time, even after the death of the original devisee or legatee (q).

Failure to settle.

Where a legacy is given to a woman with a direction that it shall be settled on her for life, with remainder to her children, it may be ordered to be paid over to her if she lives to an advanced age without marrying (r). And if a legacy is directed to be settled on A. and his (or her) children, and no settlement is made, and A. dies without any children, the legacy belongs to A.'s representatives (s).

Where legatee takes absolutely.

V.—Undisclosed Trusts.—Notwithstanding the statutory requirement that every will must be in writing, there are cases in (k) See the result of the long conflict of authority on this point stated in Chap. XXXVI.

(kk) Re Maddy's Estate, [1901] 2 Ch. 820.

(l) White v. Briggs, 15 Sim. 17; Young v. Macintosh, 13 Sim. 445.

(m) 11 Ha. 296.

(n) Compare Wilkinson v. Joughin, 41 L. J. Ch. 234.

(o) Nash v. Allen, 42 Ch. D. 54. In Re Parrott, supra, the terms of the will excluded a future husband. As to the case of divorce, see Marlborough v. Marlborough, [1901] 1 Ch. 165.

(p) See White v. Briggs, 15 Sim. 17, 2 Ph. 583; Boydell v. Golightly, supra, p. 904; Turner v. Sargent, 17 Bea. 515; Vaizey on Settlements, 189.

(q) Mason v. Mason, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 288; Wright v. Wright, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 360.

(r) Lyddon v. Ellison, 19 Bea. 565; Re Jordan's Trusts, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 119.

(s) Bell v. Jackson, 1 Sim. N. S. 547; Norman v. Kynaston, 3 D. F. & J. 29; Eaton v. Barker, 2 Coll. 124; Olphert v. Olphert, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 326. See also Bradford v. Young, 29 Ch. D. 617, and compare the cases cited in Chap. XXXVII.

CHAP. XXIV.

which property disposed of by will can be made subject to trusts, the terms of which are not declared by the will or by any document incorporated in it.

The cases fall under two classes, one comprising those cases in which the existence of a trust appears on the face of the will, and the other comprising those cases where the trust is altogether secret.

Existence of trust disclosed by the will.

It has been decided that if property is given to A., and the will shews that the testator intends him to hold it upon trust (t), but does not either expressly or by reference to any existing document declare what the terms of the trust are, oral evidence is admissible to prove them, provided the trust was communicated to A. prior to, or simultaneously with, the execution of the will (u).

So, in Re Huxtable (v), where a testatrix bequeathed 4,000*l.* to C. "for the charitable purposes agreed upon between us," evidence was admitted to shew what those purposes were.

But the wishes of the testator may, of course, be expressed in such a way that they would not, even if set forth in the will, create a trust (w).

Rule not applicable to powers.

With regard to the rule above stated, there is a difference between trusts and powers. Thus in Re Hetley (x), a testator gave his property to his wife for life, and desired and empowered her by her will or in her lifetime to dispose of his estate in accordance with his wishes verbally expressed by him to her: it was held by Joyce, J., that parol evidence could not be admitted to shew what the testator's verbally expressed wishes were, and that the power of disposition given to the widow was void for uncertainty.

Trust not communicated at date of will.

There is some conflict of judicial opinion on the question whether the general rule above stated applies where the trust is not communicated to A. until after the execution of the will. The cases of Moss v. Cooper (y) and Norris v. Frazer (z) are sometimes cited as (t) See Re Spencer's Will, referred to infra, p. 910; Balfe v. Halpenny, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 486; O'Brien v. Condon, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 51.

(u) Re Fleetwood, 15 Ch. D. 594; the following cases are cited and commented on in the judgment: Crook v. Brooking, 2 Vern. 50; Pring v. Pring, 2 Vern. 99; Smith v. Attersoll, 1 Russ. 266; Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 644; Johnson v. Ball, 5 De G. & S. 85; Irvine v. Sullivan, L. R., 8 Eq. 673; Riordan v. Banon, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 469. See also In bonis Marchant, [1893] P. 254, and the cases cited in note (t), supra. It may be noted that Crook v. Brooking (or Crooke v. Brookeing) is not an authority on the point now under discussion: in that case the trust was declared by a letter written by one of the legatees to the other.

(v) [1902] 1 Ch. 214, 2 Ch. 793.

(w) Sullivan v. Sullivan, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 193; Reid v. Atkinson, Ir. R., 5 Eq. 373; Creagh v. Murphy, Ir. R., 7 Eq. 182; Re Baillie, 2 T. L. R. 60.

(x) [1902] 2 Ch. 866.

(y) 1 J. & H. 352.

(z) L. R., 15 Eq. 318.

establishing the affirmative of the proposition, but in each of those cases the existence of the trust did not appear on the face of the will. In Riordan v. Banon (a), the Vice-Chancellor thought that there was no difference in principle between the two classes of cases, but Parker, V.-C., in Johnson v. Ball (b), and Joyce, J., in Re Hetley (c), seem to have been of a different opinion. And in Balfe v. Halpenny (d) it was held that an attempt to create a "secret trust" after the execution of the will was nugatory, and that the trustees held the property upon trust for the next of kin.

Trusts declared by unincorporated document.

Possibly the decision in In bonis Marchant (e) can be supported on the principle now under discussion. In that case the testatrix had two documents of a testamentary character prepared, one appointing X. as executor, and containing various dispositions of her property, and the other a bequest of her property to A. "for the purposes I require him to do absolutely." The latter was duly executed as a will: the former was not executed. The Court granted probate of the second paper (apparently to X.), and ordered that the executor should administer the estate according to the trusts of the first paper. But there is nothing in the report to shew that the trusts were communicated to A., and if they were not, the decision seems erroneous. And in any case it is difficult to see how X. can have been entitled to probate: the first document was not incorporated in the second (ee).

Reference to future written declaration of trust.

In Johnson v. Ball (f), a testator gave a policy of assurance to two trustees "to hold the same upon uses appointed by letter signed by them and myself." No such letter existed at the date of the will, but the testator afterwards signed and delivered to the trustees a memorandum declaring the trusts of the policy: it was held that this attempt to create a power to dispose of property by an instrument not duly executed as a will was ineffectual, and that the trustees held the policy in trust for the residuary legatees.

Trust not communicated during testator's lifetime.

It is equally clear that if the trust is not communicated to the legatee during the lifetime of the testator, it cannot be established by a paper not executed as a will (g).

Where trustee cannot take beneficially.

Where the fact that a gift to A. is made to him merely as trustee appears on the face of the will, he cannot in any case take beneficially, and if the trust is not established, or is illegal, or fails, he holds upon

(a) 10 Ir. Eq. R. 469: so in Sullivan v. Sullivan, supra.

(b) 5 De G. & S. 85.

(c) Supra.

(d) [1904] 1 Ir. R. 486.

(e) [1893] P. 254.

(ee) Ante, p. 135, n. (v).

(f) 5 De G. & S. 85.

(g) Scott v. Brownrigg, 9 L. R. Ir. 246. Compare Re Boyes, 26 Ch. D. 531, where the trust was secret.

CHAP. XXIV.

trust for the residuary legatee (or devisee), or the next of kin (or heir at law) as the case may be (h). This is so even if it appears from the evidence that, subject to the trusts which fail, the testator intended the trustee to take the property for his own benefit (hh).

And if the gift is by the terms of the will made to A., merely as trustee, without any limitation, parol evidence is not admissible to shew that the trusts apply only to a part of the property. Thus, in Re Huxtable (i) a testatrix bequeathed 4,000*l.* to C. "for the charitable purposes agreed upon between us": it was held that evidence was admissible to shew what the charitable purposes were, but not to shew that the trust only applied to the income of the 4,000*l.* during C.'s lifetime.

Where trustee takes beneficially subject to trust.

But if the gift is to A. "absolutely," or "for his own use and benefit," followed by a reference to the testator's wishes with regard to the disposition of the property, A. takes beneficially, subject only to his carrying out the testator's wishes if and so far as they create a trust. Thus in Irvine v. Sullivan (j) the testator gave his property to D. absolutely, "trusting that she will carry out my wishes with regard to the same, with which she is fully acquainted"; the "wishes" were that D. should make payments to certain persons: it was held that she took the property beneficially, subject to making the payments in question.

Secret trust.

Where property is given by will to A. in terms which imply that he is to take it for his own benefit, but the testator informs A. of his intention that A. is to hold the property upon trust, the terms of which he communicates to him, evidence of the trust is admissible (k), and it will, if legal, be enforced (l). The theory is that A. has induced the testator to leave the property to him, on his express or tacit promise to perform the trust, and that the Court ought not to allow him to commit a fraud by refusing to carry out the testator's wishes (m). The communication of the Communication of trust.

(h) See Briggs v. Penny, 3 De G. & S. at p. 546; Johnson v. Ball, supra; Re Boyes, supra. As to secret trusts of land for charities, see ante, p. 263.

(hh) Re Baillie, 2 T. L. R. 660.

(i) [1902] 2 Ch. 793. It is submitted that the decision in Morrison v. M'Ferran, [1901] 1 Ir. 360, conflicts with this principle.

(j) L. R., 8 Eq. 673. In Wood v. Cox, 2 Myl. & Cr. 684, the payments to be made by the residuary legatee were specified in a paper which under the old law was testamentary.

(k) As to the nature of the evidence required, see p. 912, n. (x).

(l) Russell v. Jackson, 10 Ha. 204; Norris v. Frazer, L. R., 15 Eq. 318; O'Brien v. Condon, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 51. In Re Spencer's Will, 57 L. T. 519, the testator bequeathed a legacy to A. and B., "relying, but not by way of trust, upon their applying it" in a manner "privately communicated to them" by him: evidence of a secret trust was admitted.

(m) Wallgrave v. Tebbs, 2 K. & J. 313; McCormick v. Grogan, L. R., 4 H. L. 82, terms of the trust may take place before or after the execution of the will (n). CHAP. XXIV.

The wishes of the testator may be expressed in such a way as to shew that he did not intend to create a trust, as where he gives the devisee or legatee an absolute discretion in the disposition of the property (o). Where no trust created by expression of wish.

Where the gift is made to A. and B. as joint tenants, and the trust is communicated to A. before the execution of the will, B. is also bound by the trust, on the principle that no person can claim an interest under a fraud committed by another (p). But if the trust is not communicated to A. until after the execution of the will, B. is not bound (q). Communication to one of two joint tenants.

If the gift is made to A. and B. as tenants in common, and the trust is communicated to A., whether before or after the execution of the will, but is not communicated to B., then B.'s share is not bound by the trust (r). Tenants in common.

If no communication on the subject of the trust is made to the legatee or devisee during the testator's lifetime, he takes the property for his own benefit; no declaration made by the testator (unless executed as a will) can affect him with a trust (s). Trust not communicated during lifetime.

If, however, the testator during his lifetime informs A. of his intention to leave property to A. upon a trust, the terms of which are not communicated to A. during the testator's lifetime, A. takes as trustee, but the intended trust is ineffectual, and cannot be ascertained by a written declaration of the testator not executed as a will. Thus, in Re Boyes (t), the property was given to A. absolutely, but before the execution of the will he had agreed to hold it upon such trusts as should be afterwards communicated to him by the testator; no such communication was made, and the only declaration of the trusts was contained in two letters addressed to A., signed by the testator but unattested, found among his papers after his death: it was held that this declaration was ineffectual, and that A. was trustee for the next of kin. Trust communicated, but not details.

and another decision of the House of Lords in French v. French, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 172.

(n) See per Kay, J., in Re Boyes, 26 Ch. D. at p. 535; Re Maddock, [1902] 2 Ch. 220.

(o) McCormick v. Grogan, L. R., 4 H. L. 82; Re Pitt-Rivers, [1902] 1 Ch. 403; Sullivan v. Sullivan, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 193. Compare other cases cited ante, p. 871.

(p) Russell v. Jackson, supra; Jones v. Badley, L. R., 3 Eq. 635, 3 Ch. 362. The point does not seem to have been considered in Turner v. Att.-Gen., Ir. R., 10 Eq. 386.

(q) Moss v. Cooper, supra; Burney v. Macdonald, 15 Sim. 6; Re Stead, [1900] 1 Ch. 237.

(r) Tee v. Ferris, 2 K. & J. 357; Rowbotham v. Dunnett, 8 Ch. D. 430; Geddis v. Semple, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 73.

(s) See Jones v. Badley, L. R., 3 Eq. 635, L. R., 3 Ch. 362; Re Stead, [1900] 1 Ch. 237.

(t) 26 Ch. D. 531.

CHAP. XXIV.

Illegal trust.

If a secret trust is illegal, the devisees or legatees hold the property upon trust for the persons upon whom it would have devolved if the gift had not been contained in the will (u).

Personal nature of secret trust.

A secret trust is a personal obligation binding the individual devisee or legatee. If he renounces and disclaims, or dies in the lifetime of the testator, the persons intended to be benefited by the secret trust can claim nothing against the heir at law, next of kin, or residuary devisees or legatees (v).

Administration.

For the purpose of administering the estate of the testator, a secret trust has the same effect as if it were contained in the will (w).

Evidence.

Clear evidence is required to establish a secret trust (x).

Certainty of subject not required.

The rule which applies in cases where a precatory trust is alleged to exist—namely, that in order to create such a trust, there must be a certainty of subject—does not apply to secret trusts, for if property is devised or bequeathed to a person upon a secret trust, the onus of shewing to what part of the property the trust does not extend lies on him (z).

Release of debt.

The principle above stated applies to the release of a debt. If a testator makes a person his residuary legatee, and informs him that he has released, or wishes to release, a debtor from the debt due by him to the testator, and the residuary legatee does not express dissent, this is tantamount to an undertaking by him to give effect to the testator's desire, and he will therefore not be allowed to enforce payment of the debt (a).

VI.—Trusts and Powers frequently inserted in Wills.—In addition to the clauses which determine the beneficial interests devised or bequeathed by a testator, it is usual for wills to contain various trusts or powers directing or empowering the trustees to convert or manage the property in certain ways. Further, the trustees are often given power to vary or affect the beneficial interests within certain limits. The most common of the former class of trusts are those for conversion, investment, and of powers for sale, mortgaging or leasing. Of the latter, powers for maintenance and (u) Russell v. Jackson, 10 Ha. 204. See Chap. IX. as to trusts void under the Mortmain Act, &c.

(v) Per Cozens-Hardy, L.J., in Re Maddock, [1902] 2 Ch. at p. 231.

(w) Re Maddock, [1902] 2 Ch. 220.

(x) McCormick v. Grogan, L. R., 4 H. L. 82; Jones v. Badley, L. R., 3 Ch. 362; Re Downing's Estate, 60 L. T. 140;

Re Pitt-Rivers, [1902] 1 Ch. 403.

(z) Russell v. Jackson, 10 Ha. 204. Compare Re Huxtable, [1902] 2 Ch. 793.

(a) Re Applebee, [1891] 3 Ch. 422, in which Wekett v. Raby, 2 Br. P. C. 386; Byrn v. Godfrey, 4 Ves. 5; Flower v. Marten, 2 My. & Cr. 459; and Cross v. Sprigg, 6 Ha. 552, are referred to.

advancement are the most usual, but other discretions are frequently given to trustees. In this chapter some of the questions of construction which arise in connection with such trusts or powers are considered; the powers given by the Settled Land Acts to tenants for life, and the powers contained in the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and the powers vested in executors as incident to their office, are all available for the purpose of dealing with the testator's property, but do not give rise to questions of construction in the will, and are not within the scope of this work.

CHAP. XXIV.

Trusts and Powers for Sale of Land.—Where a power of sale is given to trustees over settled property, the power (expressed to be during the continuance of the trust) does not come to an end when an undivided share of the property has vested absolutely (b), but it comes to an end if the purposes for which it was created have ceased to exist (c). A power of sale will, in general, come to an end when by reason of the expiration or cesser of the limitations the absolute interests come into possession, but such a power may be exercised within a reasonable time after that period for the purpose of dividing the property (d), unless the beneficiaries have elected to take the property as it stands (e), or it may be exerciseable for the purpose of raising money to pay debts and legacies (f). So long as the Rule against Perpetuities is not infringed, the duration of a power of sale is one of intention (g).

Duration of power.

An imperative trust for sale also does not come to an end when all the interests have vested in possession, unless the beneficiaries have elected to take the property as real estate (h).

Duration of trust for sale.

Where the trustees have a power to postpone the sale, the vesting in possession of one of the shares does not put an end to the power of postponement (hh).

Power to postpone.

A direction to sell within five years, and apply the proceeds in paying debts and legacies, and then to invest, &c., does not prevent the trustees from selling after the expiration of the five years (i).

Time limited.

(b) Trower v. Knightley, 6 Mad. 134; Re Brown, L. R., 10 Eq. 349 (settlement); Tait v. Swinstead, 26 Bea. 525; Wood v. White, 4 My. & Cr. 460.

624.

(c) Wheat v. Hall, 17 Ves. 80; Wolley v. Jenkins, 23 Bea. 53; Re Kaye and Hoyle's Contract, 53 Sol. J. 520.

(f) Re Dyson and Fowke, [1896] 2 Ch. 720.

(g) Re Jump, [1903] 1 Ch. 129.

(d) Peters v. Lewes and East Grinstead Railway Co., 18 Ch. D. 429; Re Lord Sudeley and Baines, [1894] 1 Ch. 334.

(h) Re Tweedie and Miles, 27 Ch. D. 315; Re Douglas and Powell, [1902] 2 Ch. 296. See Re Cooke's Contract, 4 Ch. D. 454.

(hh) Re Hornsnail, [1909] 1 Ch. 631.

(i) Pearce v. Gardner, 10 Ha. 287; Cuff v. Hall, 1 Jur. N. S. 972.

(e) Re Cotton's Trustees, 19 Ch. D.

CHAP. XXIV.

Remoteness.

Doctrine of notice.

The question whether an unlimited trust or power of sale is void within the Rule against Perpetuities is discussed elsewhere (j).

Where a trust or power of sale is given for payment of debts, although it comes to an end as soon as the debts are paid, yet if the purchaser has no notice that they have been paid, and if (in cases under the old law (k)), the sale is made within a reasonable time after the testator's death, the purchaser gets a good title (l).

Administrator.

A power of sale given by a testator to his executors or administrators can be exercised by an administrator durante minore ætate (m).

Consent.

Where a power or trust for sale is exerciseable with the consent of a particular tenant for life, or of the tenant for life for the time being, the question may arise whether the consent can be effectually given, if the tenant for life is an infant or has aliened or incumbered his interest or become bankrupt (n), or where one of several tenants for life (named in the will) has died (o). The question may also arise whether the consent of a person entitled to the income under an overriding term of years is required in addition to that of the tenant for life (p).

Settled Land
Acts.

The statutory powers of sale given by the Settled Land Acts do not fall within the scope of this treatise, but it may be mentioned that in the case of settled land, where a will gives a power of sale to trustees, sect. 56 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, prohibits the exercise of such a power without the consent of the tenant for life.

Person to sell not named.

A power in a will to sell or mortgage without naming a donee will, if a contrary intention do not appear, vest in the executor if the fund is to be distributable by him, either for the payment of debts or legacies (q). And where there is a general direction to sell, but it is not stated by whom the sale is to be made, if the produce of the sale is to be applied by the executors in the execution of their office a power to sell will be implied to the executors (r). But where the management of the fund produced by the sale is not given to the (j) Chap. X., ante, pp. 307 seq.

(k) As to whether the law has been altered in this respect, see post, p. 916, n. (z).

(l) Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Ph. 717; Carlyon v. Truscott, L. R., 20 Eq. 348; Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 D. M. & G. 635. Compare Re Venn and Furze and other cases, cited infra, p. 916 n. (z).

(m) Monsell v. Armstrong, L. R., 14 Eq. 423; and see Re Cope, 16 Ch. D. 49.

(n) Re Neave's Trusts, 49 L. J. Ch. 642; Re Cardross, 7 Ch. D. 728; Warburton v. Farn, 16 Sim. 625; Re Beding- feld and Herring, [1893] 2 Ch. 332, where the earlier cases are cited.

(o) Sykes v. Sheard, 2 D. J. & S. 6.

(p) Robertson v. Walker, 44 L. J. Ch. 220.

(q) Curtis v. Fulbrook, 8 Hare, 278. See Haydon v. Wood, 8 Hare, 279; Hooper v. Strutton, 12 W. R. 367.

(r) Tylden v. Hyde, 2 S. & Stu. 238; Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Sim. 152, 11 M. & W. 630; Bentham v. Wiltshire, 4 Madd. 44; and see Blatch v. Wilder, 1 Atk. 420, and Lockton v. Lockton, 1 Ch. Ca. 179.

executors, a direction to sell does not give the executors power to sell real estate, even though it is devised to minors (s). CHAP. XXIV.

It may be mentioned that the existence of a power of sale in trustees is no bar to a decree for partition (t), but a trust for sale is (u).

A power of sale may be created indirectly or by implication. Thus, a direction by a testator that his executors shall sell his lands, gives them a common law power of sale, and on a sale the purchaser (under the old law) takes as if they had been devised to him (v). Implied power of sale.

An implied power of sale could also, under the old law, be conferred by a charge of debts or legacies on the real estate, but the law was not clearly settled, especially with reference to the question who was the proper person to sell and make a title (w). In Eidsforth v. Armstead (x), it was said by Wood, V.-C., that the testator, having charged his real estate with a sum of money, must be taken to have given an implied power of sale to some person, to raise the sum required, and that the donee of the power must be ascertained, in each case, from the whole will. Charge of debts and legacies.

The difficulty of knowing who was the proper person to sell real estate charged with debts or legacies was partly removed by Lord St. Leonards's Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35) (y), and in cases within Statutory provisions.

(s) Patton v. Randall, 1 J. & W. 189; Bentham v. Wiltshire, supra.

(t) Boyd v. Allen, 24 Ch. D. 622.

(u) Biggs v. Peacock, 20 Ch. D. 200, 22 Ch. D. 284.

(v) Farwell on Powers, 2, citing Lancaster v. Thornton, 2 Burr. 1027; Doe v. Shotton, 8 A. & E. 905; Stafford v. Buckley, 2 Ves. sen. 170; Warnford v. Thompson, 3 Ves. 513; Smith v. Lord Camelford, 2 Ves. jun. 698. As to copyholds, see R. v. Wilson, 3 B. & S. 201; R. v. Corbett, 1 E. & B. 836; Glass v. Richardson, 2 D. M. & G. 658.

(w) Ball v. Harris, 8 Sim. 485, 4 My. & Cr. 264. In this case, and in Shaw v. Borser, 1 Kee. 559, the doctrine that a general direction to pay debts charged them on the real estate was treated as too clear for discussion, the only contest being whether such a charge conferred an implied authority to sell on the person taking the legal estate subject to certain trusts, which was decided in the affirmative. See also Gosling v. Carter, 1 Coll. 644; Mather v. Norton, 21 L. J. Ch. 15; Sabin v. Heape, 27 Bea. 553; Hodkinson v. Quinn, 1 J. & H. 303; Doe d. Jones v. Hughes, 6 Ex. 223. In this last case it was decided at law that a simple charge of debts did not give the executor not taking the legal estate a power of sale. Robinson v. Lowater, 17 Beav. 592, 5 D. M. & G. 272 (where, however, the legal estate was obtained by the purchaser aliunde), and Wrigley v. Sykes, 21 Beav. 337, are contra; and see Bolton v. Stannard, 4 Jur. N. S. 576; Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. Ca. 905; Corser v. Cartwright, L. R., 7 H. L. 731; Sug. V. & P. 662 n., 14th edition; Hayes and Jarman, Conc. Wills, 564, 8th edition, and 2 Jur. N. S., Part 2, 68. As to a sale for legacies only, see Horn v. Horn, 2 S. & St. 448; Re Rebbeck, 71 L. T. 74, and post, p. 916, n. (b). The cases of Watkins v. Cheek, 2 S. & St. 199; Johnson v. Kennett, 6 Sim. 384; Page v. Adam, 4 Bea. 269; and Forbes v. Peacock, 11 Sim. 152, 1 Ph. 717, are examined in Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 D. M. & G. 635.

(x) 2 K. & J. 333.

(y) As to the application of this act, see Re Clay and Tetley, 16 Ch. D. 3; Re Adams and Perry, [1899] 1 Ch. 554; Re Wilson, 54 L. T. 600; Re Barrow-in-Furness Corporation and Rawlinson, [1903] 1 Ch. 339.

CHAP. XXIV.

Part I. of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, no such question can arise, as executors now have the same power of selling real estate as they have always had in the case of chattels real (z).

Protection of purchaser.

Even in cases governed by the old law, the general rule is that where executors or trustees sell for payment of debts, or of debts and legacies, the purchaser is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money, and the rule seems to be the same where real estate is devised to a person beneficially charged with debts generally, or with debts and legacies (a). But if it is devised subject only to legacies, or subject to a particular debt or other sum of money, then the purchaser must see to the application of the purchase money (b).

Implied from power to vary investments.

A power of sale may also be implied from a power to vary investments, where the will authorizes an investment in the purchase of land (c).

Implied from trust for division.

The cases in which a power of sale is inferred from a direction to divide the testator's real and personal estate into shares have been already referred to (d).

Not implied from power to mortgage.

It seems clear that a power to mortgage does not authorize a sale by the donee of the power (e), although it authorizes a mortgage giving the mortgagee a power of sale.

Partnership land.

An executor always had power to sell, or concur in selling, real estate belonging to a firm in which the testator was a partner (f).

Joint sale.

The circumstances under which trustees, having a trust for or power of sale over one property, may join with the owner of another property in selling both properties together, are considered in Re

(z) See ante, pp. 64 seq., and Chaps. LIII., LIV. With regard to the question under what circumstances a purchaser is bound to inquire whether any debts remain unpaid, it has not yet been decided whether the rule in Re Venn and Furze, [1894] 2 Ch. 101, now applies to real estate, displacing that in Re Tanqueray-Willauve and Landau, 20 Ch. D. 465, in the case of testators dying since 1897. As to leaseholds, see Re Whistler, 35 Ch. D. 561; Re Venn and Furze, supra. The rule in Re Venn and Furze does not always apply: Re Verrell, [1903] 1 Ch. 65; Re Higgins and Stephenson, [1906] 1 Ir. 656.

(a) Sugden, V. & P. 656, 660; Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 D. M. & G. 635; Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. C. 905; Re Henson, [1908] 2 Ch. 356. But apparently this rule would not apply where the testator has died since 1897.

(b) Re Rebbeck, 71 L. T. 74. As to a sale by executors for payment of legacies only, see Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Ph. 717, explained in Carlyon v. Truscott, L. R., 20 Eq. 348; Re Henson, supra.

(c) Re Gent and Eason, [1905] 1 Ch. 386. Compare Tait v. Lathbury, L. R., 1 Eq. 174.

(d) Ante, p. 913.

(e) Cook v. Dawson, 29 Bea. 123, 3 D. F. & J. 127. In this case the question did not really arise, for the power to mortgage was given for a particular purpose, and the sale was made for another, namely, to pay debts. The argument was that the power to mortgage gave the executrix a power of disposition over the fee, and so enabled her to sell in order to pay the debts: see Chap. LIII.

(f) West of England, &c., Bank v. Murch, 23 Ch. D. 138.

Cooper and Allen's Contract (g). If the sale of the property can be effected at a higher price by joining with somebody else, the trustees are only carrying out their trusts and performing their duty by so obtaining that higher price (h).

CHAP. XXV.

Where several properties are held under one lease, the trustees may sell them separately upon the terms that one of the purchasers shall take an assignment of the lease and grant under-leases to the other purchasers, and that if any part of the property is not sold, the trustees shall retain the lease and grant under-leases of the sold portions (i).

Sale by underlease

It is hardly necessary to say that trustees who hold land upon trust for sale cannot dispose of it for the shares or securities of a company, unless expressly authorized to do so. But in West of England, &c., Bank v. Murch (j) a transaction of this kind was upheld as a compromise, the so-called sale being made for the purpose of satisfying the debts of the firm in which the testator was a partner.

Sale for shares of a company.

Trustees having a power of sale over a reversion may exercise it before the reversion falls into possession, although (if the reversion is settled) by doing so they increase the interest of the tenant for life at the expense of the remainder-man (k). Thus, in one case, a testator who was entitled to an estate in remainder subject to the life estate of J. S., devised it to trustees to pay annuities, with remainder to his widow for life, with remainders over, and empowered his trustees to sell it with the consent of the tenant for life entitled in possession under his will. J. S. surrendered her life estate, and it was held that the trustees, with the consent of the widow, could sell and make a good title (l).

Reversion.

A power given to trustees to sell an estate with the consent of the tenant for life (m), does not authorize the trustees to sell the estate exclusive of the timber growing upon it, under an arrangement by which the tenant for life sells the timber for his own benefit (n). In Buckley v. Howell (o) it was held that a Severance of timber and minerals.

(g) 4 Ch. D. 802, where Rede v. Oakes, 4 D. J. & S. 505, is considered, and Morris v. Debenham, 2 Ch. D. 540, is approved. See also Cavendish v. Cavendish, L. R., 10 Ch. 319.

(h) 4 Ch. D. at p. 815.

(i) Re Judd and Poland, [1906] 1 Ch. 684, overruling Re Walker and Oakshott, [1901] 2 Ch. 383.

(j) 23 Ch. D. 138. As to the conversion of a business into a company, see Re Morrison, [1901] 1 Ch. 701, and the other cases cited post, p. 920.

(k) Blackwood v. Borrowes, 4 Dru. & War. 441.

(l) Truell v. Tysson, 21 Bea. 437.

(m) The power should be framed to deal with the case where the tenant for life is an infant: see Re Neave's Trusts, 28 W. R. 976.

(n) Cockerell v. Cholmeley, 10 B. & Cr. 564, 1 Cl. & F. 60; Cholmeley v. Paxton, 3 Bing. 207.

(o) 29 Bea. 546.

CHAP. XXIV.

power of sale and exchange did not authorize trustees to sell the lands with a reservation of minerals. In consequence of this decision, the statute 25 & 26 Vict. c. 108 was passed (p). This act is now repealed and replaced by sect. 44 of the Trustee Act, 1893, as amended by sect. 3 of the Trustee Act, 1894.

Express or implied.

Trusts for Conversion.—It seems convenient to consider under this heading those cases in which a testator directs his residuary real and personal estate to be converted into money. A trust for conversion may be express or implied, for a testator may shew an intention that his estate shall be converted without an express direction or trust to that effect. Thus, in Mower v. Orr (q), the testator directed his real and personal estate to be divided into twenty shares, sixteen of which he gave to his sons, and the remaining four shares he bequeathed as follows: two shares to his daughter Mary, and two shares, to be invested in the Government funds, for the use of her children: it was held that this created a trust for conversion. Affleck v. James (r) is to the same effect.

In Re Holloway (s) the testator declared that it should be lawful for his trustees "to continue the whole or any part of my estate at all times and from time to time in the firm of Holloway Brothers or their successors or assigns, or to invest, re-invest and lend any part of my estate to them upon such terms as the said trustees shall at such discretion as aforesaid think proper, without any personal liability for the safety of such investment." North, J., held that the power to invest did not imply a power of selling the real estate.

Power to postpone
conversion.

An express trust for conversion is often followed by a discretionary power given to the trustees to postpone conversion. The Court will not generally interfere with such a discretion as long as it is honestly exercised: nor are the trustees liable for loss (t). But if there is a difference of opinion among the trustees whether certain investments should be retained or not, the trust for conversion prevails (tt).

A direction to trustees to convert at their absolute discretion

(p) As to a reservation of minerals on a sale or lease under the Settled Land Acts, see Re Gladstone, [1900] 2 Ch. 101; Re Duke of Rutland's Settled Estates, [1900] 2 Ch. 206.

(q) 7 Ha. 473; Cornick v. Pearce, 7 Ha. 477; Flux v. Best, 23 W. R. 228; Carlisle v. Cooke, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 269; Re Cooke's Contract, 4 Ch. D. 454.

(r) 17 Sim. 121. These cases are discussed in Chap. XIX.

(s) 60 L. T. 46.

(t) See Lewin on Trusts. Re Norrington, 13 Ch. D. 654; Re Blake, 29 Ch. D. 913; Re Courtier, 34 Ch. D. 136; Re Crowther, [1895] 2 Ch. 56; Re Smith, [1896] 1 Ch. 171; Re Horsnail, [1909] 1 Ch. 631; Re Schneider, 22 T. L. R. 223.

(tt) Re Hilton, [1909] 2 Ch. 548.

seems to be equivalent to a trust for conversion with power to postpone (u). CHAP. XXIV.

Trusts for Investment.—The general rules governing investments by trustees, whether under express or statutory powers, are beyond the scope of this treatise, but questions sometimes arise as to the effect of particular expressions used by testators. Where, for instance, a testator directs his trustees to invest the trust moneys in such modes of investment as they think fit, this does not, it seems, give them an absolute discretion, although it is difficult to say how far their discretion is restricted (v). Again, a direction to invest a fund in a particular way does not in itself prohibit investment in securities authorized by law (vv). Discretionary trust for investment.

A power to invest money “in his name or under his legal control” does not authorize a trustee to invest on contributory mortgage (vvv).

In its proper sense, “security” generally implies a charge on property, with or without a personal debt or obligation, and therefore does not include shares in companies (w), but in popular language “security” is often used in the sense of “investment.” In Re Rayner (x) the testator declared that his estate might be invested in such securities as his trustees in their absolute discretion should think fit, and he authorized his trustees to continue or leave any moneys invested at his death in or upon the same securities: it was held by the Court of Appeal (reversing Farwell, J.,) that the context shewed that “securities” meant “investments.” “Securities.”

A power to invest in “real securities” does not authorize an investment on contributory mortgage (y), or on long leaseholds (z), except in cases within the Trustee Acts, 1888 and 1893. Real securities.

A power to invest “upon” ground rents does not mean “upon the security of” ground rents; such a power authorizes the purchase of ground rents (a).

It seems that a power to invest in the stocks, funds or securities Companies.

(u) Re Atkins, 81 L. T. 421, post.

(v) Stretton v. Ashmall, 3 Dr. 9; Stewart v. Sanderson, L. R., 10 Eq. 26; Re Kavanagh (Murphy v. Doyle), 27 L. R. Ir. 495, 29 L. R. Ir. 333; Lewis v. Nobbs, 8 Ch. D. 591; Re Brown, 29 Ch. D. 889; Re Smith, [1896] 1 Ch. 71. See Dickinson v. Player, C. P. Cooper, 178, where the executors were authorized to “employ” the residue in any manner they thought proper.

(vv) Re Burke, [1908] 2 Ch. 248.

(vvv) Re Dive, [1909] 1 Ch. 328.

(w) See Harris v. Harris, 29 Bea. 107. As to the meaning of “real security,” see Cavendish v. Cavendish, 30 Ch. D. 227 (tolls).

(x) [1904] 1 Ch. 176. Compare Re Johnson, 89 L. T. 520; Re Gent and Eason, [1905] 1 Ch. 386.

(y) Webb v. Jonas, 39 Ch. D. 660.

(z) Re Boyd's Settled Estates, 14 Ch. D. 626.

(a) Re Mordan, [1905] 1 Ch. 515.

CHAP. XXIV.

of "any" company is not confined to companies formed under the law of England (b). "Companies in the United Kingdom" includes companies registered under the Companies Acts, although their business is carried on in foreign countries (bb).

Sanction of the Court to change of investment.

In some cases the Court has jurisdiction to sanction an alteration in the investment of a trust estate in a manner not authorized by the will or settlement, when such a course is clearly for the benefit of persons under disability or unborn; but to give the Court jurisdiction in a case of this kind it seems that the element of compromise or unforeseen emergency must be present (c).

Loan to firm.

A power to lend money to a particular firm is, as a general rule, put an end to by a change in the firm (d).

Trust to carry on Business.—It not infrequently happens that part of a testator's estate consists of a business carried on by him, and that he directs or empowers his trustees to carry it on, either for the purpose of winding it up or realizing it to advantage, or in order that it may be kept on as a going concern until some beneficiary is old enough to take it over.

Rights as against beneficiaries.

The general principle is clear, that trustees who carry on a business in this way are personally liable for all liabilities contracted in connection with the business after the death of the testator. If the testator has authorized his trustees to employ a part of the trust estate in the business (e), and they carry on the business properly, they are entitled, as against the beneficiaries under the will, to resort for their indemnity to that part of the trust estate. In such a case the trustees' creditors are entitled, by subrogation, to stand in the place of the trustees, and thus to obtain payment of their debts out of that part of the trust estate (f).

(b) Re Stanley, [1906] 1 Ch. 131. As to what is a "public" company, see Re Sharp, 45 Ch. D. 286; Re Castlehow, [1903] 1 Ch. 352; and as to what is a company incorporated by act of parliament, see Elve v. Boyton, [1891] 1 Ch. 501; Re Smith, [1896] 2 Ch. 590. A new species of company—the "private company"—has been called into being by the Companies Act, 1907 (repealed and re-enacted by the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908).

(bb) Re Hilton, [1909] 2 Ch. 548.

(c) Re Crawshaw, 60 L. T. 357; Re Morrison, [1901] 1 Ch. 701; Re New, [1901] 2 Ch. 534; Re Smith, [1902] 2 Ch. 667; Re Tollemache, [1903] 1 Ch. 457, 953; Re Welle, [1903] 1 Ch. 848; Re Anson's Settlement, [1907] 2 Ch. 424.

(d) Re Tucker, [1894] 1 Ch. 724; Smith v. Patrick, [1901] A. C. 282.

(e) A mere direction to carry on the business does not authorize the trustees to employ in it a greater part of the testator's estate than was employed in it by him: Ex parte Richardson, 3 Madd. 138; McNeillie v. Acton, 4 D. M. & G. 744. See Moore v. McGlynn, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 334; Re Dimmock, 52 L. T. 494.

(f) Re Johnson, 15 Ch. D. 548; Re Morgan, 18 Ch. D. 93; Strickland v. Symons, 26 Ch. D. 245; Re Frith, [1902] 1 Ch. 342. Older cases are, Ex parte Garland, 10 Ves. 110; Cutbush v. Cutbush, 1 Bea. 184; Ex parte Edmonds, 4 D. F. & J. 488. See also Re Kidd, 70 L. T. 648.

CHAP. XXIV.

This principle, however, does not affect the testator's creditors. They have a prior claim on all the assets of the testator, and any trustee or executor who uses the assets in carrying on the testator's business (except to such an extent as is necessary to enable him to wind it up or sell it as a going concern) does so at his own risk, so far as the testator's creditors are concerned (g).

As against testator's creditors.

If the business is carried on by the trustees with the assent of the testator's creditors, then the trustees are entitled to be indemnified out of the testator's estate (including any assets acquired by the trustees in carrying on the business) in priority to the testator's creditors; and the business creditors have, by subrogation, a corresponding right to resort to the testator's estate for payment of their debts (h).

Effect of assent by testator's creditors.

The same rule applies if the business is carried on under an order of the Court (i).

Order of Court.

But the rule does not apply unless the trustee (or executor) has continued the business in good faith, either under an authority contained in the will or conferred by the Court, or for the purpose of winding up the estate (j).

Where trustee carries on business for his personal benefit.

Trustees ought not to carry on their testator's business, unless they are expressly or implicitly authorized to do so (jj). A power to carry on a business may be inferred from the fact that it is included in a gift of the testator's residuary estate to trustees upon trust for conversion, with a power to postpone conversion, and the usual provision as to interim income (k).

Implied power.

As to the so-called "sale" of a business for shares in a company, see Re Morrison (l) and other cases already cited (m).

Conversion into company.

Powers of Mortgaging.—It has been held that a power to lease authorizes a demise by way of mortgage (n). A power "to make arrangements" given to a trustee-executor to whom the real estate is devised, authorizes a mortgage of the real estate (o), but a power to use real estate as capital in the testator's business does not enable the trustees to mortgage it so as to override an Implied power.

(g) Dowse v. Gorton, [1891] A. C. 190; Re Millard, 72 L. T. 823.

(h) Dowse v. Gorton, [1891] A. C. 190; Hodges v. Hodges, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 480.

(i) Re Brooke, [1894] 2 Ch. 600; Hodges v. Hodges, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 480.

(j) Re Millard, 72 L. T. 823; McAloon v. McAloon, [1900] 1 Ir. 367.

(jj) Kirkman v. Booth, 11 Bea. 273; Travis v. Milne, 9 Ha. 141; Stainer v. Hodgkinson, 73 L. J. Ch. 179. As to trustees making a personal profit by supplying goods, see Re Sykes, [1909] 2 Ch. 241, post, Chap. XXXIV.

(k) Re Chancellor, 26 Ch. D. 42; Re Crowther, [1895] 2 Ch. 56; Re Smith, [1896] 1 Ch. 171.

(l) [1901] 1 Ch. 701.

(m) Ante, p. 917. See also, as to the "sale" of land for shares, post.

(n) Mostyn v. Lancaster, 23 Ch. D. 583.

(o) Re Jones, 61 L. T. 661.

CHAP. XXIV.

annuity charged by the will (p). A direction to carry on business authorizes a mortgage of the business land (q) but not of other land (r).

Lord St. Leonards laid it down, as a general rule, that "a power of sale out and out, for a purpose or with an object beyond the raising of a particular charge, does not authorise a mortgage; but that where it is for raising a particular charge and the estate itself is settled or devised subject to that charge, there it may be proper under the circumstances to raise the money by mortgage, and the Court will support it as a conditional sale, as something within the power, and as a proper mode of raising the money" (s).

Implied
from power of management.

If land is devised to trustees upon trust for sale, with the usual power of postponing a sale and powers of interim management and of making outlay for improvements, repairs, &c., it seems that the trustees may raise money for these purposes by mortgage (t).

A power to mortgage authorises a mortgage with a power of sale (u).

Settled
Land
Acts.

Powers of Leasing.—Where property is settled by will, the tenant for life, or the person having the powers of a tenant for life, has now various powers of leasing under the Settled Land Acts (v), and if the powers given to the trustees overlap these, the consent of the tenant for life is necessary to the exercise of such powers by the trustees. It may be mentioned that a power to trustees to lease and manage real estate does not by itself raise an implication of the testator's intention to exclude his wife from dower so as to compel her to elect (w). Trustees cannot grant one lease of two properties held upon different trusts (x). In one case

(p) Re Webb, 63 L. T. 545. For a power to mortgage so as to override a legacy, see Redman v. Rymer, 65 L. T. 270.

(q) Devitt v. Kearney, 13 L. R. Ir. 65.

(r) McNeillie v. Acton, 4 D. M. & G. 744.

(s) Per Lord St. Leonards in Stroughill v. Anstey, 1 D. M. & G. at p. 645, where Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. 1; Haldenby v. Spofforth, 1 Bea. 390; and Ball v. Harris, 4 My. & Cr. 264, are referred to. See also Page v. Cooper, 16 B. 396 (trust for sale held not to authorize a mortgage); Walker v. Southall, 56 L. T. 882.

(t) Re Bellinger, [1898] 2 Ch. 534.

(u) Re Chawmer's Will, L. R., 8 Eq. 569; following Bridges v. Longman, 24

Bea. 27, and not following Clarke v. Royal Panopticon, 4 Dr. 26.

(v) This renders such cases as Re Shaw's Trusts, L. R., 12 Eq. 124, and Naylor v. Arnitt, 1 R. & M. 501 (no power of leasing); Davis v. Harford, 22 Ch. D. 128 (power to tenant for life, who agreed to lease and died), no longer of any practical interest. Naylor v. Arnitt was followed in Fitzpatrick v. Waring, 11 L. R. Ir. 35.

(w) Warbuton v. Warbuton, 2 Sm. & G. 163, where Hall v. Hill, 1 Dr. & War. 94, is explained.

(x) Tolson v. Sheard, 5 Ch. D. 19. The power to lease was given by an order made under the Settled Estates Act, 1856.

where the power of leasing was wide enough to include a building lease, the Court allowed the trustees to put the property up to auction on the terms of granting a building lease to the highest bidder, and subsequently to sell the land subject to the building lease (y).

A direction to an executor to let real estate and apply the profits to a particular purpose, does not raise by implication an estate in him extending beyond the period required for accomplishing the purpose (z).

Whether trustees take an estate.

Powers of Charging.—Questions do not often arise on powers of this kind, as the forms used in wills generally follow those used in carefully drawn settlements (a).

Trusts for Maintenance and Education.—Effect will be given to a trust for maintenance where it is imperfectly expressed, provided the intention is clear (b). Thus in Re Yates (c) the testator gave to his widow a “further annuity” of 300*l.* for the maintenance and education of his infant daughter; the widow died during the minority of the daughter, but it was held that the annuity continued to be payable for her maintenance and education. So if a legacy is given to an infant contingently on his attaining twenty-one, a power to apply it for the benefit of the legatee may have the effect of making the legacy carry interest for maintenance (cc).

Implied and precatory trusts for maintenance.

The question whether a trust for maintenance has been effectually created, generally arises in those cases where property or income is given to a person, coupled with an expression of desire or hope on the part of the testator that he will thereout maintain certain persons, or with a statement that the gift is made to him for the purpose of enabling him to maintain them (d). These cases have been already discussed (e).

(y) Re James, 73 L. T. 1.

(z) Lambert v. Browne, Ir. R., 5 C. L. 218.

(a) See Re Beckett, 93 L. T. 746, on the construction of the words “at any one time.” As to the failure by lapse of a power of charging, notwithstanding sect. 33 of the Wills Act, see Griggs v. Gibson, 35 L. J. Ch. 458, ante, Chap. XXIII. As to the revocation of an instrument exercising a power of charging, see Re Gore-Booth's Estate, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 387.

(b) Leslie v. Leslie, Ll. & G. t. Sug. 1; Lambert v. Parker, Coop. t. Eldon, 143; Acherley v. Wheeler (or Vernon), 1 P. W. 783. But see Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 10; Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare, 573.

(c) [1901] 2 Ch. 438.

(cc) Pett v. Fellows, 1 Sw. 561 n.; Re Churchill, [1909] 2 Ch. 431.

(d) In modern wills express powers of maintenance are generally omitted in reliance on the provisions contained in s. 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. As to interest being allowed for maintenance in the case of legacies to the testator's infant children, see Chap. XXX.

(e) Ante, p. 892.

CHAP. XXIV.

Liability to account.

The cases which establish the general rule that where income is directed to be paid to a person for the maintenance and education of his children, he takes it subject to no account, provided he discharges the duty of maintaining and educating the children, have been already considered (f).

Gift of capital.

It has been already mentioned that when a sum, or the capital of a fund, is given for the maintenance of A., this is considered as a simple legacy for his benefit, and he is entitled (if an adult) to have it paid to him (g); and a gift of residue to the testator's wife "for the support and maintenance of herself and children and for their education," has been held to be an absolute gift to the wife (h).

Maintenance out of capital or income.

A testator sometimes provides for the maintenance or education of an infant out of capital (i), and in that case a gift over of what is not expended, in the event of the infant dying under age, will have effect (k); but as a general rule, maintenance is given out of the income of a fund, or by means of an annuity.

Interest on legacy.

Where a testator bequeaths a legacy to an infant, and expressly or impliedly directs the interest to be applied in its maintenance the interest runs from the death of the testator (l). But this rule does not apply in the case of a legacy to an adult (m).

Gift to parent.

Where money is given to a parent for the maintenance of his children, the general rule is that he is not bound to account for its application (n). The cases in which property is given to a parent for the benefit or maintenance of himself or herself, and his or her children, have been already discussed (o).

"Maintenance" and "education."

A trust for the "maintenance and support" of children include, their education (p), but sometimes "maintenance" and "education" are distinguished (q).

Maintenance and education not necessarily confined to minority.

In Knapp v. Noyes (r), a case where gifts were made to infants, with a provision for their maintenance and education, Lord Camden is reported as having said that "maintenance and education are (f) Supra, p. 892.

(g) Noel v. Jones, 16 Sim. 309, ante, p. 885.

(h) Bond v. Dickinson, 33 L. T. 221.

(i) See Cusack v. Jellico, 22 W. R. 344 (settlement by deed). In Falls v. Alford (Re Black), [1907] 1 Ir. R. 486, a legacy to A. for her education was held to authorize the expenditure of the capital.

(k) Ante, p. 885.

(l) Newman v. Bateson, 3 Sw. 689; Pett v. Fellows, 1 Sw. 561, n.; Re Richards, L. R., 8 Eq. 119; Chidzey v. Whitby, 41 L. J. Ch. 699, and see

Chap. XXX.

(m) Raven v. Waite, 1 Sw. 553.

(n) Berkeley v. Swinburne, 6 Sim. 613; Hadow v. Hadow, 9 Sim. 438; Browne v. Paull, 1 Sim. N. S. 92. See Hammond v. Neame, ante, p. 895. As to controlling the discretion of a person charged with the duty of maintenance, see ante, p. 892 n. (h).

(o) Ante, p. 892.

(p) Re Breeds' Will, 1 Ch. D. 226.

(q) Wilkins v. Jodrell, 13 Ch. D. 564; Re Booth, [1894] 2 Ch. 282.

(r) Amb. 662.

confined to minority." And in Gardner v. Barber (o), Wood, V.-C., avowedly basing his decision on the dictum of Lord Camden, held that a trust for maintenance and education must of itself imply that it was only to last during minority, though not in terms so confined. But in Soames v. Martin (p), where a testator directed a sum of money to be applied for the maintenance and education of an infant nephew, but made no disposition of the principal, Shadwell, V.-C., held that the nephew was entitled to the income of the fund during his life. And in Wilkins v. Jodrell (q), Hall, V.-C., approved of and followed this decision, pointing out that the decision in Gardner v. Barber was based on the mistaken assumption that the dictum of Lord Camden (which was evidently referable to the circumstances of that particular case), was intended to be of general application. There are numerous cases in which property has been given to the widow of a testator for the maintenance of herself and the children. In such a case it is clear that the widow is entitled to maintenance during the whole of her life (r).

Maintenance of widow and children.

If income is given for the maintenance of several persons as joint tenants, they take it for their lives and for the lives and life of the survivors and survivor, unless the joint tenancy is severed (s).

Joint tenants.

Where income is given to trustees upon trust to apply it for "the board, lodging, maintenance, support and benefit" of A. in such way as they think proper in their absolute discretion, and so that A. shall not have power to alienate or anticipate the income, they cannot apply it otherwise than for A.'s benefit, and if he becomes bankrupt it belongs to his creditors (t). But this result can be avoided by giving the trustees power to apply such part of the income as they think fit, or by giving them a power of selection among several objects (u).

Effect of bankruptcy.

The rule that maintenance is not confined to minority applies where income is given for the maintenance, or maintenance and education, of A. during the life of B.; in the absence of words

Trust for maintenance of A. during life of B.

(o) 18 Jur. 508. The decision was probably right so far as the intention of the testator went, for he directed his trustees to pay or apply a yearly sum for the maintenance and education of a child who, if she attained majority, would take a share in the capital. The same remark applies to Foley v. Parry, 2 My. & K. 138. The decision in Ryan v. Keogh (Ir. R., 4 Eq. 357), where an annuity for the maintenance of A.'s children was held to cease on the death of A., the children being then all of age, seems to have turned on the special words of the will.

(p) 10 Sim. 287.

(q) 13 Ch. D. 564.

(r) Carr v. Living, 28 Bea. 644, 33 Bea. 474; Berry v. Briant, 2 Dr. & S. 1, and the cases cited ante, p. 891.

(s) Wilkins v. Jodrell, supra, quoted and approved in Williams v. Papworth, [1900] A. C. 563.

(t) Green v. Spicer, 1 Russ. & My. 395.

(u) See Twopeny v. Peyton, 10 Sim. 487; Re Coleman, 39 Ch. D. 443, and the other cases cited in Chap. XXIII.

CHAP. XXIV.

expressing a contrary intention, A. continues to be entitled to the income after attaining majority. In Badham v. Mee (v), the trust was for the maintenance, education, and bringing up of the three children of A. during A.'s life; one of the children attained twenty-one during his father's life, and he was held to be entitled to his share of the income during the rest of his father's life.

The question most frequently arises in the case of a bequest of income to the testator's wife for life, subject to a trust for the maintenance, or maintenance and education, of the testator's children; it is clear that in such a case a child does not lose his or her right to an allowance for maintenance merely by attaining majority, or in the case of a daughter, marrying: and the Court will, if necessary, ascertain what, if any, allowance ought to be made (w).

Postponement of distribution.

The effect of a trust for the maintenance of adult as well as infant members of a class, may be to postpone the distribution of vested shares (x).

Income for maintenance primâ facie confined to life of beneficiary.

Where the income of a fund, or an annuity, is given for a person's maintenance, it would naturally be supposed that the testator intended it for the personal benefit of that person, and that the gift would cease on his death. Thus in Wilkins v. Jodrell (y), a testator gave to A. an annuity of 100*l.* and directed that in the event of her death it should be continued to her children for their maintenance and education; Hall, V.-C., said: "It appears to me obvious that the annuity was meant to be for the personal enjoyment and benefit of the annuitants, and therefore that it was not meant to be continued beyond their lives."

Decisions to the contrary.

However, there are some decisions to the effect that where an annuity is given for the maintenance of A. during the life of B., it does not cease on the death of A. Thus, in Lewes v. Lewes (z), a testator gave an annuity of 300*l.* for the maintenance, clothing and education of his son's children during the life of their father; all the children attained twenty-one, and one of them died during the father's lifetime; Shadwell, V.-C., said that the gift was equivalent to a gift "for the benefit of the children," and that the personal representatives of the deceased child were entitled to one-third

(v) 1 Russ. & My. 631.

(w) Longmore v. Elcum, 2 Y. & C. C. 363; Scott v. Key, 35 Bea. 291; Re Booth, [1894] 2 Ch. 282. The older cases as to the effect of a daughter marrying are, Camden v. Benson, 4 L. J. Ch. 256, cited 8 Bea. at p. 350; Bowden v. Laing, 14 Sim. 113; Carr v. Living, 28

Bea. 644, 33 Bea. 474. The question what words will create a trust for maintenance is discussed ante, p. 891.

(x) Berry v. Briant, 2 Dr. & S. 1.

(y) 13 Ch. D. 564. See also Chap. XXXI.

(z) 16 Sim. 266.

of the 300*l.* a-year during the life of the father (a). How this could benefit the deceased child is not explained. In Bayne v. Crowther (b), and Attwood v. Alford (bb), Romilly, M.R., followed the same principle. These decisions seem to be based on a misapprehension of the rule that where the capital of a fund is given for the maintenance of A., this is equivalent to a simple legacy to A., on the principle already discussed (c). This principle, however, is not required in the case of a gift of income (d). In Re Ord (e), where the testator gave property to A. for life with remainder to B., and bequeathed an annuity of 40*l.* to B. during A.'s life, James, L.J., said: "We may make a guess that the son [B.] was intended to have the 40*l.* only for his personal maintenance, and it may be difficult to imagine why it should be continued after his death. But it is in express terms an annuity to be paid until the death or second marriage of the testator's widow, and there is nothing which justifies us in cutting it down to the life of the son." Baggallay, L.J., said: "With regard to the annuity, I felt at one time some doubt; I was disposed to think that it was intended only for the personal enjoyment of the son." It is, therefore, submitted that a bequest of income or an annuity expressly given for maintenance ought, in the absence of words shewing a contrary intention, to be construed as confined to the life of the beneficiary.

In some cases, where there is a trust for accumulation, and no provision is made for the maintenance of the person entitled subject to the trust for accumulation, the Court will presume that the testator must intend that the person he wished ultimately to benefit should not starve, and should in the meantime receive such maintenance and education as would enable him to take the position intended for him, and consequently will allow maintenance contrary to the terms of the will (f).

Maintenance
contrary to terms of will.

(a) The V.-C. had expressed a similar opinion in Webb v. Kelly, 9 Sim. 469. The decision in Lewes v. Lewes is cited in the judgment of the J. C. in Williams v. Papworth, [1900] A. C. at p. 567, but in that case the question was whether the income was payable to the infant and adult children as joint tenants.

(b) 20 Bea. 400.

(bb) L. R., 2 Eq. 479.

(c) Ante, p. 885.

(d) See Wilkins v. Jodrell, supra.

(e) 12 Ch. D. 22.

(f) Revel v. Wilkinson, 1 Ves. sen. 93; Benett v. Wyndham, 23 Bea. 521, 4 D.

F. & J. 259; Aveline v. Melhuish, 10 Jur. N. S. 788; Griggs v. Gibson, 21 W. R. 818; Re Collins, 32 Ch. D. 229; Re Walker, [1901] 1 Ch. 879; Havelock v. Havelock, 17 Ch. D. 807; Re Colgan, 19 Ch. D. 305, where a provision for recoupment was made. See Re Arbuckle, 14 L. T. N. S. 538; Re Alford, 32 Ch. D. 383; Re Tanner, 53 L. J. Ch. 1108. In Re Smeed, 54 L. T. 929, Chitty, J., seems to have questioned the decision in Havelock v. Havelock, and it was disapproved by the First Court of Appeal in Kemmis v. Kemmis, 15 L. R. Ir. 90. Compare Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare, 573.

CHAP. XXIV.

Several funds for maintenance.

Ability of father.

Accumulations.

Statutory provisions for maintenance.

Where there are several funds provided by different persons for the maintenance of an infant, or a lunatic, or other person under disability, the interest of the beneficiary must alone determine which of the funds is primarily applicable (g).

The question sometimes arises whether the income of trust funds can be applied for maintenance where the father is of ability to maintain his children. If there is only a power of maintenance, the father, in such a case, is not necessarily entitled to receive the income and apply it for maintenance, but he is so entitled if there is a trust (h).

Where a will gives maintenance out of the interest on a legacy, accumulations of past income may be applied for this purpose (i).

The Conveyancing Act, 1881 (j), sects. 42 and 43, confers on trustees powers of applying income of the property of infants during minority, or, in the case of women, till marriage; sect. 42 applies only to income derived from land to which the infant is beneficially entitled in possession; sect. 43 applies to all property held in trust for an infant; both sections contain provisions for the accumulation of unapplied income, and it will be observed that the destination of accumulations of income under the respective sections is not identical. The powers do not apply in any of the following cases:

(1) Where the vesting is or may be postponed until after the age of twenty-one years (k).

(2) Where the property produces no income. Thus, a legacy to an infant which is payable at twenty-one (whether vested or contingent) does not as a general rule carry interest (l), and consequently there is no income out of which to give maintenance; that is to say, the statutory power of maintenance does not affect the construction of the will (m). Where there is a gift to several contingently on attaining twenty-one, the member of the class who first attains twenty-one does not then become entitled to the income of (g) Foljambe v. Willoughby, 2 S. & St. 165; Bruin v. Knott, 1 Ph. 572; Methold v. Turner, 4 De G. & S. 249; Re Ashley, 1 R. & Myl. 371. As to the rule where several sources of income are available under a will which contains no express trust for maintenance, see Chap. XXX.

(h) Newton v. Curzon, 16 L. T. 221 (where the words "shall and may" were held to constitute a trust); Malcolmson v. Malcolmson, 17 L. R. Ir. 69. See also Ransome v. Burgess, L. R., 3 Eq. 773 (settlement); Stocken v. Stocken, 4 Sim. 152, 4 M. & Cr. 95 (settlement).

(i) Edwards v. Grove, 2 D. F. & J. 210.

(j) Repealing the corresponding provisions of Lord Cranworth's Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 145), as to which see Re Cotton, 1 Ch. D. 232; Re Buckley's Trusts, 22 Ch. D. 583.

(k) Re Judkin's Trusts, 25 Ch. D. 743.

(l) As to the exception to the rule where the testator is the parent of or in loco parentis to the infant, see Chap. XXX.

(m) Re Dickson, 29 Ch. D. 331. The rule was the same under Lord Cranworth's Act: Re George, 5 Ch. D. 837.

the whole fund, but those under twenty-one can be maintained out of the income of their contingent shares, although the class is capable of increase (n).

CHAP. XXIV.

The unapplied income and the accumulations thereof form an accretion to capital. Consequently, if the gift is vested, the surplus income belongs to the infant, whether he takes absolutely, or subject to a gift over on his dying under twenty-one (o), or has only a life interest (p). But if the gift is contingent on the infant attaining twenty-one, and he dies under that age, or attains twenty-one but has only a life interest, in either case the surplus income forms part of the capital; in the latter case, therefore, the legatee on attaining twenty-one is only entitled to the income of the accumulations (q).

Statutory accumulations.

The statutory provisions do not alter the rule that a contingent legacy, given to an infant to whom the testator is in loco parentis, carries interest by way of maintenance, but "the Court determines the quantum of the allowance, either the whole of the usual interest allowed by the Court, or less, according to circumstances" (r). Where there is a residuary bequest to an infant, the statutory powers of maintenance apply as soon as the residue is ascertained (s).

Effect of statutory provisions.

Trusts for Accumulation.—This subject has been already considered in Chapter XI., in connection with the Thellusson Act. The cases in which income is accumulated without any express trust for that purpose have also been referred to (t). The statutory powers given by the Conveyancing Act have been mentioned in the preceding section.

Where a testator divides his residue into shares, and directs the income of each share to be accumulated, the question may arise whether the accumulations arising from each share go with it, or form part of the general residue (tt).

In Mole v. Mole (u) maintenance was allowed to an infant out of (n) Re Holford, [1894] 3 Ch. 30 (overruling Re Jeffery, [1891] 1 Ch. 671); Re Jeffery, [1895] 2 Ch. 577.

(o) Re Buckley's Trusts, 22 Ch. D. 583 (a decision under Lord Cranworth's Act).

(p) Re Humphreys, [1893] 3 Ch. 1.

(q) Re Bowlby, [1904] 2 Ch. 685 (settled legacy), disapproving Re Scott, [1902] 1 Ch. 918 (settled share of residue), in which Buckley, J., followed the same line of reasoning as North, J., in Re Wells, 43 Ch. D. 281. The decision in Re Bowlby justifies the remark of Mr. Challis (Hood and Challis, 5th edition, 118), that this line of reasoning "attributes to [s. 43 of the Conveyancing] Act an intolerable degree of looseness in the use of language."

(r) Roper on Legacies, 4th edition, p. 1257, cited with approval by Romer, L.J., in Re Bowlby, [1904] 2 Ch. at p. 706; and see Chap. XXX. In the same case, Cozens-Hardy, L.J., suggested that the statute does not apply to a legacy until it has been appropriated.

(s) Re Smith, 42 Ch. D. 302.

(t) Supra, p. 929.

(tt) Fulford v. Hardy, [1909] A. C. 570.

(u) 1 Dickens, 310.

CHAP. XXIV.

the residue of the personal estate bequeathed to him by his father, where the will directed the interest to accumulate till the infant attained twenty-one, and if he died before, the whole was given over.

Liberally construed.

Trusts for Advancement.—Trusts of this nature usually receive a wide construction. Thus in Re Kershaw's Trusts (v) a power to apply part of a fund for the advancement of a married woman “or otherwise for her benefit,” was held to justify an advance to her husband to be used as capital in his business, the husband giving his bond as security. In Talbot v. Marshfield (w), a power of advancement for setting up the children of the testator in business was held to enable an advance to be made to a married daughter for the purpose of a farming business, her husband covenanting that the business should be for her separate use, but not an advance for the purpose of paying the husband’s debts. In Re Brittlebank (x) the will contained a power for the trustees to apply the capital of a fund for the “benefit and advancement in the world” of the person entitled to the income of the fund for life: it was held that the word “and” must be read “or,” and that the trustees might apply the fund not merely for advancement in the strict sense of the term, but for any purpose for the benefit of the legatee. In Lowther v. Bentinck (y), a power to apply part of a fund “in or towards the preferment or advancement of L., or otherwise for his benefit,” was held to authorize the payment of L.’s debts.

But primâ facie an advancement “is a payment to persons who are presumably entitled to, or have a vested or contingent interest in, an estate or legacy before the time fixed by the will for their obtaining the absolute interest in a portion or the whole of that to which they would be entitled” (z), and a clause which merely says: “I give a power of advancement to my trustees,” does not authorize advances out of corpus to persons who only take a life interest (a).

Effect of advancement.

The proper exercise of a power of advancement takes the money expended out of settlement altogether, and the person advanced is not afterwards bound to account for it or bring it into hotchpot (b).

Duration of power.

A power of advancement of a portion of a person’s expectant or presumptive share is not confined to minority, or (in the case of a

(v) L. R., 6 Eq. 322.

(w) L. R., 3 Ch. 622.

(x) 30 W. R. 99.

(y) L. R., 19 Eq. 166.

(z) Per Cotton, L.J., 55 L. T. at p.

556.

(a) Re Aldridge, 55 L. T. 554.

(b) Re Fox, [1904] 1 Ch. 480: following Re Gosset's Settlement, 19 Bea. 529; Lawrie v. Bankes, 4 K. & J. 142.

woman) to spinsterhood (bb); nor does it come to an end merely because the probability of such person attaining a vested interest is in fact very small. Thus, where a testator directed that in the event of his sister A. marrying and having children, his property should be divided among the children of his sisters A. and B. upon the youngest child attaining twenty-one, and empowered his trustees to raise a portion of the expectant, presumptive, or vested share of any child of B. for his or her advancement; A. was a widow of fifty-four years of age, and had no child: it was held that the power continued in operation during the lifetime of A. (c).

Discretionary Trusts and Powers.—The term “discretionary trust” is often used in the sense of a trust for the benefit of an improvident person. Under such a trust the trustees have a discretionary power, either to apply such part of the fund (capital or income) as they think fit for the maintenance or benefit of the cestui que trust, or to apply the whole of the income for the maintenance or benefit of several named persons, including the spendthrift, in such manner as the trustees think fit. In either case the effect is that he has no right capable of voluntary or involuntary assignment (cc). A testator who has the ordinary power of appointing settled property among his children, cannot exercise the power by appointing a share to trustees, subject to a discretionary trust for the benefit of one of his children, as this would be a delegation of the power (d).

Spendthrift trust.

A discretionary power given to trustees of dealing with the trust property, is primâ facie given to them as an incident of their office, and passes to their successors in office (dd).

When annexed to office.

A direction given to trustees to sell at their discretion is not equivalent to a direction that the trustees may sell or not at their absolute discretion (e).

As a general rule, the Court will not interfere with the exercise of a discretion so long as the trustees act honestly (ee).

(bb) Pride v. Fooks, 2 Bea. 430.

(c) Re Hocking, [1898] 2 Ch. 567.

(cc) See Re Coleman, 39 Ch. D. 443, and other cases cited ante, p. 925.

(d) Farwell on Powers, 441. Chester v. Chadwick, 13 Sim. 102.

(dd) Re Smith, [1904] 1 Ch. 139, where Farwell, J., expressed the opinion that the general principle laid down by Grant, M.R., in Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27, is inconsistent with the principle acted on by the C. A. in Crawford v.

Forshaw, [1891] 2 Ch. 261, where it was held that a discretionary power given to “my executors herein named” could not be exercised by one of them who renounced probate.

(e) Re Atkins, 81 L. T. 421. Miller v. Miller, L. R., 13 Eq. 263, so far as contra, seems to be wrong.

(ee) Gisborne v. Gisborne, 2 A. C. 300; Tabor v. Brooks, 10 Ch. D. 273; Bethell v. Abraham, L. R., 17 Eq. 24; Re Brown, 29 Ch. D. 889; Re Smith-

CHAP. XXIV.

A trustee paying money into Court incapacitates himself from exercising any of the discretions he may have had (f), but in some cases the Court will exercise the discretion (g). An administration action does not put an end to the exercise of a discretion by trustees (h), but it is proper for them to obtain the sanction of the Court to all important steps taken by them, and after an administration judgment the Court will supervise the exercise of their discretions and powers (i).

It has been mentioned earlier in this chapter that where a legacy is given to a person and is expressed to be given for a particular purpose, e.g., to bind him apprentice (j), though the purpose may fail, the legatee in some cases is entitled to the legacy. But where a discretion is given to trustees to advance or pay money for a particular purpose, and the discretion is not exercised, there is no gift to the person for whose benefit the money was to be applied. Thus, where a testator authorized his trustees to apply any sum not exceeding 600*l.* in the purchase of church preferment for A., and A. died before any sum had been so applied, it was held that the gift wholly failed (k).

Where a testator gives wide discretions to trustees, their exercise is not controlled by the wishes of the testator being known to the trustees (l), or by the fact of the person to be benefited being a lunatic (m).

Exercise of discretion by the Court.

Where trustees refuse to exercise a discretion, and thus affect the rights of beneficiaries, the Court will direct the necessary acts to be done (n).

Bosanquet's Trusts, 53 Sol. J. 430, and the cases on a discretionary power to postpone conversion, ante, p. 918. As to discretionary trusts for maintenance, &c., see ante, p. 892.

(f) Re Nettlefold's Trusts, 59 L. T. 315; Re Wright's Trusts, 3 K. & J. 419; Re Murphy's Trust, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 145. Re Landon's Trusts, 40 L. J. Ch. 370, is opposed to the general current of authority.

(g) Re Ashburnham's Trusts, 54 L. T. 84.

(h) Brophy v. Bellamy, L. R., 8 Ch. 798 (application of income for maintenance).

(i) Cafe v. Bent, 3 Ha. 245; Turner v. Turner, 30 Bea. 414; Re Gadd, 23 Ch. D. 134; Re Norris, 27 Ch. D. 333 (appointment of new trustees); Bethell v. Abraham, L. R., 17 Eq. 24 (investments); Re Mangell, 54 L. J. Ch. 883 (sale).

(j) Barlow v. Grant, 1 Vern. 255.

(k) Cowper v. Mantell (No. 2), 22 Bea. 231. Other illustrations of this doctrine are: Lewis v. Lewis, 1 Cox, 162; Robinson v. Cleator, 15 Ves. 526; Bull v. Vardy, 1 Ves. jr. 270; Down v. Worrall, 1 Myl. & K. 561.

(l) Re Squire's Trust, 17 T. L. R. 724.

(m) Gisborne v. Gisborne, 2 A. C. 300.

(n) See Prendergast v. Prendergast, 3 H. L. C. 195; Lord v. Godfrey, 4 Madd. 455, and other cases cited in Chap. XXXIV. Nickisson v. Cockill, 3 D. J. & S. 622; Tempest v. Lord Camoys, 21 Ch. D. 576, n. But if the discretion relates to a question of detail, the Court will not interfere with the trustees, even if there is a difference of opinion among them: Marquis Camden v. Murray, 16 Ch. D. 161; Tempest v. Lord Camoys, 21 Ch. D. 571; Re Bryant, [1894] 1 Ch. 324; Re Lever, 76 L. T. 71.

A testator may relieve his trustees from the operation of the general rule that a trustee may not make a profit out of the trust, but special words are required to have this effect (nn).

VII.—Devolution of Trusts and Powers.—Disclaimer—Survivorship, &c.—If a testator gives a power of sale (but no estate) to “my executors hereunder named,” a surviving executor can sell (o). Executors.

As a general rule, where a power is given to “my executors,” even if it involves the exercise of a discretion (such as the selection of institutions to share in a charitable gift), it is given to them in the character of executors, and can be exercised by the executors for the time being, but not by a renouncing executor. But if it is given to “my executors A. and B.” or to “my executors herein named,” then it is a question of the construction of the particular will whether it is given to them personally, or in the character of executors (p).

Where a discretionary power (such as the selection of charities) is given to “A. B., my executor,” and A. B. renounces, the result of holding that the power is annexed to the office is that the power is gone (q). In an Irish case (r) it was held that a power of sale given to “my executor, J. L.,” was exerciseable by J. L., notwithstanding his renunciation. Sole executor.

In the case of trustees, the old doctrine was (or was supposed to be) that wherever a power was of a kind which indicated personal confidence, it was primâ facie understood to be confined to the individual to whom it was given, and would not, except by express words, pass to others to whom the same character might happen to belong (s). But this doctrine may be regarded as obsolete, and if a testator appoints persons to be trustees of his will, and gives to “my said trustees” various powers and discretions, they can be exercised by the trustees or trustee for the time being of the will (t). Trustees.

(nn) Re Sykes, [1909] 2 Ch. 241.

(o) Houell v. Barnes, Cro. Car. 382; and see Lee v. Vincent, Cro. Eliz. 26 (power to a class to sell); Yates v. Compton, 2 P. W. 308 (renouncing executor).

(p) Crawford v. Forshaw, [1891] 2 Ch. 261; Re Fisher and Haslett, 13 L. R. Ir. 326; Keates v. Burton, 14 Ves. 434; Earl Granville v. McNeile, 7 Ha. 156. As to the stat. 21 Hen. VIII. c. 4, see Peppercorn v. Wayman, 5 De G. & S. 230.

(q) Att.-Gen. v. Fletcher, 5 L. J. Ch. 75.

(r) Madden v. Madden, 23 L. R. Ir. 167.

(s) Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27.

(t) Re Smith, [1904] 1 Ch. 139, and cases there cited; Re Perrott and King's Contract, 90 L. T. 156.

CHAP. XXIV.

If a testator devises to trustees upon trust for sale, and one of them disclaims, the other trustees or trustee can sell and give a receipt for the purchase money (u), and if one dies the survivors can sell (v).

Bare powers.

But this rule did not apply to bare powers, and it is therefore provided by the Trustee Act, 1893, s. 22 (re-enacting sect. 38 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881), that where, by an instrument coming into operation after 1881, a power or trust is given to or vested in two or more trustees jointly, it may be exercised or performed by the survivors or survivor, unless a contrary intention is expressed.

The Conveyancing Acts, 1881 and 1882, contain provisions as to the disclaimer and release of powers (w).

Succession to trusteeship.

When the sole trustee of a will dies, it is not always necessary to obtain the appointment of new trustees, for the testator may have indicated an intention that the persons in whom the trust property vests on the death of a sole trustee, shall exercise the trusts and powers contained in the will. The rules on this question depend partly on the language of the will, partly on the nature of the property, and partly on the date of the death of the sole trustee.

Before 1882.

(A) In the case of lands of inheritance, where the sole trustee has died before 1882, the principal rules are as follows:—

“Heirs or assigns.”

If a testator gives real property to two or more trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon certain trusts, and declares that the trusts are to be performed by the said trustees and the survivor of them, his heirs or assigns, and the surviving trustee devises the trust estate to A., B., and C., upon the trusts, &c., expressed in the will of the original testator, this gives A., B., and C. all the powers conferred on the original trustees (y).

If in such a case the surviving trustee allows the trust estate to descend, his heir can execute the trust (z).

“Heirs” only.

If the trust is made exerciseable by the survivor of the original trustees, or the heirs of the survivor, and the survivor devises the trust estate to A. and B. upon the trusts affecting the same, they (u) Crewe v. Dicken, 4 Ves. 97; Adams v. Taunton, 5 Mad. 435; Nicholson v. Wordsworth, 2 Sw. 365.

(v) Lane v. Debenham, 11 Ha. 188; Brassey v. Chalmers, 4 D. M. & G. 528; Re Bacon, [1907] 1 Ch. 475.

(w) As to the kind of powers which can be disclaimed or released, under these statutes or otherwise, see Re Eyre, 49 L. T. 259; Weller v. Ker, 11 R.,

1 H. L. Sc. 11; Re Radcliffe, [1892] 1 Ch. 227. See also Re Fisher and Haslett, 13 L. R. Ir. 546.

(y) Titley v. Wolstenholme, 7 Bea. 425; Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; Hall v. May, 3 K. & J. 585. The doubt raised by Ockleston v. Heap, 1 De G. & S. 640, is not well founded.

(z) Re Cunningham and Frayling, [1891] 2 Ch. 567.

cannot execute the trust (a), because "assigns" were not mentioned, and the heir cannot execute it, because the property is not vested in him. In such a case the surviving trustee should allow the trust estates to descend, and then his heir can execute the trust. The same result follows if a testator simply devises the land to A. and B. and their heirs on trust to sell (b).

If a testator devises land to A. and B. and their heirs, upon trust that "my said trustees or the trustees or trustee for the time being of my will" shall sell (or whatever the trust may be), this enables the heir of the survivor of A. and B. to execute the trust (c).

"Trustees for the time being."

Conveyancing
Act, 1881,
s. 30.

(b) In the case of a sole trustee dying after 1881, the devolution of land (d) forming part of the trust estate is regulated by sect. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which originally applied to lands of copyhold or customary tenure, as well as to freeholds (dd); the section has, however, been repealed as regards copyhold and customary land vested in the trustee as tenant on the court rolls (e). The result is that where X., a sole trustee of freeholds, dies since 1881, having devised them to A. and B. upon the trusts of the original will, A. and B. cannot execute the trust under the doctrine of Titley v. Wolstenholme, because the land does not pass to them, but to the personal representative of X. (ee). If, however, the will of the original testator is so expressed that under the old rule the trust would have been exercisable by the heirs of X., it is now exercisable by his personal representative (f). And, of course, if land is given to trustees upon trust that they "or their executors or administrators" shall sell (or whatever the trust may be), then the personal representatives of the surviving trustee can execute the trust.

(a) Cooke v. Crawford, 13 Sim. 91; Wilson v. Bennett, 5 De G. & S. 475; Macdonald v. Walker, 14 Bea. 556; Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; Stevens v. Austen, 3 E. & E. 685. In Osborne to Rowlett, 13 Ch. D. at p. 774, Jessel, M.R., refused to follow Cooke v. Crawford, but in this he was wrong: Re Morton and Hallett, Re Crunden and Meux, infra. See Chap. XXVI., where Cooke v. Crawford is discussed.

(b) Re Morton and Hallett, 15 Ch. D. 143.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Other than leasehold land, as to which see infra, under Rule (n).

(dd) Hall v. Bromley, 35 Ch. D. 642.

(e) Copyhold Act, 1887, s. 45; Copyhold Act, 1894, s. 88. As to the effect of this repeal as regards dealings with copyholds in the interval, see Re Mills' Trusts, 37 Ch. D. 312, 40 Ch. D. 14. See further as to copyholds, post, Chap. XXVI.

(ee) See further as to the section, post, Chap. XXVI., where it is set out at length.

(f) Re Waidanis, 77 L. J. Ch. 12. The report in the Law Reports ([1908] 1 Ch. 123) does not give the terms of the will of the original testator. This omission seems to have produced an erroneous impression as to the point decided in the case: see the dictum of Neville, J., in Re Routledge's Trusts, [1909] 1 Ch. at p. 283 (which appears to refer to Re Waidanis, and, it is submitted, goes beyond the decision in that case), and some observations in Solicitors' Journal, Vol. 52, p. 189.

CHAP. XXIV.

No reference to successor in title.

(c) But if land is simply devised to A. and B. upon trust that they shall sell, or upon trust that they or the survivor of them shall sell (or whatever the trust may be), neither the heir nor the personal representative of the survivor can execute the trust, because there are no words indicating an intention that the trusteeship shall follow the legal estate (g).

Leaseholds.

(d) In the case of leaseholds, if the property is given to A. and B., their executors and administrators, upon certain trusts, and B. survives A. and dies without dealing with the trust property by will, his executors or administrators can execute the trusts. But if he bequeaths the leaseholds to X. and Y. to hold upon the trusts on which he held them, X. and Y. cannot execute the trusts, even if they are also appointed executors (gg).

It was at one time supposed that if a sole trustee died and his representatives acted as trustees under the doctrine laid down in Re Morton and Hallett, or even if they accepted the trust and were willing to act, this suspended the operation of an express power to appoint new trustees. This theory (which would have produced inconvenient results) has been held to be unsound (h).

Power not connected with office.

The better opinion seems to be that a bare power given to two or more persons by name, or as a class, without reference to any office of trust or administration, cannot be exercised by the survivors or survivor (i).

It seems that a power to A. and B. and their heirs is exerciseable after the death of A. by his heir and B. (j).

VIII.—Failure of Trust.—The question what becomes of a testator's residuary real or personal estate, when the trusts declared concerning it fail, wholly or in part, has been discussed in Chapter XXI. The question also occurs, though more rarely, in the case of a specific devise, or a specific or pecuniary legacy. In Shelley v. Shelley (k), a testatrix bequeathed jewels to A., to go and be held (g) Mortimer v. Ireland, 6 Ha. 196; Re Ingleby and Boak, 13 L. R. Ir. 326; Re Crunden and Meux, [1909] 1 Ch. 690.

(gg) Re Burt's Estate, 1 Dr. 319. But the accuracy of this decision seems doubtful, as the leaseholds vest in the executor, and cannot pass to the specific legatee without his assent: see Davidson, Prec., vol. iv. p. 54 n.

(h) Re Routledge's Trusts, [1909] 1 Ch. 280.

(i) Farwell on Powers, 455 seq., citing

Atwaters v. Birt, Cro. Eliz. 856; Montefiore v. Browne, 7 H. L. C. 241; Vincent v. Lee, Cro. Eliz. 26; Sykes v. Sheard, 2 D. J. & S. 6; Jefferys v. Marshall, 19 W. R. 94.

(j) Farwell, 453, citing Mansell v. Mansell, Wilm. 51; Townsend v. Wilson, 1 B. & Ald. 608; Hall v. Dewes, Jac. 189.

(k) L. R., 6 Eq. 540; as to the settlement directed in pursuance of the will, see ante, p. 696. On the general principle, see Wood v. Cox, 2 My. & C. 684;

as heirlooms by him and by his eldest son, and to descend to the eldest son of such eldest son, and so on, as far as the rules of law or equity would permit, with a request that A. would give effect to the testatrix's wish : it was held that in the event of these executory trusts failing, the jewels would belong to A. absolutely.

On the other hand, in Stubbs v. Sargon (l), a testatrix bequeathed a specific sum of 2,000*l.* to S., a married woman, for her sole use and benefit, " for the express purpose " of enabling her to present to or dispose of it by will in favour of " either branch of my family," as she might consider most prudent, and there was a reference to S. having " the sole use and power of the said sum "; it was held that this was a gift upon trust, and that, as the trust failed, the 2,000*l.* fell into residue.

This principle applies whenever property is given to a person in such a way as to shew that he takes as trustee and not beneficially (m).

Clarke v. Hilton, L. R., 2 Eq. 810 ; and other cases cited, ante, pp. 715-17 ; also Bernard v. Minshull, John. 276, cited, ante, p. 881.

(l) 3 My. & Cr. 507. This case and Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood, 3

Ha. 131, are referred to in Chap. XIV., ante, p. 481. In Doe d. Toone v. Copestake, 6 East, 328, the only point decided was as to the right of the trustees to recover at law.

(m) Ante, p. 866.

CHAPTER XXV.

SPECIFIC, GENERAL AND RESIDUARY DEVISES.

SPECIFIC DEVISES.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. What is a Specific Devise . .	938	III. Failure of Specific Devises . .	943
II. Operation of a Specific Devise	939

What is a specific devise.

I.—What is a Specific Devise.—Neither Mr. Jarman nor Mr. Powell attempts to define a specific devise. At the present day, “devise” is the technical term for a gift of real estate by will (a), and a specific devise is a gift by will of a particular part of the testator’s real estate. Some of the rules for distinguishing specific bequests from general or residuary bequests (as to which see Chaps. XXIX. and XXX.), seem to apply to devises, so far as the physical differences between land and chattels will allow. In most cases no difficulty arises. A devise of “my house at X.,” or “my farm at X.,” or a devise to A. “of such one of my houses at X. as he shall select,” is clearly specific. So is a devise of “all my lands in the parish of A.” (b). But a devise of “all my freehold lands,” or of “the residue of my freehold lands,” is general or residuary, as the case may be (c).

Devise of all land in particular locality.

Although a devise of all the testator’s land or real estate in a particular locality (such as “the county of A.”) is specific, yet, being expressed in general terms, it resembles in some respects a general or residuary devise, for prima facie it will pass all the

(a) As to what may be devised see Chap. IV. It has been already mentioned (ante, p. 82) that the use of the word “devise” is not essential to pass land by will. Any words indicating an intention to confer an absolute interest are sufficient; as where a testator willed land to the discretion of his father: Whiskon and Cleyton’s Case, 1 Leon. 156. So an absolute devise is not cut down by a superadded power of appointment (Doe d. Herbert v. Thomas, 3 A. & E. 123), even if it is in favour of a class (Brook v. Brook, 3 Sm. & G. 280; Howorth v. Dewell, 29 Bea. 18). Conversely “devise” may operate to pass personalty (ante, p. 83).

(b) Springett v. Jennings, L. R., 6 Ch. 333.

(c) Mason v. Ogden, [1903] A. C. 1, affirming C. A. Re Mason, [1901] 1 Ch. 619, where Springett v. Jennings is discussed with reference to the distinction between a specific devise in general terms, and a residuary devise; see post, p. 951.

land or real estate in that locality which the testator acquires after the date of the will (d).

CHAP. XXV.

It is often said that a general or residuary devise is specific, but this is a loose and inaccurate way of stating the law. Since the Wills Act, the essential characteristic of a residuary devise is that it includes all real estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by the will, unless a contrary intention appears; consequently lands acquired subsequently to the date of the will, or comprised in a devise which is revoked or fails or is void, will primâ facie pass under a residuary devise (e). When it is said that a residuary devise is specific, all that is meant is that, for the purpose of the payment of the debts of a testator, his specific and residuary devisees rank pari passu (f).

Difference between specific and residuary devises.

The question what property will pass by a particular description, is discussed in Chap. XXXV., and the effect of changes in the property between the date of the will and the testator's death in Chap. XII.

Description.

Sometimes a testator devises real estate by a description referring to his own title (g).

The question whether leaseholds will pass by a specific devise of "land," or "freehold land," or "real estate," either by a specific or general description, is discussed in connection with the operation of a residuary devise (gg).

Whether leaseholds pass as "land," &c.

II.—Operation of a Specific Devise.—As a general rule, a devise of a specific property gives the devisee all the testator's interest in it (h). Accordingly, where the owner of land in fee simple becomes entitled to a charge on it, a devise of the land will pass the charge, unless there are circumstances shewing that it was the intention, or to the interest, of the testator, to keep the charge alive (i).

What passes by a specific devise.
Charge on land.

It is on this principle that where a testator who has entered into a contract by which he gives a person an option of purchasing

Benefit of contract of sale or purchase.

(d) Ante, pp. 407 seq. and infra, p. 942, note (e).

(e) Post, p. 948.

(f) Lancefield v. Iggulden, L. R., 10 Ch. 136. See Mr. Jarman's note on the case of Long v. Short, post, Chap. LIV.

(g) As in Doe v. Meyrick, 1 Cr. & M. 820; West v. Lawday, 11 H. L. C. 375; Emuss v. Smith, 2 De G. & S. 722; Re Brocket, [1908] 1 Ch. 185, all referred to post, Chap. XXXV.

(gg) Post, pp. 961 et seq.

(h) See Vallance v. Vallance, 2 N. R. 229; Mathews v. Mathews, L. R., 4 Eq. 278; Leckey v. Watson, Ir. R., 7 C. L. 157; Re Louman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348; Re Guyton and Rosenberg, [1901] 2 Ch. 591, and other cases cited in Chap. XXXV. As to allotments, see Hicks v. Sallitt, 3 D. M. & G. 782; Williams v. Phillips, 8 Q. B. D. 437.

(i) See Chap. XXVI. As to a devise of mortgaged land by a mortgagee in possession passing the mortgage debt, see post, Chap. XXVI.

CHAP. XXV.

his (the testator's) land, makes a will specifically devising the land, and the option is exercised after the testator's death, the devisee is entitled to the purchase price (j). But if a testator enters into a contract to purchase land, and specifically devises it, the devisee is only entitled to the property from the completion of the purchase (k). The effect of the Real Estate Charges Act, 1877, in cases where the vendor has a lien, has been already referred to (l).

Benefit of contract for erection of buildings.

If a testator enters into a contract for the erection of buildings on land belonging to him, and devises the land to A., and dies before the buildings are completed, A. is entitled to have them completed at the cost of the testator's personal estate. But of course this principle does not apply if the contract is for the erection of buildings on land not belonging to the testator (m).

Burdens.

Conversely, a specific devisee takes the property subject to its burdens, even if they have been created by the testator himself (n), unless the testator's personal estate is primarily liable for them (o).

Questions sometimes arise as to the rights of devisees where the surface and the mines are devised to different persons (p).

Fixtures.

A devise of a house by an owner in fee of course includes the fixtures, of whatever nature they may be, unless expressly or impliedly excluded, for the rules which govern the rights in respect of fixtures as between landlord and tenant, or tenant for life and remainderman, or heir and executor, do not apply where the same person is absolutely entitled to both freehold and fixtures: the only question is whether the particular chattels are annexed to the freehold (q).

Decorative
chattels.

And where the owner of a house devises it, the devisee may be entitled not only to the fixtures strictly so called, but also to tapestry, pictures, and similar articles fitted to the house, as (j) Drant v. Vause, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 580, and other cases cited ante, p. 731.

(k) Puzley v. Puzley, 1 N. R. 509, where the testator had taken a transfer of a mortgage on the property.

(l) Ante, p. 78.

(m) Re Day, [1898] 2 Ch. 510, following Cooper v. Jarman, L. R., 3 Eq. 98, and Holt v. Holt, 2 Vern. 322 (both cases of intestacy). But if the builder completed the buildings the executors would be bound to pay him out of the testator's personal estate; see Wentworth v. Cock (10 Ad. & E. 42), cited in Cooper v. Jarman.

(n) See Re Tann, L. R., 7 Eq. 434 (costs of partition).

(o) See Chap. LIV.

(p) Re Scarth, 10 Ch. D. 499.

(q) The principle is illustrated by the effect of a conveyance on sale or mortgage where the vendor or mortgagor is owner of both land and fixtures; see Colegrave v. Dias Santos, 2 B. & Cr. 76; Holland v. Hodgson, L. R., 7 C. P. 328, where the earlier cases are cited; Hobson v. Gorringe, [1897] 1 Ch. 182; Monti v. Barnes [1901] 1 K. B. 205. Most of the later cases deal chiefly with the question what amounts to annexation; e.g., Re Samuel Allen & Sons, Ltd., [1907] 1 Ch. 575.

part of a general scheme of decoration, although not affixed to the freehold (r). CHAP. XXV.

An immediate devise of land in fee (s), whether specific or residuary, to a person in esse, carries the rents and profits from the death of the testator (t). If the devisee's interest is liable to be divested on the happening of a contingency (as on his death under twenty-one), he is entitled to the rents and profits until the contingency happens (u). The Apportionment Act, 1870, applies to rents, and consequently, in every case within the act, the first rents received after the testator's death must be apportioned in respect of time; that portion which accrued before the death forms part of the testator's general personal estate (v). The testator may of course, by apt words, give the devisee any rents accrued but not paid (w).

Rents and profits where devise is immediate.

The rule is different if the devise is to an unborn person, or to a person who may be in esse at a future time, or on the happening of a contingency; for, as Mr. Jarman points out (x), "where a specific devise is to take effect in futuro, so that, at the death of the testator, there is no person actually entitled to the immediate income, the rents and profits will, until the devise vests in possession, pass under the residuary clause, if any (xx), and, should the will contain no such clause, will descend to the testator's heir-at-law (y): and it is immaterial whether the future devise in question be vested

Where devise is future.

(r) Re Whaley, [1908] 1 Ch. 615, where Leigh v. Taylor, [1902] A. C. 157 is commented on.

(s) As to specific bequests of leaseholds, see Chap. XXX., and as to estates for life, see Chap. XXXIV.

(t) Including growing crops and emblements (Cooper v. Woolfitt, 2 H. & N. 122; Blake v. Gibbs, 5 Russ. 13 n.) unless they are separately bequeathed, e.g. as farming stock; see post, Chap. XXXV.

(u) Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Ch. D. 410.

(v) Capron v. Capron, L. R., 17 Eq. 288; Hasluck v. Pedley, L. R., 19 Eq. 271; where Jessel, M.R., expressed the opinion that the act applies to every will coming into operation after its passing. It does not, of course, affect the construction of a will executed before the passing of the act and containing words sufficient in themselves to pass accrued income: Jones v. Ogle, L. R., 8 Ch. 192; see Chap. XXX. As to rent payable in advance; see Ellis v. Rowbotham, [1900] 1 Q. B. 740.

(w) See Roseingrave v. Burke, Ir. R., 7 Eq. 186, and compare Jones v. Ogle, referred to in Chap. XXX., and Scott v. Best, 6 L. R. Ir. 7, where a gift of "all my interest" in certain property was held not to include arrears of rent: the decision seems open to question.

(x) First ed. p. 594.

(xx) "Duffield v. Duffield, 3 Bligh N. S. 260, though here the residue was devised upon trust for sale." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(y) Stephens v. Stephens, Ca. t. Talbot, 228; Bullock v. Stones, 2 Ves. sen. 521; Hopkins v. Hopkins, Ca. t. Talbot 44; 1 Atk. 580; 1 Ves. sen. 268, as corrected in Hawkins on Wills, App.; Duffield v. Duffield, 3 Bl. N. S. 260; Hodgson v. Bective, 1 H. & M. 376; Holmes v. Prescott, 33 L. J. Ch. 264; Re Eddels' Trusts, L. R., 11 Eq. 559; Re Freme, 65 L. T. 183; Re Francis, [1905] 2 Ch. 295. Lord Westbury's decision in Sidney v. Wilmer, 4 D. J. & S. 84, may be considered overruled: Wade-Gery v. Handley, 3 Ch. D. 374.

CHAP. XXV.

Devisee en ventre.

or contingent," or whether the devise be to the devisee directly or to trustees (z). The result is that if land is devised to the eldest son of A., and A.'s eldest son is en ventre at the testator's death, the rents accruing before his birth go to the residuary devisee or the testator's heir (a).

It is also immaterial that the real estate is given to trustees upon trust for a class of persons contingently on their attaining twenty-one, or the like. In such a case the first child who attains twenty-one is entitled to all the rents until another child attains twenty-one, and so on (b).

But of course if the testator directs that the intermediate rents be applied in the maintenance of the contingent devisee, this prevents them from falling into residue or passing to the heir, unless the devisee is unborn at the death of the testator, in which case the heir or residuary devisee takes them until the birth of the devisee (c).

Devise to fluctuating class.

The rule applicable to cases where land is given to a class which is capable of increase, so that it fluctuates from time to time, is considered elsewhere (d).

After-acquired property may pass by a specific devise.

As a general rule, when a testator makes a specific devise, he has in his mind a particular property, and does not contemplate the possibility of his making additions to it after the date of the will. But if the words used by him are sufficient, the after-acquired property will pass: as where a testator devises "my cottage and all my land at S.," and afterwards buys an adjoining field and throws it into the land belonging to the cottage, it will pass under the devise, unless the circumstances are such as to negative this construction (e). It is a question which depends on the facts and the terms of the will in each case (f).

(z) Re Eddels' Trusts, supra, dissenting from Riley v. Garnett, 3 De G. & S. 629.

(a) Re Mowlem, L. R., 18 Eq. 9. In cases of intestacy the qualified heir is entitled: Richards v. Richards, John. 754, not following Goodale v. Gawthorne, 2 Sm. & G. 375.

(b) Re Averill, [1898] 1 Ch. 523.

(c) Bullock v. Stones, 2 Ves. sen. 521. This may be the real ground for the decision in Best v. Donmall, 40 L. J. Ch. 160.

(d) Chap. XLII.

(e) Castle v. Fox, L. R., 11 Eq. 542. In Re Portal and Lamb, 30 Ch. D. 50, the after-acquired land was of such a character as to shew that the testator did not intend it to pass by the specific devise. See ante, pp. 406 seq., where the effect of sect. 24 of the Wills Act is discussed. Re Champion, [1893] 1 Ch. 101, was decided by North, J., on the principle above stated, among other grounds, but the decision of the C. A. went entirely on the question of republication. In Doe v. Walker, 12 M & W. 591, also a case of republication, the devise was of "all my lands in the parish of B.," and it was held that lands in B. purchased before the date of the codicil passed: see ante, pp. 200 seq., where this and other cases are referred to.

(f) See Chaps. XII. and XXXVI.

Where a partner in a business, the assets of which include land, by his will specifically devises his share in that land, then if the other assets of the partnership are sufficient to pay the partnership debts, the devisee takes the testator's share in the land free from liability to contribute to the partnership debts (g). But if the debts exceed the other assets, the devisee is not entitled to have the excess paid out of the testator's general estate (h).

CHAP. XXV.

Devise of share in partnership land.

III.—Failure of Specific Devises.—A specific devise may fail because it transgresses some rule of law, such as the rule in Whitby v. Mitchell, or the Rule against Perpetuities (i), or because it is uncertain (ii).

Perpetuities, uncertainty, &c.

As a general rule, an absolute devise takes effect although it is induced by a mistake on the part of the testator. But where the language of the will is ambiguous, a devise which is apparently made under a mistaken belief that a certain state of facts exists, will, if possible, be construed as intended to be conditional on that state of facts existing (j).

Mistake.

In Hounsell v. Dunning (k), a testatrix devised to her two daughters "the share of my late husband's estate I take or to which I am entitled on his decease . . . and I make this provision for them in lieu of the various freehold and copyhold lands of my late husband which descend to my son on the intestacy of my late husband." In fact, her late husband was entitled to certain copyholds which on his death intestate passed to the testatrix, and not, as she erroneously supposed, to her son; consequently, but for the testatrix's explanatory declaration, it seems clear that they would have passed by the devise to the daughters; the point became immaterial, but Joyce, J., expressed the opinion that they did not pass, because the will shewed an intention that they should not. The accuracy of this view seems doubtful. In Re Bagot (l), Lindley, L.J., correcting a statement in Harris v. Harris (ll) as to the operation of a residuary devise where there is an "intentional exclusion" of certain property from its operation, says this: "The intention (g) Re Holland, [1907] 2 Ch. 88.

(k) Farquhar v. Hadden, L. & R., 7 Ch. 1, where the partnership was insolvent and the bequest of the testator's share in certain leaseholds belonging to the partnership consequently failed.

(i) Ante, Chap. X. As to gifts to superstitious and charitable uses, see ante, Chap. IX.

(ii) Chap. XIV.

(j) See Doe v. Evans, 10 Ad. & El. 228; Allen v. Bewsey, 7 Ch. D. 453 and other cases cited, ante, pp. 188 seq.

(k) [1902] 1 Ch. 512.

(l) [1893] 3 Ch. at p. 358.

(ll) Ir. R., 3 Eq. at p. 618.

CHAP. XXV.

to exclude must not be founded on a mistake as to the ownership of the property : it must be an intention to exclude the property even if it is the testator's to dispose of." In Hounsell v. Dunning, no doubt, the devise was specific, but it was expressed in general terms ; on a question of this kind it is difficult to distinguish between a specific devise, so expressed, and a general devise : it is not a question whether such a specific devise carries a partial devise which fails (m). No doubt it is true, as Joyce, J., remarked, that if the testatrix in Hounsell v. Dunning had known that there was a possibility of the copyholds passing by the gift in question, she would have made a different disposition of her property ; but this is not construction, it is conjecture.

Lapse.

A devise may fail by lapse (n).

Ademption
by sale or alienation.

A specific devise necessarily fails if at the death of the testator the devised property does not belong to him, and therefore if he devises Blackacre and afterwards sells or aliens it, the devise fails (o). In the case of legacies, this result is called ademption ; in the case of land it is sometimes called revocation by alteration of estate, apparently because in former times the doctrine was treated as a branch of the general principle that any alteration in the estate of the testator operated as a revocation of the devise, although the land was the property of the testator at the time of his death. The subject has accordingly been discussed in connection with revocation (p). The effect of a contract of sale or option of purchase has also been considered (q).

By contract or option.Effect of s. 24 of Wills Act.

The case has been suggested of a testator devising specific realty, and afterwards selling it and purchasing other realty answering the same description : the question whether in such a case the after-acquired realty passes by the devise has been already considered (r).

Involuntary
conversion.

As a general rule, where conversion is caused by some act beyond the testator's control, the effect is the same as if it had been voluntarily caused by him (s) ; thus if a testator devises real property, and it is afterwards converted into money by act of parliament, during the testator's lifetime, the devisee has no claim to the money (t). So it is clear that if a testator devised a house which he had insured against fire, and it were burnt down immediately

(m) Compare Springett v. Jennings, L. R., 6 Ch. 333, explained in Re Mason, [1901] 1 Ch. 619.

(n) Chap. XIII.

(o) Ante, p. 162.

(p) Chap. VII.

(q) Chap. XXII., ante, p. 729.

(r) Ante, pp. 412 seq.

(s) As to sales by mortgagees, see ante, p. 731, and for the case of a lease being determined so as to entitle the testator to compensation, see Coyne v. Coyne, Ir. R., 10 Eq. 496, cited in Chap. XXII., ante, p. 731.

(t) Frewen v. Frewen, L. R., 10 Ch. 610.

before his death, the devisee could not claim the insurance moneys (u). Sales by the court, and purchases by companies under compulsory powers, are subject to special rules (v).

CHAP. XXV.

DEVISES FOR LIMITED INTERESTS.

Limited interests in land may be created not only by express devise, but also by implication or inference (w).

Express or implied.

The question what estate is taken by trustees where land is devised to them without words of limitation, for purposes which do not exhaust the fee, is considered elsewhere (x).

Devises to trustees for limited purposes.

Where land is devised during the minority of a person, and he dies before attaining majority, the question arises whether the devisee is entitled to hold the land until the minor would, if living, have attained majority, or whether his interest ceases. This question is discussed in another chapter (y).

Devise during minority.

A devise may take effect by the creation de novo of an easement, rent-charge, condition, or the like (z).

Creation of new right by devise.

GENERAL AND RESIDUARY DEVISES.

	PAGE		PAGE
Operation of Residuary Devise :		III. In regard to Reversions and Remainders.....	955
I. In regard to void, lapsed and partial Specific Devises :		IV. In regard to Copyholds.....	959
(A) Old Law	945	V. In regard to Leaseholds :
(B) Present Law	948	(A) For Years	961
II. In regard to Rents and Profits	953	(B) For Lives	965
		VI. In regard to Powers of Appointment	965

I.—Operation of a Residuary Devise in regard to void, lapsed, and partial Specific Devises.—A. Old Law.—Mr. Jarman states the law on the subject, applying to wills not affected by the Wills Act, as follows (a): “A residuary bequest, it is well known, operates upon all the personal estate of which a testator is possessed at the time of his death, and, consequently, includes Operation of a general bequest.

(u) Compare Durrant v. Friend, 5 De G. & S. 343 (chattels). Assuming that sect. 83 of the Fires Prevention (Metropolis) Act, 1774, applies to the whole of England (a view which is not free from doubt; see Re Quicke's Trusts, [1908] 1 Ch. 887), it might be contended that, in the case above supposed, the devisee would be entitled to require the insurance moneys to be laid out in rebuilding the house. But the words of the section—“any person interested in or intitled unto any house” which may be burnt down—seem intended to apply to the interests and titles existing at the time of the fire; in the case supposed nobody could, immediately after the fire, have required the insurance moneys to be laid out in rebuilding.

(v) See Chap. XXII.

(w) Ante, pp. 629 seq.

(x) Chap. XLVI.

(y) Chap. XXI.

(z) Ante, p. 75; post, Chap. XXXIX.

(a) First ed. p. 587.

CHAP. XXV.

Under old law, every general devise was specific in its nature.

Exceptions to this rule;

—in relation to partial and contingent devises;

all specific legacies which are void, or fail by the death of the legatee in the testator's lifetime (b); and such would undoubtedly be its operation, though all the specific legacies were in this situation, so that a bequest, in terms embracing the 'residue,' should become, in event, a gift of the whole. But as under the old testamentary law (which, it will be remembered, still applies to all wills made before the year 1838, whatever be the period of the testator's decease), a testator could only devise the real estate to which he was actually entitled at the time of making his will, it follows that every residuary devise in such a will, however general in its terms, is in its nature specific (c); being in fact a specific disposition of the lands not before given, or, to speak more accurately, not before expressed to be given by the will. Thus, if a testator, being seised of Blackacre and Whiteacre, and having no other real estate, [by a will made before 1838] devise Blackacre to A. in fee, and all the rest of the lands to B., B. takes exactly that which he would have taken under a specific devise of Whiteacre, and no more; and, consequently, if the devise to A. fail, from its being devoted to charity, or from the devisee being dead at the time, or from his subsequent death in the testator's lifetime, B. can no more take, by virtue of his residuary devise, the interest so given, or intended to be given, to A., than he could have done under a specific devise of another property" (d). But this general rule admitted of exception in certain classes of cases which will be here very briefly indicated (e).

If the specific devise comprised only a partial or contingent interest in the lands, leaving an ulterior or alternate interest undisposed of, which would, in the absence of disposition, descend to the heir, such undisposed-of interest, even in a will made before 1838, passed by a general residuary devise.

(b) Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 708; Shanley v. Baker, ib. 732; Jackson v. Kelly, 2 Ves. sen. 285.

(c) See Lord Eldon's judgment in Howe v. Earl of Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137; Broome v. Monck, 10 ib. 605; Hill v. Cock, 1 V. & B. 175; Spong v. Spong, 1 Y. & J. 300.

(d) Goodright v. Opie, 8 Mod. 123; Wright v. Hall, Fortesc. 182; s.c. nom. Wright v. Horne. 8 Mod. 222; Roe v. Fludd, Fort. 184; Sprigg v. Sprigg, 2 Vern. 394; Doe d. Morris v. Underdown, Willes, 293; Watson v. Earl of Lincoln, Amb. 325; Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. sen. 135; Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 12; Jones v. Mitchell, 1 S. & St. 290.

In the first edition will be found some remarks by Mr. Jarman (reprinted in the second, third, and fourth editions), on certain observations of the court of K. B. in the case of Doe d. Stewart v. Sheffield, 13 East, 527, as to the application of the principle above stated to devises void ab initio. See also the observations of Romilly, M.R., in Garner v. Hannynghton, 22 Bea. 627; and Wood, V.-C., on Doe v. Sheffield, in the case of Smith v. Lomas, 33 L. J. Ch. at p. 582.

(e) For a fuller discussion of the old law on this subject, see the fourth edition of this work, vol. I. pp. 646 et seq.

Thus, where a person, by such a will, devised certain lands to A. for life or in tail, and the residue of his lands to B. and his heirs; B., under this devise, took the reversion in fee not included in the devise to A. (f); and, consequently, if A. died in the lifetime of the testator, he became, at the testator's death, tenant in fee in possession.

So, where a testator devised that A. and his heirs should sell his lands for payment of debts or other purposes, not exhausting the whole beneficial interest, and devised the residue of his real estate to B., the latter devise carried the beneficial interest not comprised in the former (g).

The same doctrine, it is clear, applied to executory and contingent devises in fee; for if an estate in fee were devised to a person on the happening of a certain event, it is obvious that the alternate fee depending on the converse event is undisposed of, and, therefore, is an interest on which the residuary clause will operate (h).

And a contingent remainder being an interest which has (i) an inherent liability to fail, as well through the event upon which it was limited not happening before the determination of the prior particular estate, as through its not happening at all, the interest, which upon a failure of the former kind was left undisposed of by the specific devise, was held to pass by a residuary devise in the same will (j).

But if, after carving out a partial or contingent interest, the testator limited the reversion in fee, or the alternative fee, to his own heirs, such devise, though inoperative in law to break the descent, until the enactment on this point (k), was considered to indicate an intention to exclude this property from the residuary

CHAP. XXV.

—devises of partial interests;

—executory
and contin-gent devises in fee.

Contingent remainder failing by destruction of particular estate.

Effect of devise to the testator's own heirs in excluding a reversion from a general devise.

(f) Wheeler v. Waldron, Allen, 28, 3 P. W. 64, n.; Cooke v. Gerrard, 1 Lev. 212; Rooke v. Rooke, 2 Vern. 461, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 210, pl. 17; Willows v. Lydcot, 2 Vent. 285, 3 Mod. 229; see also Doe d. Briscoe v. Clarke, 2 B. & P. N. R. 343; Bennett v. Lowe, 7 Bing. 535, 5 Moo. & P. 485; Saumarez v. Saumarez, 4 My. & C. 331.

(g) White v. Vitty, 2 Russ. 484, 4 Russ. 584; see also Goodtitle d. Hart v. Knott, Cowp. 43.

(h) Goodtitle d. Hart v. Knott, Cowp. 43; Willes, 300; Doe d. Moreton v. Fossick, 1 B. & Ad. 186; Doe d. Wells v. Scott, 3 M. & Sel. 300; see also Vick v. Sueter, 3 Ell. & Bl. 219.

(i) Except in the cases provided for by stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 8, and 40 & 41 Vict. c. 33.

(j) Perceval v. Perceval, L. R., 9 Eq. 386. Upjohn v. Upjohn, 7 Beav. 59, is difficult to reconcile with the general current of authority. In that case there were three contingencies: first, if a certain purchase could be and was completed; secondly, if it could not; thirdly, if it could but was not; of these the first and second were provided for; but in the opinion of the M.R. the third, which actually happened, was not: yet he held the property did not pass by the residuary devise.

(k) 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 12.

CHAP. XXV.

clause ; and, accordingly, such reversion devolved under the old law to the heir (l).

The mere fact, however, that the devisee of the partial or contingent interest specifically devised, was also the general residuary devisee, did not exclude him from taking the remaining interest in such lands in the latter character (m).

Destination of reversion during suspense of alternative contingencies.

If a will made before 1838 contained alternative contingent remainders in fee, the reversion, if not otherwise disposed of, vested in the heir pending the contingency, and, if the will contained a residuary devise, would have passed by it during the same period. Thus in Egerton v. Massey (n), where a testatrix devised estate A. to her niece for life, with remainder to her niece's children living at her death in fee, and for want of such child then to P. in fee ; and gave all the residue of her estate and effects not thereinbefore disposed of to her said niece in fee : it was held that the reversion in fee which, but for the residuary devise, would have vested in the heir-at-law pending the contingency, passed by that devise to the testator's niece.

Extent of general devise under Wills Act.

B. Present Law.—"The points embraced by the preceding positions," says Mr. Jarman (o), "can scarcely arise under wills which are subject to the new law, as the act of 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 25, expressly provides, that, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, real estate, or the interest in real estate, comprised in any void or lapsed devise, shall be included in the residuary devise, if any; and as such act (sect. 3) extends generally the devising power of a testator to all the real estates to which he shall be entitled at his decease; and, moreover, (sect. 24,) makes the will, with reference to the real and personal estate comprised in it, speak from that period, the result of the whole is, that any testator who dies leaving a will made or republished since 1837, containing a general or residuary devise of real estate (p), which takes effect, must be completely testate in (l) Amesbury v. Brown, cited 2 W. Bl. 739 ; Robinson v. Knight, 2 Ed. 155 ; Smith d. Davis v. Saunders, 2 W. Bl. 736, Cowp. 420.

(m) Morgan v. Surman, 1 Taunt, 289. The position in the text is rather an inference from, than a point expressly decided in, this case ; see also Williams v. Goodtitle d. David, 10 B. & Cr. 895 ; Saumarez v. Saumarez, 4 My. & C. 331 ; Ridgeway v. Munkittrick, 1 D. & War. 84 ; Egerton v. Massey, 3 C. B. (N. S.)

338.

(n) 3 C. B. (N. S.) 338. The niece (who never had a child), executed a conveyance of the estate which, as the reversion was vested in her by the residuary devise, destroyed the contingent remainders.

(o) First ed. p. 593.

(p) A will may contain a general devise and also a separate residuary devise ; West v. Lawday, 11 H. L. C. 375. And see Mason v. Ogden, post.

regard to every portion of his real estate to which he is entitled at his decease, whensoever acquired, and whether originally intended to have been otherwise specifically disposed of or not, if such intention should, for any reason whatever, fail of effect."

CHAP. XXV.

The construction which Mr. Jarman puts on these sections of the Wills Act goes somewhat beyond their literal meaning, for sect. 25 is confined to real estate comprised in any devise "which shall fail or be void by reason of the death of the devisee in the lifetime of the testator, or by reason of such devise being contrary to law or otherwise incapable of taking effect." Suppose that a testator devises Blackacre to A., and his residuary real estate to B., and that A. disclaims the devise: is Blackacre included in the residuary devise? (q) The devise to A. is not, in itself, "incapable of taking effect": it fails by reason of the disclaimer. But Mr. Jarman's construction is, it is submitted, the right one, for the obvious intention of the act was to give to residuary devises the same effect as residuary bequests have always had, and there seems no doubt that a residuary bequest includes disclaimed bequests (r). Moreover, the effect of disclaimer relates back to the death of the testator (s), so that the devise is, in the event, incapable of taking effect.

Effect of disclaimer.

If a testator who is really the owner of Blackacre, erroneously recites in his will that it belongs to A. and makes a general devise of all his real estate to B., Blackacre passes by the devise to B. (t).

Erroneous recital.

A devise may of course be residuary, although it does not contain the word "residue," "remainder," or any similar word (u).

What is a residuary devise.

And if a testator includes in one devise certain lands by their specific description and all the residue of his real estate, the specifically described lands form part of the residuary devise (v).

A testator may except certain property from a general devise, either expressly, or by limiting the devise to real estate answering Limited general devise.

(q) I am indebted to my learned friend, Mr. T. Cyprian Williams, for drawing my attention to the difficulty caused by the wording of sect. 25: it occurred in a case in his experience.

(r) Post, Chap. XXIX.

(s) Ante, p. 556.

(t) In Re Bagot, [1893] 3 Ch. 348, this rule was applied to a residuary bequest, but it seems clear that it applies also to a residuary devise, and that the decisions in Circuit v. Perry, 23 Bea. 275; Harris v. Harris, Ir. R., 3 Eq. 610; Hawks v. Longridge, 29 L. T. (N. S.) 449 and Clibborn v. Clibborn, 9 Ir. Jur. 381, so far as they lay down any other principle, are erroneous. See Hounsell v. Dunning, [1902] 1 Ch. 512, where the gift was specific; ante, p. 943. Compare Doe d. Howell v. Thomas, 1 M. & Gr. 335, 344, post, p. 957.

(u) Re Bawden, [1894] 1 Ch. 693, stated post, Chap. LIV. Conversely a gift of "my said residuary estate" will not operate as a residuary devise if the only residue previously referred to is the residuary personalty: Re Hudson, [1908] W. N. 50.

(v) Bray v. Stevens, 12 Ch. D. 162; Thorman v. Hilhouse, 5 Jur. N. S. 563, post, Chap. LIII.

CHAP. XXV.

a certain description. Thus in Simmons v. Rudall (vv) a testator gave all his residuary real and personal estate to trustees in trust for A. for life with remainder in trust, as to one-fourth, as A. should appoint, and upon further trust to transfer all the rest residue and remainder of the trust property to B., C., and D.; A. made no appointment, and it was held that there was an intestacy as to the one-fourth. Again, in Leach v. Jay (w) a testatrix was entitled as heir at law to some freehold houses of which wrongful possession was taken by another; she died without having ever been in possession, having devised "all real estate (if any) of which I may die seised" to the plaintiff; the testatrix's title had not been barred by the Statute of Limitations: it was held that "seised" was a technical word and had no secondary or popular meaning (x), and that consequently the houses did not pass by the devise.

Excepted property un-disposed of.

In such a case, and also where the testator expressly excepts certain property from a general devise, and makes no disposition of it, the property passes as on an intestacy (y). But if after excepting it he gives it to A., and the gift fails by lapse or otherwise, it will, as a general rule, be presumed that the object of the testator in making the exception was simply to give the property to A., and there is therefore no reason why upon the failure of the gift, it should not be held to be included in the general devise (z). It follows that if a testator devises all his real estate, except Blackacre, to A., and devises Blackacre to B., and B. dies in the testator's lifetime, then Blackacre passes under the general devise to A.; if, however, after B.'s death the testator makes a codicil referring to the fact, but not altering the devise of Blackacre, the presumption

(vv) 1 Sim. N. S. 115.

(w) 9 Ch. D. 42.

(x) It is not very easy to follow this argument, for "seised of" is frequently used by professional lawyers in the sense of "entitled to." Thus where a person has mortgaged his land in fee simple, the effect of which is that the seisin is in the mortgagee, (Copestake v. Hoper, [1908] 2 Ch. 10,) the most learned conveyancer would not think it inaccurate to say that the mortgagor is "seised in fee simple" of the land, subject to the mortgage; (see Key & Elph. Con., 9th ed. vol. i. p. 865).

(y) Simmons v. Rudall, supra; Re Fraser, [1904] 1 Ch. at p. 734; compare Davers v. Dawes, 3 P. W. 40, cited post, Chap. XXIX.

(z) See Blight v. Hartnoll, 23 Ch. D. 218, cited post, Chap. XXIX. In Re Sinclair, [1903] W. N. 113, a testator devised his real estate, with the exception of a certain house, "the disposal of which I leave to the discretion of my trustees," upon certain trusts: it was held by Swinfen Eady, J., that as there was no attempt on the face of the will to dispose of the beneficial interest in the house, it was excepted from the general devise for all purposes. But was it not the testator's intention to give his trustees a power of disposing of the beneficial interest, and was not this sufficient to shew that he merely intended to except it from the residue for this purpose, and not for all purposes?

above referred to does not arise, and there is an intestacy as to Blackacre (a). CHAP. XXV.

A declaration by a testator in his will, however emphatic, that a particular piece of land does not belong to him, will not prevent it from passing by a residuary devise (b).

The question whether sect. 24 of the Wills Act applies to an exception from a general devise, has been already considered (c). Whether exception is within sect. 24 of Wills Act.

A gift of "all other land" (d), or "all land not hereinbefore devised" (e), is a mere gift of residue, and shews no intention, within the act, to exclude lapsed specific gifts. And this is so, even although the residuary devise gives an estate for life to the same person as is named specific devisee in fee (f). What will not limit a residuary devise.

If a will contains a residuary devise to A., and the testator at the end of his will appoints B. his residuary devisee, it seems that the residuary devise to A. is not revoked (g).

In order that a devise should be a residuary devise within sect. 25, so as to include lapsed specific gifts, it is not necessary that it should be a devise of the residue of all the testator's real estate. Thus in Mason v. Ogden (h) a testator devised a freehold house at Wimbledon to his son in fee, and "as to all other my freehold messuages and tenements at Wimbledon aforesaid and elsewhere, and all my leasehold estates whatsoever and wheresoever," he devised the same to A. and B. At his death the testator owned freeholds at Wimbledon and elsewhere, and no copyholds. The specific devise of the house to the son having failed, it was held that it passed by the devise of the testator's other freeholds to A. and B. It follows that there can be a residuary devise of a testator's freeholds to A. and of his copyholds to B. (i). Limited devise may be residuary.

But a devise of a particular residue is not a residuary devise within sect. 25. Thus in Springett v. Jennings (j), a testatrix gave certain lands in the parish of H. to A., B., and C. as joint tenants in fee, and devised to the plaintiff "the rest of my freehold Particular residue.

(a) In Re Fraser, [1904] 1 Ch. 726, the property excepted was chattels real, but the principle clearly applies to real estate.

(b) Re Maber, 12 T. L. R. 267.

(c) Ante, pp. 419 seq.

(d) Cogswell v. Armstrong, 2 K. & J. 227.

(e) Green v. Dunn, 20 Beav. 6. See also Culsha v. Cheese, 7 Hare, 236; Carter v. Haswell, 26 L. J. Ch. 576; Burton v. Newbery, 1 Ch. D. 234; Johns v. Wilson, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 342.

(f) Green v. Dunn, supra.

(g) Johns v. Wilson, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 342, where B. was appointed residuary legatee; no question seems to have arisen as to the real estate; see Chap. XXIX., where other cases on double residuary gifts are referred to.

(h) [1903] A. C. 1, affirming decision of C. A. in Re Mason, [1901] 1 Ch. 619.

(i) Per Rigby, L.J., [1901] 1 Ch. at p. 630.

(j) L. R., 6 Ch. 333, following Re Brown's Trusts, 1 K. & J. 522, post.

CHAP. XXV.

hereditaments in the parish of H., and all my freehold hereditaments" in certain other parishes. The devise to A., B., and C. having failed, it was held that the lands comprised in that devise did not pass under the devise to the plaintiff of "the rest of my freehold hereditaments in the parish of H.," but were undisposed of. It was said by James, L.J., that the devise to the plaintiff was as specific as if the testatrix had given certain lands in H. to A., B., and C. and certain other lands in H. (being all the others which she had in that place) to the plaintiff (k).

A particular residue may indeed, upon failure of the gift of a part, include that part, if the testator has used language shewing an intention to that effect (l). But such intention must be shewn, while in the case of a proper residuary devise the act says it shall be presumed.

Void appointment will fall into residuary devise.

The word "devise" in sect. 25 of the Wills Act, as generally throughout the act, includes a gift by will, in exercise of a general power of appointment of real estate (m); and consequently, where a testator, in exercise of such a power, makes a testamentary appointment of realty which fails or is void, the gift will fall into the residuary devise (if any), unless a contrary intention appears by the will (n).

Effect of residuary devise failing as to aliquot share.

If a general residuary devise itself fails to take complete effect, the property will, to that extent, be undisposed of. As where a testator devised land to several in certain shares, as tenants in common, and devised the residue of his real estates to the same persons in the same proportion: some of the specific devisees died in the testator's lifetime, whereupon their shares fell into the residue; but so much of the same shares as came back to them (so to speak), under the residuary devise lapsed to the heir (o). So if a testator devises his residuary real estate to several persons as tenants in common, and afterwards revokes the devise as to one of them, there is an intestacy as to his share (oo).

(k) But a devise of a particular residue of lands in a particular place passes lands in that place acquired by the testator after the date of the will: Doe d. York v. Walker, 12 M. & Wel. 591; ante, p. 938.

(l) Springett v. Jenings, supra. Compare the cases on the effect of a bequest of a particular residue; post, Chap. XXIX.

(m) See sect. 27 of the act.

(n) See Freme v. Clement, 18 Ch. D.

499. In this case the doctrine stated in the text was extended by Jessel, M.R., to appointments in exercise of special powers; but his Lordship's decision on this point was disapproved by the Court of Appeal in Holyland v. Levin, 26 Ch. D. at p. 272. See also ante, p. 811.

(o) Greated v. Greated, 26 Bea. 621. See further on this subject, Chap. XXIX.

(oo) Per Lord Cairns, in Sykes v. Sykes, L. R., 3 Ch. at p. 303.

If a testator devises his residuary real estate to several persons as tenants in common, and by codicil revokes the devise as to one of them and directs that his share shall fall into residue, it is divisible between the other residuary devisees (x).

CHAP. XXV.

Share directed to fall into residue.

II.—In regard to Rents and Profits.—An immediate residuary devise carries the rents and profits from the testator's death; they are, if necessary, apportioned, and those accruing before the death form part of the testator's personal estate.

Immediate residuary devise.

If the residuary devise be contingent or future, i.e., deferred in point of enjoyment, the income accruing in the interval from the residuary real estate does not pass by such devise, but is undisposed of and goes to the heir (p), a residuary devise differing in this respect from a residuary bequest of personalty, which, it is well known, does (though contingent in its terms) carry the prior income (q). The distinction between real and personal estate has been said to flow from the very nature (under the old law) of a residuary devise; for being confined to what the testator had when he made his will, it was as specific as if the property were particularly described (r). It is said to be still more clearly deducible from the rule of law that the freehold cannot be in abeyance (s). And the profits necessarily go with the estate (t). These reasons, however, are purely technical, and no good reason can be given for the rule. Nevertheless, it is clearly established. "It is impossible to contend that, in the absence of any words clearly leading to what the Court considers judicially to imply a gift of the intermediate rents and profits (u), any such gift can be introduced into the testator's will. Neither the persons waiting until the executory devise shall take effect, nor the person who shall first come into esse when the executory devise has taken Future residuary devise does not carry interim income.

(x) Re Palmer, [1893] 3 Ch. 369, where the head note seems inaccurate; there was no trust for conversion of the real estate.

(p) Hopkins v. Hopkins, Ca. t. Talb. 44, extr. from R. L. Hawkins, Construction of Wills, App. I.; Wills v. Wills, 1 Dr. & W. 439; Hodgson v. Bective, 1 H. & M. 376, 10 H. L. Ca. 656 (but not appealed on this point); Wade-Gery v. Handley, 1 Ch. D. 653; 3 Ch. D. 374. The Wills Act does not affect the question; see 1 H. & M. p. 396, and a note by Mr. Jarman in the first edition of this work, p. 596.

(q) Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 473;

Trevanion v. Vivian, 2 Ves. sen. 430; i.e., until accumulation is stopped by the law: thenceforth it goes to the next of kin; Bective v. Hodgson, 10 H. L. Ca. 656, 671; Wade-Gery v. Handley, supra.

(r) By Wood, V.-C., 1 H. & M. 396.

(s) See acc. per Lord Westbury, 10 H. L. Ca. 665.

(t) 1 Atk. 424, 2 Atk. 476, Co. Lit. 55 b, n. (8).

(u) For examples of such a gift in a shifting clause, see Turton v. Lambarde, 1 D. F. & J. 495; D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 34 Beav. 36.

CHAP. XXV.

effect, nor all the persons who may be interested under the series of devises following that executory devise, by way of accumulation, can establish their claim" (v). And the rule is the same with regard to trusts (w).

Otherwise if real and personal estate are blended.

But if the real and personal estates are blended in one gift, it is considered to denote an intention that both species of property shall be subject to the rule applicable to personalty. Thus in Genery v. Fitzgerald (x), Lord Eldon decided that a gift of all the residue of the real and personal estate to the eldest of three persons who should attain twenty-one, charged with a sum of money to the others if they should attain that age, comprised the rents accruing between the testator's decease and the attainment by the devisee of the prescribed age. He said, "The general principles are these. When personal estate is given to A. at twenty-one, that will carry the intermediate interest. If a testator gives his estate Blackacre at a future period, that will not carry the intermediate rents and profits. But when he mixes up real and personal estate in the same clause, the question must be, whether he does not show an intention that the same rule shall operate on both."

What constitutes a blending.

What amounts to such a mixing up of real and personal property in one mass as to bring a specific case within the rule, has been much discussed. It is clear that if there are separate trusts of the realty and the personalty, and the trusts are not identical, so that they may or may not carry the property to the same persons, the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald does not apply (y). But in Re Dumble (z), where a testator devised his residuary real estate upon certain trusts (including trusts for maintenance, &c.) and bequeathed his residuary personal estate upon trusts which were identical with those declared of the real estate, except that they did not include trusts for maintenance, &c., it was held by Pearson, J., that the rule in Genery v. Fitzgerald applied (a).

(v) Per Wood, V.-C., 1 H. & M. 392; and see Sir E. Sugden's remarks in Wills v. Wills, 1 D. & War. 451, 452, upon Duffield v. Elwes, 2 S. & St. 544; and ante, p. 719. Sidney v. Wilmer, 4 D. J. & S. 84, contra, is not law; Wade-Gery v. Handley, 3 Ch. D. 374.

(w) Per Lord Talbot, Hopkins v. Hopkins, supra, cited by Sugden, C., 1 D. & War. 455; Wade-Gery v. Handley, 1 Ch. D. 653, 3 ib. 374.

(x) Jac. 468; see also Gibson v. Montfort, 1 Ves. sen. 485; Glanvill v. Glanvill, 2 Mer. 38; Ackers v. Phipps, 3 Cl. & Fin. 665; Lachlan v. Reynolds, 9 Hare, 796; Re Taylor, [1901] 2 Ch. 134. The decision on this point in Green v. Tribe (Re Love), 47 L. J. Ch. 783, seems to have been given per incuriam.

(y) Hodgson v. Bective, 1 H. & M. 376; Re Williams, 54 L. T. 831.

(z) 23 Ch. D. 360.

(a) See further on this point Re Drakeley's Estate, 19 Beav. 395; Marrriott v. Turner, 20 ib. 557; Re Williams, 54 L. T. 831; Re Burton's Will, [1892] 2 Ch. 38.

Where re-mainderman is excluded.

But a testator may make such a disposition of his real and personal estate during the period preceding the future or contingent interest, as to exclude the presumption that he meant it to carry the intermediate income. Thus in Re Townsend's Estate (b), a testator gave his real and personal estate upon trust to pay the income to A. for life, and after his death upon trust for his children : there was a gift over, in the event of A. dying without issue, to a class to be ascertained at his death ; the gift to A. for life failed and he had no children : it was held that during A.'s life and until he had a child, the income of the trust funds (which consisted of real estate only) went to the heir at law. So if a testator directs the intermediate income to be accumulated, and the accumulation is stopped by the Thellusson Act, the income goes to the heir at law and next of kin (c).

III.—In regard to Reversions and Remainders.—"It remains to be considered," says Mr. Jarman (d), "whether reversions will pass under a general devise of lands. In regard to this question, an undisposed-of interest which, on his decease, would become a reversion left in the testator after other dispositions of his own will, is obviously distinguishable from a reversion of which he is the owner at the time of his will (e) ; but they have been generally treated as belonging to the same class, and approximate sufficiently in principle to warrant at least their juxtaposition.

Operation of a general devise on reversions.

"Reversions in fee, then, will pass under a general devise of lands or hereditaments (f), although the testator be seised of real estate in possession to satisfy the words of the devise (a fact however, which, in regard to wills made since 1837, would be immaterial) ; and although he may have been ignorant when he made his will of his having such a disposable interest (g) ; or it may have been unlikely, from its remoteness or liability to be defeated by the act of another, ever to fall into possession, as in the case of a reversion expectant on an estate tail (h).

(b) 34 Ch. D. 357. See also Re Sanderson's Trust 3 K. & J. 497 ; Marriott v. Turner, 20 Bea. 557.

(c) See Talbot v. Jevors, L. R., 20 Eq. 255 ; Weatherall v. Thornburgh, 8 Ch. D. 261 ; Re Travis, [1900] 2 Ch. 541, and the other cases cited, supra, p. 389.

(d) First ed. p. 599.

(e) See Tennent v. Tennent, 1 Jo. & Lat. 379.

(f) Chester v. Chester, 3 P. W. 56 ;

Ridout v. Pain, 3 Atk. 486 ; Atkyns v. Atkyns, Cowp. 808, 3 B. P. C. Toml. 408 ; see also Doe d. Crump v. Sparkes, 4 D. & Ry. 246.

(g) "Persons not professionally informed do not readily apprehend the alienable nature of reversionary contingent interests." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(h) Dalby v. Champenoon, Skinn. 631, where, however, it was controlled by the context.

CHAP. XXV.

Devise of lands "not settled," includes unsettled reversion in settled lands.

"It has been even held that a testator's reversion in fee in settled lands will pass under a devise of his 'lands not settled' (i), or of his lands and hereditaments 'out of settlement' (j), or 'in the towns of L., M. and N., or elsewhere, not by him formerly settled or thereby disposed of' (k). The argument in these cases was, that, although certain estates in those lands were settled, yet that the reversion was not, and consequently it fell within the restrictive terms of the testator's description."

So, in Att.-Gen. v. Vigor (l) Lord Eldon expressed a decided opinion that the reversion in lands, settled on the marriage of the testator's son with Lady K., passed by a devise of all the testator's lands, which he had not settled or assured, or agreed to settle or assure, to the use of his said son and the issue male of his body, upon his marriage with Lady K. his wife. And in Incorporated Society v. Richards (m), where the testator—having upon his marriage agreed to settle certain estates in trust for himself for life, remainder to provide a jointure for his wife, remainder to his issue in tail, remainder to himself in fee—devised all his unsettled real estate to his wife for life, remainder over, Sir E. Sugden, C., held that the reversion passed as part of the unsettled estates.

The foregoing cases also show that the possession by the testator at the date of his will of lands, no estate or interest in which has been settled, and to which the devise is applicable, will not exclude the operation of the will.

Mr. Jarman continues (n): "Though the rule of construction established by the preceding cases has been much condemned, as savouring of extreme technicality, and inimical to popular notions and probable intention (o), they have, it is conceived, placed it beyond the reach of controversy.

"On a principle not very dissimilar, it has been held, that a devise of lands 'not before devised,' or 'not before disposed of,'

"Lands not before devised."

(i) Cooke v. Gerrard, 1 Lev. 212; Glover v. Spendlove, 4 Br. C. C. 337 ("lands not settled in jointure"). The dictum contra of Lord Ellenborough, in Goodtitle d. Daniel v. Miles, 6 East, 494, (except so far as it may be supported on special grounds,) must be regarded as untenable.

(j) Strode v. Russell, 2 Vern. 621, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 210, pl. 18, 3 Ch. Rep. 169, and (nom. Falkland v. Lytton) 3 B. P. C. Toml. 24.

(k) Chester v. Chester, 3 P. W. 56, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 330, pl. 9.

(l) 8 Ves. 256, 272.

(m) 1 D. & War. 258; see also Jones v. Skinner, 5 L. J. (N. S.) Ch. 87; Crowe v. Noble, Sm. & Bat. 12.

(n) First ed. p. 601.

(o) Sir J. Mansfield, in Morgan v. Surman, 1 Taunt. 292, characterised Chester v. Chester as "a shocking decision"; but he admitted it had been followed by numerous others; and see the rule defended by Sir E. Sugden, 1 Dr. & War. 285; and by Pepys, M.R., 5 L. J. (N. S.) Ch. 87.

carries the reversion in lands which the testator had previously devised for life (p).

CHAP. XXV.

“The inclination of the Courts at the present day not to exclude a reversion from a general devise upon slight or equivocal grounds, is strongly illustrated by Doe d. Howell v. Thomas (q), in which a reversion in fee in an estate limited to the testator’s first and other sons in strict settlement, was held to pass under a devise of estates over which the testator had a power of disposal, though in another part of the will he referred to the estate in question as property over which he had no power” (r). And in Ridgeway v. Mun-Kittrick (s), where a testator directed his trustees to let a certain mill, and also dispose of his stock in trade and other properties to the best advantage, Sir E. Sugden held that the mill was included in the term “other properties.”

Reversion not excluded by equivocal expressions.

In Mostyn v. Champneys (u), an attempt was made to exclude a reversion in fee expectant on an estate tail from a devise of all the testator’s real estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, over which he had any disposing power, to trustees for a term for raising debts, funeral charges and legacies, on the ground that the testator himself was tenant in tail of the lands in question; and that he could not intend to describe such a remote reversion as property over which he had a disposing power, he having taken no steps to enlarge his estate tail, as he might have done, into a fee simple. The testator had other real estate in possession, to which it was admitted the devise in question extended. The Court of C. P. certified that, the words of the devise being sufficient to include the reversion, and no intention to exclude it being expressed, or necessarily implied from other parts of the will, such reversion passed.

Mostyn v. Champneys.

But of course, a testator may refer to a particular reversion in such a way as to shew that he does not intend it to pass by a general devise (v).

A question which was formerly much debated, in regard to the operation of a general devise upon a reversion, is whether the Whether inapt limitations exclude a reversion.

(p) Rooke v. Rooke, 2 Vern. 461; Willows v. Lydcot, 2 Vent. 285; Taaffe v. Ferrall, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 183.

(q) 1 M. & Gr. 335.

(r) Morris v. Lloyd, 33 L. J. Ex. 202 illustrates the general principle. And see Kelly v. Duffy, 4 L. R. Ir. 601.

(s) 1 D. & War. 84.

(u) 1 Scott, 293.

(v) Strong v. Teatt, 2 Burr. 912; 3 Br. P. C. 219; Doe v. Saunders, Cowp. 420. See Hyley v. Hyley, 3 Mod. 228; Doe d. Morris v. Underdown, Willes, inaptitude of some of the limitations is a ground for excluding the reversion. The general principle is now well established, namely, that in construing a general devise "the words of the will should be taken to comprehend every subject which falls within their proper meaning, unless that meaning is excluded by the context or by the circumstances of the case; and that mere conjecture will not do" (w). In the case from which the foregoing remark is quoted a testator who was entitled to an estate in remainder expectant on the death of his wife, by his will gave all his property to his wife for life and after her decease to his children; it was held that the remainder passed by the devise.

293. The decision in Roe v. Avis, 4 T. R. 605 was disapproved by Mr. Jarman (first ed. p. 606; fourth ed. p. 659 seq.) and that in Goodtitle v. Miles, 6 East, 494, by Sir E. Sugden in Incorporated Society v. Richards (ante, p. 956). The modern tendency of the courts is to give effect to the literal wording of a general devise (post, p. 958). Honywood v. Honynwood, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 471, is not a valuable authority, as the grounds of the decision are not stated.

In the first edition of this work Mr. Jarman divided the cases on this subject into two classes: first, those in which there were other lands to which the limitations in question were applicable; and secondly, those in which the reversion was the only property of the testator that the devise could apply to. As the distinction in question is immaterial as regards wills made since 1837, it will be sufficient to say that the former class comprises the cases of Doe d. Earl Cholmondeley v. Weatherby (x), Doe d. Moreton v. Fossick (y), William d. Hughes v. Thomas (z), Freeman v. Duke of Chandos (a), and Doe d. Nethercote v. Bartle (b). The latter class includes Strong v. Teatt (c), Roe d. James v. Avis (d), Goodtitle d. Daniel v. Miles (e), Att.-Gen. v. Vigor (f), and Church v. Mundy (g). A detailed examination of these cases will be found in the fourth and earlier editions of this work. Mr. Jarman, after criticising the remarks made by Sir W. Grant (h) on the decision in Church v. Mundy (i) (which established the modern doctrine) proceeds as follows (j):—"Since this period, in every instance in which the question whether a reversion passes by a general devise has been agitated, it has been decided in the affirmative; and though in all these cases, there happened to be other real estate to which the limitations inapplicable

(w) Per Turner, V.-C., in Ford v. Ford, 6 Ha. 486. See also Morris v. Lloyd, 33 L. J. Ex. 202.

(x) 11 East, 322.

(y) 1 B. & Ad. 186.

(z) 12 East, 141.

(a) Cowp. 363.

(b) 5 B. & Ald. 492. To these may be added Goodright v. Downshire, 2 B. & P. 600.

(c) Burr. 912; s.c. in D. P. 3 Br. P. C. 219.

(d) 4 T. R. 605.

(e) 6 East, 494.

(f) 8 Ves. 256.

(g) 15 Ves. 396. See also Wintour v. Clifton 3 Jur. N. S. 74; Alliston v. Chapple, 6 Jur. N. S. 288; Taafe v. Ferrall, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 183; and Tennent v. Tennent, 1 Jo. & Lat. 379, where Sugden, L.C., said: "Roe v. Avis has been overruled by the current of later authorities."

(h) In Welby v. Welby, 2 V. & B. 187.

(i) 15 Ves. 396.

(j) First ed. p. 610. Mr. Jarman's observations on this subject were approved by Turner, V.-C., in Ford v. Ford, supra.

to the reversion might be referred, yet little or no stress seems to have been laid on that circumstance, and they were decided on the broad ground, that the words of the devise being sufficient to comprise the property, it would pass, without going into the question, whether the testator could be supposed to have had it actually in his contemplation when he framed the devise or not.

“The sound conclusion, then, seems to be, that a general devise will in all cases operate on a reversion or remainder belonging to the testator, notwithstanding the remoteness of such reversion or remainder, as being expectant on an estate tail or otherwise (whether such estate tail be vested in the testator or another), and notwithstanding the inapplicability of some of the limitations or purposes of the devise to the interest in question; and, that, too, whether the testator had at the time of the making of the will any other real estate to which such inapplicable limitations or purposes can be applied or not. Indeed, the latter fact would, of course, be wholly immaterial in the case of a will made or republished since the year 1837, any general devise in which would, under the new law, comprise after-acquired real estate; precluding, therefore, all inquiry into the then state of the testator’s property, as affording any insight into the intention.”

General conclusion from the cases.

But if the testator is possessed of a reversion to which none of the limitations are applicable, the question, it is conceived, is by no means the same. Sir W. Grant, indeed, thought there would be no room for arguing such a case; for that would be to say, the reversion passed, although it were so given that nobody could take it (k). There seems to be no decision on the point.

Where none of the limitations are applicable. Opinion of Sir W. Grant.

IV.—In regard to Copyholds.—The statutes dispensing with the necessity of a surrender to the use of the will (l) have placed freeholds Unsurrendered copyholds now pass by general devise.

(k) Welby v. Welby, 2 V. & B. 187. The point was touched upon in argument in Tennent v. Tennent, Dru. 161, 1 Jo. & Lat. 379, where, first, the T. estate was entailed on R. J., and then the residue was devised to R., with a direction at his death to entail the subject of disposition on R. J. in the same manner as the T. estate was entailed on him. It was argued that as the prescribed entail would be wholly inoperative upon the reversion in the T. estate, this reversion was not subject to the direction; and if not, so neither were certain other estates which were included with it in the devise to R., and which he thus took in fee. But Sugden, C., rejected this argument: he treated the gift to R. and the direction to entail as parts of one devise or series of limitations, so that the case became one where some, not all, of the limitations were inapplicable to the reversion. “It is now settled,” he said, “that a reversion in fee will pass under a general devise unless a clear intention to include it is shown, though it is limited in part to the same uses to which the particular estate is already dedicated.” There was thus no decision on the point in question.

(l) 55 Geo. 3, c. 192; 1 Vict. c. 26 ss. 3 & 4. See ante, p. 68. As to the law before 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, see the fourth and earlier editions of this work.

CHAP. XXV.

and copyholds on the same footing in regard to the operation of a general devise, so that even before the Wills Act copyholds passed under a devise of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or other general words descriptive of real estate, unless a contrary intention appeared. Thus, in Doe d. Clarke v. Ludlam (m) where a testator, having both freehold and copyhold estates at C., devised the whole of his real and personal estates and effects whatsoever and where-soever, which he might be possessed of at the time of his decease, to A., his heirs and assigns for ever, and died without having made any surrender of the copyholds to the uses of his will, it was held that the copyholds, as well as the freeholds, passed by the devise.

And the circumstance that some of the limitations and clauses in the will were inapplicable to copyholds, (for instance, estates for life, limited without impeachment of waste,) would not prevent their passing by such a general devise (n), the testator having other property to which the inapplicable clauses might be referred.

Equitable interests in copyholds.

If the testator had only the equitable estate in copyholds, it did not, at least before the statute 55 Geo. 3, pass by a general devise of lands; for it could not be surrendered, and there was no other clear indication of an intention to pass copyholds (o). But it has been said (p), that possibly, since the statute, an equitable interest in copyholds would pass under such a general devise, for equity would follow the law; and as, since the statute, general words included legal copyholds (q), the same rule might apply in cases of trusts of copyholds.

Lord Eldon, in White v. Vitty (r), suggested whether, as the act of 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, makes a surrender unnecessary for a devise of copyholds, a surrender to the use of the will could now be considered as any evidence of intention that copyholds should pass by a general devise; and, certainly, if unsundered copyholds had been held not to pass in Doe v. Ludlam, it might have been a question whether the same principle did not apply to surrendered copyholds; but the sound decision of the Court of C. P. in that

(m) 7 Bing. 275, 5 Moo. & P. 48; see also Edwards v. Barnes, 2 Scott, 411; 2 Bing. N. C. 252; Doe d. Edmunds v. Llewellyn, 2 C. M. & R. 503; Usticke v. Peters, 4 K. & J. 437. The stat. 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, was held not to be retrospective, Doe d. Smith v. Bird, 5 B. & Ad. 695.

(n) Car v. Ellison, 3 Atk. 73; Weigall v. Brome, 6 Sim. 99; see also Borrell v. Haigh, 2 Jur. 229; Jackson

v. Noble, 2 Kee. 590.

(o) Torre v. Brown, 5 H. L. Ca. 555, 24 L. J. Ch. 757.

(p) By Lord Cranworth, ibid.

(q) Referring to Doe v. Ludlam. See also Seaman v. Woods, 24 Beav. 372, where this point seems to have been assumed in favour of the devisee. The devise was of "all the estate of whatever kind or nature."

(r) 2 Russ. at p. 488.

case precludes any such question. However it was deemed expedient to provide expressly by the Wills Act, s. 26, that copyhold estates shall pass, together with freeholds, under a general devise (s).

CHAP. XXV.

Provision in Wills Act.

General devise of copyholds.

Under a general devise of copyhold lands, unsundered copyholds were held to pass even before the statute of 55 Geo. 3 (t), although the testator had other copyholds which were surrendered (u). In order to restrain the devise to the surrendered copyholds in such a case, it was necessary to shew restrictive words (v); hence, under the old law, the question was much discussed, whether a reference to the fact of the testator having surrendered the copyholds, restricted the devise to copyholds so surrendered (w).

These questions are now of no importance in the case of wills made since 1837, and the only question which is now likely to arise, is whether a testator in making a general devise, has so restricted it as to exclude copyholds. Thus in Reeves v. Baker (x) a devise of "all the rest, residue and remainder of my property," though followed by the words "whether freehold or personal, and wheresoever situate," was held to include copyholds, the latter words being considered to be merely an imperfect enumeration of particulars.

Exclusion of copyholds from general devise.

The question whether copyholds can pass under a devise of freeholds is discussed in Chapter XXXV.

Whether a devise of freeholds will carry copyholds.

The effect of a devise of copyholds, whether specific or general, as regards admittance and the extinguishment of the widow's right to free-bench, &c., has been already discussed (y).

V.—In regard to Leaseholds.—(A) Leaseholds for Years.—Mr. Jarman continues (z): "The next inquiry is, whether property in which the testator is possessed of a term of years only, will pass by a general devise. [In reference to wills made before the year 1838,] the rule on this subject, of which the early case of Leaseholds for years, when they pass under a general devise.

Rules under the old law.

(s) As to devises by unadmitted devisees or surrenderees of copyholds, see ante, p. 70.

As to the liability of copyholds for the testator's debts, under the old law, see Coombes v. Gibson, 1 Br. C. C. 273; Growcock v. Smith, 2 Cox, 397, and the other cases referred to in the fourth and earlier editions of this work.

(t) Byas v. Byas, 2 Ves. sen. 164; Frank v. Standish, 1 Br. C. C. 588, n., 15 Ves. 391, n.

(u) Blunt v. Clitherow, 10 Ves. 589.

(v) Wilson v. Mount, 3 Ves. 191.

(w) Banks v. Denshaw, 3 Atk. 585,

1 Ves. sen. 63; Gascoigne v. Barker, 3 Atk. 8; Kings Head Inn Case, cited 1 Ves. sen. 63, 121; Wilson v. Mount, 3 Ves. 191; Strutt v. Finch, 2 S. & St. 229; Pullin v. Pullin, 10 J. B. Moo. 464; 3 Bing. 47; Oxenforth v. Cawkwell, 2 S. & St. 558; Rumbold v. Rumbold, 3 Ves. 65; Hills v. Downton, 5 Ves. 557.

(x) 18 Bea. 372. As to the possibility of a testator making separate general devises of freeholds and copyholds, see Re Mason, [1901] 1 Ch. 619, ante, p. 951.

(y) Ante, pp. 70 seq.

(z) First ed. p. 616.

CHAP. XXV.

Rose v. Bartlett (a) is the well-known leading authority, is, that 'where a man hath lands in fee and lands for years, and deviseth all his lands and tenements, the fee simple lands pass only, and not the leases for years; but if he hath no fee simple, the lease for years passeth, [for otherwise the will should be merely void].'

"Both these propositions are law at the present day, in reference to wills made before the year 1838. The former indeed, was long vexata quæstio; and the reluctance to assent to it arose from the conviction, that it subverted the intention of testators, who, it is obvious, employ general words of this nature in a comprehensive sense, and without having in view the purely technical distinction respecting the quality of the estate" (b).

Leaseholds pass by a devise of land under Wills
Act.

As Mr. Jarman points out (c):—"The exclusion of leaseholds from a general devise, where the testator has freeholds, founded as it is on a distinction purely technical, has been considered to militate so strongly against intention, that this rule of construction has been abrogated by the recent act of the 1 Vict. c. 26, the 26th section of which provides, that a devise of the land of the testator, or of the land of the testator in any place, or in the occupation of any person mentioned in his will, or otherwise described in a general manner, and any other general devise, which would (d) describe a customary, copyhold or leasehold estate, if the testator had no freehold estate which could be described by it, shall be construed to include the customary, copyhold and leasehold estates of the testator, or his customary, copyhold and leasehold estates, or any of them, to which such description shall extend, as the case may be, as well as freehold estates, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will."

(a) Cro. Car. 292; Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 Myl. & K. 571.

(b) The cases establishing these propositions are stated and examined in the fourth and earlier editions of this work: the principal ones are—Davis v. Gibbs, 3 P. W. 26; Knotsford v. Gardiner, 2 Atk. 450; Pistol v. Riccardson, 2 P. W. 459, n.; Thompson v. Lawley, 2 B. & P. 303, where Lord Eldon reviewed the authorities and fully recognized the rule. See also Whitaker v. Ambler, 1 Ed. 151; Parker v. Marchant, 5 M. & Gr. 498, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 279. The rule applied where the will was inoperative from defect of execution, Chapman v. Hart, 1 Ves. sen. 271; see also Sampson v. Sampson, 2 V. & B. 337; Watkins v. Lea, 6 Ves. 633. The rule, of course, yielded to an indication of contrary intention.

As to what was deemed to amount to evidence of such intent, see Hartley v. Hurle, 5 Ves. 540; Swift v. Swift, 1 D. F. & J. 160; Doe d. Belasyse v. Lucan, 9 East, 448; Lane v. Stanhope, 6 T. R. 345; Arkell v. Fletcher, 10 Sim. 299; Addis v. Clement, 2 P. W. 456; Dixon v. Dawson, 2 S. & St. 327; Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 My. & K. 571; Goodman v. Edwards, 2 My. & K. 759. As to leaseholds passing with copyholds of inheritance, see Roe d. Pye v. Bird, 2 W. Bl. 1301. As to leaseholds passing by a devise of "farms," see Holmes v. Milward, 47 L. J. Ch. 522, post, Chap. XXXV.

(c) First ed. p. 627.

(d) That is, "would before the act have described"; see judgment in Wilson v. Eden, 5 Ex. 752.

The burden of proof is thus shifted to those who assert that leaseholds do not pass by a devise of "land": and the proof must appear on the will itself. The subject was much discussed in Wilson v. Eden (e), where a testator, after bequeathing his personal estate to A. absolutely, devised all his messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments situate at or near W., and other specified places in the county of D., and at other places in the county of Y., and all other his real estates in the said counties and elsewhere in Great Britain, to uses in strict settlement in favour of A. and his issue. Lord Langdale, M.R., thought that renewable chattel leaseholds situate near W., and contiguous to, and occupied with, the freeholds, were not included in this devise: not only were uses in strict settlement inapplicable in their integrity to leaseholds, but the ambiguity of the word "land" was removed by the subsequent words "other real estates." So that the case did not come within the act (f). But on a case from Chancery, the Courts of Exchequer and Q. B. successively came to the opposite conclusion. Lord Campbell observed that if (as was admitted) the devise of lands at or near W., taken by itself, was within the act (g), he could not understand why it was the less so because of the use of the subsequent words. Accordingly, it was decided by Sir J. Romilly that the leaseholds passed; he remarked that though general words might be cut down by the effect of previous enumeration, yet it was new to him to say that those general words cut down the prior enumeration.

But leaseholds will clearly not pass by a devise of "lands," if a contrary intention appears from the whole scheme of the will; as in the ordinary case of "lands" being devised in strict settlement, and "personal estate" being bequeathed on corresponding trusts (h).

In Wilson v. Eden, Lord Langdale was clearly of opinion, and (for the purpose, at least, of the ultimate decision) it was assumed by the other judges, that the act had not the effect of making leaseholds pass by a general devise of "real estate"; and this appears to be the proper construction of sect. 26,

CHAP. XXV.

Unless a contrary intention appears by the will.

Wilson v. Eden.

Strict settlement of freeholds and leaseholds.

General devise of "real estate."

(e) 11 Beav. 237, 5 Ex. 752, 14 Beav. 317, 18 Q. B. 474, 16 Beav. 153.

(f) See also per K. Bruce, V.-C., Parker v. Marchant, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 282.

(g) It is stated in the report that seventy-two acres of the leaseholds were on the northern side of a high ridge, the greater portion being on the southern side, and that the former were two miles from the house and estate at W. It is not stated whether they were disconnected. If they were, it might be a little difficult to reconcile the decision as to the seventy-two acres with Doe d. Ashforth v. Bower, 3 B. & Ad. 453.

(h) Prescott v. Barker, L. R., 9 Ch. 174.

CHAP. XXV.

which was probably intended merely to abolish the rule of construction established by Rose v. Bartlett (i). And Chitty, J., so decided in Butler v. Butler (j), where the testator gave "my real estates wheresoever situate," to one set of beneficiaries, and "my personal estate wheresoever situate" to another set of beneficiaries. There can, of course, be no question if the testator gives his "real estate" to one person and his "leasehold estate" to another (k).

Devise of "real estate
at A."

But if the devise were of "real estate at A.," there can be little doubt that leaseholds at A. would have passed under the old law if the testator had had no freeholds there; and notwithstanding that the words appear rather to point to specific property, it seems to have been assumed, since the act, that this is a "general devise" within the meaning of sect. 26.

Moase v.
White.

Thus, in Moase v. White (l), a testator having freeholds and leaseholds at E., and leaseholds but no freeholds at W., gave all his "real estate" at E. and W. upon certain trusts: it was held by Bacon, V.C., that all the leaseholds passed, although in one of the other clauses of the will "leaseholds" were expressly referred to as forming part of the personal estate.

Specific devise of "freehold" where no
freehold.

And leaseholds will still, as before the act, pass even as "freehold," if the devise is clearly specific in form, and the testator has at the date of his will no freehold property to answer the description (m). Thus, where a man devised all his "freehold houses in Aldersgate-street," to A. and his heirs, and he had some leasehold but no freehold houses there, the leaseholds passed; it being the plain intention of the will to pass some houses, and the word "freehold" should rather be rejected than the will rendered void (n). And as such a gift points to a specific property as then belonging to the testator, the construction of it is not affected by sect. 24 of the Wills Act (o).

(i) Supra, p. 962.

(j) 28 Ch. D. 66. See also Turner v. Turner, 21 L. J. Ch. 843. In Gully v. Davis, L. R., 10 Eq. 562, leaseholds were held to pass by a general devise of "real estate." The decision turned partly on the fact that the testator never had any freeholds, and partly on the admission (by demurrer) that the testator thought his leaseholds were freeholds.

(k) Re Guyton and Rosenberg, [1901] 2 Ch. 591.

(l) 3 Ch. D. 763. See also Best v. Standeren, [1872] W. N. 44; Re Davi- son, 58 L. T. 304 (see the remarks of North, J., on the decision in Butler v. Butler). See also Re Uttermare, [1893] W. N. 158, where an appointment by will of "all real estate in the county of S." was held to pass long leaseholds intermixed with freeholds.

(m) Nelson v. Hopkins, 21 L. J. Ch. 410. See Stone v. Greening, 13 Sim. 390.

(n) Day v. Trig, 1 P. W. 286; Doe d. Gunning v. Lord Cranstoun, 7 Mee. & W. 1.

(o) Nelson v. Hopkins, supra.

In Mathews v. Mathews (p), a testator devised all his "freehold land, messuages, or tenements and hereditaments," comprising a specified set of buildings; he died, seised in fee of part of the property subject to a lease, possessed of another part for a term of years, and possessed of a third part, X., for a term of years, and he was also seised of the reversion of X. in fee from the expiration of three years after the end of the term; it was held that both the leasehold and freehold interest in X. passed by the devise.

Where testator has freehold and leasehold interest in same property.

But in the absence of special circumstances, a devise of "real and freehold" property will not include leaseholds (q).

(B) Leaseholds for Lives.—Even under the old law, leases for lives, being freehold interests, clearly passed under a general devise of "lands and hereditaments," or "real estate," with freeholds of inheritance, unless an intention to exclude them could be collected from the context (s).

Leaseholds for lives not within the rule in Rose v. Bartlett.

VI.—In regard to Powers of Appointment.—This subject has been already discussed (t).

(p) L. R., 4 Eq. 278.

(q) See Greer v. Waring, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 427. In that case (which was one of a charge, not a devise) the testator referred in one part of the will to his "real freehold and leasehold property."

(s) Sheffield v. Mulgrave, 5 T. R. 571, 2 Ves. jun. 526; Fitzroy v. Howard, 3 Russ. 225; Weigall v. Brome, 6 Sim. 99.

(t) Ante, Chap. XXIII. As to general powers, see p. 809; as to special powers, see p. 827.

CHAPTER XXVI.

DEVISES BY MORTGAGEES AND TRUSTEES.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. In regard to the Beneficial Interest in Mortgages...	966	II. Operation of General Devise on the Legal Estate of Mortgagee or Trustee...	971
As to the Extinction of the Charge by Union of Character of Mortgagor and Mortgagee	970	III. Whether Trust can be performed by Devisee of Trust Estate	987

Devises by mortgages.

MR. JARMAN points out (a) that : “ As mortgages are of a complex nature, involving on the one hand a personal debt (b), with all the claims and obligations incident to the relation of creditor and debtor, and on the other an interest in real estate for the purpose of securing the debt, absolute at law after forfeiture, but redeemable in equity, it follows that the testamentary disposition of a mortgagee presents two distinct subjects for consideration.

Whether
beneficial interest in mortgage will pass under devise of lands.

I.—In regard to the Beneficial Interest in Mortgages.—“ With respect to the beneficial interest in the mortgage, it is clear that a general devise of lands will not commonly have the effect of including it (c). The contrary, indeed, is laid down by a respectable writer (d), but his position is not warranted by either authority or principle. The case of Ex parte Sergison (e) cited by him does not support it, for the devisee was executor and residuary legatee, and consequently entitled, in that character, to the beneficial interest in the mortgage : besides, the only question in the case related to the legal estate in the lands (f). The position is opposed, too, by the established principle of equity, which considers the mortgagee as holding the land in a fiduciary character only, and the estate as still substantially belonging to the mortgagor. The person taking the mortgaged lands therefore by devise or descent, from the deceased mortgagee, it is obvious, is a trustee

(a) First ed. p. 633.

(b) See Re Gibbon, [1909] 1 Ch. 367.

(c) Strode v. Russel, 2 Vern. 621, 3 Ch. Rep. 169, 2 Vent. 851, 3 P. W. 61 ; Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 603 and n. by Sanders, 2 J. & W. 194.

(d) 1 Rob. on Wills, 3rd ed. 403.

(e) 4 Ves. 147. Stated post, p. 972.

(f) “ Mr. Roberts evidently confounds the two questions ; his positions are inapplicable to either.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

for the person entitled to the money or debt, by virtue of the will or otherwise (g), unless, of course, both these interests happen to unite in the same person.

“Nor is it, I apprehend, universally true, that an express devise of the lands, or (which seems to be the same in effect) a devise of all the testator’s lands in a particular place, he having no other than mortgaged lands there, will carry the beneficial interest to the devisee, though the affirmative has been sometimes laid down in very unqualified terms (h).

Effect of devise of mortgaged lands on beneficial
interest.

“It is observable that in the cases cited in support of the doctrine referred to, the testator was in possession at the time (i), and in most of them the operation of the devise was not called in question, the only point being as to the right of redemption. The fact of such possession, particularly where it has been of long continuance, and accompanied with acts of ownership, certainly strongly favours the supposition that the testator, in expressly devising the property, means to give the beneficial interest. Having himself enjoyed the property beneficially, he can hardly but intend that his devisee’s enjoyment should be of the same nature, especially where it is given not to the devisee simply in fee, but to several persons consecutively for limited estates (j). The testator, too, may be ignorant whether the right of redemption, on which the nature of the property depends, be barred or not; and may therefore choose to avoid using any expressions which might be construed into a recognition of it (k). Indeed, in such cases there would be strong ground to contend that the beneficial interest would pass, even under a general devise of lands, especially if there were no other lands to satisfy the devise, a circumstance, however, which would be immaterial, in regard to a will which is governed by the existing law.

Fact of the mortgagee being in possession.

“In Martin d. Weston v. Mowlin (l), Lord Mansfield held that a copyhold estate, of which the testator was in possession as mortgagee, did not pass under a devise of all his ‘lands, tenements and hereditaments, within and parcel of the manor of W.,’ the surrender to the use of the will referring to the property as subject to a condition of redemption and resurrender; and the will containing a recital that the mortgagor stood indebted to him, and (g) Att.-Gen. v. Meyrick, 2 Ves. sen. 44.

(h) 1 Pow. Mortg. Cov. Ed. 409.

(i) Clarke v. Abbot, 2 Eq. Ab. 606, Barn. Ch. Rep. 457. In How v. Vignes, 1 Ch. Rep. 32, this fact, though not stated, seems very probable, as the object of the suit was to foreclose.

(j) Woodhouse v. Meredith, 1 Mer. 450.

(k) But now see stat. 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 7.

(l) 2 Burr. 939.

CHAP. XXVI.

giving her time for payment of the debt. It appeared, moreover, that the testator was seised of other lands, also surrendered to the use of his will, in the manor of W.

Beneficial interest in mortgage, held to pass under devise of lands in K.

"In Woodhouse v. Meredith (m), Sir W. Grant held that the testator's beneficial interest in leasehold property at K., of which he was in possession as mortgagee, and of which an assignment in trust for sale had been executed to him, passed under a devise of all his freehold, copyhold and leasehold messuages, farms, lands and tenements whatsoever and wheresoever, in the county of H. and the town of K., to various limitations, the testator having no other than the mortgaged lands at K., though the will contained a subsequent devise of all estates vested in him as mortgagee or trustee, but which was satisfied by other lands of which the testator was seised as mortgagee. The same observation applied to the bequest of securities for money, which also occurred (n).

Cases suggested in which devise of mortgage-estate would not carry beneficial interest.

"It is observable that the M.R. considered, from the nature of the limitations and provisions in the will, (which consisted of successive estates for life, with an estate interposed in trustees to preserve contingent remainders,) that, if the property passed at all, it was the beneficial interest, and not the mere legal estate, which was disposed of.

"But cases might be suggested in which an express devise of lands, even by a mortgagee in possession, would not carry the beneficial interest; for instance, if the will contained a specific bequest of the mortgage debt, which would show that the devisee of the land was intended to be a trustee for the legatee. But it is clear that a general bequest of mortgages or securities for money would not have such effect (o), for, as such a bequest would pass after-acquired property of this description, the testator is not necessarily presumed to have any specific subject in his contemplation when he makes his will."

An intention not to give the devisee any interest in the mortgage debt may also appear from other circumstances. Thus in Re Clowes (p) a testator who was absolutely entitled to a freehold estate specifically devised it to H. Afterwards he sold the estate and took a reconveyance from the purchaser by way of mortgage

(m) 1 Mer. 450. This decision was followed in Re Carter, [1900] 1 Ch. 801.

(n) But as to which see next note.

(o) See Mr. Justice Le Blanc's judgment in Doe d. Freestone v. Parratt, 5 T. R. 652 ["Le Blanc" appears to be a misprint for "Lawrence"]; and Lord Eldon's in Thompson v. Lawley, 2 B. & P. at p. 314.

(p) [1893] 1 Ch. 214.

for securing part of the purchase money: it was held that the mortgage debt did not pass by the specific devise to H. The decision of the Court of Appeal seems to have turned, not on the fact that the testator was not a mortgagee in possession (q), but on the doctrine of revocation by change of estate, laid down in Moor v. Raisbeck (r).

The decision in Re Carter (s) seems to have been based partly on the fact that the testator was in possession as mortgagee, and partly on the general principle that a devise of specific property is intended to pass all the interest of the testator in the property. But these considerations are not necessarily conclusive. Thus in Bowen v. Barlow (t) an owner in fee demised a piece of land for a term of years to B., who assigned the term by way of mortgage to the lessor, and afterwards built four houses on the land. The lessor then made his will, and thereby devised his four freehold houses specifically on one set of trusts, and bequeathed his personal estate on another set; at his death he was in possession as mortgagee; and it was held that the mortgage debt was a distinct subject from the reversion, and did not pass by the devise, but by the bequest of personal estate. That the debt was charged on the term, that the term was merged at law, and that the testator had entered into possession, were considered immaterial facts, so long as the equity of redemption remained unbarred.

If a testator expressly devises "all his estate and interest" in certain lands, this may be sufficient to pass his beneficial interest in a sum charged on the lands (u). Devise of "estate and interest."

It has been suggested that sect. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, has altered the general rule above stated (v), on the ground that a testator cannot now dispose by will of the legal estate in land of which he is mortgagee, and that consequently by a devise of the land he must mean his beneficial interest in it, namely the mortgage debt (w). The argument attributes to testators an acquaintance with the details of real property law which they do not always possess.

"And here it may be observed," continues Mr. Jarman (x), (q) As suggested by Cozens-Hardy, J., in Re Carter, supra.

(r) 12 Sim. 123; ante p. 163.

(s) [1900] 1 Ch. 801.

(t) L. R. 11 Eq. 454; 8 Ch. 171.

(u) Mackesy v. Mackesy, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 511. In that case the testator was the owner of the land subject to a mortgage debt, vested in trustees, to which he was beneficially entitled. See also Kilkelly v. Powell, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 457.

(v) Ante p. 966.

(w) See Re Clowes, supra. Coote on Mortgages, 866.

(x) First ed. p. 636.

CHAP. XXVI.

Devises of land contracted to be sold, held not to pass benefit of the contract.

Passes by word "mortgages."

Charge when extinguished by union of character of mortgagor and mortgagee.

"that a devise by a testator to his wife of an estate which he had lately contracted to sell to A.' has been held to be a mere devise of the legal estate, to enable her to carry the contract into execution, and did not entitle the devisee to the purchase-money (y).

"Upon the whole, it is clear that the proposition which states that an express devise of mortgaged lands will carry the beneficial interest in the mortgage, must be received with some qualification.

"In the case of Wilkinson v. Merryland (z) it was doubted whether the benefit of a mortgage would pass by the word 'mortgages,' collocated with other personal chattels; but the affirmative is now perfectly clear (a).

As to the Extinction of the Charge by Union of Character of Mortgagor and Mortgagee.—"In conclusion of this branch of the subject, it may be observed, that where a person having a mortgage or other charge upon lands, becomes himself entitled to the inheritance of the lands so charged, a question frequently arises between his representatives, whether the charge is to be considered as subsisting for the benefit of his personal representatives, or is merged for the benefit of the person taking the land. The rule in these cases is, that if it be indifferent to the party in whom this union of interest occurs, whether the charge be kept on foot or not, it will be extinguished in equity by force of the presumed intention (b), unless an act declaratory of a contrary intention, and consequently repelling such presumption, be done by him (c). But if a purpose beneficial to the owner can be answered by keeping the charge on foot, as if he be an infant, so that the charge would (under the old law allowing infants to bequeath personal estate) be disposable by him, though the land would not (d); or a beneficial use might have been made of it against a subsequent incumbrancer (e), or the other creditors of the person from whom (y) Knollys v. Shepherd cited in Wall v. Bright, 1 Jac. & W. at p. 499, stated ante p. 731.

(z) Cro. Car. 447; Sir W. Jones, 380, stated next chapter.

(a) Att.-Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 714; Dicks v. Lambert, 4 Ves. 725.

(b) As to the implication of such an intention from the terms of the will, see Re Nunn's Estate, 23 L.R. Ir. 286.

(c) Price v. Gibson, 2 Ed. 115; Donisthorpe v. Porter, ib. 162, Amb. 600; Lord Compton v. Oxenden, 2 Ves. jun. 261; Johnson v. Webster, 4 D. M. & G. 474; Price v. John, [1905] 1 Ch. 744; Re Duke of Somerset, 55 L. T. 753; Re Hole, [1906] 1 Ch. 673; Re Gibbon, [1909] 1 Ch. 367; Swinfen v.

Swinfen (No. 3), 29 Bea. 199; Re Butlin's Estate, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 159. The union of interest must happen in the lifetime of the party, and no other person must at that time have any interest in the charge, Tucker v. Loveridge, 1 Gif. 377, 2 De G. & J. 650; Wilkes v. Collin, L. R., 8 Eq. 338. General powers to appoint the land and the charge, which (in default) are respectively limited to the heirs and next of kin of the donee, do not produce the required union, Clifford v. Clifford, 9 Hare, 675.

(d) Thomas v. Kemys, 2 Vern. 348, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 269, pl. 9.

(e) Gwillim v. Holland, July 29, 1741, cit. 2 Ves. jun. 263.

the party derived the onerated estate (f); in these, and similar cases, equity will consider the charge as subsisting, although it may have become merged by mere operation of law (g). And the same rule obtains in favour of the creditors of the person in whom these interests centre (h). So, if mesne estates intervene between the charge and the estate of inheritance of the person entitled to it, the charge will subsist " (i).

II.—Operation of General Devise on Legal Estate.—We now proceed to consider the question of a general devise on real estate vested in the testator as mortgagee or trustee. The important changes in the law as to the devolution of trust and mortgage estates which have been successively introduced by the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, in cases of deaths of testators after the 6th August, 1874, and the 31st December, 1881, respectively, render it convenient to consider separately different classes of cases which may arise according to the date of the testator's death.

Operation of general devise on legal estate.

First, as regards testators who died before the 7th August, 1874, the date on which the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, came into operation (j), the rule at length established after much fluctuation of authority (k) is, that such property will pass

Old law.

(f) Forbes v. Moffatt, 18 Ves. 384; Lord Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Y. & C. C. 688; Davis v. Barrett, 14 Beav. 542; see Wigzell v. Wigzell, 2 S. & St. 364; Anderson v. Pignet, L. R., 8 Ch. 180. The relative values of the estate and such other charges will not generally be inquired into; but semb. the charges must be substantial, per Wood, V.-C., Richards v. Richards, Johns. at p. 767.

(g) See Sir W. Grant's judgment in Forbes v. Moffatt. Those cases, where the charge and the inheritance become united by descent or devise, are to be distinguished from Mocatta v. Murgatroyd, 1 P. W. 393; Toulmin v. Steere, 3 Mer. 210, as to which, see 1 Ll. & Go. 251, 1 D. M. & G. 244, and Adams v. Angell, 5 Ch. D. 634.

(h) Powell v. Morgan, cit. 2 Vern. 208. See also Lord Northington's judgment in Donisthorpe v. Porter, 2 Ed. 162; Pears v. Weightman, 2 Jur. N. S. 586.

(i) Wyndham v. Earl of Egremont, Amb. 753. As to the evidence required to rebut the presumption of extinguishment, see Tyruwhitt v. Tyruwhitt, 32 Beav. 244, and cases there cited. And as to the effect of a declaration against merger, see Re Gibbon, [1909] 1 Ch. 367.

(j) Although the effect of recent legislation is to render obsolete as regards persons dying after 1881 (with certain exceptions which will hereafter be considered) the decisions discussed in the following pages, yet these decisions are still of practical importance as affecting titles in which questions may arise respecting the devolution of trust and mortgage estates generally of persons who died before that date, and also as affecting copyholds and customary lands vested in persons who have died since that date as trustees or mortgagees. It has therefore been thought advisable to reproduce here in a slightly abbreviated form the elaborate discussion of this difficult and complicated question, which was contained in previous editions of this Work. [Note by Mr. Robbins, in the 5th ed. of this work.]

(k) See contra, the decisions of Lord Loughborough, Att.-Gen. v. Buller, 5 Ves. 339; and of Lord Eldon, Ex parte Brettell, 6 Ves. 577; but see the observations of Lord Eldon on these decisions in Braybroke v. Inskip, 8 Ves. at p. 434.

CHAP. XXVI.

under a general devise of lands, unless a contrary intention can be collected from the testator's expressions, or from the purposes or limitations to which he has devoted the subject of disposition. And it is clear that the circumstance of there being other property to which the devise is applicable, is no ground of exclusion.

Legal estate held to pass.

Thus, in an early case (l), it is laid down, that if a man had but the trust of a mortgage of lands in D. and had other lands in D., by a devise of all his lands in D. the trust would pass.

Ex parte Sergison.

In Ex parte Sergison (m), a mortgagee in fee devised all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate, both real and personal, and of what nature or kind soever and wheresoever, not theretofore specifically given, devised and bequeathed, to A., his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, for ever, on the side of his mother, and appointed A. executor. A. was an infant. On petition for an order for him to convey under stat. 7 Anne, c. 19, Sir R. P. Arden, M.R., was of opinion that the legal estate in the mortgaged lands passed by the devise, though, as the infant was executor, and therefore entitled to the money, he could not compel him to convey. Lord Loughborough also inclined to think that the estate passed by the devise; and it was stated at the bar that this corresponded with the opinion of Lord Northington and Lord Thurlow, who had overruled Lord Hardwicke's dictum in Casborne v. Scarfe (n). In the principal case, however, the heir, under the circumstances, was ordered to convey; the L.C. observing, that the infant devisee, when he was of age, might join, which would give a title quâcunque viâ.

Opinions of Lord Northington, Lord Thurlow, and Sir R. P. Arden.

Rule finally established in Lord Braybroke v. Inskip.

The present doctrine was finally established by Lord Braybroke v. Inskip (o), where real estate having been devised to trustees, upon trust to pay debts, and settle the estates to certain uses; the question was, whether the estate passed by the will of (l) Littleton's Case, 2 Vent. 351. See also Marlow v. Smith, 2 P. W. 198.

(m) 4 Ves. 147.

(n) 1 Atk. 603. "But it has been suggested that his Lordship may have referred to the beneficial interest (see Mr. Sanders's note); and, perhaps, in regard even to the legal estate, the position is not erroneous, as a devise, in the terms supposed, would confer only a life estate; and it has never been held that a general devise conferring less than a fee would operate to pass estates vested in the testator as mortgagee or trustee. Such a question of course, is less likely to arise now than under a will made or republished since 1837, an unrestricted devise will carry the fee." (Note by Mr. Jarman.) In Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576, it was held that the legal estate of lands vested in a surviving trustee during the life of a married woman, passed by a devise of "all the lands and hereditaments vested in him as trustee or mortgagee in fee," the question apparently being whether the words, "in fee" referred as well to "trustee" as to "mortgagee."

(o) 8 Ves. 417

the heir of the surviving trustee, who gave and devised all his real estates whatsoever and wheresoever, unto his wife G., her heirs and assigns, for ever, and gave all his personal estate to her; and appointed his said wife and B. executrix and executor. The heirs at law were two infants and a married woman. Lord Eldon held that the legal estate passed by the will. After reviewing the cases, he stated the rule to be, that trust estates would pass under a general devise, unless it could be collected, from expressions in the will, or purposes or objects of the testator, that he did not mean that they should pass. In this case he observed there was no one circumstance to cut down the effect of the devise.

CHAP. XXVI.

Trust estates will pass under a general devise containing nothing inconsistent.

So, in Bainbridge v. Lord Ashburton (p), where the surviving trustee under a will, after devising certain specific real estates to various persons, gave and devised all his real estates, not therein-before otherwise disposed of, unto his godson, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, according to the tenure and nature thereof respectively, to and for his and their own use and benefit. It was held that the trust estate passed under the devise.

Bainbridge v. Lord Ashburton.

It is clear that the fact of the testator having reserved to the devisee a power of appointment, does not constitute a ground for excluding trust estates (q).

Reservation of power of appointment.

The converse of the rule established by the preceding cases is equally clear; namely, that if the property comprised in the general devise be subjected to the payment of debts, legacies, annuities, or any other species of charge (r), or the will contain any limitations or provisions to which it cannot be supposed that the testator intended to subject property not beneficially his own, as uses in strict settlement (s), or executory

What will exclude trust estates from a general devise.

Charges of debts, executory limitations, &c., will exclude trust estates.

(p) 2 Y. & C. 347; and see Sharpe v. Sharpe, 17 L. J. Ch. 384, 12 Jur. 598; Langford v. Auger, 4 Hare, 313.

(q) Ex parte Shaw, 8 Sim. 159; but qu. was any power created in that case?

(r) Wynne v. Littleton, 2 Ch. Rep. 51, 1 Vern. 3, (but as to this see 1 Cov. Pow. Mortg. 414); Roe d. Reade v. Reade, 8 T. R. 118; Ex parte Morgan, 10 Ves. 101; Rackham v. Siddall, 16 Sim. 297, 1 Mac. & G. 607; Hope v. Liddell, 21 Beav. 183; Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Company, 9 Q. B. 469, 3 H. L. Ca. 794; Re Bellis's Trusts, 5 Ch. D. 504. The foregoing are cases of trust estates. The following are cases of mortgage, Duke of Leeds v. Munday, 3 Ves. 348; Re Horsfall, McClell. & Y. 292; Doe d. Roylance v. Lightfoot, 8 M. & Wels. 553; Re Packman and Moss, 1 Ch. D. 214. As to Re Stevens' Will, L. R., 6 Eq. 597, vide post, p. 977. In Re Brown and Sibly, 3 Ch. D. 156, Malins, V.-C., dissented from Re Packman and Moss, supra.

(s) Thompson v. Grant, 4 Mad. 438; Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256; overruling Ex parte Bowes, cited 1 Atk. 605, n., by Sanders, where Lord Hardwicke held that a general devise of real estate in S. K. and M. and elsewhere in England to certain uses, under which an infant was then entitled to an estate tail, passed the legal estate in lands of which the deviser was mortgagee in fee; see Burdus v. Dixon, 4 Jur. N. S. 967, where the testator had attempted to make the mortgaged limitations (t) ; or a trust for sale (u) ; or for a charity (v), or for the separate use of a married woman (w), or for an unascertained class (x) ; or words of severance making the devisees tenants in common, with a clause of accruer amongst them (y), the mortgage or trust lands will not pass. And considering the inconvenience arising from the devolution of a trust estate in shares, it would seem that the words of severance alone are sufficient to exclude it from a general devise (z).

CHAP. XXVI.

And it is wholly immaterial whether the testator has other lands to which the devise can be applied or not ; for in these cases the Courts have not adopted the principle applicable to reversions, that, where there are other lands, to which the inconsistent limitations can be referred, they apply exclusively to those lands, reddendo singula singulis (a).

Devise confined to mortgages in which the devisor had the beneficial interest.

In Ex parte Morgan (b), Lord Eldon held, that lands of which the testator had merely the legal estate, as heir at law of the preceding mortgagee, did not pass under a devise to trustees of “all such real estates as are now vested in me by way of mortgage, the better to enable them my said trustees, and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of such survivor, to recover, get in and receive the principal monies and interest, which may be due thereon.”

As Mr. Jarman remarks (c) : “The rule under consideration, of course, does not deny the power of a testator to limit estates vested in him as mortgagee or trustee to uses in strict settlement, or in any other manner equally inconsistent with a due regard to the testator’s duty as mortgage creditor or trustee : it merely refuses to see an intention so to do in a general devise. Should a testator unequivocally devise an estate vested in him as mortgagee or trustee in the manner suggested, the intention must prevail ; and it would be left to the persons who may become damnified property his own, by a pretended sale to another, who was a trustee for the testator, and the legal estate was held to pass notwithstanding the uses and trusts.

(t) Per Lord Eldon, Braybroke v. Inskip, 8 Ves. at p. 434.

(u) Ex parte Marshall, 9 Sim. 555.

(v) Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256.

(w) Lindsell v. Thacker, 12 Sim. 178.

See, however, per Kindersley, V.-C., Lewis v. Mathews, L. R., 2 Eq. at p. 180.

(x) Re Finney’s Estate, 3 Gif. 465.

(y) Thirtle v. Vaughan, 2 W. R. 632, 24 L. T. 5 ; Martin v. Laverton, L.

R., 9 Eq. 563 ; Re Franklyn, W. N. 1888, p. 217.

(z) Martin v. Laverton, L. R., 9 Eq. at p. 568, per Malins, V.-C. Ex parte Whiteacre, 1 Sand. Uses, 359, n., is sometimes cited contra, but the devise contained the words “mortgages and securities,” to which vide infra.

(a) 5 Ch. D. p. 508, notwithstanding 3 Ch. D. 156.

(b) 10 Ves. 101. And see Re Smith’s Estate, 4 Ch. D. 70 ; Re Morley’s Will, 10 Hare, 293.

(c) First ed. p. 646.

by such a proceeding, to obtain satisfaction out of the estate of the deceased testator " (d).

Whether lands held by a testator as mortgagee will, in cases not affected by recent legislation, pass by the words "mortgages" or "securities for money," has been the subject of much controversy. The affirmative was supposed to have been decided in the early case of Crips v. Grysil (e); and although on an examination of the record (f), it appeared that the will contained, in addition to the word "mortgages," other expressions more unequivocally applying to the land, yet the ratio decidendi was that the word "mortgages" made a good devise of the lands. And it is now settled that the words "mortgages," "securities for money," and similar expressions, will comprise the entire benefit of the mortgage security (including the inheritance in the lands (g)), unless a contrary intention appears by the context; and that the fact of those words being found among terms descriptive exclusively of personal estate (h), and followed by a limitation to executors and administrators only, and not to heirs, or by a charge of debts and legacies (i), or a trust for sale (j), or for several as tenants in common (k), will not affect the construction. The broad principle is, that the testator meant to substitute the object of his bounty in his own place as mortgagee, and to enable him to enforce payment of the mortgage money by giving him the legal estate in the mortgaged lands (l).

Words
"mortgages" and "securities for money" pass the legal estate.

(d) The reader will remember that such a devise as that above suggested is now inoperative (infra p. 989). In cases governed by the old law, if, after a contract for sale, but before completion, the vendor dies leaving an infant heir, or having, by will executed before the date of the contract, devised the estate to a person incompetent to convey, the vendor's estate will not have to bear the costs of the suit rendered necessary to complete the conveyance, Hanson v. Lake, 2 Y. & C. C. 328; Hinder v. Streeten, 10 Hare, 18, 16 Jur. 650; Re Manchester and Southport Railway Company, 19 Beav. 365; Bannerman v. Clarke, 3 Drew. 632; overruling Prytharch v. Havard, 6 Sim. 9; Midland Counties Railway Company v. Westcomb, 11 Sim. 57; Eastern Counties Railway Company v. Truffnell, 3 Rail. C. 133. But if after contract to sell the vendor execute such a will, the costs of suit will be thrown on his estate, Wortham v. Lord Dacre, 2 K. & J. 437; Purser v. Darby, 4 ib. 41.

(e) Cro. Car. 37.

(f) See 9 B. & Cr. at p. 282.

(g) See Renvoize v. Cooper, 6 Mad. 371; Silberschildt v. Schiott, 3 V. & B. 45, per Sir W. Grant; Re Walker's Estate, 21 L. J. Ch. 674; Knight v. Robinson, 2 K. & J. 503; Rippen v. Priest, 13 C. B. N. S. 308; Garnham v. Skipper, 54 L. T. 940; but the old case of Wilkinson v. Merryland, Cro. Car. 449, is contra.

(h) Renvoize v. Cooper, 6 Mad. 371; Re King's Mortgage, 5 De G. & S. 644.

(i) Re Field, 10 Hare, 414; Re King's Mortgage, 5 De G. & S. 644; Rippen v. Priest, 13 C. B. N. S. 308; Knight v. Robinson, 2 K. & J. 503.

(j) Ex parte Barber, 5 Sim. 451.

(k) Ex parte Whiteacre, Rolls, 22 July, 1807, 1 Sand. Uses and Trusts, 359, n.

(l) The special grounds relied on in Ex parte Barber, 5 Sim. 451, and Mather v. Thomas, 6 Sim. 115, were therefore not essential. Silvester v. Jarman, 10 Pri. 78, and Galliers v. Moss, 9 B. & Cr. 267, are overruled: so is Ex parte

CHAP. XXVI.

Devise "that A. shall receive money on mortgage," or "on securities."

But further, in Doe d. Guest v. Bennett (m), where a testator made his will as follows: "I leave my wife to receive all monies upon mortgages and on notes out at interest, and at her decease I leave my niece to pay my wife's debts and to take all that remains of my property, land or personal property": the Court of Exchequer held that the wife took the legal estate in the mortgaged property.

And in Re Arrowsmith's Trusts (n), a mortgagee in fee devised to a trustee all his real and personal estate in trust, at the death of his wife, to get in all debts owing to him on any security; it was held by K. Bruce and Turner, L.J.J., that the legal estate in the mortgaged property passed to the trustee, that construction being necessary to give full dominion over the mortgaged estate for the purpose of carrying into execution the trusts of the will.

Gift "money on securities."

Sir R. Kindersley, however, held that the legal estate did not pass by a gift of "money in the funds and on securities." He thought Doe v. Bennett was distinguishable; but if it was meant that a legatee who was to receive the money was also to take the legal estate, he could not concur (o). If that principle were to be carried out, it would apply to a case where a testator merely left his personal estate to his executors, it being obviously his intention in that case that they should receive the mortgage money (p). But hitherto the principle has been confined to cases where the intention has been expressed.

Gift of real and personal estates, n trust to sell and get in.

As already stated, a general devise of real estate on trust for sale will not include the legal estate in mortgaged property (q). But where the real and personal estates are devised and bequeathed together, expressly in trust to sell and get in, the trustees cannot execute these trusts as regards the personalty without having dominion over the mortgaged estate; and, though it has never been so held, there is a strong inclination to say that the express trust to sell and get in the personalty, neutralizes the restrictive effect which the trust for sale would otherwise have upon the devise of real estate, and to hold that thus the latter devise carries the mortgaged estate (r).

Gorsett, 19 L. J. Ch. 173, unless it can be distinguished on the ground that the security was in the form of a trust for sale, sed. qu.

(m) 6 Exch. 892.

(n) 27 L. J. Ch. 704.

(o) But see per Grant, M.R., Silberschildt v. Schiott, 3 V. & B. 49.

(p) Re Cantley (or Cautley), 22 L. J. Ch. 391.

(q) Ante, p. 974.

(r) See per Jessel, M.R., Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. at p. 515, and Re Smith's Estate, 4 Ch. D. at p. 72 ("whatever might have been the case if the mortgage money had belonged to the testator in his own right"); and per Shadwell, V.-C., Ex parte Barber, 5 Sim. at p. 455, where however the word "securities" occurred.

Gift of real and personal estate subject to debts.

But a gift of the real and personal estate charged (as in Re Arrowsmith's Trusts) with debts, or charged with debts and legacies, but not aided by express mention of "mortgages," or "securities," nor by an express trust to sell and get in the personalty, will not include the mortgaged estate. Thus, in Doe d. Roylance v. Lightfoot (s), where a mortgagee devised all his real and personal estates after payment of his debts and legacies to A. and B. as tenants in common in fee; it was held, that the legal estate did not pass by the will, on the ground that the testator could not have intended that estates should pass of which he was seised only as mortgagee, but only those which he had power to subject to his debts and legacies, namely, those which were equitably as well as legally his own.

Re Stevens' Will.

A decision which at first sight seems opposed to this was made in Re Stevens' Will (t), where a mortgagee in fee directed all her debts to be paid; she then gave several pecuniary legacies, and as to all the rest and residue of her real and personal estate and effects, she gave the same to J. for her own absolute use and benefit, and appointed other persons executors: Giffard, V.-C., decided that the legal estate passed to J., but the decision seems to have turned on the admissions made during the argument (u).

Since Re Stevens' Will the authority of Doe v. Lightfoot has been fully recognized (v); and in Re Packman and Moss (w), where a mortgagee gave and bequeathed all his property, real and personal, to trustees (whom he appointed executors) upon trust, first, to pay debts, and as to the residue on certain trusts for his wife and children, Sir G. Jessel decided that the legal estate did not pass, on this, among other grounds, that the testator's debts could only be paid out of his own property.

Mortgage terms, when included in a general devise.

Mr. Jarman continues (x): "Hitherto the point of construction under consideration has been viewed in reference to mortgages in fee. With respect to mortgages for terms of years, it is conceived they fall under the principle established by Rose v. Bartlett (y), that leaseholds for years will not, under the old law, pass by a general devise of lands, unless the testator have no freeholds on which it might operate. If there be no such lands, or the will be subject

(s) 8 M. & W. 553. The statement of the devise is taken verbatim from the report. The tenancy in common was not adverted to.

(t) L. R., 6 Eq. 597.

(u) See the examination of the case in the 4th edition of this work, p. 701, and (slightly abbreviated) in the 5th edition, p. 653.

(v) By Jessel, M.R., Re Bellis's Trusts, 5 Ch. D. at p. 509.

(w) 1 Ch. D. 214. See also Re Horsfall, M'C. & Y. 292.

(x) First ed. p. 650.

(y) See ante, p. 962.

CHAP. XXVI.

to the new law, and if the devise contain nothing inconsistent, and there be no specific bequest which will carry the legal interest in the mortgage term, it is clear that such interest will pass under a general devise. The question, however, could hardly arise on the mere legal interest, since it would vest primarily in the executor, or the administrator cum testamento annexo, as part of the testator's personal estate, and it is unlikely that the legatee would claim his assent to the bequest, unless there was ground to contend, that the bequest included the beneficial interest.

Rule as to copyholds.

" Estates of copyhold tenure, held by the testator in the character of mortgagee or trustee, are not distinguishable from freeholds, in regard to the effect of a general devise, whether the will is subject to the old or new law; supposing, of course, that its antiquity is not such as to exempt it from the operation of the act of 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, which first dispensed with the necessity of a surrender to the use of the will, in regard to testators dying after the passing of the act.

As to devises of lands contracted to be sold by testator.

" It has been sometimes a question [under the old law (z)], how far the principle which governs the construction of devises of lands vested in a testator as mortgagee or trustee, applies to property which, belonging to him beneficially, he has contracted to sell; for though in such cases the testator is, in the event of the contract being carried into effect, a trustee for the purchaser, yet, as this may not happen, and consequently the property may remain unconverted, the trust is of a qualified and contingent nature. It has been decided (a), however, that if a testator, after having contracted for the sale of an estate, devises it as, All that his estate called A., which he had contracted to sell, the effect is to vest in the devisee the legal estate only, for the purpose of enabling him to carry the contract into effect for the benefit of the executor, and does not entitle the devisee to the purchase-money. It is conceived, however (though the point did not arise in the case referred to), that if from any circumstances, the contract had proved not to be binding on or had been rescinded by the testator, the devisee would have been entitled to the land, and this (as already hinted) constitutes a difference between the case, and that of a dry mortgage and trust estate, which renders the construction that has been applied to the latter, to a certain extent, inapplicable to the former. Thus, in the case of Wall v.

Difference between a vendor and a mere trustee.

(z) As to the law since 1881, see post, p. 984.

(a) Knollys v. Shepherd, cited 1 J. &

W. 499, Sug. Law of Prop. 223, ante, p. 163.

Bright (b), where a testator, after having contracted for the sale of an estate, devised all his lands to trustees, upon trust to sell, with the usual powers to give discharges to purchasers, Sir T. Plumer, M.R., held, that the contracted for property passed by the devise (c).

“ In this case, the construction adopted by the Court was very convenient, as it enabled the devisees, in performance of the testator’s contract, to convey the estate to the purchaser, which otherwise would have descended to an infant, who, in the then state of the law, could not, even with the aid of the Court of Chancery, have made an effectual conveyance to the purchaser. Still, however, it is to be remembered, that a trust for sale was no less inappropriate to property which had been actually sold, than a devise in strict settlement, or any other such limitations would have been, though, as it confers on the trustees an estate in fee, it happened to be more convenient ; and much of the reasoning of the M.R. would have applied, if the devise had been such as to have rendered it impossible for the devisees, without the aid of the Court (d), to make an effectual conveyance to the purchaser. He does, however, more than once advert to the convenience attending the construction in the particular case ; and the prudent practitioner, knowing the influence which such considerations, whether acknowledged or not, do often exert in questions of this nature, will hesitate too readily to assume the application of the same doctrine to cases in which a different result would follow. Nor, indeed, does it seem to be altogether inconsistent with sound principles of construction, especially that rule which has been the subject of discussion in the present chapter, that the fact of the devise being such as to enable the devisee to carry the testator’s contract into effect or not, should have some weight in determining whether it was intended to apply to the property ” (e).

But, as pointed out by Sir G. Jessel (f), if the contract is a valid one, binding on both parties, and continues such at the time of the vendor’s death, no subsequent event can affect the question ;

Remarks upon Wall
v. Bright.

If the contract is valid at the vendor’s death, he is a trustee.

(b) 1 J. & W. 494.

(c) The lengthy quotation from the M.R.’s judgment given by Mr. Jarman, is omitted, as the question is gradually losing its practical interest.

(d) 1 Will. 4, c. 60.

(e) In such a case the purchase-money would be payable, not to the trustees by virtue of the devise, but to the executors as part of the personal estate of the testator, Eaton v. Sanxter,

6 Sim. 517 ; so that this construction (as was observed by Jessel, M.R., 2 Ch. D. at p. 520) could not be maintained where the proceeds of the real estate and the personal estate were given beneficially to different persons. In Wall v. Bright the personal and real estate were given to the same trustees upon trust for conversion.

(f) 2 Ch. D. at p. 507.

CHAP. XXVI.

*Lysaght v.
Edwards.*

the property is converted, and the vendor is a constructive trustee; not a bare trustee, for he has a beneficial interest left in him, viz. a lien or charge on the estate for the security of the purchase-money (g), but still a trustee. Therefore, where (h) a testator by his will, dated 1873, devised all his real estate to A. and B. on trust to sell, and devised the real estate which at his death might be vested in him as trustee to A., and afterwards entered into a valid contract to sell part of his real estate, it was held by Sir G. Jessel, M.R., that this part passed by the devise of trust estates. He acquiesced in the decision in Wall v. Bright, because, viewing the testator as being entitled to the estate simply as a security for his purchase-money, he thought the trustees could not execute the trusts expressly annexed to the personal estate unless they had the legal estate; but he dissented from Sir T. Plumer's definition of the position of a vendor pending the completion of the contract. The sole question was, did a valid contract exist at the testator's death; if the title proved bad, he agreed there was no conversion and no trust; but that was because in contemplation of equity there was in that case no valid contract (i); but whether the purchaser was able to pay or not was immaterial; if a contract valid at the vendor's death was cancelled for non-payment of the purchase-money after his death, or for any other cause not affecting the original validity of the contract, the conversion was not therefore undone or the consequent trusteeship annulled.

(g) In Goold v. Teague, 5 Jur. N. S. 116, it was held that such a lien did not pass by a bequest of securities for money. But the case is questioned, Sug. V. & P. p. 684. See also per Chitty, J., Callow v. Callow, 42 Ch. D. 550.

(h) Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. 499. In Purser v. Darby, 4 K. & J. 41, the testator, after contracting to sell an estate, specifically devised it, so that, of course, it could not pass by a devise of his mortgage and trust estates contained in another part of the will. But it was said by Wood, V.-C., that he had held—and the decision had been since affirmed—"that where there is merely a constructive and not an express trust, a devise of trust estates does not supersede the necessity of a decree." The decision referred to by the V.-C. appears not to be reported. The meaning of the dictum is supposed by Jessel, M.R., to be only that where a person under disability would take the estate if the contract were not established in a court of equity, there the purchaser cannot safely complete without establishing the validity of the contract by decree: 2 Ch. D. at p. 511. And generally a vesting order will not be made under the Trustee Acts without suit, Re Carpenter, Kay, 418, approved by the Court of Appeal in Re Colling, 32 Ch. D. 333. But it is otherwise where the purchase-money has been paid, Re Cuming, L. R., 5 Ch. 72; Re Crowe's Mortgage, L. R., 13 Eq. 26; Re Russell's Estate, 12 Jur. N. S. 224. In the last case reliance was also placed on the sale being compulsory; sed. qu.

(i) "But assuming the purchaser to know this, he might very well be in doubt whether he had an enforceable title, and might therefore make his will with a dubious aspect." (Note by Mr. Vincent in the 4th edition of this work. "Purchaser" is no doubt a misprint for "vendor.")

CHAP. XXVI.

But where the purchase has been completed by payment of the purchase-money and delivery of possession, though the deed of conveyance has not passed the legal estate, the vendor is in the position of a bare trustee, and there is no difficulty in holding that a general devise of lands by the vendor in a manner inconsistent with his duties as trustee (charged, for instance, with the payment of his debts) will not include the legal estate (k).

Distinction where purchase-money paid and possession given.

As Mr. Jarman points out (l), "Where a mortgage in fee is foreclosed subsequently to the making of a will, it is clear that the equity of redemption so acquired will not pass by a will made before and not republished on or since the 1st of January, 1838; and it has been determined, that the period of foreclosure is the date of the final order of the Court, following default of payment on the day appointed, and not the date of the decree (m). But though the equity of redemption subsequently acquired by foreclosure, will not pass by the will, it is clear that the devise of the legal estate takes effect, notwithstanding the mere acquisition of the equity of redemption, by this or any other means. Where, however, such equity is purchased by the mortgagee, and he and the mortgagor in the usual manner join in conveying the property to a releasee to uses, to prevent dower, for the benefit of the former, the devise, being in a will which is subject to the old law, will be revoked (n).

Effect on devise by mortgagee of subsequent foreclosure.

"In one instance (o) Sir W. Grant held, that an estate devised after foreclosure passed by a description applicable to it only as a mortgage; his Honor thinking that the intention, though inaccurately expressed, appeared upon the whole will to give the interest in the land. And Sir L. Shadwell, V.-C., recently came to the same conclusion, upon the same devise (p). This was simply a question of intention, as the testator might, of course, if he chose, continue to describe it as mortgaged property; and it would pass, unless an intention appeared that the devisee should be entitled only in case it retained its mortgage character. [But a mere general devise of 'all estates whereof he is seised as mortgagee,' by a testator, who afterwards purchases the equity of redemption, shows no such intention. The result here is ademption (q).]

"It is obvious that the question, whether lands are comprised in a general devise, must frequently depend on the fact, whether (k) Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Company, 9 Q. B. 469, 3 H. L. Ca. 794.

(l) First ed. p. 654.

(m) Thompson v. Grant, 4 Mad. 438.

(n) Ante, p. 161.

(o) Silberschildt v. Schiott, 3 V. & B. 45.

(p) Le Gros v. Cockerell, 5 Sim. 384.

(q) Yardley v. Holland, L. R., 20 Eq. 428.

CHAP. XXVI.

Inquiry whether equity of redemption be barred, material, when.

As to mortgages in fee :

— mortgages for years.

the testator had or had not at the time acquired the equity of redemption by length of possession and non-recognition of any adverse title (r). A question of this kind occurred on the will of Sir George Downing (s) : and it was held, that lands comprised in a certain old mortgage in fee, purchased by the testator, passed under a general devise : it being considered, that from the length of possession, under the circumstances, a release of the equity of redemption was to be presumed (t).

“ With respect to mortgages for years the question would be somewhat different ; the point, if material at all, being, whether the equity of redemption was acquired, not at the date of the will, but at the testator’s decease ; since they would pass under a bequest of property of that denomination, to which they belonged at the latter period. Thus, suppose a will to contain a bequest of mortgages to A., and of leaseholds generally to B., a mortgage for years, which was redeemable at the date of the will, and which would at that period have passed under the former bequest, having become, by continued possession in the lifetime of the testator, or by express contract, irredeemable, would, by this change in the nature of the property, pass under the bequest of the leaseholds. Such, it may be collected, was the opinion of Lord Eldon in Att.-Gen. v. Vigor (u) ; and it seems necessarily to result from the acknowledged principle, that a general bequest of chattels of a particular species, carries all the chattels of that kind, which the testator is possessed of at the time of his decease. And the same principle, of course, would apply even to mortgages in fee, if the will containing the devise in question were made or republished on or since the 1st of January, 1838.”

Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874.

Secondly, as to trust or mortgage estates vested in persons who died between the 7th of August, 1874, and the 1st of January, 1882, when the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, came into operation. By the Vendor and Purchaser

(r) Now see stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 28, and 1 Vict. c. 28 ; 2 Hayes’s Introd., 5th ed. 275 and 282 ; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 7.

(s) Att.-Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 714, 5 ib. 300 ; Att.-Gen. v. Vigor, 8 Ves. 256. See also Burdus v. Dixon, 4 Jur. N. S. 967, ante, p. 973, n. (s).

(t) In Re Loveridge, Drayton v. Loveridge, [1902] 2 Ch. 859, and Re Loveridge, Pearce v. Marsh, [1904] 1

Ch. 518, the question arose on two successive intestacies. At the death of the mortgagee the equity of redemption was not statute barred, and it was held that the land passed as personalty to his next of kin ; the statutory period expired during the lifetime of one of the next of kin, and it was held that his moiety of the land descended to his co-heiresses.

(u) 8 Ves. at p. 276.

Act, 1874, it is enacted (sect. 4) that the legal personal representative of a mortgagee of freeholds, or of copyholds to which the mortgagee has been admitted, may, on payment of all sums secured by the mortgage, convey or surrender the mortgaged estate, whether the mortgage be in form an assurance subject to redemption or an assurance upon trust; and by sect. 5 (which applies to deaths occurring between the 7th of August, 1874 and the 1st of January, 1876) it is enacted that upon the death of a bare trustee of any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament of which such trustee was seised in fee simple, such hereditament shall vest like a chattel real in the legal personal representative from time to time of such trustee. But this section is repealed by the Land Transfer Act, 1875, s. 48, and in lieu thereof it is enacted that, as from the 1st of January, 1876, upon the death of a bare trustee, intestate as to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament of which he was seised in fee simple, such hereditament shall vest like a chattel real in the legal personal representative from time to time of such trustee.

Land Transfer Act, 1875, s. 48.

Effect of the acts: as to mortgagees;

as to trustees,

Who is a "bare" trustee?

As regards a mortgagee, the power to convey or surrender under sect. 4 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, is confined to the single case of payment of the debt; it does, not enable the legal personal representative to convey or surrender in case of a transfer (v); nor does it apply to the exercise of a power of sale in the mortgage deed (w). The effect of the mortgagee's will on the legal estate may therefore still come in question. As regards trust estates, the act of 1875 applies only when a bare trustee dies intestate. His legal personal representative takes his estate, and not merely (like the representative of a mortgagee) power to convey it. If there is no representative, the estate descends in the meantime to the heir (x). "Bare trustee" is not a term of art, and its exact meaning in the sections above quoted has not been finally determined, but the better opinion seems to be that it is intended to exclude a trustee with active duties which have not been performed, and the performance of which has not been effectually dispensed with. It would therefore apply to a trustee who has no other duty than to convey the trust estate at the cestui que trust's direction (y).

(v) Re Brooks' Mortgage, 46 L. J. Ch. 865; Re Spradbery's Mortgage, 14 Ch. D. 514.

(w) Re White's Mortgage, 29 W. R. 820.

(x) Christie v. Ovington, 1 Ch. D. 279.

(y) Per Hall, V.-C., 1 Ch. D. at p. 281; see also Re Cunningham and Frayling, [1891] 2 Ch. 567; but Jessel, M.R., doubted whether a trustee without interest was not a bare trustee, although he had active duties to perform, Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, 9 Ch. D. 582. See Dart, V. & P.; Williams, V. & P. 181 n.

CHAP. XXVI.

Conveyancing
Act, 1881,
s. 30.

The law with regard to the devolution of trust and mortgage estates, as regards persons dying after the 31st of December, 1881, has been put on an entirely new footing by the 30th section of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which enacts as follows:—“(1) Where an estate or interest of inheritance, or limited to the heir as special occupant, in any tenements or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, is vested on any trust, or by way of mortgage, in any person solely, the same shall, on his death, notwithstanding any testamentary disposition, devolve to and become vested in his personal representatives or representative from time to time, in like manner as if the same were a chattel real vesting in them or him; and accordingly all the like powers for one only of several joint personal representatives, as well as for a single personal representative, and for all the personal representatives together, to dispose of and otherwise deal with the same, shall belong to the deceased's personal representatives or representative from time to time, with all the like incidents, but subject to all the like rights, equities, and obligations, as if the same were a chattel real vesting in them or him; and, for the purposes of this section, the personal representatives for the time being of the deceased, shall be deemed in law his heirs and assigns within the meaning of all trusts and powers (z). (2) Sect. 4 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and sect. 48 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875, are hereby repealed. (3) This section, including the repeals therein, applies only in cases of death after the commencement of this Act.”

Effect of these enactments.

The Conveyancing Act, 1881, came into operation on the 1st of January, 1882, and inasmuch as sect. 30 and the repeals thereby effected apply only in cases of death on or after that date, it follows that, as regards deaths before that date, sect. 4 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, remains in force. Thus, in the case of a sole mortgagee who died between the 7th of August, 1874, and the 31st of December, 1881, both dates inclusive, his personal representatives have still power to convey the legal estate in the mortgaged property, but, until they exercise the power, the legal estate remains vested in the heir or devisee.

Where a sole trustee or mortgagee has by his will appointed executors, they are able under the new law to convey before probate the legal estate in all the trust or mortgaged hereditaments, except customary or copyhold hereditaments to which their testator had been admitted (a). For executors derive their title under the will and not by virtue of the probate, which is merely the proof of their title. And if all the executors should die after such conveyance, but without having proved the will, their act will stand good. Their title will, in such a case, be sufficiently proved by letters of administration of the estate of their testator with the will annexed thereto (b).

(z) As to the effect of these words, see Chap. XXIV., ante, p. 935.

CHAP. XXVI.

But a question of some importance may arise, where a sole trustee or mortgagee has died intestate or without having appointed executors of his will, as to where the legal estate is vested under the present law pending the grant of letters of administration. This question was raised by Sir J. Pearson, J., in Re Pilling's Trusts (c), but its decision was, under the circumstances, rendered unnecessary; his Lordship, however, inclined to the opinion that the words of the statute seemed to indicate an intention to exclude the heir altogether. It would at all events seem clear that the heir cannot convey, and the proper course, where there is no representative of a deceased sole trustee, is to obtain an order vesting the property in new trustees for such estate as was vested in the deceased trustee at the time of his death (d).

Where there is no personal representative.

Inconvenience may also be caused by a testator who is sole surviving trustee of the will of A., attempting by his will to appoint special executors for the purpose of executing the trusts of A.'s will (e).

Devolution of trusts and powers.

The effect of the section on the devolution of trusts and powers is considered in Chapter XXIV. and in the next section of this chapter.

General and special executors.

Lands of copyhold or customary tenure were originally within sect. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (f), but the Copyhold Act, 1887, enacted that it should not apply to any such land vested in a trustee as tenant on the Court rolls. The act of 1887 was repealed and re-enacted by the Copyhold Act, 1894 (see sect. 88). The result, it seems, is that in the case of a sole trustee who was admitted to land of copyhold or customary tenure, and died between Copyholds to which trustee has been admitted.

(a) Post.

(b) Wentw. Off. Ex. 82; Brazier v. Hudson, 8 Sim. 67; see also Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Salk. 299.

(c) 26 Ch. D. at p. 433.

(d) Re Rackstraw's Trusts, 33 W. R. 559; Re Williams' Trusts, 36 Ch. D. 231; Fairholme v. Kennedy, 24 L. R.Ir. 498. Administration, limited to the trust property, may be granted: In bonis Builer, [1898] P. 9; In bonis Ratcliffe, [1899] P. 110.(e) Re Parker's Trusts, [1894] 1 Ch. 707.(f) Re Hughes, [1884] W. N. 53; Hall v. Bromley, 35 Ch. D. 642.

CHAP. XXVI.

31st of December, 1881, and the 16th of September, 1887, the land was by the Copyhold Act, 1887, divested out of the personal representative and revested in the customary heir, or devisee of trust estates, unless in the meantime, a conveyance had been made by the personal representative (g). In the case of a sole trustee, who has been admitted, dying since the 16th of September, 1887, the land passes to his customary heir or devisee as if sect. 30 had not been enacted.

Where trustee has not been admitted.

But it seems that where a sole trustee dies without having been admitted, sect. 30 applies to the right of admittance, and that it vests in his personal representative under that section (h).

Devise of copyholds held in trust.

It follows that where a sole trustee has been admitted, he can devise the copyholds if he so desires. Whether the devisee can execute the trust is another matter (i). Sometimes a testator devises his trust copyholds to the use of such persons as his trustees shall, within twenty-one years after his death, by deed appoint, and in default of and until such appointment, he devises them to his trustees (j).

Incorporeal hereditaments.

It will be noticed that sect. 30 applies to incorporeal hereditaments.

Completion of contracts for sale of realty.

The provisions of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 4, with reference to the completion of a contract for the sale of realty where the vendor has died before completion, have been already referred to (k).

Land Transfer Act, 1897.

It seems clear that the provisions of Part I. of the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (l), do not affect land which is vested in a person as sole trustee, and that it devolves to his personal representatives, not under that act, but under sect. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 : for in the first place, the Land Transfer Act, 1897, is evidently only intended to apply to land which can be disposed of by will, and in the second place, land which devolves to personal representatives under that act is to be held by them as trustees for the persons "beneficially entitled thereto."

(g) Re Mills' Trusts, 37 Ch. D. 312 ; 40 Ch. D. 14.

(h) Wolstenholme, Conv. and S. L. Acts, notes to section 30.

(i) Post, p. 987, and Chap. XXIV.

(j) Pridaux, Prec. 14th edition, vol. ii. p. 538. As to the object and effect of such a devise, see Hayes and Jarman's Concise Forms of Wills, 8th edition, p. 121 n., where reference is made to Flack v. Downing College, 17 Jur. 697, Glass v. Richardson, 2 D. M. & G. 658, and to an article by Mr. George Sweet in 17 Jur. pt. 2, p. 274, criticizing the decision in Flack v. Downing College. See also Sol. J. vol. 32, pp. 556, 674, 690.

(k) Ante, p. 163.

(l) Ante, p. 64.

III.—Whether Trust can be performed by Devisee of Trust Estate.

The first edition of this work contained some observations by Mr. Jarman (m) on the case, then recently decided, of Cooke v. Crawford (n), in which Shadwell, V.-C., decided that where land was devised to A., B., and C. upon trust that they or the survivors or survivor of them, or the heirs of the survivor, should sell, a devisee of the survivor could not execute the trust: the survivor ought, as the V.-C. pointed out, to have allowed the land to descend to his heir, who could have executed the trust. Mr. Jarman thought that the case contradicted previous opinions and practice, and went “to establish a rule most inconvenient in its operation” (o).

Devisee of trust estate held unable to make a title to a purchaser.

In Osborne to Rowlett (p), Jessel, M.R., also disapproved of the decision, holding that where real estate is devised to trustees and their heirs in trust for sale, the trust should be considered as annexed, not to the person, but to the fee simple estate taken by the trustees, so that the trust can be executed by the devisees of trust estates of the surviving trustee; and he treated Cooke v. Crawford as overruled. But in Re Morton and Hallett (q), James and Baggallay, L.JJ., said that they were not prepared to dissent from Cooke v. Crawford, and it still applies to cases not within sect. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

In commenting on Cooke v. Crawford, Mr. Jarman objected to any distinction being made between cases in which assigns are mentioned, and those in which they are not, and he expressed the wish (r), that “instead of adopting any such distinction, the Courts would establish the general rule, that trusts for sale and other trusts relating to real estate, and which are not specially restricted to the trustee personally, but extend to his representatives, should be held to devolve to every person to whom the

Mr. Jarman's theory.

(m) First ed. vol. ii. pp. 713 seq.

(n) 13 Sim. 91, where Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264, and Townsend v. Wilson, 1 B. & Ald. 608; 3 Mad. 261, are referred to. In the former case it was held that a trust for sale vested in A. and his heirs could not be executed by an assignee of the heir of A., i.e., a person to whom the heir in his life-time had conveyed the estate. But Lord Langdale, M.R., drew a distinction between such an assignment and a devise.

(o) First ed. vol. ii. p. 717. See also Dauids. Prec. iv. 53 n.

(p) 13 Ch. D. 774. The M.R. went through the authorities, including Macdonald v. Walker, 14 Bea. 556;

Wilson v. Bennett, 5 De G. & Sm. 475; Hall v. May, 3 K. & J. 585, and Stevens v. Austen, 3 E. & E. 685. The case of Beasley v. Wilkinson, 13 Jur. 649, does not throw any light on the question. These cases are stated and criticized in earlier editions of this work.

(q) 15 Ch. D. 143. See also the remarks of Stirling, J., in Re Rumney and Smith, [1897] 2 Ch. at p. 356; Lewin on Trusts; Williams, V. & P. 281, citing Crewe v. Dicken, 4 Ves. 97; Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27, 46, 47. But as to this latter case see Re Smith, [1904] 1 Ch. 139, post.

(r) First ed. vol. ii. p. 716.

CHAP. XXVI.

estate happens to come, either by devise or descent, unless the author of the trust has shewn a special intention, by negative words, to restrict it to the heirs, properly so called, of the trustee. Convenience requires, and principle, it is conceived, allows such a general doctrine; and the Courts might surely adopt it without going the length of enabling a trustee to transfer the trust estate to a third person in his lifetime. This would be a substitution of a stranger for the person nominated by and enjoying the confidence of the author of the trust; that operates only to regulate the transmission of the estate and office when they can no longer be held and exercised by the trustee himself, in short, substitutes the hæres factus for the hæres natus of the trustee. The former is clearly as much within the scope of the confidence of the creator of the trust, as the latter, who is equally unknown to him, and may be connected with the original trustee by only a very remote degree of relationship, and may, moreover, be subject to personal or legal disability. The writer cannot help expressing his hope, if not his conviction, that eventually the more liberal doctrine will be established, notwithstanding the cloud brought upon the prospect by the case of Cooke v. Crawford."

Where trust is annexed to estate.

Mr. Jarman's hope has been realized in some degree, for the general principle now is that "every power given to trustees which enables them to deal with or affect the trust property is primâ facie given them ex officio as an incident of their office, and passes with the office to the holders or holder thereof for the time being: whether a power is so given ex officio or not depends in each case on the construction of the document giving it, but the mere fact that the power is one requiring the exercise of a very wide personal discretion is not enough to exclude the primâ facie presumption, and little regard is now paid to such minute differences as those between 'my trustees,' 'my trustees A. and B.,' and 'A. and B. my trustees'; the testator's reliance on the individuals to the exclusion of the holders of the office for the time being must be expressed in clear and apt language" (s). This doctrine has been acted on in several recent cases (t).

Effect of Conveyancing
Act, 1881.

The effect of sect. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, in cases within the act, is twofold. In the first place, the personal representatives of a sole trustee merely take the place of his heir or devisee, so

(s) Per Farwell, J., in Re Smith, [1904] 1 Ch. p. 144. The question whether a power given to executors is annexed to the office is discussed elsewhere (see Chapter XXIV.).

(t) Ante, Chap. XXIV., p. 935, where the cases of Re Waidanis, 77 L. J. Ch. 12, and Re Routledge's Trusts, [1909] 1 Ch. 280, are referred to.

that if land is given to A. and B. upon trust for sale, the personal representatives of the survivor cannot sell (u), any more than, in a case before 1882, his heir could have sold (v). But if the devise is to A. and B. and their heirs, or their heirs and assigns, then the personal representatives of the survivor can sell (w). In the second place, it is now not only unnecessary, but also useless, to make any devise of trust or mortgage estates, except in the case of lands of copyhold or customary tenure to which the testator has been admitted (x). It has indeed been suggested (y) that the section does not take away the power of devising real estate held in trust, and that such a devise by a sole trustee, to persons other than his executors, would create a difficulty as to the execution of the trust by the executors. It is submitted, however, that the section does take away the power of devising trust estates, and that its effect is to enable the personal representatives of a deceased trustee to exercise all trusts and powers which, under the old law, he could have transmitted to a devisee of his trust estate.

(u) Re Ingleby and Boak 13 L. R. Ir. 326; Re Crunden and Meux, [1909] 1 Ch. 690.

(v) See Re Morton and Hallett, 15 Ch. D. 143.

(w) See Re Pixton and Tong's Contract, 46 W. R. 187, where the devise included the heirs, and the power of sale was exercisable by the trustees for the time being; see Re Crunden and Meux, supra.

(x) Wolstenholme, Conv. & S. L. Acts, 88; Challis & Hood, 100.

(y) Williams, V. & P. 285.

CHAPTER XXVII.

WHAT GENERAL WORDS CARRY REAL ESTATE.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. Preliminary	990	IV. Whether restrained by the Nature of Limitations	1006
II. Words "Estate," "Property," &c., whether restrained by Association with Words descriptive of Personalty	991	V. General untechnical Words held to pass Land ...	1011
III. Whether restrained by Collocation with Executorship	1003	VI. Words descriptive of Personalty only, held, by force of Context, to include Real Estate.....	1015

General words.

Dictum of Kindersley, V.-C., as to meaning of "estate."

I. Preliminary.—If a testator gives all his "estate," or all his "property," these words will primâ facie carry his real estate, for they are sufficient to include both real and personal estate (a).

It is true that in D'Almaine v. Moseley (b), Kindersley, V.-C., qualified the general rule ; he said : " One rule is, that the word estate simply, is sufficient to pass real estate ; but in most cases the word estate is not used simply ; and another rule is, that, supposing that there is nothing in other parts of the will to control the meaning of the gift, the effect of the word estate, coupled with other words, is this : if the other words would without the word estate not be sufficient to pass the whole personal estate, the word estate will be considered as used to effect a complete passing of the personal estate ; but if the other words are sufficient to pass all the personal estate, then the word estate must be read as intended to apply to real estate." The second rule appears to be based on a misapprehension of the eiusdem generis principle of construction as laid down by Lord Hardwicke, when he said that in a bequest of " all my mortgages, household goods and estate," the word " estate "

(a) Barnes v. Patch, 8 Ves. 604 ; Hawksworth v. Hawksworth, 27 Bea. 1. " The word ' estate ' is genus generalissimum, and includes all things real and personal," Countess of Bridgewater v. Duke of Bolton, 1 Salk. 236. See O'Toole v. Browne, 3 E. & B. 572, and the cases there cited ; Beachcroft v. Beachcroft, 2 Vern. 690 (" worldly estate ") ; Doe v. Chapman, 1 H. Bl. 223. Also Scott v. Alberry and Mayor of Hamilton v. Hodsdon, cited post. As to " property," see post, p. 999.

(b) 1 Dr. at p. 632.

would be restrained to personal estate (c). But the modern cases do not recognize the rule stated by Kindersley, V.C.; the assumption is that when a man makes his will he does not intend to die intestate as to any part of his property, and such a general word as "estate" has its full meaning given to it, unless the context clearly restricts it to personal property (d).

The same principle applies where the word "property" is used (e). There are other expressions, such as "my fortune," "all I am worth," or the like (f), which will pass the whole of the testator's real and personal estate, unless the context shews that they are used in a restricted sense (g). So the appointment of a person as the testator's "heir" may operate as a general devise of real estate (h).

The question what will pass by a specific devise of "land," or of a "house," "farm," &c., or of the "rents and profits," or the "use and occupation" of land or house, &c., is discussed in Chapter XXXV.

II. Words "Estate," "Property," &c., whether restrained by Association with Words descriptive of Personality.—"It is obvious," says Mr. Jarman (i), "that the question, whether real estate passes under a devise, cannot occur, unless the testator has either used terms not properly and technically descriptive of such property, or else, though using terms properly applicable thereto, has created doubt by their position, or their improper use in other parts of the will. General expressions, when collocated with words descriptive

"Property."
"Fortune" and other informal expressions.

When restrained by association with personality.

(c) Tilley v. Simpson, 2 T. R. 659 n, cited post, p. 993.

(d) See Loftus v. Stoney, 17 Ir. Ch. 178, where Messrs. Wolstenholme and Vincent's note in the second and third editions of this work, stating that the modern cases are founded on a principle which is inconsistent with the doctrine laid down by Kindersley, V.C., was cited and approved. See also Smyth v. Smyth, Mayor of Hamilton v. Hodsdon, and other cases cited post, p. 999. In the older case of Scott v. Alberry (post, p. 993), the construction suggested by Lord Hardwicke was excluded by the context. The proposition laid down by Kindersley, V.C., in D'Almaine v. Moseley, was cited with approval by Buckley, J., in Kirby-Smith v. Parnell, [1903] 1 Ch. 483, where, however, the point did not arise, as the other words were sufficient to pass the personal estate.

(e) Jones v. Skinner, 5 L. J. Ch. 87; Morrison v. Hoppe, 4 De G. & S. 234; Loftus v. Stoney, 17 Ir. Ch. 178 ("the remainder of my properties, debentures, funded and securities"); Re Green-wich Hospital, 20 Bea. 458.

(f) See Baring v. Ashburton, 54 L.T. 463; Huxtep v. Brooman, 1 Br. C.C. 437, and other cases cited post, p. 1011.

(g) "Patrimony" would probably have the same meaning. In Roman law, patrimonium meant not only that which is derived by inheritance from a father, but also the whole private property of a man (Dirksen Man. Lat. s.v.), and "patrimony" is often used in this sense, but the word may of course be used in a restricted sense; see Mannox v. Greener, L. R., 14 Eq. 456; Green v. Giles, 5 Ir. Ch. 25.

(h) Ante, p. 82.

(i) First ed. p. 657.

CHAP. XXVII.

of personal estate, are sometimes restrained by that association to subjects of the same species, agreeably to the maxim noscitur a sociis; and accordingly we find many instances, especially among the early authorities, in which the word estate, and other such terms clearly capable, viribus suis, of comprehending real estate (j), have been restrained by the context to personalty."

When not restrained.

As instances of this mode of construction, Mr. Jarman examines in detail several cases (k), many of which, it is clear, would not be followed at the present day, and continues as follows (l): "But it is not to be inferred from the preceding cases, that the words estate and property, and others of the like import, when accompanied by words descriptive of personal estate merely, are by that association invariably restricted to property eiusdem generis. On the contrary, the presumption generally is against such a construction, as it supposes the testator to use words in another sense than that which judicial construction has given to them, and frequently in a sense which is fully expressed in the context, and therefore renders them inoperative. It should be observed, however, that the circumstance of there being other words adequate to carry the whole personal estate, always affords an argument for making the words under consideration include land, since the contrary construction reduces them to silence; an argument upon which, it will be seen, great stress was laid by Lord Hardwicke, in Tilley v. Simpson (m), stated in the sequel. But it must be remembered, that the fact of the word being wanted to give completeness to the disposition of the personal estate, does not raise so strong an argument in favour of the restrictive construction: since there is no reason why a testator should not have used the words for both purposes.

Cases in which general words have been held to be unrestricted.

"The following cases seem fully to sustain the position, that to warrant the confining of the word 'estate' and other such expressions to personal estate, there must be a clear indication of an intention in the will so to confine them, for where this indication has been wanting, or has been less clear than in the preceding cases, the words have been held to be used in their proper, i.e. their unrestricted sense.

(j) Barnes v. Patch, supra.

(k) Wilkinson v. Merryland, Cro. Car. 447 and 499, Sir W. Jones, 380; Cliffe v. Gibbons, 2 Lord Raym. 1324; Marchant v. Twisden, Gilb. Eq. Ca. 30; Doe d. Bunny v. Rout, 7 Taunt. 79; Woollam v. Kenworthy, 9 Ves. 137; Bebb v. Penoyre, 11 East, 160; Timewell v.

Perkins, 2 Atk. 102; Roe d. Helling v. Yeud, 2 B. & P. N. R. 214. Mr. Jarman's criticisms on these cases will be found in all the previous editions of this work, and some of them are referred to later in this chapter.

(l) First ed. p. 663.

(m) 2 T. R. 659, n.

“ Thus, in Terrell v. Page (n), where the testator bequeathed certain legacies, and devised some lands, and then devised as follows :—‘ All the rest and residue of my money, goods and chattels, and other estate whatsoever, I give to J. S., whom I make my executor ’ ; it was held, that the lands not previously devised passed under the latter clause.

“ Money, goods and chattels, and other estate.”

“ So, in Scott v. Alberry (o), where the testator, ‘ as touching the worldly estate it had pleased God to bestow ’ upon him, devised in these words :—‘ I give to my cousin T. S., all that my parcel of land lying in W. A. Item, I gave to my said cousin T. S., my wearing apparel, linen, books, with all other my estate whatsoever and wheresoever, not hereinbefore given and bequeathed ; and him, the said T. S., I make the sole executor of this my will for performing the same.’ The question was, whether the reversion in fee in the lands in W. A., before devised to T. S. (p), which were copyhold surrendered to the use of testator’s will, passed under the latter devise ; and it was held that it did.

“ Wearing apparel, &c., with all other my estate.”

“ Again, in Tilley v. Simpson (q), where a testator, after declaring his intention to dispose of all his worldly estate, and making several devises to different persons, devised all the rest and residue of his money, goods, chattels and estate whatsoever ; Lord Hardwicke held that the fee passed : he said, where the Court had restrained the word ‘ estate ’ to personal estate only, it had been where the intention of the testator that it should be so used had appeared ; as where it had stood coupled with a particular description of part of the personal estate, as a bequest of all mortgages, household goods and estate, in which the preceding words were not a full description of the personal estate ; that if the testator had said, ‘ All the rest and residue of my personal estate and estates whatsoever,’ a real estate would have passed (r) ; that this bequest amounted to the same, for the word ‘ chattels ’ is as full a description of the personal estate as the words ‘ personal estate ’ ; that therefore, when he had used words comprehending all his personal estate, and then made use of the word ‘ estate,’ that word would carry a real estate. That the word ‘ whatsoever ’ was used here, which was the same as if he had said of whatever kind it be ; and, if that had been the case, it would most certainly have carried the real estate. He observed

“ Residue of money, goods, chattels and estate whatsoever.”

Lord Hardwicke’s reliance upon the fact, that the other words were adequate to describe the personal estate.

(n) 1 Ch. Cas. 262, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 209, c. 11.

(o) Com. 337, 8 Vin. 229 pl. 14 ; see also Aubrey v. Middleton, 4 Vin. Ab. 460, pl. 15, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 497, pl. 16.

(p) As to indefinite devises, see Chap.

XLV.

(q) In Chancery, 1746, before Lord Hardwicke, stated 2 T. R. 659, n. ; and see 1 Cox, 362.

(r) As to this, see Jones v. Robinson, 3 C. P. D. 344.

CHAP. XXVII.

that Terrell and Page was very material to the present question, and he thought could not be distinguished: the only difference was, in that case there was the word 'other,' which he did not think could distinguish it. If the devise had been, and all the rest and residue of my household goods, mortgages and all other estate, he did not think the words would have extended to the testator's real estate.

"Goods, estates, bonds, debts."

"So, in Jongsma v. Jongsma (s), where a testator gave to his executors 'all his goods, estates, bonds, debts, to be sold.' The question was, whether this would pass a copyhold estate surrendered to the use of the will. Sir Lloyd Kenyon, M.R., said that, according to the case of Tilley v. Simpson (t), wherever the word 'estate' or 'estates' was restrained to personalty, it was done upon the ground of the testator's showing his intention by joining it with words which related to personalty only; but, on the other hand, where such other words were in themselves sufficient to pass all the personal estate, then, in order to give some effect to the word 'estate,' it was holden to pass realty. In this case, the word 'goods' seemed to be sufficiently comprehensive; and the copyhold, therefore, passed by the word 'estates.'

Residue of "effects, real and personal," after an express devise of lands.

"In Hogan v. Jackson (u), a testator, after commencing his will with the words 'as to my worldly substance,' devised certain lands to his mother M. for life: and, after giving certain legacies to be raised out of those lands, concluded as follows:—'I give and bequeath unto my dearly-beloved mother M. all the remainder and residue of all the effects both real and personal, which I shall die possessed of.' It was contended that the words 'real effects' meant real chattels, and that the words 'bequeath,' 'effects' and 'possessed,' were applicable rather to personal than real property; but the Court held that the clause amounted to a disposition of the whole of the testator's real and personal estate.

Remark on Hogan v. Jackson.

"This is a strong decision, and has been much cited in subsequent cases (v). It is clear, however, that the word effects, without real, would not, proprio vigore, comprehend land, though followed by the words, 'of what nature, kind or quality soever' (w).

(s) 1 Cox, 362; see also Smith v. Coffin, 2 H. Bl. 444; Roe d. Penwarden v. Gilbert, 3 Br. & B. 85; Churchill v. Dibben, 9 Sim. 447, n.; King v. Shrivess, 4 Moo. & Sc. 149, 5 Sim. 461.

(t) Which he denominated Tiddy v. Simms.

(u) Cowp. 299, 3 B. P. C. Toml. 388; see also Lord Torrington v. Bowman, 22 L. J. Ch. 236, where there was no previous devise of land.

(v) It was followed in Lord Torrington v. Bowman, 22 L. J. Ch. 236.

(w) Camfield v. Gilbert, 3 East, 516; Doe d. Chillcott v. White, 1 East, 33; Macnamara v. Lord Whitworth, G. Coop. 241; Doe d. Hick v. Dring, 2 M. & Sel. 448; Doe d. Haw v. Earles, 15 M.

“In Grayson v. Atkinson (x), a testator, prefacing his will with the expression, ‘as to all my temporal estate,’ gave certain legacies, and directed A. to sell any part of his real and personal estate for the payment of his debts and legacies; and, as to all the rest of his ‘goods and chattels, real and personal, moveable and immoveable, as houses, gardens, tenements, share in the Copperas Works,’ &c., he gave the same to A. Lord Hardwicke held that this devise carried a fee, though he did not think that the words ‘goods and chattels, real and personal,’ would have included the lands, if the deviser had not gone on to explain himself by the subsequent words, ‘as houses,’ &c. (y); [‘all the rest,’ &c., he thought plainly related to something mentioned before, and that mentioned before, which he was about to dispose of, was ‘all his temporal estate,’ which passes a fee when the testator has one.]

“Goods and chattels, real and personal, as houses, &c.”

“In Fletcher v. Smiton (z), a testator, after directing all his debts to be paid, gave to M., his wife, all his household goods, &c., and a legacy and annuity; and then proceeded as follows:—‘The profit of my four shares in the Corn Market during her life; also the income and profit of my estates as follows, during her life, my lands lying, &c., (enumerating them,) as also the residue of my personal estate to be laid out in Bank Annuities; and then my wife to have the income, during her life only, of this and the estates before mentioned; and after her decease, as follows:—I give to W. the income of my four shares in the Corn Market for his natural life; and all the rest of my estates, with all moneys in securities, to be divided in equal shares, to’ B. C., &c. The question was, whether the reversionary interest in the shares of the Corn Market, which were freehold of inheritance, passed to B. C., &c. It was contended that it did not; for that the word ‘estates’ in the last clause must have the same signification with the same word in the first clause, where it could not possibly extend to the Corn Market; but the Court, relying much on Tilley v. Simpson, held that the reversion in fee passed.

Realty passed by the word “estates,” although the word was before used exclusively of the particular subject.

& Wels. 450. The rule as stated by Mr. Jarman is still recognized by the Courts, but it is applied less inflexibly than when he wrote. See Hall v. Hall, [1892] 1 Ch. 361, and other cases post, s. VI. It would perhaps be more accurate to say that the word “effects” primâ facie means personal estate only; see Hawkins on Wills, 55.

(x) 1 Wils. 333.

(y) “If, without the words ‘houses,’ &c., the devise would not have carried real estate, it is difficult to find a satisfactory ground for giving to the devisee the fee. His lordship seems to have relied more upon the introductory words for this purpose than is consistent with later authorities. See infra.”

(Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(z) 2 T. R. 656.

CHAP. XXVII.

"Goods and chattels, rights, credits, personal and testamentary estate," held to pass land.

"In Smith v. Coffin (a), a testator, after prefacing his will with the words, 'as to my worldly estate,' &c., and devising certain freehold lands, gave and bequeathed all the residue of his 'goods and chattels, rights, credits, personal and testamentary estate whatsoever,' to his wife, for her own use and disposal. The real estate was held to pass.

"In a subsequent case (b), where there were also the prefatory expressions, 'as to my temporal estates and effects,' and a devise of all the testator's lands to J. G., the reversion in fee in those lands was held to pass to him under these words:—'And all the rest and residue of my goods and chattels, personal and testamentary estate and effects whatsoever, I give and bequeath unto the said J. G., whom I make whole and sole executor.'

"By confining the devise to personal estate, in the two preceding cases, the words 'and testamentary' would have been rendered inoperative.

Residue of "money, stock, property, and effects," held to carry a fee.

"So, in Doe d. Andrew v. Lainchbury (c), where a testator said,—'As to the little money and effects with which the Almighty has intrusted me, I dispose thereof as follows'; and, after several devises of land, concluded thus:—'And as to all the rest, residue and remainder of my money, stock, property and effects, of what kind and nature soever, at the time of my decease, I leave and bequeath the same, and every part thereof, unto my nephew J., and my niece S., for to be equally divided between them, share and share alike; and I do hereby also appoint my said nephew J., and my said niece S., executor and executrix, and likewise joint and equal residuary legatees,' &c.; it was held that real estate passed, which construction Lord Ellenborough considered to be strengthened by the circumstance of the testator having, in a preceding part of his will, directed money to be laid out in the purchase of land, 'to be added to his other adjoining property,' which he said gave a standard of his meaning of the word 'property,' and showed that he meant by it real estate.

Circumstance of there being a prior devise of lands.

"In most of the preceding cases, the will contained specific devises of land; a circumstance which, as before observed, always favours the extension of the subsequent general words to property of the same description; but the cases do not warrant the considering the absence of the circumstance as conclusively establishing the exclusion of real estate from such terms, though associated

(a) 2 H. Bl. 444.

(b) Roe d. Penwarden v. Gilbert, 3 Br. & B. 85 (the marginal note omits the material word); see also Doe d. Evans v. Walker, 15 Q. B. 28.

(c) 11 East, 290.

with words descriptive of personal property only. On the contrary, real estate has sometimes been held to pass in cases of this nature.

“ Thus, in Tanner v. Morse (d), real estate was held to pass under the following words:—‘ As to my temporal estate, I bequeath to my nephew T. (who was the heir-at-law) the sum of 50*l.*’; then follow several legacies: ‘ And all the rest and residue of my estate, goods and chattels whatsoever, I give and bequeath to my beloved wife M. C., whom I make my full and sole executrix.’ Lord King laid much stress upon the words ‘ temporal estate,’ in the introductory clause.

Although no such devise, land passed in following cases.

Residue of “ estate, goods, and chattels.”

“ So, in Doe d. Wall v. Langlands (e), where a testator, after giving several pecuniary legacies, bequeathed as follows:—‘ to R. D., and E. W., I give and bequeath the residue of my property, goods and chattels, to be divided equally between them, share and share alike;’ it was contended, that the word ‘ property ’ was restrained by the subsequent words, the clause being read, videlicet, ‘ my goods and chattels ’; but Lord Ellenborough held that the more obvious and natural sense was, that they are to be taken cumulatively, that is, as property, and goods and chattels, and, consequently, that the real estate passed under the former word.

Residue of “ my property, goods and chattels.”

“ Again, in the case of Doe d. Morgan v. Morgan (f), where a testator, after bequeathing two pecuniary legacies, devised as follows:—‘ All my property and effects of all claims that I shall have, I give to my brother J. M., but my mother is at liberty to give 1,000*l.* of my property where she please.’ It was contended, that the gift of the pecuniary legacies, the use of the word ‘ effects ’ conjunctively with ‘ property,’ and the clause respecting the 1,000*l.*, shewed that the testator, by the latter term, intended to denote personal estate only; but the Court held that the real estate passed.

“ All my property and effects.”

“ Lastly, a similar construction prevailed in Doe d. Evans v. Evans (g), where a testator, after bequeathing certain articles of personal estate, gave, bequeathed and devised to his wife A., all his money, securities for money, goods, chattels, estate and effects, of what nature or kind soever, and wheresoever the same might or should be at the time of his death.

“ The last three cases are certainly important authorities, and they demonstrate the inclination of the Courts at the present day,

General remark on preceding cases.

(d) Cas. t. Talb. 284, s. c. sub. nom. Tanner v. Wise, 3 P. W. 295; see also Lumley v. May, Pre. Ch. 37.

(e) 14 East, 370.

(f) 6 B. & Cr. 512, 9 D. & Ry. 633;

see also Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264.

(g) 9 Ad. & E. 719; s. c. 1 Per. & Dav. 472, see also D'Almaine v. Moseley, 1 Drew. 629, cited post, p. 999.

to hold lands to pass under words capable per se of comprehending them, notwithstanding their association with terms applicable to personality only. To reconcile all the cases would require the adoption of some very subtle and unsubstantial distinctions; but the preceding review will convince the reader of the necessity of withholding implicit reliance from some of the early decisions in which the restricted construction prevailed" (h).

Many of the early authorities proceeded on the principle that the heir was not to be disinherited except by clear words (i); at the present day, however, more respect is paid to the intention of testators, and in seeking to ascertain in any particular case what the intention is, the court proceeds on the theory that a man who makes a will does not, as a general rule, wish to die intestate as to any part of his property (j).

The following cases, decided since Mr. Jarman wrote, may be shortly referred to as illustrating the modern principle of construction.

In Sanderson v. Dobson (k), O'Toole v. Browne (l), and Dobson v. Bounness (m) the word "estate," although used in collocation with words descriptive of personal property, was held to pass real estate. In O'Toole v. Browne the testator owned no land at the date of the will (n).

"Estate" held to pass realty notwithstanding context.

In Mayor &c. of Hamilton v. Hodsdon (o), a testator directed any shares he might have in a vessel to be sold "for the benefit of his estate," and after making some specific devises of "houses and lands," in some of which the fee was not exhausted, and bequeathing to his wife certain specific chattels "which she had from her father's estate," he gave "all the remainder of his estate that was then in his possession or might thereafter be his" to his wife; and directed "his estate," after payment of debts and legacies, to be "kept together" until the time thereby appointed for "dividing" it; and declared his wife entitled, in a certain event, to one-third of "his personal estate." It was argued

(k) This passage was cited with approval by Malins, V.-C., in Smyth v. Smyth, 8 Ch. D. 561.

(i) See Shaw v. Bull, 2 Eq. Ca. Abr. 320, 321.

(j) See per Malins, V.-C., in Smyth v. Smyth, 8 Ch. D. 561; per Buckley, J., in Kirby-Smith v. Parnell, [1903] 1 Ch. 483.

(k) 1 Exch. 141; 7 C. B. 81, 10 Bea. 478.

(l) 3 E. & B. 572.

(m) L. R., 5 Eq. 404. The question arose on the same will as in Sanderson v. Dobson.

(n) See also Edwards v. Barnes, 2 Bing. N. C. 252; Ridgeway v. Munkittrick, 1 Dr. & War. 84, where the word was "properties," and Waite v. Morland, 12 Jur. N. S. 763, where a disposition of "all my property, brewery, &c." was held to mean "all my brewery property."

(o) 11 Jur. 193.

that the trusts and purposes of the will showed the testator's mind to be directed to personal estate only, and that he had himself supplied a vocabulary for the interpretation of the term "estate." Lord Brougham, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, observed (in effect) that "estate" meant both realty and personalty, and that the realty was not to be excluded merely because there was personalty upon which the term could operate; that, when realty was meant to be excluded, the expression personal estate was used; and that the will was to be construed reddendo singula singulis, by which method all parts of it became consistent; so that there was not that clear intent on the will to restrict the meaning of the term estate which was necessary to prevent its natural operation in comprising realty as well as personalty. The unexhausted reversion was, therefore, held to pass.

In D'Almaine v. Moseley (p), where a testator gave "all the rest and residue of my estate and effects," Kindersley, V.-C., in deciding that the word "estate" was sufficient to pass real estate, said: "The cases on this subject are very numerous, and not very easy to be reconciled; but the tendency of modern decision is to give less effect to minute and trivial matters than was attributed to them in former times. Now in this case, it is said on the part of the Crown, that in the former part of the will there is no gift of any real estate: but it appears to me that to lay stress on that would be to rely on grounds too minute; and that no indication of intention is afforded by it."

There are numerous other modern decisions to the effect that "estate" or "estates," used in conjunction with words descriptive of personalty, will pass real estate unless a clear intention to the contrary appears (q).

Operation of word "estate."

"Property" is a word of almost, if not quite, as strong operation as the word "estate" (r).

But a testator may shew by the context that he uses the word "estate" or "property" in a restricted meaning. Thus if he disposes of his "personal estate and property," or "personal Restricted construction of "estate," "property," &c.

(p) 1 Drew. 629. Passages from other parts of the V.-C.'s judgment are cited in Kirby-Smith v. Parnell, [1903] 1 Ch. 483, stated post, p. 1009.

(q) Midland Counties Railway Company v. Oswin, 1 Coll. 74; Paterson v. Huddart, 17 Beav. 210; Gyett v. Williams, 2 J. & H. 429; Hamilton v. Buckmaster, L. R., 3 Eq. 323 (in none of which was there a devise of lands specifically); Meeds v. Wood, 19 Beav.

215, Hawksworth v. Hawksworth, 27 Beav. 1.

(r) Edwards v. Barnes, 2 Bing. N. C. 252; Wilce v. Wilce, 7 Bing. 664; Footner v. Cooper, 2 Drew. 7; Saumarez v. Saumarez, 4 Myl. & Cr. 331; Re Greenwich Hospital, 20 Bea. 458; Re Smart's Estate, [1882] W. N. 77. See also the cases cited ante, pp. 996, 997, in some of which the word "property" was used.

CHAP. XXVII.

property, estate and effects," the word "personal" will as a general rule override the whole (s).

So if a testator gives a share of his real and personal property to A., and the remainder to other persons, and then provides that in the event of A. dying under twenty-one, "the said property and effects" shall go to B., this means the share given to A., and not all the testator's property (t).

"Estate" followed by an enumeration of particulars explanatory and restrictive of it.

If a testator uses a general word, such as "estate" or "property," followed by an enumeration of particulars, the question arises whether the enumeration shews an intention to make the gift as sweeping as possible, or whether it should be held to be explanatory and restrictive of the prior general expression. The latter principle of construction was applied in several of the older cases. Thus, in Timewell v. Perkins (u), where a testator devised in these words, "All those my freehold lands, with the messuages, &c., now in the occupation of L., and all other the rest and residue and remainder of my estate, consisting in ready money, plate, jewels, leases, judgments, mortgages, or in any other thing whatsoever or wheresoever, I give unto A. H. and her assigns for ever." In the preamble of the will occurred the clause, "as touching the temporal (v) estate with which it hath pleased God to bless me, I dispose thereof as follows." The question was, whether land not described in the will passed under the residuary clause. Fortescue, J., held that it did not, relying on the analogy of the case to Wilkinson v. Merryland.

Remark on Timewell v. Perkins.

"In the case just stated," as Mr. Jarman points out (w), "there was a preceding specific devise of land; but the intention to confine the word 'estate' to personalty, was inferred from the subsequent explanatory words of description; which, however, were themselves followed by expressions scarcely less strong than many which have been held sufficient to include real estate (x).

(s) Buchanan v. Harrison, 31 L. J. Ch. 74; Belaney v. Belaney, L. R., 2 Eq. 210; 2 Ch. 138; Jones v. Robinson, 3 C. P. D. 344. The testator may, however, shew by the context that he means real estate to pass by a gift of his "personal estate and effects": Re Wass, 95 L. T. 758.

(t) Re Willomier, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 389.

(u) 2 Atk. 102; see also Doe v. Rout, 7 Taunt. 79, ante, p. 992.

(v) Mr. Jarman, in commenting on Timewell v. Perkins, gives the word "personal" instead of "temporal," and suggests that the introductory clause, referring to personal estate only, may be considered a circumstance of distinction. No such argument can be drawn from the use of the expression "temporal estate," which includes real and personal property. See Tanner v. Wise, 3 P. W. 295; Grayson v. Atkinson, supra, p. 995.

(w) First ed. p. 662.

(x) See Hopewell v. Ackland, 1 Com. 164, and Wilce v. Wilce, 7 Bing. 644, stated post, p. 1011, 1012.

Timewell v. Perkins is unquestionably a strong case, and has generally been much relied upon as an authority for the restricted construction on subsequent occasions.

“So, in Roe d. Helling v. Yeud (y), where a testator, after giving certain legacies, and appointing certain persons executors, added, ‘and to whom I give all the remainder of my property whatever and wheresoever, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike, after their paying and discharging the before-mentioned annuities, legacies, debts and demands, or any I may hereafter make by codicil to this my will, all my goods, stock, bills, bonds, book debts and securities in the Witham Drainage, in Lincolnshire, and funded property.’ The question was whether real estate passed. The Court held that it did not; considering that the enumeration at the end of the clause was explanatory of the words ‘remainder of my property’ (z).

“Property” restrained by subsequent explanatory particulars.

“The two preceding cases, Timewell v. Perkins, and Roe v. Yeud, were much relied upon by Gibbs, C.J., in the subsequent case of Doe v. Rout” (a).

It may be doubted, however, whether this restricted construction would find favour with the courts at the present day. The three cases last referred to were all decided on the principle that clear words are required to disinherit the heir, a principle which has little, if any, force at the present day (b). Accordingly in Mullally v. Walsh (c), where a testator bequeathed a legacy “to be paid by my wife or by my executors,” and then gave to his wife “the remaining part of my whole property, both in stock, household furniture and cash, &c., &c.,” it was held by the Court of Appeal that chattels real (with which alone the suit was conversant) passed by the gift. The principle on which the judgment of the court proceeded seems to apply with equal force to freeholds.

But “property” sometimes denotes merely the fact of ownership, and then it does not have the sweeping effect which it has when used in its more usual sense. As in Doe d. Haw v. Earles (d), where a testator gave all “effects at this time in my possession or that hereafter may become my property” to his wife, and it was held that “property” did not enlarge the meaning of “effects.” In a later part of the same will the testator used the word “property”

“Property” used in limited sense.

(y) 2 B. & P. N. R. 214.

(z) But observe the tone of Lord Ellenborough’s remarks on this case in Doe v. Langlands, 14 East, 373.

(a) 7 Taunt. 79.

(b) It was referred to as an existing principle in Buchanan v. Harrison, 31

L. J. Ch. 82, and in Re Cameron, 26 Ch. D. 25.

(c) 3 L. R. Ir. 244, overruling decision of Court below, Ir. R., 6 C. L. 314. Compare Loftus v. Stoney, 17 Ir. Ch. 178, referred to post, p. 1016.

(d) 15 M. & Wels. 450.

CHAP. XXVII.

to denote the property before given to his wife, that is, effects merely. A similar construction prevailed in Barnaby v. Tassell (e).

With the foregoing cases may be compared those in which realty has been held to pass by the use of untechnical expressions (f).

Copyholds excluded from a gift of "property" by subsequent disposition of "copyholds."

It is a wholly different question, where a will contains two distinct devises, either of which would alone be sufficient to carry the property, under which of the two it shall be held to pass. Thus in Chapman v. Prickett (g), where a testator entitled to copyholds, which he had surrendered to the use of his will, devised his freehold messuages, stock in the funds, money, and debts, and all shares or property of which he might be possessed or entitled to, to trustees in trust to pay the rents of his freeholds and leaseholds and the dividends of his stock and shares to his wife for life, and afterwards to make division by sale or otherwise of his said freeholds, and to transfer "all stock or shares, my property, estate, and effects," equally among his children. By codicil he devised his copyhold estate to his wife for a term, and afterwards directed it to be sold for the benefit of his children as directed by the will, but did not actually devise the copyholds to the trustees. It was held that no estate in the copyholds passed to the trustees by the word "property" in the will. Tindal, C.J., observed that the general effect of the disposition of the copyhold by the codicil was the same as that of the freehold which had already passed by the will, viz., that the wife of the testator should receive the rents and profits during her life, and after her death a sale should take place and a division be made among the children. So that the disposition of the copyhold made by the codicil was unnecessary, except upon the supposition that the testator thought he had not disposed of it by the will.

Clear gift of realty in will not cut down by gift of "estate, furniture, &c." in codicil.

And it has been elsewhere noticed as an established rule, that a gift once clearly expressed in a will, shall not be cut down by ambiguous expressions contained in a codicil. It was mainly on this principle that in Molynaux v. Rowe (h), a devise of "real estate" to A. was held not to be affected by a codicil by which the testator gave "all his estate, household furniture, linen, china, and all other his personal property" to B.

Effect of mistake.

In Hounsell v. Dunning (i), a testatrix was entitled to some (e) L. R., 11 Eq. 363. analogous to Wilde v. Holtzmeyer, 5 Ves. 811.
(f) Post, p. 1011.
(g) 6 Bing. 602. See also Acheson v. Fair, 3 D. & War. 512, which is (h) 8 D. M. & G. 368.
(i) [1902] 1 Ch. 512.

copyholds as customary heiress of her deceased husband, but she erroneously supposed that they belonged to her son as his father's heir ; by her will she gave to her daughters all the share of her late husband's " estate " to which she was entitled on his decease ; she also gave them pecuniary legacies, and declared that she made this provision for them in lieu of the various freehold and copyhold lands of her late husband which descended to her son : it became unnecessary to decide the point, but Joyce, J., thought that the copyholds in question did not pass by the word " estate."

III. Words "Estate," &c., whether restrained by Collocation with Executorship.—Mr. Jarman continues (j): " Sometimes words adequate to comprise land have been confined to personal estate, from their association with the legatee's nomination to the executorship, which has been considered as explanatory, and restrictive of the general expressions to that species of property which was connected with the character of executor.

Devise associated with nomination to executorship.

" As in Shaw v. Bull (k), where one seised in fee of five messuages, by will devised two to his wife for life, remainder to his two daughters in fee ; the third messuage to his wife and her heirs ; the fourth to his wife and her heirs, she paying his legacies, in case his goods and chattels did not answer them all ; and, if she did not make provision for the payment of his legacies in her lifetime, that it should be lawful for the legatee, after her death, to sell the said messuage, to satisfy the legacies out of the value thereof. Then follows this clause, on which the question arose :—' And all the overplus of my estate to be at my wife's disposal, and make her my executrix.' Blencowe, J., said, if he had at first devised to his wife all his estate, this (the fifth) house would have passed to her ; but compare this clause with the subsequent words, ' and I make her my executrix,' it shows that his intent was to grant her such estate as she was capable of as executrix. He considered ' overplus ' to refer to the price of the house, after payment of legacies.

" Overplus of my estate " restricted to personalty by this association.

" It is to be observed, however, that this construction renders the words in question nugatory, since the appointment of the wife to be executrix was itself, in the then state of the law, a disposition of the whole personal estate ; a species of argument to which great attention is paid at this day, for in modern cases no principle is more conspicuous than an anxiety to give effect

Remark on Shaw v. Bull.

(j) First ed. p. 671.

(k) 12 Mod. 593, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 320, pl. 8.

CHAP. XXVII.

to every word of the will. It is impossible to reconcile this case with the general current of authorities (l).

“Executrix of all my goods, lands, and chattels.”

“Although it is indisputably clear that the word lands will carry real estate, notwithstanding it be collocated with words descriptive of personal property only (m); yet in several early cases (n) it has been decided, that where a testator appoints another executor of all his goods, lands, &c., he refers to such lands as the person may take as executor, namely, leaseholds; and accordingly real estate does not pass. Thus, in Piggot v. Penrice (o), freehold lands were held not to pass under the words, ‘I make my niece executrix of all my goods, lands and chattels,’ although the testator had no leaseholds (p). It was said that by this construction the word lands was not (as objected) useless, and to be rejected; for that, in all probability, there might be rents in arrear of those lands, which would pass to the niece by her being made executrix. This explanation, however, fails to show that any efficient signification was given to the word ‘lands,’ since it is clear the executorship would have entitled the niece to the arrear of rent. The word ‘chattels,’ too, was sufficient to pass any leasehold lands of which the testator might have been possessed at his death.

“Executor of all my lands for ever and leasehold property,” not so restricted.

“In Doe d. Gillard v. Gillard (q), real estate was held to pass under the words, ‘I do make, constitute and appoint R. G. my whole and sole executor of all my lands for ever, and leasehold property here or at Beeston.’ The question principally agitated was, whether the restrictive words ‘here or at Beeston,’ applied to both freehold and leasehold, or to leasehold lands only; and it was held that they were confined to the latter, and that the devise of the freehold lands was general, without any local restriction.

“Whatever opinion may be formed of the case of Piggot v. Penrice, it is not necessarily overruled by this case, where the will contained additional expressions, strongly aiding the construction adopted.

(l) See Noel v. Hoy, 5 Mad. 38, stated post, p. 1005.

(m) Roe d. Walker v. Walker, 3 B. & P. 375, stated post, p. 1020.

(n) 1 Roll. Ab. 613, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 209, pl. 12; see also Clements v. Cassye, Noy, 48.

(o) Pre. Ch. 471, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 209, pl. 13.

(p) “This circumstance does not seem to be very material; for, as such a bequest operates upon all the leaseholds of the testator at his death, the fact of his having or not having any such at that period, does not mark his intention at the making of the will. See Lord Eldon’s judgment in Wright v. Atkyns, as reported G. Coop. 111, but as to which see infra.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(q) 5 B. & Ald. 785; and see Marret v. Sly, 2 Sid. 75, ante, p. 455, n. (l).

“So, in Noel v. Hoy (r), a copyhold estate surrendered to the use of the will was held to pass under the following disposition: ‘In respect of worldly affairs, I cannot better manifest my love and attachment to my family, than in nominating (which I hereby do) my dearly beloved and most amiable wife A. F. M., the sole executrix of this my will, thereby bequeathing to her all the property of whatever description or sort that I may die possessed of, to be by her appropriated in any manner she may think proper, for the maintenance of herself and such of my children,’ &c. Sir J. Leach, V.-C., thought that the criticism upon the words ‘possessed of,’ and ‘appropriated,’ on which had been founded the argument for excluding the copyholds, was too nice.

“All the property I may die possessed of,” held to include land.

“Again, in Thomas v. Phelps (s), where the testator, as to his worldly estate, gave, devised and disposed of the same as follows: and then, after giving some pecuniary legacies, proceeded in these words: ‘I also give and bequeath the lease of the colliery of L. to my son J. P.; him and my daughter E. P. I do make, constitute and appoint my joint executor and executrix of this my last will and testament, of all that I possess in any way belonging to me, by them freely to be enjoyed or possessed of whatsoever nature or manner it may be, only my household furniture, which I give to my daughter who lives the longest single, and after her decease or marriage to be sold and equally divided between my remaining children,’ &c. Sir J. Leach, M.R., held, that the real estate passed by this devise, the words being equivalent to a gift of all the testator’s property. He observed, that the exception of the household furniture was of little weight; for where the prior words imported real as well as personal estate, it mattered not that the exception to the gift happened to be of personal chattels only (t).

“All that I possess in any way belonging to me.”

“So, in Doe d. Pratt v. Pratt (u), where a testator directed that his debts and funeral expenses should be paid by his executor thereafter named; and after giving two life annuities of 2l. 10s. each, and a legacy of 5s. to J. P., his heir-at-law, he appointed W. P. whole and sole executor of all his houses and lands situate at F. It was held, after an extensive review of the authorities, that the

(r) 5 Mad. 38.

(s) 4 Russ. 348.

(t) See also Steignes v. Steignes, Mos. 296; such an exception, though of little weight to show what is excluded (see however Camfield v. Gilbert, 3 East, 516, 2 M. & Sel. p. 454), is strong to prove what is intended to be included in the gift from which the exception is made; see Davenport v. Coltman, 12 Sim. 588, 598, 603; and see Hotham v. Sutton, 15 Ves. 319, and other cases cited therewith, post, Chap. XXIII.; Marshall v. Hopkins, 15 East, 309.

(u) 6 Ad. & E. 180; Doe d. Hickman v. Haslewood, ib. 167; Day v. Dameron, 12 Sim. 200, stated post, p. 1012.

CHAP. XXVII.

houses and land at F. passed to W. P., and that he took an estate in fee.

General remark on preceding cases.

"These cases evince that little attention is now to be paid to the circumstance of the association of the devise with the appointment of the devisee to the executorship, as confining it to personal estate, if the words of the devise will fairly bear a wider construction; and Thomas v. Phelps also shows that an exception of articles of personalty affords no ground for cutting down the general words of the devise."

In the cases above cited the question was whether the executors took the real estate beneficially, but an appointment of a person as "executor" of the testator's property may of course operate to give him the land as trustee (v).

Power to sell "estate" to pay legacies.

In Re Cameron (w), a testator gave certain legacies, and empowered his executors to realize such parts of his estate as they should think fit to pay them; he did not dispose of any of his real estate, except a particular house: it was held that the provision for payment of legacies referred to that part of the estate which vested in the executors as such, namely, the personal estate, and did not charge the legacies on the real estate.

Land Transfer Act, 1897.

It may be a question whether the Land Transfer Act, 1897, has affected the rule of construction above considered. In the case of a testator dying since 1897, his real estate vests on his executors, and this would be an additional reason (to borrow Mr. Jarman's language) for disregarding the circumstance that the testator has, in devising his property by informal words, associated the devise with the appointment of the devisee to the executorship. But in such a case as Re Cameron (supra), it is submitted that the act would not affect the construction of the will.

Inapplicability of limitations, where restrictive.

IV.—Words "Estate" &c., whether restrained by the Nature of Limitations.—Mr. Jarman continues (x): "The introduction of limitations and expressions inapplicable to real estate has sometimes been made a ground for excluding such estate from words of general description, capable, ex vi terminorum, of comprehending property of that species."

The authorities on the subject, however, are somewhat conflicting. At the time when Mr. Jarman wrote, the introduction of limitations and expressions inapplicable to real estate had been held, in several cases, to be a sufficient reason for excluding it from a gift of the testator's "estate and effects" (y), while in other cases it was held that the mere introduction into some of the clauses of a will of expressions inapplicable to real estate, did not necessarily confine the word "estate" to personal estate (z).

(v) Murphy v. Donnelly, Ir. R., 4 Eq. 111.

(w) 26 Ch. D. 19.
(x) First ed. p. 675.

In some of the cases bearing on this subject (for example, in Doe v. Buckner), the testator, in the preamble or exordium to his will, intimated an intention to dispose of all his real estate. "This circumstance," as Mr. Jarman points out (a), "has had various degrees of importance assigned to it. Most of the judges who have held the real estate to pass, have thrown it into the argument. It certainly shews that the testator commenced his will with the intention not to die intestate with respect to any portion of his property; but does not supersede the necessity of that intention being subsequently carried into effect by an actual disposition." It has had considerable weight assigned to it in cases where the testator has made no disposition of his residuary estate except by untechnical words, as by appointing some one to be his residuary legatee, or the like (b), a matter which is considered in a subsequent part of this chapter.

As to preamble intimating intention to dispose of whole estate.

The true principle governing the class of cases now under discussion was laid down in Saumarez v. Saumarez (c). In that case Realty held to pass notwithstanding trusts in terms applicable only to personality.

(y) Doe d. Spearing v. Buckner, 6 T. R. 610, see post, p. 1008 n. (d); Doe d. Hurrell v. Hurrell, 5 B. & Ald. 18; Woollam v. Kenworthy, 9 Ves. 137; and Pogson v. Thomas, 6 Bing. N. C. 337. Some of these decisions seem to have proceeded on the ground that a limitation to the executors and administrators of a person was inapplicable to real estate (see per Shadwell, V.-C., 12 Sim. at p. 204), although a gift of land to A., his executors, &c., even under the old law, gave A. the fee (Rose d. Vere v. Hill, 3 Burr. 1881, Fearn, Posth., 144).

(z) Doe d. Burkitt v. Chapman, 1 H. Bl. 223; Affleck v. James, 17 Sim. 121. In Newland v. Marjoribanks, 5 Taunt. 268, the judges were divided in opinion. Barclay v. Collett, 6 Scott, 408, is cited by Mr. Jarman in the next section of this chapter, but so far as it has any bearing on the questions discussed in this chapter it seems more pertinent to the present section.

(a) First ed. 678.

(b) See Doe d. Wall v. Langlands, 14 East, 370, 2 Ed. 145, n. (a); Gulliver v. Poyntz, 3 Wils. 141, 2 W. Bl. 726;

Smith v. Coffin, 2 H. Bl. 444; Grayson v. Atkinson, 1 Wils. 333; Pocock v. Bishop of Lincoln, 3 Br. & B. 27; Roe v. Gilbert, ib. 85; Saddler v. Turner, 8 Ves. 617; Doe v. Dring, 2 M. & Sel. 448, 456; Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264; Sutton v. Sharp, 1 Russ. 146; Wilce v. Wilce, 7 Bing. 664; and particularly Hughes v. Pritchard, 6 Ch. D. 24. The absence of such a clause was relied on in Roe v. Yeud, 2 B. & P. N. R. 214; Doe v. Rout, 7 Taunt. 79, 84; Re Methuen and Blore's Contract, 16 Ch. D. 696; but stated by Lord Hardwicke, in Crichton v. Symes, 3 Atk. 61, to afford no indication of intention.

(c) 4 My. & C. 331. See also Morrison v. Hoppe, 4 De G. & S. 234; Stokes v. Salomons, 9 Hare, 75; Hunter v. Pugh, 4 Jur. 571; Mayor, &c., of Hamilton v. Hodsdon, 6 Moo. P.C.C. 76, 11 Jur. 193, stated ante, p. 998; D'Almaine v. Moseley, 1 Drew. 629; Fullerton v. Martin, 22 L. J. Ch. 893, Streatfield v. Cooper, 27 Beav. 338; Morris v. Lloyd, 3 H. & C. 141; Hamilton v. Buckmaster, L. R., 3 Eq. 323; Lloyd v. Lloyd, L. R., 7 Eq. 458.

CHAP. XXVII.

Saumarez v.
Saumarez.

a testator, after giving certain directions about his dwelling-house, gave to his son R. his freehold land in D. (without words of limitation), and directed that the residue of his property, which he might leave at his death, might be divided between him and his two sisters in equal proportions, subject to the following restrictions. The testator then directed his son's portion to be placed in the names of trustees, and the interest to be paid to him (he being already tenant for life of the land). After his death his share to be divided between his children, and placed in the names of trustees, with a power to employ the interest for their maintenance and part of the capital for their advancement; and at their age of twenty-five to transfer the whole to them: with certain ulterior limitations in case R. died without issue. Lord Cottenham, notwithstanding the inapplicability of the trusts to real estate, held that the reversion of the estate in D. passed by the residuary clause, and that the trusts and limitations must be applied distributively to the real and personal estate. "In considering gifts of residue," he said, "whether of real or personal estate, it is not necessary to ascertain whether the testator had any particular property in contemplation at the moment. Indeed, such gifts may be introduced to guard against the testator having overlooked some property or interest in the gifts particularly described. If he meant to give the residue of his property, be it what it may, it is immaterial whether he did or did not know what would be included in it; and if so, it cannot make any difference that such ignorance is manifested upon the face of the will, unless the expressions manifesting it are sufficient to prove that the testator did not intend to use the words of gift in their ordinary, extended, and technical sense." And, applying himself to the particular will before him, he said: "The circumstance of the testator using expressions and giving directions applicable only to the personal estate may prove that he did not at the time consider or was not aware that this fee would be part of the residue; but if such knowledge be not necessary, as it certainly is not, to give validity to the devise, the absence of it, though so manifested, cannot destroy the operation of the general intent of passing all the residue of his property."

The cases of Fullerton v. Martin (d) and D'Almaine v. Moseley (e), both decided by Kindersley, V.-C., illustrate the same principle.

(d) 22 L. J. Ch. 893. In that case the V.-C. remarked of Doe v. Buckner that it would be decided differently at the present day.

(e) 1 Drew. 629. See also the other cases cited ante, p. 690, note (a).

It is true that in Coard v. Holderness (f), a gift of all the testator's estate, effects and property, described in the most sweeping terms, was held by Romilly, M.R., that the use of the words "bequeath," "executors and administrators," "income" and "principal," and the absence of such words as "devise," "heir" and "rent," coupled with the general scope and object of the will, shewed the testator did not mean to dispose of his real estate, but whether the case was rightly decided or not, no general principle can be deduced from it (g).

In Kirby-Smith v. Parnell (h) a testator gave and bequeathed all his ready money, securities for money, stock in any of the public stocks of Great Britain, and all the rest, residue and remainder of his estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, upon trusts which were technically appropriate rather to personal than to real estate, but Buckley, J., held on the whole will that the dominant intention of the testator was to dispose of everything, and that the gift operated as a valid gift of his real estate. The learned judge relied on Saumarez v. Saumarez, D'Almaine v. Moseley, and Fullerton v. Martin, and treated Coard v. Holderness and Longley v. Longley (i), as decisions on the wording of particular wills, from which no general principle could be deduced.

In some cases where the words of a devise to trustees have been sufficiently ample to include real estate, but the trusts have applied to personalty only, the legal estate in the realty has been held to pass by the devise, with a resulting trust to the heir.

As in Dunnage v. White (j), where the testator, after devising certain real estate, and bequeathing some pecuniary legacies, proceeded as follows:—"And all the rest, residue and remainder, of my estate or effects, whatsoever and wheresoever, of what nature or kind soever, I give, devise (k), and bequeath unto my said trustees and executors after named and appointed, upon the trusts following: that is to say, that they my said executors do and shall, as soon as may be conveniently after my decease, make sale and absolutely dispose of my household goods and stock "Estate or effects" held to include land, but trusts of will confined to personalty.

(f) 20 Bea. 147.

(g) The M.R. seems to have misapprehended the true ground of the decision in Saumarez v. Saumarez, supra. See Stokes v. Salomons, 9 Hare 75; Buchanan v. Harrison, 31 L. J. Ch. 74.

(h) [1903] 1 Ch. 483.

(i) Post, p. 1010.

(j) 1 J. & W. 583.

(k) That this word, when applied to "effects" alone, will not carry real estate, see Camfield v. Gilbert, 3 East, 516; Hall v. Hall, [1891] 3 Ch. 389; [1892] 1 Ch. 361; but see Phillips v. Beal, 25 Beav. 25. Conversely, the word "bequeath" will not be sufficient to confine the effect of a gift otherwise capable of including real estate, Whicker v. Hume, 14 Beav. 518; Gyett v. Williams, 2 J. & H. 429.

CHAP. XXVII.

Resulting trust for the heir.

in trade, by public auction, for the most money that can be had or gotten for the same ; and also do and shall, with all convenient speed, collect in all debts due and owing to me at the time of my decease, together with all monies owing or belonging to me upon mortgage, bond, bill, note, specialties, simple contract, or otherwise howsoever ; and when the same shall be so collected and got in, to divide the same into six parts or shares, and to pay the same, when so divided, in manner following ; that is to say, four equal sixth parts thereof to certain persons named, and the remaining two-sixth parts thereof to invest in the public stocks or funds," &c. Sir T. Plumer, M.R., held it impossible not to construe the devise as comprising the real estate ; but that the testator having given both the real and personal property to the trustees, and having only said what was to be done with the personalty (for not a word of the disposition of the beneficial interest referred to real estate), the consequence was that the trust of the realty resulted to the heir-at-law (l).

This decision was followed in Longley v. Longley (m), where a testator devised and bequeathed all his estate and effects to trustees, their heirs, executors and administrators, upon trust to convert his personal estate and stand possessed of the proceeds of sale, and of the rest and residue of his estate and effects, upon trust to invest the same in government or real securities, and to stand possessed of the investments upon trusts for the benefit of his wife, children, brothers and sisters : it was held by Romilly, M.R., that the real estate passed to the trustees, but that the trusts were "rigidly and exclusively" applicable to personal estate, and that there was a resulting trust of the real estate for the heir-at-law. It does not appear whether the testator owned any real estate at the date of his will, which was made fifteen years before his death (n).

(l) "It seems to have been overlooked in this case, that the freehold farm, in respect to which the question arose, had been contracted to be purchased by the testator before he made his will, but had never been conveyed to him ; so that there was no legal estate in the testator upon which that part of his Honor's decision which gave the estate to the trustees, could operate." (Note by Mr. Jarman.)

(m) L. R., 13 Eq. 133.

(n) As to the materiality of this circumstance, see per Jessel, M.R., in Re Methuen and Blore's Contract, 16 Ch. D. 696. Compare also the effect of the decision in Saumarez v. Saumarez (supra) as stated by Wood, V.-C., in Buchanan v. Harrison, 31 L. J. Ch. at p. 82 : "Lord Cottenham says, and I entirely follow the reasoning, that where the testator used the word property he only meant personal estate, but he did mean to dispose of all his property whatever it was. He believed he was passing the whole of his estate, but believed it was personal property." The decision in Longley v. Longley was referred to by Buckley, J. (whether with approval or disapproval does not appear) in Kirby-Smith v. Parnell, supra.

V. General untechnical Words held to pass Land.—"In some cases," as Mr. Jarman remarks (o), "real estate has been held to pass under words, even more vague and informal than any which have yet been the subject of consideration. Thus, in Hopewell v. Ackland (p), where the testator devised as follows:—'I devise all my lands, tenements, and hereditaments to A. Item, I devise all my goods and chattels, monies, debts, and whatsoever else I have (in the world (q)) not before disposed of, to the said A., he paying my debts and legacies; and make him executor.' Trevor, C.J., held, that by these words an estate in fee passed; for it could not have any effect upon the personal estate, because that was given away as fully as possible by the words precedent; therefore it must extend to the remainders in the real estate.

CHAP. XXVII.
Real estate held to pass by vague and informal words.
"Whatsoever else I have not before disposed of."

"The reasoning of the learned Chief Justice deserves attention, though the point seems not to have been necessary to the construction that the devisee took a fee; for the prior devise was clearly adequate to carry all the lands, and the charge upon the devisee would enlarge his estate in those lands to a fee (r).

"So, in Huxtep v. Brooman (s), the words 'all I am worth' were held to comprise land in the will of a very illiterate testator. . . . This case may be considered as exhibiting the extreme point to which the decisions have gone, in applying general informal words to real estate. Nothing could be more comprehensive or more untechnical than the expression here used. The case was cited with approbation by Gibbs, C.J., in Doe v. Rout (t)," and by the Court of Exchequer in Davenport v. Coltman (u), where it was said never to have been doubted. The only apparent exception is a dictum of Sir E. Sugden, to the effect that it might be a little difficult to support it (v).

"All I am worth," held to carry land.

In Pitman v. Stevens (w), the testator devised as follows: "I give and bequeath all that I shall die possessed of, real and personal, of what nature and kind soever, after my just debts are paid. I do hereby appoint P. my residuary legatee and executor"; and, in a subsequent part of his will, he desired his legatee and executor to let his sister be interred in a certain vault, and recommended him to do something handsome for the testator's

"All that I shall die possessed of, real and personal," held to pass realty.

(o) First ed. p. 680.

(p) Salk. 239, 1 Com. 164.

(q) These words do not occur in Salkeld.

(r) See post, Chap. XLV.

(s) 1 Br. C. C. 437. As to the words "I make A. my sole heir," see Taylor v. Web, Sty. 301, 307, 319; 2

Sid. 75, ante, p. 455, n. (l). As to the expression "my fortune," see ante, p. 991.

(t) 7 Taunt. at p. 81, ante, p. 992.

(u) 9 M. & Wels. 481 stated post, p. 1013.

(v) 1 D. & War. 439.

(w) 15 East, 505.

CHAP. XXVII.

“Every thing else I die possessed of.”

brother-in-law at his death, or when he should want anything to live on : it was held that P. took a fee in the real estate (x).

So, in Wilce v. Wilce (y), a testator commenced his will as follows :—“As touching such worldly property, wherewith it hath pleased God to bless me in this world, I give, devise and dispose of the same in the following manner and form.” He then proceeded to make several dispositions of land and goods, and concluded with the following residuary clause :—“All the rest of my worldly goods, bills, bonds, notes, book debts and ready money, and every thing else I die possessed of, I give to my son George, whom I make my whole and sole executor.” It was held, on the authority of the preceding cases, especially Smith v. Coffin (z), that certain real estate, not included in the specific devises, passed by this clause to the testator’s son George, and that he took the fee. Seeing what was the testator’s intention, as disclosed by the preamble, the Court could not but say he had employed sufficient words to carry it into effect (a).

And in Evans v. Jones (b), where a testator appointed his wife executrix, and continued—“First, I give and bequeath to my said wife all my household furniture, linen, glass, china, plate, farming stock, and all my personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature or kind soever, or whatever I may be possessed of at the time of my decease” : it was held that the testator’s real estate passed to the wife.

In Day v. Daveron (c), a testator gave his house M. to his wife (without words of limitation), and his house N. to his wife for life, together with his household goods, &c. ; but if she married again (which she did not do), “the above property was to become the property” of his daughter for life, remainder to her children ; but if his wife remained unmarried, then, after her death, he gave house N. to the daughter for her life and her children. The testator then went on : “I appoint my wife sole executrix and residuary legatee to all other property I may possess at my decease. . . . Now concerning my funded property, I hereby give” one moiety to the wife and the other to the daughter.

“I appoint my wife executrix and residuary legatee to all other property I may possess at my decease.”

(x) As to Barclay v. Collett, 6 Scott, 408, 4 Bing. N. C. 658, cited by Mr. Jarman in this section, see ante, p. 1007, n. (z).

(y) 5 M. & Pay. 682, 7 Bing. 664.

(z) Ante, p. 996.

(a) But as to its carrying the fee, see Chap. XLV.

(b) 46 L. J. Ex. 280. See also War- ner v. Warner, 15 Jur. 141 ; Phillips v. Beal, 25 Beav. 25 ; Re Gyles, 14 Ir. Ch. 311, where a gift of “everything I may die possessed of, except the household furniture,” was held to pass real estate.

(c) 12 Sim. 200 ; Warren v. Newton, Dru. 464.

Sir L. Shadwell held that the wife, under the residuary clause, took the remainder in house M. He thought it clear, that this clause did not refer to personal property; for the testator almost immediately afterwards spoke of his funded property in a distinct sentence (d).

In Davenport v. Coltman (e), a testator, after certain pecuniary legacies, bequeathed to his wife for her life his freehold house at C., together with the use of plate, &c., and of interest of stock; and declared that, "at her decease, it was his will that A. and B. should divide equally between them, as residuary legatees, whatever he might die possessed of, except what was already mentioned in favour of others." And after appointing executors, he authorized them to sell certain leaseholds immediately, "but the house at C. must not be sold as long as my wife lives." On a case from Chancery, the Court of Exchequer certified their opinion that A. and B. were entitled in fee simple to the whole real estate of the testator at the death of the wife, subject, as to the house at C., to the wife's life estate. They relied partly on the generality of the expression "whatever I may die possessed of," which they thought was not to be limited to personal estate, being, in their opinion, equivalent to "all I am worth" (f), or "all I have" (g); but they also relied on the direction to postpone the sale of the house at C., which could only refer to a sale for convenience of division between A. and B. according to the terms of the residuary clause, and that, if any real property was included in that clause, all must be so. Sir L. Shadwell, V.-C., confirmed the certificate; observing that besides the terms "whatever I shall die possessed of" (which he thought would comprehend estates in fee simple), there was an exception of "what was already mentioned in favour of others," and that one of the things already mentioned was the possession of the freehold house for the life of the wife.

It is true that in Monk v. Mawdsley (h), Leach, V.-C., said that in their ordinary sense the words "possessed of" would not import real estate, but as the context in that case was sufficient to shew that the testatrix did not mean them to include real estate, the remark of the V.-C. is merely a dictum (i).

(d) As to the effect of appointing a person "residuary legatee," without any gift to him, see post, p. 1016 and ante, p. 1011.

(e) 9 M. & Wels. 481, 12 Sim. 588.

(f) Huxtep v. Brooman, 1 Br. C. C. 437, ante, p. 1011.

(g) See per Bayley, J., Doe v. Mor- gan, 6 B. & Cr. at p. 518, 9 D. & Ry. 633.

(h) 1 Sim. 286. Compare remarks by the same judge upon the word "possessed" in Noel v. Hoy, and Thomas v. Phelps, ante, p. 1005.

(i) Compare Cook v. Jaggard, L. R., 1 Ex. 125, where the words were "or whatever I may be possessed of or "A. and B. to take as residuary legatees whatever I may die possessed of."

"All I may die possessed of," held not to pass realty.

CHAP. XXVII.

"What little I have to call my own."

"My fortune" confined to personalty by context.

In Henderson v. Farbridge (j), it was held that the equity of redemption in a copyhold estate did not pass under an informal gift of "what little I have left to call my own."

In Maitland v. Adair (k), a testator devised his estate at T. to his nephew A., and bequeathed money legacies to several other relations; and by a codicil directed his undisposed-of money to be divided among his said relations in the proportion he had bequeathed (l) the other part of his fortune; Lord Rosslyn held that the word "fortune" must mean money legacies, and that A. was not entitled to a share in respect of the value of the T. estate.

"Rest and residue," held not to include real estate, notwithstanding previous devise of land.

In Bebb v. Penoyre (m), real estate was held not to be included in a devise of "the rest and residue," on the ground of the restraining effect of the immediate context, although there was a previous devise of land in the same will. The testator, after various devises and bequests, concluded his will in the following words:—"I order the lease of my house, with all the furniture (except the eight worked chairs), to be sold, and all the rest and residue to be divided among the four daughters of A., share and share alike; and I appoint C. and D. executors." It was contended, that the reversion in fee of a moiety of certain houses devised by the will for the life of the devisee, passed by the words "rest and residue." But Lord Ellenborough thought that these words, in the place in which they stood, and so accompanied, must mean property of a similar nature to the lease of the house and furniture before mentioned, that is, his personal estate. He considered the division ordered was to be made by the executors immediately afterwards named.

"All the rest."

But in Attree v. Attree (n), a testatrix gave a certain house and garden (which were leasehold) to A., then bequeathed several pecuniary legacies, and proceeded, "and all the rest to be divided between the daughters of B." It was held by Sir J. Romilly, that "rest" included the rest of all the property real as well as personal.

entitled to." In both these cases the wills were before the Wills Act, so that the persons to whom land was expressly devised only took life estates, and the question was whether the subsequent general words were sufficient to pass the remainders in fee, as in Hopewell v. Ackland, ante, p. 1011; and see the following cases where the residuary devises contained the word "estate" or "property": Scott v. Alberry, ante, p. 993; Roe v. Gilbert, ante, p. 994; Day v. Davenport, ante, p. 1012; Saumarez

v. Saumarez, ante, p. 1007.

(j) 1 Russ. 479. It was also held not to pass under a gift of "all my effects."

(k) 3 Ves. 231.

(l) As to this word vide ante, p. 1009, note (k).

(m) 11 East, 160. As to the effect of the context in restraining the force of such words as "estate," "property," &c., see ante, p. 1000.

(n) L. R., 11 Eq. 280.

And in Smyth v. Smyth (o), where a testator made his will thus, "I give to A. 100*l.*, also to B. 50*l.*; and lastly, I give my sheep and all the rest, residue, moneys, chattels and all other my effects to be equally divided among my four brothers (naming them) whom I appoint executors"; it was held by Sir R. Malins, V.-C., that "rest and residue" were sufficient to carry real estate, and were not cut down by the subsequent enumeration. Indeed, he thought the realty would pass under the word "effects" alone, but in this he perhaps went too far (p).

In Re Andrew's Estate (q), a testator, after giving his real estates "Et cetera." and all his personal estate and effects to his wife for her life, gave to certain relatives after her death "an equal share of my personal estates, &c. &c."; it was held that this latter gift included the real estate of the testator (r).

There are several cases in which such words as "I make A. B. my heir," have been held to operate as a general devise of the testator's real estate (s). "I make A. my heir."

In Gould v. Gould (t), a testator by his will gave his real estate to trustees upon trusts for his sister; by a codicil, in which he called his nephew his heir at law, he directed that the making of the codicil should not extend to give his trustees, for the benefit of his sister, any after-acquired freeholds or copyholds, but that the same should descend, as to freeholds to his heir at law, and as to customary estates, to his customary heir: it was held this did not prevent her from taking by descent after-acquired copyholds, she being the testator's customary heir.

VI. Words descriptive of Personality only, held, by force of Context, to include Real Estate.—"It remains to be observed," says Mr. Jarman (u), "that words applicable exclusively to personal estate have sometimes, by force of the context, been held to include land. This frequently happens where an expression is evidently used as referential to and synonymous with an anterior word, clearly descriptive of real estate; in which case its extent of operation is measured, not by its own inherent strength, but by the import of its synonym."

Words descriptive of personal estate only, held to carry land—when.

"Thus, in Hope d. Brown v. Taylor (v), where a testator, after Word legacy held to refer to real estate antecedently devised.

(o) 8 Ch. D. 561.

(p) See post, p. 1019.

(q) 50 W. R. 471.

(r) As to the effect of the expression

"et cetera" see post, p. 1030.

(s) Marret v. Sly, 2 Sid. 75, s.c. sub nom. Taylor v. Web, Styles 301, 307, 319; Rogers v. Rogers, 3 P. W. 193; Parker v. Nickson, 1 D. J. & S. 177 ("I acknowledge A.B. to be my heir-at-law").

(t) 32 Bea. 391.

(u) First ed. p. 684.

(v) 1 Burr. 268. See also Hardacre

CHAP. XXVII.

devising certain lands to A., B. and C., and giving pecuniary legacies to B. and C., provided that, if either of the persons before named died without issue, then the said legacy should be divided equally between them that were alive: it was held that the word 'legacy' in this clause extended to the land before devised. Foster, J., observed that one of the persons named had no pecuniary legacy."

"Residuary legatee."

In several of the cases cited in the previous section, there was an appointment of a person to be the testator's residuary legatee of whatever property the testator might die possessed of, and although the words "residuary legatee" are properly applicable to personalty only (w), it was held in each of these cases that the appointment took effect as a devise of the testator's realty (x). And an appointment of a person to be "my residuary legatee" will have this effect if the testator shews an intention to dispose by his will of all his property, real as well as personal. For example, in Hughes v. Pritchard (y), where a testator began thus: "As to my estate which God has bestowed on me, I do make this my last will and testament as follows (that is to say):" he then devised certain freehold land to A. for life with remainder over, and another freehold farm to B. for life with other remainders over; next he gave pecuniary legacies, then a specific legacy, and afterwards more pecuniary legacies, "and I make A., C. and D. my residuary legatees": it was held by Jessel, M.R., and James and Bramwell, L.J.J., that the testator's real estate not specifically devised passed to A., C. and D.

"I appoint A. residuary legatee," held to carry real estate.

"I leave A. residuary legatee," held not to carry after-acquired real estate.

But in Re Methuen and Blore's Contract (z), a testatrix made

v. Nash, 5 T. R. 716; Brady v. Cubitt, Dougl. 31, 40. As to the words "share," "share aforesaid," "portion," and similar expressions, as applying to one or more of several preceding subjects, vide Doe d. Stopford v. Stopford, 5 East, 501; Hardman v. Johnson, 3 Mer. 347; Doe d. Gibson v. Gell, 2 B. & Cr. 680, 4 D. & Ry. 387; Doe d. Driver v. Bowling, 5 B. & Ald. 722; Scrivener v. Smith, 2 D. M. & G. 399.

(w) Doe d. Roberts v. Roberts, 7 M. & Wels. 382; Lea v. Grundy, 1 Jur. N. S. 951; Windus v. Windus, 21 Beav. 373, aff. 6 D. M. & G. 549, diss. K. Bruce, L.J.

(z) Pitman v. Stevens, 15 East, 505, ante, p. 1011; Day v. Davenport, 12 Sim. 200, ante, p. 1012; Davenport v. Coltman, 9 M. & Wels. 481, 12 Sim. 588; Alleyne v. Alleyne, 2 Jo. & Lat. 544, per Sugden, C.; Evans v. Crosbie, 15 Sim.

600. And see Kellett v. Kellett 3 Dow, 248, and Singleton v. Tomlinson, 3 App. Ca., 404, stated ante, p. 773; Wildes v. Davies, 1 Sm. & Gif. 475; in each of which the surplus proceeds of converted realty were held on the context to pass to persons appointed "residuary legatees."

(y) 6 Ch. D. 24. See also Warren v. Newton, Dru. 464 ("residuary legatee to all my property"); Re Salter, 44 L. T. 603, and Loftus v. Stoney, 17 Ir. Ch. 178 ("leave and bequeath" residue of "my properties" to children "as residuary legatees").

(z) 16 Ch. D. 696; see also Gethin v. Allen, 23 L. R. Ir. 236; Hillas v. Hillas, 10 Ir. Eq. 134; Wills v. Wills, 1 Dr. & W. 439; Re Gyles, 14 Ir. Ch. 311; Cooney v. Nicholls, 7 L. R. Ir. 107.

her will as follows:—"I commit to paper my wishes respecting the disposal of my property . . . Everything I am possessed of I leave to my sister for her life, after her decease I give and devise as here annexed. . . . My two nephews H. and F. I leave my executors, and the latter residuary legatee after the demise of my sister": Jessel, M.R., held that after-acquired realty of which the testatrix was possessed at her death did not pass by the will. He distinguished this case from that of Hughes v. Pritchard on the ground that here there was no direct indication of intention to give all property, real as well as personal, as there was in that case, and said that though the words here used might well pass everything which the testatrix had, including realty, to the sister for life, there was no indication of intention that the remainderman must necessarily take all that was given to the tenant for life. His Lordship attached some importance to the fact that at the date of the will the testatrix had no real estate.

A similar construction prevailed in Re Morris (a); in that case the question was simplified by the fact that the "residuary legatee" was tenant for life of the testator's real estate under a preceding devise.

In fact, it may be laid down as a general rule that the mere appointment or nomination by a testator of a person as "my residuary legatee" will not operate as a devise to him of the testator's residuary real estate; and even where a testator throughout his will uses "bequeath" and "legacy duty" as applicable to real estate, this will not justify the Court in construing "residuary legatee" as equivalent to "residuary devisee," if the will specifically disposes of all the real estate which the testator was possessed of at the date of the will (b).

An appointment of three persons as joint executors of "my entire property, for the purpose of putting it to the best advantage of my sister, wife and children," operates as a devise of fee-simple lands (c).

"Executors of my entire property."

Upon the principle already stated, the word "effects" (though applicable strictly to personalty only (d)), has been held to

"Effects."

(a) 71 L. T. 179.

(b) Re Gibbs, [1907] 1 Ch. 465.

(c) Murphy v. Donnelly, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 111.

(d) Camfield v. Gilbert, 3 East, 516; Henderson v. Farbridge, 1 Russ. 479, ante, p. 1014; Doe d. Hick v. Dring, 2 M. & Sel. 448; Doe d. Haw v. Earles, 15 M. & Wels. 450; Doe d. Morgan v. Morgan, 6 Barn. & Cr. 512, ante, p. 997; but see the dicta of Malins, V.-C., Smyth v. Smyth, 8 Ch. D. 561. The decision itself was referred to without disapprobation by the C. A. in Hall v. Hall, [1892] 1 Ch. 361.

CHAP. XXVII.

comprehend the several particulars before mentioned, consisting of both real and personal estate (e).

"Said effects," held to comprehend land previously mentioned.

As in Doe d. Chillecott v. White (f), where a testator after making several pecuniary bequests, devised to A. the income of a certain cottage, and to E. the half of a certain estate; and all the residue of his goods, chattels, rights, credits, personal and testamentary estate, and also his lands, tenements and hereditaments, he gave to his wife for life, whom he made sole executrix; and he allowed her to give what she thought proper of "her said effects" to her sisters, the said A. and E., for their lives; and, after the above lives were expired, he gave all his lands to J., who was his heir-at-law: it was held that the power of the widow extended to all the real and personal estate given to her for life, including the cottage in which A. had a life interest.

"Effects" may extend to real estate.

So, in Marquess of Titchfield v. Horncastle (g) real estate was held on the special wording of the will to pass under a gift of effects.

"Said effects bequeathed to E." referred to land before devised.

So, in Den d. Franklin v. Trout (h), where the devise was to E. of "all my estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, which I shall be possessed of or entitled to at the time of my decease," in trust to pay funeral expenses and debts. The testator then subjected his "said effects bequeathed to E. to the following legacies," and went on to enumerate certain pecuniary legacies, and gave to S. a house in W. He directed that all the above legacies should be paid out of his effects by the said E. within twelve months after his decease, and then gave and bequeathed all the residue and remainder of his "said effects" to the said E., her heirs and assigns, for ever. It was held, that she took the remainder in fee in the house devised to S., (which was the testator's only real property,) by this devise. Lord Ellenborough relied much on the testator having included the house among the enumerated legacies, by which he had explained himself

(e) A gift of "real effects," as already mentioned, will, as a general rule pass real estate: Hogan v. Jackson, ante, p. 994.

(f) 1 East, 33.

(g) 2 Jur. 610. See also Milsome v. Long, 3 Jur. N. S. 1073; Phillips v. Beal, 25 Beav. 25; Re Sheridan, 17 L. R. Ir. 179. In Att.-Gen. for British Honduras v. Bristowe (6 App. Ca. at p. 149), where a testator used these words "I leave them and their heirs and assigns all my effects . . . (my lands and effects in Jamaica excepted),"

Sir M. E. Smith, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, said: "Their Lordships think that the word 'effects' would pass land." As to the influence of the words "of what nature and kind soever," following the word "effects," see Doe v. Dring, 2 M. & Sel. at p. 454.

(h) 15 East, 394. Mr. Jarman's note "as to the effect of some referential expressions of frequent occurrence" has been omitted; the cases cited by him will be found in Chap. XX.

to describe that property under the denomination of "effects" and "legacies." CHAP. XXVII.

In Doe d. Haw v. Earles (i), a testator made his will as follows : "I dispose of all my effects as follows :—all my household goods, live stock, furniture, plate, wearing apparel and other effects at this time in my possession, or that hereafter may become my property, to my wife" : and a second husband was to have no power of disposition over "any part of the property which was then or might thereafter be in his (the testator's) possession." Platt, B., admitting that the word "effects" alone could not include real estate, was induced by the context to think the testator had here used "effects" as synonymous with the word "property," and that real estate passed. But Pollock, C.B., and Parke, B., were of opinion that there was nothing in the will to extend the natural meaning of the word "effects," which they held meant personal things only.

In Hall v. Hall (j), a testator "gave, devised and bequeathed" to his wife all his furniture, goods, chattels and effects "whatsoever the same might be or wheresoever the same might be situate," and requested her to pay his debts, &c., and after the death of his wife he "gave, devised and bequeathed" to be equally divided amongst three of his children until they attained twenty-one, "the furniture and moneys or any property" which his wife might have become entitled to through his will or through any other source ; and after they attained twenty-one, he directed that "the furniture, goods, chattels and effects, whatsoever the same may be or wheresoever it may be situated," and any moneys his wife might be entitled to at the time of his decease, should be equally divided amongst his six children. The testator's personalty was of small value, the bulk of his property consisting of some real estate to which he became entitled about a year before he made his will. It was held by Fry, L.J., and by the Court of Appeal, that the testator intended to dispose of all his property, and that the real estate passed by the will.

Again, the phrase "worldly goods," though properly applicable only to personal estate, will include the realty if aided by the context. Thus, in Wright v. Shelton (k), where a testator gave to trustees all his worldly goods of what nature and kind soever and wheresoever they might be found, upon the trusts undermentioned ; his wife to have possession while she lived,

"Effects" held not to pass real estate.

"Devise" of "effects" "wheresoever situate."

"Worldly goods" held on the context to pass real estate.

(i) 15 M. & Wels. 450.

361.

(j) [1891] 3 Ch. 389 ; [1892] 1 Ch.

(k) 18 Jur. 445.

CHAP. XXVII.

but if she married, to quit possession : all his debts and legacies to be paid out of his personal estate and W. Close. To his son A. 20*l.* and H. Close : to his children B., C. and D. the rest of his worldly goods : it was held by Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., that the real estate was included in the gift of "worldly goods."

"Personal estates," held sufficient upon the context to pass realty.

Even the expression "personal estates," or "personal estate and effects" (l), will carry realty if the testator has clearly shown his intention that it shall do so. As in Doe d. Tofield v. Tofield (m), where, after some pecuniary bequests and a particular devise of realty, the testator proceeded to give to his wife all his stock, &c., ready money, &c., "and personal estates whatsoever and wheresoever, subject nevertheless to the above legacies," during widowhood : but if she married she was to resign "all my personal estates to the after-mentioned legatees in manner following" : first, he gave and bequeathed to J. the house and premises in which he the testator then dwelt, with the closes adjoining, to hold in fee ; "and the remaining of my personal estates" to other persons in fee. The Court of K. B. were clearly of opinion that the wife took the real estate for her life (n).

Mr. Jarman observes (o) that the "cases in which words, in themselves clearly inapplicable to real estate, have been held to extend thereto by force of the context, are the exact converse of those discussed in the first division of the present chapter.

"Said house, goods and chattels," (omitting the word "lands" before used), did not pass lands.

"But in Roe d. Walker v. Walker (p), a testator devised to his wife a certain house, with all his lands, goods and chattels, whatsoever and wheresoever, for her life ; and if his aforesaid wife should die before his sons H. and R. came to the age of fifteen, then that his house, lands, goods and chattels, that is to say, the rents arising from the same, should be employed in bringing them up, until the age of fifteen. The testator then declared his will to be, that his aforesaid house, goods and chattels, equally should be divided between all his sons and daughters that should be living at that time, share and share alike. It was held, that under the last devise, the lands did not pass.

Remark on Doe v. White, Den v. Trout, and Roe v. Walker.

"It will be observed that in Doe d. Chilcott v. White, and in

(l) In "personal estate and property" or "personal property, estate and effects," the word "personal" will generally override the whole, ante, p. 999.

(m) 11 East, 246. See also Cadman v. Cadman, L. R., 13, Eq. 470 ; Re Smalley, 49 L. T. 662 ; Re Wass 95

L. T. 758.

(n) Compare Re Andrew's Estate, ante, p. 1015.

(o) First ed. p. 689.

(p) 3 B. & P. 375. Cf. Lethbridge v. Kirkman, 25 L. J. Q. B. 89, 2 Jur. N. S. 372.

Den d. Franklin v. Trout, the word 'effects' was used as synonymous with, and descriptive of the same subject as, the anterior expressions, which unquestionably comprised real estate; but in Roe v. Walker, the testator had in the third devise adopted precisely the same phraseology as in the first and second, with the omission of a single word, and that word the only one which applied to the land. It was too much, therefore, to infer that these words, with so material an omission, were intended to describe the same subject as the preceding expressions, however reasonable might be the conjecture that the omission was undesigned. If the testator in the third gift had used terms of description not exactly corresponding, so far as they went, with those of the preceding devises, the difficulty of adopting this construction might not have been so insuperable. It would not then have imposed upon the Court the necessity of treating the same words in the several gifts as descriptive of a different subject."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

WHAT WORDS WILL COMPRISE THE GENERAL PERSONAL ESTATE.

	PAGE		PAGE
I. "Estate," "Property," &c...	1022	III. General Residue held to
II. Extent of words "Goods,"		pass by word "Money,"
"Chattels," "Effects," &c.,		and other informal Words	1033
when restrained by Context	1022

"Estate,"
"property,"
&c.

I.—"Estate," "Property," &c.—When a testator makes use of such expressions as "all my estate," or "all my property," a question as to their effect can hardly arise, for these are words of the widest possible meaning (a). But if the testator adds some qualification or description—as where he bequeaths all his property in a particular locality to A. and all his property in another locality to B.; or where he disposes of "all my property, brewery, &c."—difficult questions may arise (b).

In Re Johnson (c), the testatrix made some specific bequests, and continued: "With the exception of the above legacies I direct that the remainder of my household property, including house in M., should be sold," &c.; it was held that the entire residuary personal estate passed.

Word
"effects,"
"goods," or "chattels," whether it comprises entire personal
estate.

II.—Extent of words "Goods," "Chattels," "Effects," &c., when restrained by Context.—Mr. Jarman states the general rule thus (d): "The word effects (e), and even the word goods (f), or chattels (g), will, it seems, comprise the entire personal estate of a

(a) As to "estate" see ante, p. 990; as to "property" see Re Prater, 37 Ch. D. 481; Doe v. Earles, 15 M. & W. 450, ante, p. 1001. As to "fortune" see ante, p. 991, and Slingsby v. Grainger, 7 H. L. C. 273. As to "patrimony" see ante, p. 991.

(b) Waite v. Morland, 12 Jur. N. S. 763. As to the locality of shares, bonds and other choses in action, and as to gifts of personality described with reference to its locality, see Chaps. XXX. and XXXV.

(c) 92 L. T. 357.

(d) First ed. p. 692.

(e) Hogan v. Jackson, Cowp. 299; Campbell v. Prescott, 15 Ves. 500; Hearne v. Wiggington, 6 Madd. 119, post.

(f) See Portman v. Willis, Cro. El. 386, where it was held that leaseholds passed under a bequest of "the residue of my goods." See also Anon., 1 P. W. 267.

(g) Co. Lit. 118 a.; Tilley v. Simpson, 2 T. R. 659, n., per Lord Hardwicke. So a bequest of all the testator's "moveables" would, it is said, if testator, unless restrained by the context within narrower limits (h). Where, however, such general expressions stand immediately associated with less comprehensive words, they have been sometimes restrained to articles ejusdem generis; the specified effects being considered as denoting the species of property, which the larger term was intended to comprise; and this upon a principle, evidently analogous to that on which (as we have seen) the words 'estate' and 'property' have been confined to personalty by their juxtaposition with words descriptive of that species of property.

"As in Cook v. Oakley (i), where the testator (who was sailor on ship-board) gave to his mother if alive, his gold rings, buttons and chest of clothes, and to his loving friend F. (a shipmate), his red box, arrack and all things not before bequeathed, and made him sole executor. Sir J. Trevor, M.R., held, that the testator's share in a leasehold estate did not pass by these words.

Words "and all things" restricted by prior terms of description.

"The circumstance of a specific or pecuniary legacy being given to the same legatee (j), or of the general bequest being followed by dispositions of particular portions of the personal property to other persons, has commonly been considered to favour the supposition, that such bequest was not to comprise the general residue.

"Thus, in Rawlings v. Jennings (k), where the testator gave to his wife certain Bank stock, together with all his 'household furniture and effects, of what nature or kind soever,' that he might be possessed of at the time of his decease; and then bequeathed certain stock and money legacies to other persons, Sir W. Grant, M.R., held, that the bequest to the wife was confined to articles of the nature of those specified, and did not comprise the general residue; observing, that part of the property being given to her afterwards (l), the word 'effects' must receive a more limited interpretation.

Word "effects" restrained by the context.

unrestrained by the context, pass the whole purely personal estate; Steignes v. Steignes, Mos. 296.

(h) A gift of "effects," &c., in a particular house, country, or other locality, is of course not a general bequest (see Chap. XXX., where bequests of property in a particular place are considered). A bequest of effects, &c., in a particular house "or elsewhere" is, however, a general bequest: In bonis Scarborough, 30 L. J. Pr. 85.

(i) 1 P. W. 302; but it appears from R. L. 1715 A., fo. 191, b., that the M.R. based his decision mainly on the circumstance that the testator was not aware that he possessed the leasehold interest, and therefore could not have intended to bequeath it. See also Boon v. Cornforth, 2 Ves. sen. 277; Cavendish v. Cavendish, 1 Br. C. C. 467; Porter v. Tournay, 3 Ves. 311; Hunt v. Hort, 3 Br. C. C. 311; Re Ludlow, 1 Sw. & Tr. 29.

(j) See Trafford v. Berrige, post, p. 1025, note (t).

(k) 13 Ves. 39.

(l) But according to the statement of the will in the report, the only other bequest to the wife is of the Bank stock, which is anterior. In Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. C. at p. 304, K. Bruce, V.-C., observed upon this case, that perhaps the word "household" belonged to the word "effects" as much as to the word "furniture": which would of course have a restrictive

CHAP. XXVIII.

Remark on Rawlings v.
Jennings.

"The words here were very general, but the manner in which the testator, after making the bequest in question, had gone on to give specific and pecuniary legacies, (though he did not complete the disposition of his personal estate by a residuary clause,) seemed hardly reconcileable with the supposition, that the prior gift to the wife was intended to embrace the general residue, as it is more natural, though certainly not invariable, for a testator to reserve his residuary disposition until the end of his will (m). Had the decision rested solely on the bequest of the Bank stock to the wife, its soundness would have been questionable; for the argument, that the express gift of part shows that a legatee is not to take the remainder, admits of this answer, that the testator may have intended to place him in the favoured position of a specific legatee pro tanto" (n).

Word
"goods" restrained by subsequent gifts.

Again, in Wrench v. Jutting (o), where a testator bequeathed "all his household furniture, plate, linen, china, books, pictures and all other goods of whatever kind to A.," and then proceeded to direct that certain specified particulars of his property should be divided, after payment of his debts, as "follows: 50*l.* to B.; 100*l.* to C., &c.; 3,000*l.* to 4,000*l.*, or whatever remaining sum or sums, to A." Lord Langdale, M.R., said, that if the first clause had been the only one in the will, there would have been strong reason for extending the operation of the words "all other goods," &c.; but that the testator did not intend all his estate to pass was shewn by his subsequently stating what were his intentions as to a particular part of it. Those words must, therefore, be restricted to goods ejusdem generis.

Remark on preceding cases.

In each of the two last cases, the dispositions of particular portions of the personal property, which followed the disputed clause, comprised a gift to the same person who was entitled under the first clause; that, at least, was the ground (however unsupported by the actual fact) upon which Sir W. Grant expressly went in the case before him; and where other persons are effect, Marshall v. Bentley, 1 Jur. N. S. 787; Newman v. Newman (No. 2), 26 Beav. 220; and compare Michell v. Michell, stated post.

(m) See 1 Russ. 146; 1 Y. & C. C. C. 301.

(n) And, accordingly, see Leighton v. Bailie, 3 My. & K. 267, post; Hearne v. Wigginton, 6 Mad. 119, post; Brooke v. Turner, 7 Sim. 671; Rose v. Rose, 17 Ves. 347.

(o) 3 Beav. 521. In Collier v. Squire,

3 Russ. 467, it was held that stock did not pass under a bequest of the testator's house, and all his household furniture, plate, china, books, linen and every other "article" belonging to him, both in and out of his house, and which might not be in his will mentioned; the M.R. remarking that the testator could scarcely say of stock that it might not be mentioned or included in the articles specified.

alone contemplated in the subsequent dispositions, the argument in favour of the restrictive construction is much weakened: for, as before observed, though the residuary clause is usually, it need not necessarily be, the last in the will: and any particular bequest which follows that clause may, if made to different legatees, reasonably be read as an exception out of the property comprised in it (p).

Mr. Jarman continues (q): "A more forcible argument in favour of the restricted construction, however, occurs where the testator has added to the equivocal words in question terms descriptive of a particular species of property, which those words in their larger sense would comprehend. In such case, the adoption of the more comprehensive meaning would have the effect of rendering the superadded expression nugatory; and make the testator employ additional language, without any additional meaning.

Subsequent
explanatory restrictive
expressions.

"Thus, in Timewell v. Perkins (r), where the will was in the following words:—'I give to M. T. all mortgages, ground rents, judgments, &c., whatever I have or shall have at my death, as plate, jewels, linen, household goods, coach and horses, for her use.' Lord Hardwicke (s), held, that goldsmiths' notes and bank bills did not pass under the bequest: for though there was no doubt but the general words, whatever I have or shall have at my death, would have passed them; yet the particular words which followed, 'as plate, jewels,' &c., confined and restrained them to things of the same nature; his Lordship observing that it was so laid down in Strafford v. Berridge (t).

(p) See Rogers v. Thomas, 2 Kee. 8; Martin v. Glover, 1 Coll. 269; Arnold v. Arnold, 2 My. & K. 365; In bonis Sheppard, 48 L. J. Pr. 62. "A well established rule of construction," per Jessel, M.R., in Lysaght v. Edwards, 2 Ch. D. at p. 513.

(q) First ed. p. 694.

(r) 2 Atk. 102. But this case is of doubtful authority, and probably would not be followed at the present day. See Fisher v. Hepburn, and other cases cited, post. p. 1031.

(s) The judge was Fortescue, J.

(t) "[Trafford v. Berridge], 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 201, pl. 14. A. bequeathed all his goods, chattels, household stuff, furniture, and other things, which were then, or should be, in his house at the time of his death. Decreed, that money in the house did not pass: for, by the words other things should be intended things of like nature and species with those before mentioned; see also Anon., Finch, 8, where a bequest of all the goods and chattels, plate, jewels, household stuff and stock upon the ground, in and belonging to the testator's house in N., was held not to include a sum of money found in the house; and Roberts v. Kuffin, 2 Atk. 112, where a bequest of all goods and things of every kind and sort whatever, which should be found in a certain closet, was held not to comprise a sum of money found in the closet. In the two last cases some stress was laid on the fact of a pecuniary legacy being bequeathed to the same legatee.

"The several preceding cases illustrate the application of the principle stated in the text, to bequests of personal moveable property answering to a certain locality." (Note by Mr. Jarman.) The question of gifts of chattels, &c., described with reference to their locality (which does not strictly belong here) is discussed in Chap. XXX., and

CHAP. XXVIII.

"Goods, wearing apparel, of what nature and kind soever, except my gold watch."

"So, in Crichton v. Symes (u), where a testatrix bequeathed to A. and B., all her goods, wearing apparel, of what nature and kind soever, except her gold watch. Lord Hardwicke was of opinion, that the words were not intended to be a residuary clause; his Lordship observing, that the testatrix afterwards gave a legacy of 50*l.* to her executor, and that there was not the word residue. . . . It was his opinion, that, as the words stood in the will, she intended to give only her wearing apparel, ornaments of her person, household goods and furniture, and no other parts of her personal estate; the testatrix here meant to give, not only what was properly clothes, but the ornaments of her person, and the exception of the gold watch showed the latitude of the expression.

"In some instances, however, the argument in favour of the restricted construction, founded on subsequent expressions, descriptive of a particular species of property, has not been allowed to prevail against the force of the previous general words.

Subsequent
expressions held not to be restrictive.

"Thus, in Bennet v. Batchelor (w), where a testator bequeathed unto P. (to whom he had before devised real estates, and had also given specific legacies) all his household goods, books, linen, wearing apparel and all other, not before bequeathed, goods and chattels that he should be in possession of at the day of his decease, except the plate and legacies before and thereafter given and bequeathed; and he also bequeathed to the said P. all monies due from his (the testator's) tenants, and other persons. Lord Thurlow held, that the whole residue passed by the bequest; observing, in reference to the latter words, that the testator might not know that the debts would pass by the words 'goods and chattels' (x).

Exception,
where explanatory of doubtful
words.

"A conclusive ground for giving to equivocal words their larger signification, occurs where the bequest contains an exception of certain things, which such bequest, according to its restricted construction, would not comprise; the testator having in such a case afforded a key or explanation to his own ambiguous language, by showing that he considered that the bequest would, without the exception, have included the excepted articles. This question has generally arisen under gifts of goods and chattels, restricted to a certain locality; but the principle, it is obvious, is equally applicable to bequests not so restricted.

the meaning of such words as "furniture," "household effects," &c., in Chap. XXXV.

(u) 3 Atk. 61.

(w) 3 B. C. C. 28, 1 Ves. jun. 63; see also Fleming v. Burrows, 1 Russ. 276, post, p. 1028.

(x) See also Bland v. Lamb, 2 J. & W. 399.

“Thus, in Hotham v. Sutton (y), where A., having two sons and a daughter, B., C., and D., after bequeathing for their benefit a sum of 12,700*l.* Consols, gave all the residue of her personal estate and effects to her youngest children, C. and D., as therein mentioned. A. on the day of making her will executed a codicil, and revoked so much of her will as related to the bequest to her son C., of a share of her ‘plate, linen, household goods, and other effects, (money excepted,)’ and gave the whole thereof to her daughter. The question was, whether the revocation extended to the general residuary personal estate, or whether the words ‘and other effects’ were not restrained by the prior terms to articles ejusdem generis. Lord Eldon decided in favour of the former construction. He observed, ‘The doctrine appears now to be settled, that the words “other effects” in general, mean effects ejusdem generis. I cannot help entertaining a strong doubt, whether this testatrix, if asked whether she meant effects ejusdem generis, or contemplated the share of all which she had considered her effects in the will, would not have answered that the latter was her meaning. Her expression is conclusive upon that. Money cannot be represented as ejusdem generis with plate, linen and household goods. The express exception of money out of the other effects shows her understanding, that it would have passed by those words; that express words were required to exclude it, and by force of that exclusion of the excepted article, she says, she thought the words of her bequest would carry things non ejusdem generis. This disposition must, therefore, be taken to comprehend all that she has not excluded, which is money only’ (z).

“Household goods and other effects, money excepted.”

“It will be observed, that Lord Eldon, in the last case, lays it down, that the words ‘other effects,’ in general, mean effects ejusdem generis (a); but such a position seems scarcely to accord with some subsequent decisions about to be stated; one of which,

“Other effects.”

(y) “15 Ves. 319. Compare this case with Fleming v. Brook, 1 Sch. & Lef. 318, where Lord Redesdale, on the authority of Moore v. Moore, 1 B. C. C. 127, held, that a bequest of ‘all my property, of whatever nature or kind the same may be, that may be found in A.’s house, except a bond of B. in my writing-box,’ did not pass a mortgage security, and another bond and certain bankers’ receipts, which were in the house, on the ground that choses in action had no locality for this purpose (a doctrine which is now well settled, 1 Ves. 273, 1 B. C. C. 127, 129, n.); and his lordship being of opinion that an exception in the will of one security was not sufficient evidence of the testator’s intention to pass all the other choses in action.” (Note by Mr. Jarman.) But the decision would probably not be followed at the present day; it is clear that choses in action may pass by a gift of property in a particular locality: see Chap. XXX.

(z) See also Reid v. Reid, 25 Bea. 469.

(a) So per Lord Redesdale, Stuart v. M. of Bute, 1 Dow, 84, 87.

CHAP. XXVIII.

it will be seen, was determined by the same Judge who decided Rawlings v. Jennings (b), which case certainly carried the restricted construction to its extreme point; and probably was in Lord Eldon's view, when he advanced the above dictum.

"And all effects whatsoever," not restricted by association with more limited terms.

"Thus, in Campbell v. Prescott (c), where a testator gave to his sons A. and J. all his sugar-house, cupola and merchandize stock, with jewels, plate, household goods, furniture and all effects whatsoever, and appointed them executors; Sir W. Grant, M.R., held, that the whole personalty passed under this clause; remarking, that there was no case for the restrictive sense attempted to be put upon the words 'all my effects whatsoever.'

"Plate, &c., and effects that I shall die possessed of."

"So, in Michell v. Michell (d), Sir J. Leach, V.-C., held, that the personal estate of a testator passed under a bequest of all and singular his plate, linen, china, household goods, and furniture (e), and effects that he should die possessed of. His Honor considered that this construction of the word 'effects' was aided by the subsequent words, 'that I shall die possessed of,' and observed, that the expression was not household goods, furniture, and effects; but 'household goods and furniture and effects,' which imported a distinct sense in the word 'effects' (f).

"Or whatever else I may then be possessed of."

"Again, in Fleming v. Burrows (g), where a testator, after commencing his will with the words 'As for such temporal estate as God in his mercy hath bestowed upon me, I give and dispose of the same as followeth;' devised certain lands to his natural son D., adding, 'likewise my furniture, plate, books, and live stock, or whatever else I may then be possessed of at my decease, also my shipping and ropery concerns at W. and H.,' he paying the debts. It was contended that these words were to be confined to articles ejusdem generis with those specified before, i.e. furniture, &c., with which they stood immediately associated, and also on the ground of their being followed by the mention of specific articles, which were already included, if the previous words amounted to a general residuary gift; but Lord Gifford, M.R., held, on the authority of and the reasoning in Bennett v.

(b) Ante, p. 1023.

(c) 15 Ves. 500.

(d) 5 Mad. 69.

(e) Mr. Jarman's note on the meaning of the words "household goods" or "furniture," "live and dead stock," has been omitted, as it does not properly belong here; the cases which he refers to will be found in Chap. XXXV.

(f) See also Hearne v. Wigginton, 6 Madd. 119, where the testator, after some specific bequest, willed all his "other effects" to D. to be sold for his benefit, and it was held that this gave D. the general residue, although some of the particulars comprehended in it were not strictly speaking the subject of sale.

(g) 1 Russ. 276; see also Sutton v. Sharp, ib. 146; and In bonis Shephard, 48 L. J. P. 62.

Batchelor (h), that the circumstances were inadequate to restrain the generality of the bequest.

CHAP. XXVIII.

"Lastly, in the case of Kendall v. Kendall (i), where a testator, after bequeathing to his wife an annuity, proceeded thus: 'I also bequeath to my said wife all moneys, goods, chattels, clothing, &c., my property which may remain after paying the charges incident to my funeral, and such debts as I may owe at my death.' Sir J. Leach, M.R., held, that the residue, which consisted principally of stock, passed by these words: his Honor considering that the words 'clothing, &c.,' did not qualify the preceding general words.

"Moneys, goods, &c. my property which may remain."

"These cases indicate the disposition of the Judges of the present day to adhere to the sound rule, which gives to words of a comprehensive import their full extent of operation, unless some very distinct ground can be collected from the context for considering them as used in a special and restricted sense."

General remark on preceding cases.

The principle thus stated by Mr. Jarman is now clearly settled, and accordingly the general personal estate has been held to pass by such expressions as: "all my jewels, plate, linen, china, carriages, wines and other goods, chattels and effects" (j); "effects," followed by a reference to various particular kinds of property (k); "the residue of my property hereinbefore mentioned," the property expressly mentioned being "household furniture and other effects" (l); "furniture, plate, books and other personalty" (m); "personal property, consisting of money and clothes" (n) or other items (o); "household furniture, goods, ready money, and also all debts and securities belonging to me" (p).

Other cases decided on same principle.

A gift of household goods, furniture "and all other effects" is sufficient to pass the general personal estate, although it is General gift, followed by specific gifts.

(h) Ante, p. 1026.

(i) 4 Russ. 360.

(j) Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & C. C. 290; 1 Ph. 356; Harris v. James, 12 W. R. 509; Hodgson v. Jex, 2 Ch. D. 122; In bonis Shephard, 48 L. J. Pr. 62; Re Parrott, 53 L. T. 12; In bonis Jupp, [1891] P. 300; Anderson v. Anderson, [1895] 1 Q. B. 749. In Arnold v. Arnold, 2 My. & K. 365, there was a specific bequest of "my wines and property in England," and it was held to include property not ejusdem generis with wine; see Chap. XXX.

(k) Read v. Hodgins, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 17.

(l) Re Lloyd's Estate, 2 Jur. N. S. 539.

(m) Nugee v. Chapman, 29 Bea. 290; Martin v. Glover, 1 Coll. 269; Taylor v. Taylor, 6 Sim. 246.

(n) Dean v. Gibson, L. R., 3 Eq. 713.

(o) King v. George, 5 Ch. D. 627; Re Fleetwood, 15 Ch. D. 594; Tighe v. Featherstonhaugh, 13 L. R. Ir. 401.

(p) Arison v. Simpson, Johns. 43. It has even been suggested that a bequest of "all my rights and credits" would pass the general personal estate: Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 382. See also Bland v. Lamb, 2 Jac. & W. 399; where the effect of some "very singular" testamentary papers in disposing of the testator's property was discussed, but not decided.

CHAP. XXVIII.

followed by pecuniary and specific bequests (q), and even although specific bequests are given to the person who takes the residue under the general gift (r).

Presumption against intestacy.

The principle which underlies many of these decisions is that when a man makes a will, he is presumed not to intend to die intestate as to any part of his property (s).

“Et cætera.”

In Steignes v. Steignes (t), the testator made his will in French, and thereby gave to his wife, “besides all moveables, plate, jewels, pictures, linen, &c.” (except books), 6,000*l.* South Sea stock, “moveables” being the translation, in the probate copy, of the French word meubles; Sir J. Jekyll, M.R., said that by “moveables” the testator meant only corporeal things, and that the “&c.” could not extend it to incorporeal things, such as stock; in other words, “&c.” meant things ejusdem generis. Newman v. Newman (u) and Barnaby v. Tassell (v) are to the same effect.

In Twining v. Powell (w), the testatrix gave a house “and all therein” to A. for life; “at her death I give and bequeath the house, &c., &c. to R. :” it was held that R. was entitled to the chattels in the house.

In Chapman v. Chapman (x) the testator directed his widow to pay his debts, and then bequeathed to her “all my money, cattle, farming implements, &c.” subject to the payment to his brothers of legacies the amounts of which were left blank: it was held by Jessel, M.R., that this was a good residuary bequest. It may be observed that the will would have been insensible on any other construction, but the “et cætera” does not seem to have made any difference.

If the testator gives his residue in general terms, and then enumerates various particulars, concluding with “et cætera,” this does not restrict the meaning of the general words (y).

Special terms following the general, not necessarily restrictive.

In Parker v. Marchant (z), it was noticed by Sir J. K. Bruce, V.-C., as a circumstance favouring the unrestricted construction, (q) In bonis Sheppard, 48 L. J. Pr. 62.

(r) Fleming v. Burrows, 1 Russ. 276. Compare Bennett v. Batchelor, 1 Ves. jun. 63, ante, p. 1026.

(s) Re Lloyd's Estate, 2 Jur. N. S. 539, ante, p. 1029, n. (h).

(t) Mose, 296. Compare Hertford v. Lowther, 7 Bea. 1, cited post, Chap. XXX.

(u) 26 Bea. 220.

(v) L. R., 11th Eq. 363.

(w) 2 Coll. 262.

(x) 4 Ch. D. 800.

(y) Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 360, ante, p. 1029; Gover v. Davis, 29 Bea. 222; Mullaly v. Walsh, 3 L. R. Ir. 244; Loftus v. Stoney, 17 Ir. Ch. 178.

(z) 1 Y. & C. C. 290. See also by the same judge 1 D. F. & J. at p. 416; and by Romilly, M.R., Re Kendall's Trust, 14 Bea. at p. 611; in this case the restrictive effect of the specific enumeration was removed by subsequent words.

that the general terms there followed the specific. But, as already shewn (a), a contrary order does not necessarily lead to a contrary result. In Cambridge v. Rous (b), the testatrix bequeathed "all the rest and residue of my property and effects whether in money or in the public funds or other securities of any sort or kind whatsoever." With reference to the words "whether in money or in the public funds" &c., Sir W. Grant, M.R., observed: "These are not words of restriction. They are rather words of enlargement. The object was to exclude nothing. Such an enumeration under a 'videlicet,' a much more restrictive expression, has been held only a defective enumeration, not a restriction to the specific articles" (c). So in Fisher v. Hepburn (d), where a testator expressed himself as follows: "As to all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, canal shares, plate, linen, china and furniture, I give, devise and bequeath the same to my wife, for her own use and benefit": Romilly, M.R., held the wife entitled to the general residue. And in a similar case (e), Sir W. P. Wood, V.-C., said, "The strong presumption is that the testator did not mean to do only what he might have effectually done by giving the enumerated articles simply." It scarcely need be added that it is immaterial that the enumeration comprises trivial things only, and omits all the important items of the personal estate. To hold the contrary would involve the admission of evidence to prove what the testator's personal estate consists of at the date of the will; which we have before seen is inadmissible (f). In Re Roberts (g), it was held that by a gift of "all my property leasehold and freehold which I now possess," all the testator's personal estate passed.

The application of the principle above stated is not necessarily affected by a direction that the property is to be sold; thus a bequest of "all my other effects to A., to be sold for his benefit,"

(a) Bennett v. Batchelor, ante, p. 1026.

(b) 8 Ves. 12.

(c) See Bridges v. Bridges, 8 Vin. Abr. 295 (Devise, O. h., pl. 13); see also Chalmers v. Storil, 2 V. & B. 222; Nicholas v. Nicholas, Taml. 269; Ellis v. Selby, 7 Sim. 352; Everall v. Browne, 1 Sm. & Gif. 368; Choyce v. Ottey, 10 Hare, 443; Banks v. Thornton, 11 Hare, 176; Re Goodyear, 4 Jur. N. S. 1243; Gover v. Davis, 29 Bea. 222; Dean v. Gibson, L. R., 3 Eq. 713; King v. George, 4 Ch. D. 435, 5 ib. 627; Reeves v. Baker, 18 Bea. 372; Armstrong v. Buckland, ib. 204.

(d) 14 Bea. 626. See also Kendall v.

Kendall, 4 Russ. 360; Avison v. Simpson, Johns. 43; Re Maberley's Trusts, 19 W. R. 522; Tighe v. Featherstonhaugh, 13 L. R. Ir. 401, supra. See also Re Smalley, 49 L. T. 662, where expressions following a gift of "personal property" were held to extend the gift so as to include realty. See ante, p. 1020.

(e) Dean v. Gibson, L. R., 3 Eq. at p. 717.

(f) King v. George, 5 Ch. D. 627; Re Fleetwood, 15 Ch. D. 594.

(g) 55 L. T. 498, per Cotton and Bowen, L.JJ., Fry, L.J., diss.

CHAP. XXVIII. will pass the general personal estate, although it includes property which is not the subject of sale, such as money (h).

Where there is a residuary bequest.

"It is to be observed, however," says Mr. Jarman (i), "that in all the preceding cases, there was no other bequest capable of operating on the general residue of the testator's personal estate, if the clause in question did not. Where there is such a bequest, it supplies an argument of no inconsiderable weight in favour of the restricted construction, which is then recommended by the anxiety always felt to give to a will such a construction as will render every part of it sensible, consistent and effective."

To this ground may be referred the case of Woolcomb v. Woolcomb (j), where the testator gave to his wife all the furniture of his parsonage house, and all his plate, household goods, and other goods, (except books and papers,) and all his stock within doors and without, and all his corn, wood, and other goods, belonging to his parsonage house; and gave the residue of his personal estate to J. The question was, whether ready money, cash, and bonds, should pass to the wife. It was held that the words "other goods" should be understood to signify only things ejusdem generis with household goods.

So in Lamphier v. Despard (k), where a testator, after devising certain real estates to his wife, bequeathed to her "all his household furniture, plate, house-linen, and all other chattel property that he might die seised or possessed of"; and after giving various legacies, he appointed A. his executor and residuary legatee: Sir E. Sugden held that all other chattel property meant all ejusdem generis; relying partly on the subsequent residuary gift. He thought, however, that the words would clearly not pass money; so that the clause could not be a general bequest of the entire personal estate.

And in Re Hammersley (l), a gift of "my household furniture, books, pictures, paintings, engravings, plate, linen, china, and other effects," to A. and B. in equal shares, was held to pass only articles ejusdem generis, and not to include jewellery, there being a subsequent residuary gift.

(h) Hearne v. Wigginton, 6 Madd. 119.

(i) First ed. p. 700.

(j) 3 P. Wms. 112, Cox's ed.; see Marks v. Solomons, 19 L. J. Ch. 555.

(k) 2 D. & War. 59; see also Stuart v. Marquis of Bute, 1 Dow, 73; Barrett v. White, 24 L. J. Ch. 724; Smith v.

Davis, 14 W. R. 942; Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 204; Gibbs v. Lawrence, 30 L. J. Ch. 170; Campbell v. M'Grain, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 397.

(l) 81 L. T. 150, citing Anderson v. Anderson, [1895] 1 Q. B. 749 (assignment by deed).

It would also seem, that where a testator makes a specific bequest of property in general terms, but describes it as "consisting of" certain specific things, belonging to him at the date of the will, and bequeaths his residue, this shews that he intended to restrict the specific bequest to the enumerated things: as in Drake v. Martin (m), where the testator made a specific bequest of "my property not in England and in the hands of my attorney abroad, Mr. W., consisting of Russian bonds &c." there was a residuary bequest, but Romilly, M.R., held that all the testator's property not in England passed by the specific bequest.

Even where there is no residuary bequest, the testator may shew by the context, or by a codicil, that general words used by him were intended to have a limited effect. Thus in Att.-Gen. v. Willshire (n), the testator made dispositions with regard to what he repeatedly referred to as "all my property," but it was held, partly from the context and partly from the terms of a codicil made on the same day, that a sum of 5,000*l.* consols belonging to the testator was undisposed of.

Restrictive effect of context.

If a testator directs that in the event of A. dying under twenty, "the said property and effects" shall go to B., this may refer to a share of the testator's property previously given to A., and not to the whole of the testator's estate (o).

III.—General Residue held to pass by Word "Money," and other informal Words.—Mr Jarman continues (p): "As words in themselves the most general and comprehensive may, we have seen, be narrowed by their juxtaposition with more limited expressions, so on the same principle, terms which, in their strict and proper acceptation, apply to a particular species of personalty only, have been held, by force of the context, to embrace the general residue. In several instances, the word 'money' (q) (which is often popularly used in a vague and inaccurate sense, as synonymous with property,) has received this construction" (r).

Word "money" held to extend to general residue.

(m) 23 Bea. 89.

(n) 16 Sim. 36. Compare Sutton v. Sharp, 1 Russ. 146; Slingsby v. Grasinger, 7 H. L. C. 273; Wylie v. Wylie, 1 D. F. & J. 410; s.c. Enohin v. Wylie, 10 H. L. C. 1; Borton v. Dunbar, 2 D. F. & J. 338; and Stooke v. Stooke, 35 Bea. 396, post, p. 1037.

(o) Re Willomier, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 389. There is no invariable rule which refers the word "said" to the last antecedent; Healy v. Healy, Ir. R., 9 Eq. 418.

(p) First ed. p. 702.

(q) Mr. Jarman's note on the meaning of "money" in its strict acceptation is omitted, as it does not properly belong here; all the cases cited by him will be found in Chap. XXXV.

(r) This rule of construction does not apply to a gift of "cash" (Nevinson v.

CHAP. XXVIII.

The result has generally been due either, first, to the testator having directed his funeral expenses, debts or legacies (which ordinarily constitute a charge on the general residue) to be paid out of the "money" (s); or, secondly, to his having shewn a clear intention to make a complete disposition of all his personalty, which intention can only be effected by adopting the enlarged interpretation of the word "money." For it is clear that if the word be used without any explanatory context, it will be construed in its strict sense (t); à fortiori, if the express purpose of the bequest be inconsistent with the notion that the testator could have intended so to apply the property alleged to be comprised in it. As where an officer on service, after bequeathing two small legacies, and directing his portmanteau and other articles to be sent home, desired that "the remainder of his money and effects should be expended in purchasing a suitable present for his godson," it was held that a reversionary interest in stock did not pass (u).

Where testator has charged funeral expenses on "money."

Of the first class of cases alluded to, we have an instance in Legge v. Asgill (v), where a testatrix, after bequeathing 200*l.* Long Annuities amongst several persons in specific legacies, proceeded to give a debt of 2,935*l.* due to her, to A. for her separate use; and added, "I believe there will be sufficient money to pay my funeral expenses," which she desired might be plain. The testatrix afterwards made a codicil to her will, commencing with the following words:—"If there is any money left unemployed, I desire it may be given in charity. My watch and pianoforte I give to C. The most useful of my clothes to be given to my present servant," and she concluded with some directions respecting the key of a trunk. The question was, whether the general residue, Lady Lennard, 34 Bea. 487), or of "ready money" (Re Powell, Johns. 49; see Bevan v. Bevan, 5 L. R. Ir. 57), or of "money to my account" (Hastings v. Hane, 6 Sim. 67). As to the effect of a gift of money referred to as "invested," see Stooke v. Stooke, 35 Bea. 396; Re Pringle, 17 Ch. D. 819, cited post.

(s) Great stress was laid on this in Chapman v. Chapman, 4 Ch. D. 800, ante, p. 1030.

(t) See Shelmer's Case, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 200; Hotham v. Sutton, 15 Ves. 319; Read v. Hodgins, 7 Ir. Eq. Rep. 17; Lowe v. Thomas, Kay, 369, affirmed 5 D. M. & G. 315; Larner v. Larner, 3 Drew. 704; Cowling v. Cowling, 26 Bea. 449; Byrom v. Brandreth, L.R., 16 Eq. 475; Williams v. Williams, 8 Ch. D. 789; Re Sutton, 28 Ch. D. 464;

In bonis Aston, 6 P. D. 203. Compare the cases on the effect of "money" as a word of specific description, post, Chap. XXXV. So a legacy of stock does not come within the description of a "pecuniary legacy," Douglas v. Congreve, 1*½* Kee. 410; though in Barclay v. Maskelyne, 5 Jur. N. S. 12, stock legacies were held upon the context to be within a clause revoking "all monies bequeathed" to the legatees.

(u) Borton v. Dunbar, 2 Gif. 221, 2 D. F. & J. 338. Converse case—declared purpose too large for strict construction of "money," Prichard v. Prichard, L. R., 11 Eq. 232, stated p. 1037.

(v) T. & R. 265, n., and cited 4 Russ. at p. 369.

including the reversion of one-fourth of a sum of 10,000*l.* secured by a settlement, passed by these words. Lord Eldon considered that under the will, and especially having regard to the charge of the funeral expenses, the word "money" was intended to comprise the entire personal estate; and that it was impossible to put a different construction upon the same word in the codicil.

So, in Rogers v. Thomas (w), where a testatrix, after giving various pecuniary and specific legacies, bequeathed to the inhabitants of T. Row all which might remain of her money after her lawful debts and legacies were paid; and she went on to give other specific and pecuniary legacies: Lord Langdale, M.R., considered the charge of debts and legacies sufficient evidence of the testatrix's intention to include the general residue in the bequest of "all which might remain of her money."

"Money remaining" after debts and legacies.

It seems, indeed, that where a bequest of legacies, primarily payable out of the general estate, is followed by a gift of the residue or remainder of the testator's "money," the latter gift comprehends the general residue, although the testator has not expressly charged the legacies on his "money." Thus, in Dowson v. Gascoin (x), where a testatrix, after bequeathing certain specific and pecuniary legacies, concluded her will as follows: "I appoint A. and B. my executors, and bequeath 200*l.* to each for their trouble, and whatever remains of money I bequeath to E. D.'s five children." At the date of the testatrix's will and of her death, her personal estate consisted principally of stock, which, it was contended, would not pass under the word money; but Lord Langdale decided that the stock in question passed by the will (y).

Where there is a bequest of legacies, and a gift of the residue of testator's money.

So in Re Pringle (z), a gift of "all the rest of my money, however invested," preceded and followed by a number of pecuniary and (w) 2 Kee. 8; see also Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 360; Phillips v. Eastwood, 1 Ll. & Go. 270; Barrett v. White, 24 L. J. Ch. 724; Grosvenor v. Durston, 25 Bea. 97; Stocks v. Barré, Johns. 54; Re Maclean, 11 T. L. R. 82; In bonis White, 7 P. D. 65; Re Egan, [1899], 1 Ch. 688, where the expression "any money that may be in my possession at my death" was held to pass a reversionary interest in personalty. But the principle will not govern cases where the bequest is of "ready" money, Re Powell, Johns. 49.

(x) 2 Kee. 14.

(y) See also Lynn v. Kerridge, West's Ca. t. Hardwicke, 172; Lowe v. Thomas, 5 D. M. & G. 315; Langdale v. Whitfeld, 4 K. & J. 426, 436;

Montagu v. Earl of Sandwich, 33 Bea. 324, where there was a specific bequest after the bequest of "money." These cases appear to overrule Gosden v. Dotterill, 1 My. & K. 56, although Wood, V.-C., in Lowe v. Thomas (Kay, 369) treated it as a binding authority. Lynn v. Kerridge, supra, was a strong case, as the will contained a general residuary bequest, but it is not quite clear whether it can be referred to the principle now under discussion, or whether it merely decided that the bequest of "moneys" included stock. See Hart v. Hernandez, post, p. 1038; Re Maclean, 11 T. L. R. 82.

(z) 17 Ch. D. 819. See Hastings v. Hane, 6 Sim. 67, stated post.

CHAP. XXVIII.

specific legacies, was held to pass the general personal estate. Even a bequest of "any little money left" will operate as a residuary bequest and consequently as an exercise of a general power of appointment (a).

Not if there be a distinct residuary bequest.

But the inference to be drawn from a charge of debts is not conclusive; since the testator may have intended so to charge the specific gift of "money" (b): and therefore if the will contains a distinct residuary clause, or otherwise gives evidence that the word is used in its strict sense, the enlarged construction is inadmissible notwithstanding the charge. Thus, in Willis v. Plaskett (c), where a testatrix made her will as follows: "I first direct my funeral expenses to be paid, and the remainder of what monies I die possessed of to be equally divided between A. and B. I also give to the said A. all my wearing apparel, trinkets and all other property whatsoever and wheresoever that I may die possessed of": Lord Langdale, M.R., said that when a testator directed the payment of his funeral expenses, there was an inference that he was referring to his general personal estate; but that, having regard to the other parts of this will, he was prevented from giving to the word "monies" its extended meaning.

Where there is a clear intent to dispose of the whole personal estate.

The second class of cases indicated above is illustrated by Waite v. Combes (d), where a testator, after declaring himself desirous of making a settlement of his affairs, appointed A. and B. his executors to take and receive all monies that might be in his possession or due to him at the time of his decease, and to prosecute for the recovery of the same, if necessary, to be by them placed in the British funds or otherwise laid out upon security and held in trust: Sir J. Parker, V.-C., thought the whole will pointed to a complete disposition of the personal estate, and that, at all events, a sum of consols passed under the word "monies" (e).

Even a wrong description of the manner in which the testator's

(a) Re Douglas, [1905] 1 Ch. 279.

(b) Per Leach, M.R., Collier v. Squire, 3 Russ. at p. 475.

(c) 4 Beav. 208; and see Williams v. Williams, 8 Ch. D. 789 (gift of residue in will not cut down by gift of "money" in codicil); Re Mason's Will, 34 Beav. 494. Cf. Barrett v. White, 1 Jur. N. S. 652; and consider Chapman v. Reynolds, 28 Beav. 221, especially with reference to the weight there attributed to the fact that the testatrix had no "money" in the strict sense.

(d) 5 De G. & S. 676. As to the weight allowed to the fact that at the time of his death the testator had little besides the consols, qu.; and see Gosden v. Dotterill, 1 My. & K. 56, which on this point is good law. If the gift is specific such evidence is admissible, Gallini v. Noble, 3 Mer. 691.

(e) But the mere fact of "money" being so disposed of (e.g. to one for life, with limitations over), as to necessitate an investment, will not suffice to extend the natural import of the word, Lowe v. Thomas, Kay, 369, 5 D. M. & G. 315; Larner v. Larner, 3 Drew. 704; Williams v. Williams, 8 Ch. D. 789.

"money" is invested, will not prevent that word from comprising the residuary personal estate: as where a testatrix bequeathed "the remainder of my money in the Spanish bonds" to her nephews and nieces, "my intention being to divide my property equally between my two sisters' children" (f).

In Prichard v. Prichard (g), where a testator appointed an executor, and declared that the income arising from his principal money should be paid to his wife, while unmarried, for the support of herself and the education of his children, and at her death or marriage to be divided among them: it was held by Sir R. Malins, V.-C., that the declared purpose of the gift shewed that the whole personal estate was intended to pass, including leaseholds.

The decision in Re Cadogan (h), goes even farther, for in that case there was a simple gift of "the money of which I am possessed"; but the will was made two days before the testatrix's death, and her "money," in the strict sense of the word, only formed a trifling part of her property; on the strength of these circumstances, and the fact that part of the "money" was given to two beneficiaries for life with remainders to their children, Kay, J., held that the gift passed all the personal estate (i). In Re Buller (j) a gift of "all my money" except certain shares was held to pass the general residue, but Stirling, J., expressed some doubt whether Re Cadogan did not go too far. On the other hand, in Hastings v. Hane (k), where a testator after revoking "former dispositions of my property," and making various pecuniary and specific bequests, gave "any monies which may remain to my account after payment of the aforesaid sums and my debts" it was held by Shadwell, V.-C., that the words "to my account" prevented the gift of "monies which may remain" from operating as a gift of the general residue. So in Stooke v. Stooke (l), where a testator made various specific and pecuniary bequests, and then gave "the remainder of all my moneys, in whatever it may be, in bonds or consols or anything else," it was held that this passed money invested on any kind of security, including a life policy, but not leaseholds, furniture or other chattels. And in Nevinson

(f) Patrick v. Yeatherd, 33 L. J. Ch. 286.

(g) L. R., 11 Eq. 232.

(h) 25 Ch. D. 154. This decision was followed in In bonis Bramley, [1902] P. 106. See also Stratton v. Hillas, 2 Dr. & W. 51; In bonis White, 7 P. D. 65.

(i) In Re Sutton (28 Ch. D. 464) a gift of "the whole of the money over which I have a disposing power," was confined to money in the strict sense, but no reasons are given.

(j) 74 L. T. 406.

(k) 6 Sim. 67.

(l) 35 Bea. 396.

CHAP. XXVIII.

v. Lady Lennard (m), where the testatrix, after giving the residue of all her money, referred to it afterwards as "cash," this was held to restrict the meaning of the word to money strictly so called.

Where
"money" means general personal estate except part.

It sometimes appears from the context that the testator means by "money," not the whole of his general personal estate, but all except a certain part of it. Thus, in Barrett v. White (n), Kindersley, V.-C., said that the testatrix by "money" meant all her personal estate other than plate, furniture, horses, carriages, &c. Hart v. Hernandez (o) was a similar case. So in Lloyd v. Lloyd (p) a direction to pay debts, &c., out of "money" was held to throw them primarily on the testatrix's personal estate other than the leaseholds and furniture, which were particularly referred to. And in Re Townley (q) it was held that a gift of "all my moneys" passed the general personal estate other than the furniture; part of the furniture was specifically bequeathed; as to the rest of it there was an intestacy.

"Money" when strictly construed.

But in cases which do not fall within any of the rules above referred to, the word "money" is strictly construed, thus in Lowe v. Thomas (r) a testatrix bequeathed to A. "the whole of my money" for his life, at his death to be divided between B. and C.; then followed trifling specific bequests to B. and C., with a final sentence declaring that the longest survivor of them was to become "possessor of the whole money"; it was held that a sum of stock did not pass by this bequest.

Unless for-bidden by the context.

And if the context shows that the word "money" is used in its strict sense, it will not receive the more extended construction, merely on the strength of even an expressed intention to dispose of all the estate. Thus, in Ommanney v. Butcher (s), where a testator, after commencing his will in the following form: "I, A. B., considering in what manner I should have my fortune disposed of, in case of my death, do make this my will:"—bequeathed numerous stock and a few money legacies; and after disposing of some books and other specific articles, he directed

(m) 34 Bea. 487.

(n) 24 L. J. Ch. 724. Glendening v. Glendening, 9 Bea. 324, appears to have been decided on the same principle, but there the testator added the word "goods"; the question was whether the gift of "money and goods" comprised money in the funds, and it was held that it did.

(o) 52 L. T. 217. It is not clear whether Lynn v. Kerridge, West. Rep. t. Hard. 172, was decided on this principle; see the remarks in Hart v.

Hernandez, supra.

(p) 54 L. T. 841.

(q) 53 L. J. Ch. 516. Re Smith (42 Ch. D. 302) seems to have been decided on the same principle.

(r) Kay, 369; 5 D. M. & G. 315.

(s) T. & R. 260. Compare Hastings v. Hane, ante, and Enohin v. Wylie, 10 H. L. C. 1, where a gift of "the whole of my capital, which shall remain with me after my death in ready money and in bank billets," was held not to pass a sum of stock.

the remainder of his books, and his jewels, plate and household furniture to be sold; and desired that his clothes and linen might be divided between his servants: he then gave a small pecuniary legacy to his executors, and added, "in case there is any money remaining, I should wish it to be given in private charity." Sir T. Plumer, M.R., was of opinion that the concluding clause did not comprehend the general residue; but was to be considered as applying to the residue of the produce of those articles which the testator had directed to be sold, after providing for the payments which were ordered to be made. A gift of "such money, stocks, funds, or other securities not hereafter specially devised, as I may die possessed of," does not constitute a gift of residue (t).

In Hutchinson v. Hutchinson (u) where the testator gave all his "lands, tenements, rights and credits," the opinion was expressed that the words "rights and credits" would have been sufficient by themselves to pass the general personal estate; but the context made the meaning clear.

"Rights and credits."

Other cases may be adduced, in which the general residue of a testator's personal estate has been held to pass under very informal words. As in Leighton v. Barlie (v), where a testatrix made the following indorsement on one of her testamentary papers: "I think there will be something left after the funeral expenses, &c. paid, to give to W. B., now at school, towards equipping him to any profession"; by another testamentary paper she bequeathed the sum of 500*l.* to W. B.; it was held by Leach, M.R., that under the indorsed memorandum, W. B. was the general residuary legatee.

Informal words held to pass general residue.

Again, in Hodgkinson v. Barrow (w), a testator, having several children by different marriages, gave his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trusts that did not exhaust the whole interest, but confiding in them to fulfil any memorandum he might leave; he made a codicil by which, after reciting the settlement made on his second marriage, he directed that whatever sums might come to the children of that marriage, or the children of his former marriage, with the exception of such sums as might come in right of their respective mothers, that his trustees would (t) In bonis Aston, 6 P. D. 203.

(u) 13 Ir. Eq. R. 382.

(v) 3 My. & K. 267; see Surtees v. Hopkinson, 18 L. J. Ch. 188; Wiggins v. Wiggins, 2 Sim. N. S. 226; Duhamel v. Ardovin, 2 Ves. sen. 162; Bland v.

Lamb, 2 J. & W. 399 ("anything I have forgot"); Fleming v. Burrows, 1 Russ. 276 ("whatever else I may then be possessed of"); Re Craven, 99 L. T. 390 ("rest of my investments").

(w) 2 Phill. 578.

CHAP. XXVIII. take the whole of his real and personal property into their consideration, and have an estimate made, "and my will is to divide to every child its due share and proportion, also taking first into consideration" monies received by the children by way of advancement. Lord Cottenham held, reversing the decision of the V.-C., that the reversionary interest in the real and personal property passed by the codicil.

And in Re Bassett's Estate (x), where legacies were given, and the will then went on, "after these legacies and my funeral expenses are paid, I leave to my sister A. without any power or control of her husband; in case of her death to be equally divided amongst his children or grand-children": it was held that this was a good gift of the residue. Chapman v. Chapman (y) is another example of an intention to dispose of the residue being inferred from the whole will.

Appointment of "residuary legatee." As a general rule, an appointment of A. "to be my residuary legatee," operates as a bequest of the testator's residuary personal estate to A. (z). But if there is a formal gift of the residue to another person, this may prevail (a).

(x) L. R., 14 Eq. 54. Compare Bowman v. Milbanke and the other cases in which it has been held that words of gift may be too vague to pass the residue; ante, p. 455.

(y) 4 Ch. D. 800.

(z) See Hughes v. Pritchard, 6 Ch. D. 24, and other cases cited, ante, p. 1016

(a) Post, Chap. XXIX.

END OF VOL. I.

